In the long-range area, the committee called for greater federal, state and local resources for education, improved vocational counseling and training, with modernization of federally-assisted vocational training programs. A recommendation that consideration be given to "minimum and carefully safeguarded" modifications in child labor laws "to help youth acquire suitable work experience" drew a strong dissent from Haggerty, who viewed it as a step backwards.

Both the Chamber of Commerce and the NAM representatives on the committee, while expressing general agreement with the long-range goals, took exception to all references to additional federal funds for education.

Pres. Kennedy responded to the report with a statement declaring that "no nation can neglect the development of its young people without courting catastrophe."

Calling for passage of the Administration's Youth Employment bill—now bottled up in the House Rules Committee—the President cited the report as evidence that "we as a nation are not doing all that we can" to help youth prepare "for a complex and ever-evolving domestic economy."

NLRB Asked To Reconsider Pay Decision

The Ladies' Garment Workers has announced that it will ask reconsideration of a National Labor Relations Board order directing it to give retroactive pay increases to some union employes who are members of the Federation of Union Representatives.

A three-man board panel affirmed a finding by Trial Examiner George A. Downing that the ILGWU had interfered with the rights of staff members to organize. Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom also voted to order the ILGWU to make its employes whole for lost earnings, plus interest at 6 percent, because of the "unlawful withholding of automatic" pay increases.

ILGWU Assistant Pres. Gus Tyler said the ILGWU was "gratified" at that portion of the report which found that two FOUR officers had not been unlawfully treated and added:

"The ILGWU will be asking for reconsideration in the matter of retroactive pay for some staff members since the pay increase subsequently granted to staff was of such a character as, in effect, to cover the period from Jan. 1.

"The ILGWU continues to maintain as a matter of major principle that union officers as distinguished from union employes are not properly a unit for collective bargaining purposes." It said this claim is still before the NLRB in another case and has not been fully decided.

Danish Government Asks Wage Freeze

Copenhagen—The Danish government has submitted legislation to Parliament proposing a freeze on wages, prices and dividends for a two-year period, and a ban on strikes. The government also proposed to reduce taxation and enact a compulsory savings scheme.

In Speech to Press Club:

Leighty Hits 'Myth' Of Rail Poverty

A spokesman for rail unions "complimented" railroad management for having done "a really remarkable job of brainwashing the American people" but took newspapers and their editorial writers to task for not having done better at "probing behind an industry's propaganda to get at the facts."

Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association told Washington, D. C., newsmen at a National Press Club luncheon that the railroad industry's claim of "poverty" is a "myth."

He said the railroads have unleashed a "massive propaganda drive" claiming "they are on the brink of financial disaster . . . and that, because of so-called 'featherbedding,' they are being forced by greedy union leaders to pay excessive labor costs."

"The facts," Leighty declared, "dispute every one of these claims."

The industry is "in the healthiest financial state in its history," he said. Between 1951 and 1961, its operating revenues enabled it to reduce its long-term debt by nearly $1 billion and invest an average of $1 billion a year in plant—while dividends went up.

Leighty charged that railroads, through bookkeeping changes, are able to conceal their "true financial situation, when it serves the purposes of the corporation to do so."

He noted that the Interstate Commerce Commission voted to permit the Chesapeake & Ohio to acquire stock control of the Baltimore & Ohio after the latter reported losing $31 million in 1961. He added:

"I ask you if it doesn't seem most unusual that B&O operations were profitable through 1960 and again in 1962," ran a deficit "that year, and only that year," when the acquisition proceedings were pending?

Congress Can 'Help'

Congress can "help" the railroads, he said, by declaring a moratorium on mergers and thus "save many railroads from the results of the industry's own folly."

Instead of "cutting back service," railroads "should hustle for new business to use railroad plant to full capacity," Leighty declared.

Railroads, he said, "should stop chasing the merger 'will-o-the-wisp' which is at best a temporary palliative and ultimately means less railroad plant, service and profits. Our country is growing. It needs more railroad service, not less, to meet the needs of an expanding economy."

Leighty pledged that if the railroads "get back to trying to give the public the kind of service to which it is entitled, the railroad unions will do all in their power to cooperate."

While management is complaining about "featherbedding," he said, the railroads "have enjoyed the benefits of an increase in output per man-hour of labor twice that of American manufacturing industry as a whole."

In 1960, he said, railroads were handling 61 percent more business with 60 percent fewer employes than in 1921.

Rules Settlement Possible

In response to questions, Leighty said he believed that "hard negotiation and mediation" can bring about settlement of the work rules dispute.

His own belief, he said, is that locomotive firemen "are absolutely essential to safe and efficient railroad operation."

From the press, in reporting and commenting on railroad news, Leighty asked:

"Just tell the people the truth, the whole truth."

Education Official Named by UAW

Detroit—Melvin A. Glasser of the Brandeis University faculty has been named director of the Social Security Dept. of the Auto Workers, Pres. Walter P. Reuther has announced.

He will take office June 2 and will succeed James Brindle, who has become president of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

Glasser, born in 1915, was graduated from the College of the City of New York in 1935 and has received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Adelphi College.

He has served as dean of university resources and visiting professor at the Florence Heller School for Advanced Studies in Social Welfare at Brandeis, where he joined the staff in 1960.

MEASURES TO HALT discrimination against women workers are discussed by three members of the President's Commission on the Status of Women. From left, Dr. Richard E. Lester, Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

AMA Report Hit:

Cost Dilemma Cited In Aged Care Plans

The AFL-CIO's social security director took sharp issue with claims of the American Medical Association that social security hospital insurance for the aged is not needed because most persons over 65 already have commercial health insurance.

"In the first place, we know that between 50 and 60 percent of the people over age 65 have incomes of $1,000 a year or less," declared Social Security Dir. Nelson Cruikshank in a network radio interview over the Mutual Broadcasting system.

In view of this low income pattern, he continued, the cost of comprehensive medical care "is, for most older people, prohibitive."

Cruikshank cited as an example the "Plus 65" plan widely advertised by private insurance companies in Connecticut a few years ago. The cost of this plan—$408 per couple per year—"obviously is prohibitive for a couple having an income of only $2,000 a year, or even $3,000 or $4,000 a year," he said.

He agreed that there are plans available to elderly people for as little as $6 and $7 a month, "but when you look at them you'll find that the benefit is around $7 or $8 a day for 10, 15 or maybe a maximum of 30 days of hospitalization," compared with charges averaging around $20 to $30 a day.

Thus, Cruikshank said, if premiums are held down, so are benefits; if benefits are set "where they mean something and provide real care, then the costs are out of reach of people on a retirement income."

'Impossible Dilemma'

The high cost of health care, he noted, also is at the root of the "impossible dilemma" that confronts the states in implementing the Kerr-Mills program of medical care for aged persons who qualify under a means test.

Half the states, he pointed out, so far have not put into operation any program under Kerr-Mills, which requires matching state expenditures as a qualification for federal aid. And there are wide benefit variations in the 25 states and three territories that do have Kerr-Mills plans.

To illustrate, he referred to Kerr-Mills operations for January in the neighboring states of Illinois, where the average expenditure for 604 cases was $410, and Kentucky, where the average for 2,300 cases was $14.

In other words, one in every 127 of Kentucky's old people got aid, compared with one of every 1,600 in Illinois, Cruikshank observed, adding:

"Every state is confronted with this dilemma: should you do as much as the act permits for a few people or should you just do a little bit—$14 worth in Kentucky—for as many people as possible?"

Neither approach, he declared, meets the need.

Nevertheless, he said, the AFL-CIO supports the Kerr-Mills program, but only as "a second line of defense" to establish a floor of care for public assistance recipients.

The "first line" should be a social program, such as that provided in the Anderson-King old-age hospital insurance bill, Cruikshank asserted.

This approach, he noted, would be the same as is now used for retirement payments, where social security old age and survivors insurance is supplemented by public assistance programs "to back up those who fall between the meshes of that net."

Insurance Boom Predicted

Furthermore, he said, just as the OASI program led to more business for the life insurance firms following its enactment in 1935, so would the Anderson-King bill prove a boon to commercial companies writing health insurance. Once the heavy burden of basic hospitalization costs is covered by a federal program, he suggested, there will be a sharp growth in private supplementary plans for doctors' services and other medical needs not covered by the proposed legislation.

The Anderson-King bill, which embodies the Kennedy Administration's old-age hospital insurance program, would offer persons over 65 a choice of three benefit schedules: up to 90 days of hospitalization with $10 daily deductible up to a maximum of $90, no deductible at all with a maximum of 45 days of hospital care, or a deductible amounting to 2.5 times the average daily cost for up to 180 days hospitalization.

The bill's chances in the current Congress, Cruikshank observed, depend to a large extent on the chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee, Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.), who "could swing the balance one way or the other" to meet "the evident wishes of the American people for protection in this area."

He noted that changes in the committee's membership had added two supporters of the social security approach, a significant gain over the lineup against the bill which prevented it from reaching the House floor for a vote last year.

In addition, he said, certain members of the committee who withheld their support last year are now suggesting—without committing themselves on the merits of the bill—that the House should have a chance to vote on it.

"So there is a possibility—and I don't say that it is more than a possibility—that the bill might be reported out for action even without a majority of the committee being committed to its contents," he said.

Cruikshank predicted that when the measure does reach the floor, "a good majority" of House members would vote for it, reflecting the "overwhelming number" of election victories by Anderson-King supporters where health care was a "clear-cut" issue last November.

Member of IBEW Dies on Thresher

Kittery, Me.—George J. Dineen, member of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 2071 at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, was on board the atomic submarine Thresher when it sank in the Atlantic Ocean recently with the reported loss of 129 lives.

A lead mechanic, Dineen, 40, was on board with other civilians and the Navy crew during the sub's test cruise. He leaves his wife and three children at their home in Biddeford, Me.

IBEW Pres. Gordon Freeman said in a letter of condolence that Dineen was a hero who died for his country and that his death "was not in vain."

SENIOR CITIZENS backing the Anderson-King bill for social security hospital care hear Pres. Kennedy in the White House Rose Garden pledge renewed backing of the program and a conviction that the people support it. At the President's right is former Rep. Aime Forand (D-R. I.), president of the National Council of Senior Citizens.

4 U.S. Bands Record for Arts Center

The four major bands of the U.S. armed services have recorded souvenir albums of marches and patriotic music which will go on sale early in May for the benefit of the National Cultural Center in Washington.

The recordings were made by the Army, Navy, Marine and Air Force bands and will carry the label of RCA-Victor.

In a unique cooperative effort, the Defense Dept. made the services of the bands available and RCA did the recording with the aid of the Musicians, the Radio & Television Artists and the arts center itself, of which AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is a trustee. Everybody involved waived fees and royalties for the benefit of the center.

The recordings include such favorites as "The Stars & Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis," played by the Marine Band—the "President's Own" band; "Anchors Aweigh," with the boatswain's pipe and the ship's bell from the U.S.S. Meredith, and the "National Emblem March," by the Navy Band; "The Army Goes Rolling Along" and "Sabre & Spurs," by the Army Band, and "Air Force Blue" and "Falcons' Victory" by the Air Force Band.

The albums were recorded with RCA's new "Dynagroove" process and will carry nationally advertised list prices of $3.98 monaural and $4.98 stereophonic. Special bulk prices may be had by civic and fraternal organizations by writing to the National Cultural Center at 1700 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Nicholas Kirtzman Of ILGWU Dies at 67

Cleveland—Vice Pres. Nicholas Kirtzman of the Ladies' Garment Workers, the union's Ohio-Kentucky regional director and an active member for 40 years, died recently, in St. Luke's Hospital.

He was born in Russia in 1896 and came to the U.S. in 1913, becoming a tailor in New York. He joined Local 9 and held a wide variety of local and joint board posts. He was active in fighting the Communists who sought control of the union in the 1920s, was manager of the Allentown, Pa., Joint Board during World War II and came to Cleveland in 1950.

Surviving are his widow, Mania; a son, Paul; a daughter, Lillian, and six grandchildren.

Kennedy Stresses Need For Hospital Care Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

mittee has indicated hearings will be held on the hospital care bill when it has completed action on the tax legislation.

Fits Needs Best

The President told former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R. I.) president of the senior citizens organization, that the White House meeting "gives us all a welcome opportunity to restate our strong support of the concept which was first expressed in the legislation introduced by Congressman Forand, and which has been strongly supported in the last session of the Congress in the Anderson-King bill, and which is strongly supported by this Administration and particularly by me, which is medical care for the aged under a system of social security."

The President commented that "any other system of assistance to them [the 18 million elderly Americans] in meeting their medical problems will be inadequate, has been inadequate, and I believe that the system best in accordance with their desires, fitting their needs best in a traditional American framework is the legislation we propose."

The President's reference to "other systems" was apparently to the Kerr-Mills Act of federal grants to the states for medical assistance for the aged, which has failed to meet the problem according to latest government analysis of the program.

Forand expressed the thanks of the senior citizens for Kennedy's efforts on behalf of many programs for the aged as well as hospital care. The National Council of Senior Citizens represents 1.5 million members in 1,500 older peoples clubs throughout the nation.

Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Bill Signed

Pres. Kennedy has signed into law a bill granting a federal charter to the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation and expressed his confidence that the American people will respond generously to appeals for support of the organization.

The foundation, under the terms of the charter, will work in the areas of Mrs. Roosevelt's principal interests: relief of the poor and underprivileged; promotion of public health; promotion of economic welfare; and furtherance of international good will.

An initial goal of $25 million has been set for a one-time campaign to be completed by Oct. 11, 1964, the 80th birthday anniversary of Mrs. Roosevelt, who died last year.

Present at the ceremony were members of Mrs. Roosevelt's family and trustees of the foundation. The President remarked that Mrs. Roosevelt "would be pleased to know that her friends and associates have chosen this way to continue her work, especially because it enables all citizens to take part in deeds rather than just words."

UN Ambassador Adlai Stevenson will serve as chairman of the foundation, Philip M. Klutznick will be national campaign chairman and Hyman H. Bookbinder, a former AFL-CIO legislative representative now on leave as special assistant to the secretary of commerce, will serve as foundation director.

Labor representatives on the board of trustees include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and federation Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, David Dubinsky and Joseph D. Keenan.

Southern Fireman Honored by Union

Raleigh, N. C.—Maurice Piercy, Southern Railway fireman who spotted a rock slide inside a tunnel and gave the alarm that saved his 16-car train from derailment, won an award from his union and commendations from this state's Gov. Terry Sanford (D).

Vice Pres. A. M. ("Chub") Lampley of the Firemen & Enginemen gave Piercy a plaque and $250 in cash as winner of the BLF&E's safety award for March. A later ceremony in the governor's office was attended by state legislators, union representatives and others. Piercy, 42, lives in Andrews, N. C.

The fireman saw shadows ahead when his train entered the Cowee Tunnel near Dillsboro, N. C., last Jan. 30. His shouts led Engineer R. C. Brendle to stop the train at the edge of a large pile of rocks. Piercy now is eligible for the union's yearly award, along with 11 other monthly award winners.

Major Administration Victory:

Medical School Aid Approved by House

(Continued from Page 1)

dents—at a higher interest rate than the proposed government program—and claimed it didn't know of any needy student unable to complete medical school because of lack of money.

The American Dental Association split with the AMA on the loan issue and endorsed the entire bill.

Loans Backed by Labor

Labor had strongly supported the program from the start, and had urged that "100 percent forgiveness"—the equivalent of scholarships—be given students going into "shortage" areas and public service.

Before approving the measure, the House voted down a Republican-sponsored anti-discrimination amendment which Democratic leaders charged was an effort by opponents to kill the bill. The voting bore this out, with most congressmen who were against the bill voting for the amendment and most supporters opposing it.

The genesis of the medical school bill—which was billed as a "health" measure rather than an "education" program—was a proposal by Kennedy in February 1962 for a 10-year $677 million program which included scholarships for approximately one-fourth of all medical and dental students.

Given Priority

A trimmed-down bill was approved by the House Commerce Committee late last year but failed to reach the House floor before adjournment. The committee, headed by Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), gave top priority to the measure this year and reported it by a near-unanimous 21-1 vote.

The AMA launched its attack on the loan provision after the committee had approved the bill, and the apparent strong bipartisan support disintegrated in the face of organized medicine's disapproval.

In other congressional developments:

- The Senate Appropriations Committee approved the $450 million the House had voted for emergency public works projects designed to provide jobs in areas of heavy unemployment. Republicans said they will try to trim the amount on the Senate floor.
- Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman sent to Congress an Administration proposal to expand the food stamp plan into a $360 million a year program to benefit four million needy Americans.
- A Senate subcommittee, winding up hearings on a "truth-in-packaging" bill introduced by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), heard Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers reiterate labor's support for the bill. Beirne, testifying for the CWA and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., said misleading packaging "has made intelligent shopping almost impossible unless the consumer is a combination scientist, engineer and detective."
- The Senate passed an Administration-backed bill providing federal funds to establish water resources research institutes at land-grant colleges and state universities.

Living Costs Rise Slightly in March

The consumer's cost of living rose slightly in March, the Labor Dept. has announced.

The Consumer Price Index edged upward by one-tenth of 1 percent to 106.2 percent, the record high. This means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period now costs $10.62.

The department said increases in the prices of used cars, clothing and certain housing items offset a drop of four-tenths of one percent in food prices.

The March CPI will mean a wage hike of 1 cent an hour for some 40,000 workers whose union-negotiated escalator clause is tied to the March index; most are in aerospace. Another 25,000 workers will receive varying increases.

AMA Says It Spent $250,000 in Elections

The American Medical Association's political arm spent nearly $250,000 in last year's congressional elections in its campaign to defeat supporters of the Kennedy Administration's old-age health care plan, according to reports just filed with Congress.

This, however, represents "only that part of the iceberg that shows above water," commented Pres. Aime J. Forand of the National Council of Senior Citizens, which is the forefront of the drive to enact hospital insurance for the aged under the social security system.

Forand said a fair estimate of the total AMA effort to defeat the proposed legislation would set the overall sum at "more than $7 million." He predicted, however, that the AMA drive will fail and that the House Ways & Means Committee this year will report out a social security health care bill which will win the approval of Congress.

The AMA itself is prohibited by federal law from giving financial aid to political candidates, but a separate organization—the American Medical Political Action Committee—was set up in 1961 with headquarters in Chicago.

AMPAC's report to Congress showed 1962 income of $256,474 and disbursements of $248,484. Last year, as in 1961, it received a $50,000 contribution from the AMA.

Other Spending Cited

State medical political committees, however, are not required to report their expenditures under the federal Corrupt Practices Act, Forand emphasized. Spending by state AMPACs, the AMA's own public relations campaign against social security hospital insurance, and the efforts of state medical societies and individual doctors on the AMA's behalf more than add up to the council's $7 million estimate, he said.

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

WILLIAM SHERILL JACOBS

JUDY CAROL WHITE

MICHAEL R. EHRICK

CRAIG PETERSON

ALLEN THOMSON

RENEE E. STERN

AFL-CIO College Scholarships Awarded 6 High School Seniors

Six more youngsters will enter college this fall on AFL-CIO scholarships, marking the fifth year the federation has helped outstanding high school graduates continue their education.

This year's winners, as were the 24 who preceded them, were chosen by the AFL-CIO from among finalists in competitive tests given by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. Youngsters from both union and non-union families were eligible.

Each scholarship is worth up to $1,500 a year—depending on individual need and actual expenses of students—for a full four years at the college of the student's choice. Four boys and two girls have been chosen for the 1963 scholarship awards.

In a letter to the winners, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed confidence that the continuation of their education "will enrich our society" as well as develop the talents of the students.

He told them that the AFL-CIO supports legislation providing federally-financed college scholarships to qualified high school graduates and "looks forward to the day when all young people will have the opportunity to develop the full measure of their capabilities, regardless of their financial status." Meany added:

"In this interim period when so many young people are deprived of this opportunity, the AFL-CIO is happy to demonstrate its interest in furthering education opportunities through these scholarship awards."

The scholarship winners are:

Judy Carol White, Tulsa, Okla., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Neville E. White. Judy ranks first in her class at McLain High School and has made the honor roll every year. Her father is a longtime active member and former officer of Operating Engineers Local 948.

Through church projects, Judy has done considerable volunteer work with handicapped children. Her wide range of school activities includes dramatics, the Red Cross and the school yearbook. She is also an expert baton twirler, a member of the Latin Club and secretary of the senior class. She plans to attend Oklahoma State University and to teach — either history or the teaching of handicapped children.

Michael R. Ehrick, Findlay, O., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Ehrick. He is in the top 10th of his class at Findlay High School and plans to enter California Institute of Technology with the help of his AFL-CIO scholarship. Michael gets up at 4:30 each morning to deliver newspapers, takes advanced courses in mathematics, earns top grades in the sciences, serves on the Student Council and is a member of the track team. He also finds time to be active in community and church affairs.

William Sherill Jacobs, Lithonia, Ga., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Jacobs. He heads his class at Lithonia High School and plans to enter Swarthmore College this fall.

William is active in church affairs and is interested in ideas and athletics. In school he is a member of the track, tennis and wrestling teams, the French Club, the Future Teachers of America, and the Student Council. Books which have influenced him include Alan Paton's Cry the Beloved Country, Will Durant's works on philosophy, Henry Thoreau's Walden, and Arthur Koestler's Darkness at Noon.

Craig Peterson, Mason City, Ia., who lives with his step-father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Purcell. Craig delivers papers in the morning, works in a supermarket after school and on Saturdays, and is "the best student" his mathematics teacher at Mason City High School ever had. His step-father is a charter member of the Packinghouse Workers Local 38.

Craig, who plans to major in science at Iowa State University, ranks first in his class, plays in his school band and in the Mason City Band, is president of the Math Club and a member of the Student Council. He built his own "ham" radio set and sold it to raise money for college.

Allen Thomson, Bisbee, Ariz., son of Mr. and Mrs. Captain A. Thomson. Allen plans to major in nuclear physics at the University of Arizona. His father, well-known in railroad union circles, is a former local chairman and legislative representative of the Railroad Signalmen and is now gravely ill with cancer. Allen shoulders a heavy burden of home responsibility since his mother is a victim of multiple sclerosis.

A top student at Bisbee High School, he is doing advanced work in science, assists on the school yearbook, covers sports for his hometown paper and has participated in his school's Chess Club, Science Club and Latin Club. Last summer he attended a two-week Engineers and Scientists Institute at the University of New Mexico and won a scholarship to the three-week journalism workshop of the Arizona Interscholastic Press Association.

Renee E. Stern, New York, N. Y., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Stern. Renee plans to major in child psychology and languages at Barnard College. She is graduating from the Bronx High School of Science, one of New York's top schools, where she edits the French journal, contributes to the school newspaper and is regarded as an excellent satirical cartoonist. Renee has spent considered time assisting elementary school children who require special tutoring. Her father is in active member of Local 1790 of the Textile Workers Union of America. Both her parents came to the United States as refugees from the Nazis.

4-27-63

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 4, 1963 | No. 18

Joblessness Remains High As Rate Hits 5.7% in April

THIRD GRADUATING CLASS of the American Institute for Free Labor Development hears AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany express thanks for a gift presented to the institute by the 32 students, all from Brazil, and is advised to "push development of free trade unions." Left to right: Ambassador of Brazil Roberto Campos; Meany, with gift map of Brazil; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, toastmaster; and Institute Dir. Serafino Romualdi. (See story Page 4)

Long-Term Idled Still at 1.4 Million

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's high-level unemployment picture remained unimproved in April as the jobless rate moved up to 5.7 percent, according to the Labor Dept.'s summary job report.

A total of 4.1 million were jobless, down by 400,000 as expected from March.

The key seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was up from March's 5.6 percent and meant that 57 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were actively seeking jobs and could not find them.

The 5.7 percent rate for April also was above the 5.6 percent for the same month a year ago; the postwar low for the month was 2.7 percent in April 1953.

In terms of both unemployment and underemployment, the Labor Dept. reported that "the proportion of labor force time lost through unemployment and reduced hours remained at 6.6 percent (seasonally adjusted), unchanged from March or from April a year ago."

On the job side, the Labor Dept. reported improvements in the nonfarm sector for the third straight month.

Total Jobs Up

Total employment rose by 900,000 to 68.1 million in April, a rise slightly larger than the usual substantial increase at this time of year, the report said. The continued pickup in non-farm jobs pushed that total to 63.4 million; farm jobs increased as expected to 4.7 million.

Counted in the employed total, the report pointed out, were 2.2 million non-farm workers on short workweeks for economic reasons; half usually worked full time, the other half had been unable to get regular fulltime jobs.

This total of underemployed has remained at 2.2 million for the past three months, the report added, the same as a year ago and a little lower

(Continued on Page 2)

'Progress' Yields $80 At Kaiser

Fontana, Calif.—Employes of Kaiser Steel Corp. covered by the company's "fruits of progress" agreement with the Steelworkers received added pay averaging nearly $80 for the first month the plan was in operation.

The union and the company announced jointly that total savings in material, supply and labor costs during March amounted to $962,000 below the 1961 base set by the agreement.

Under the savings plan, 32.5 percent of this total is earmarked for distribution to the 3,930 covered employes. While the USWA said it had made no detailed breakdown as to the effect on individual workers, it was estimated that the distribution amounted to an average of nearly 55 cents an hour over regular pay.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald said the union was "gratified" by the first report on the sharing plan, but as to predictions that it would become a model to be applied throughout the steel industry, he said, "we prefer to analyze all the factors involved."

The union represents about 6,500 production workers and 500 clerical-technical employes at Kaiser's Fontana, Calif., plant. A number

(Continued on Page 2)

Meany Tells Congress:

23 Percent of AFL-CIO Funds Spent in Cold War 'Front Lines'

By David L. Perlman

The AFL-CIO is fighting in the "front lines" of the cold war—spending 23 percent of its income overseas—because free trade unions abroad are vital to freedom here, Pres. George Meany told members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Meany testified on American labor's special contribution to the worldwide battle to preserve and develop free institutions—the direct worker-to-worker international contact which, he emphasized, is possible only through a trade union movement independent of government control.

The battle is being won, he told a subcommittee headed by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.).

The large-scale AFL-CIO effort, Meany said, is necessary to help carry out "the simple purpose" of the trade union movement—"raising the standards of the workers of the United States." When workers and their unions lose freedom in other nations, he said, the freedom of the American trade union movement is likewise menaced.

Unions are the "first victims" of any dictatorship, he emphasized.

To the subcommittee, which is holding hearings on "the U.S. ideological offensive" in the cold war, Meany outlined the practical help—in training, equipment and money—which the AFL-CIO itself and through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions gives to trade union movements in emerging countries and to unions fighting Communist efforts to control labor movements in free nations.

He spoke of ICFTU colleges and institutes in Africa and Asia. He described the work of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, with a board which includes leading businessmen and educators.

Part of Capitalism

The American trade union movement, Meany emphasized, is "part and parcel" of the capitalistic system. Under this system, he said, U.S. unions have "done more for the worker" than any other trade union movement in history. But he stressed that the AFL-CIO's concern in its international activities is with "the idea of freedom, not freedom with our system.

"I would rather sell the principle

(Continued on Page 12)

New U.S. Pay Raises Sought by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to vote a new round of pay increases for 1.6 million federal employes to keep their salaries "comparable" to pay scales in private industry.

The proposed increase averaging better than 3 percent would be on top of a raise government workers are scheduled to receive next Jan. 1.

Under the Salary Reform Act of the 87th Congress, the President is required to submit annual salary adjustment recommendations based on "comparability" surveys by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Kennedy told Congress that action to implement the salary recommendations "is critical to the rights and reasonable expectations of federal employes." He added:

"By our actions in this year's test we can demonstrate that the government has sincerely committed itself to the twin proposition of fair treatment of its employes and adequate compensa-

(Continued on Page 12)

IAM Members to Vote On New Boeing Accord

By Eugene A. Kelly

The Machinists, acting at the request of Pres. Kennedy, have scheduled another vote on a Boeing Co. contract proposal, setting 3 p.m. Friday, May 10, Pacific Daylight Time, for the simultaneous balloting.

The vote, IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes said in Washington, has been scheduled at the President's request following changes in and clarification of its previous offer by the Boeing Co.

The company's last contract offer had been rejected twice in nationwide balloting and a walkout scheduled for May 2 at Boeing aerospace plants in the Seattle-Renton, Wash., and Wichita, Kan., areas, along with Minuteman missile installations at 12 scattered locations.

Hayes made his announcement of the new vote following receipt of this telegram from Kennedy:

"The continuation of the dispute between the Intl. Association of Machinists and the Boeing Co. is of

(Continued on Page 3)

THE NEED FOR LONGER and more intensive training programs was the theme of a two-day conference on labor education sponsored in Washington by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education. The 80 participants were about evenly divided between union and university labor educators. Shown here are left to right: Frank Fernback, AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; Hy Kornbluh, director of the labor education program at the University of Michigan-Wayne State University; Dir. Lawrence Rogin of the federation's Dept. of Education; Herbert Levine, director of labor education at Rutgers University.

Labor's Objective:

Funds for Colleges Urged by Meany

Amherst, Mass.—Organized labor's number one objective with respect to higher education is that it be "liberally available" to assure that every young person is educated "to the full extent of his ability," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared at a symposium marking the Centennial Charter Day of the University of Massachusetts.

At a convocation earlier in the day, Meany received an honorary doctor of laws degree from the university. Honorary LL.D. degrees also were conferred upon Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, who gave the convocation address; Charles F. Avila, president of the Boston Edison Co., and James K. Pollock, Mursin professor of political science at the University of Michigan, both of whom also took part in the symposium.

Dr. John W. Lederle, president of the university, received a surprise honorary doctorate from Hokkaido University in Sapporo, Japan, conferred by its president, Dr. Harusada Suginome.

Hokkaido has something of a "sister" relationship with the University of Massachusetts, since it was founded in 1876 by the third president of the Bay State institution, William S. Clark, who took a leave of absence for that purpose.

In his address, Meany recalled that at the AFL-CIO's conference a year ago on equal opportunity for higher education he had called for a massive effort to establish "as a matter of national policy" the principle that "individual ability should be the only ceiling on the opportunity for higher learning."

He observed, however, that while the goals expressed at the conference had won general approval, "in all honesty, very little progress has been made toward their attainment."

'Harder Than Ever'

In some respects, he suggested, "it is harder than ever" for the children of working people to obtain a higher education on the same basis as the children of business and professional families. The burgeoning college-age population, rising tuition costs and admission standards have had the effect, he said, of limiting higher education increasingly to "young people of proven genius or of comfortable wealth."

"We do not think this is what the nation wants, or what it must have," Meany declared.

The only practical solution, he asserted, is "greater public support from both state and federal governments"—a higher commitment to public education rather than "bargain-basement solutions to our school problems."

He expressed support for the Kennedy Administration's proposals for a program of federal aid to colleges and universities, but said the appropriations being considered are "skimpy" when measured against the need.

Education is an "investment in the nation's future," the AFL-CIO president declared, "not a product that should be paid for by the immediate consumer, like a car or a suit of clothes."

'Concern of Society'

"We do not expect that the costs of maintaining the fire department will be carried only by those people whose houses catch fire," he observed, and "the same approach should be taken toward education."

"I believe that it should be the proper concern of our society as a whole that every young person is educated to the full extent of his ability," he declared.

"The danger is not that America will go bankrupt by making such an investment. The danger is a far more disastrous kind of bankruptcy by not making it."

Meany called, too, for expansion of the system of junior colleges and community colleges that has proved successful in California. This, he said, "is one way to make higher education more democratic than ever before."

He noted that colleges and universities have served to stimulate the economic development of communities in which they are situated. He urged them, however, to carry this community leadership further by being equally diligent in seeking solutions to major social problems—such as the impact of automation on workers and health care for the aged—through "the spirit of free inquiry."

Urges Worker Education

As a final point, Meany urged a wider recognition by universities of the part they can play in worker education through extension programs like those at Rutgers, Cornell and Wisconsin universities.

Thus, he observed in summary, labor expects of higher education "that it be available—available to young people whether or not they have high incomes and unusual intelligence; available to the whole community in terms of leadership for economic and social progress; available to working people to help them do better as union members, as producers and as citizens.

"This is the role we hope each public university will seek to fulfill. And we will do our utmost toward that end by continuing our campaign to provide for institutions of higher learning the broad public support they must have if our country is to be equal to the challenge of the future."

Jobless Rate Stays Up, Reaches 5.7% in April

(Continued from Page 1)

than the last half of 1962.

The longterm unemployed—those looking for work unsuccessfully for 15 weeks or longer—hung at 1.4 million, the same as in March and about the same as a year ago. The figure included 700,000 persons who had been out of work continuously for over half a year.

The 1.4 million longterm jobless total for April is double the total of 706,000 for April 1957, before the last two recessions; it is six times larger than the 242,000 total of April 1953, postwar low for the month.

The report said that the decline of 400,000 to a total of 4.1 million unemployed occurred almost entirely among adult men, in line with the normal seasonal change. It observed, too, that 3.5 million—or 87 percent of the unemployed—were looking for fulltime jobs in April.

The seasonally adjusted jobless rates for both adult men and adult women were virtually unchanged over the month and the year. The rate for married men dropped to 3.3 percent from 3.7 percent a year ago.

The jobless rate for teenagers, however, stood at about 15 percent in April, somewhat higher than a year ago, the report observed.

The Labor Dept. also reported that the total labor force again increased more than seasonally to 74.9 million, "continuing the advance recorded during the past six months." The labor force totaled 1.2 million more than in April a year ago.

Meany Hits Guiana Bill As Unfair

Condemnation of a proposed new law that would "establish government controls which would strangle the British Guiana free trade union movement and deprive workers of their hard-earned rights" has been sent by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Pres. Richard Ishmael of the British Guiana Trade Union Council.

The law, proposed by the government of Prime Minister Cheddi B. Jagan, would authorize the minister of labor to designate any union he chose as the bargaining agent of any group of workers, and would require employers to bargain

The BGTUC has tied up sugar and rice plantations, bauxite mines and public services with a protest strike, and the proposed legislation has been condemned by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the Caribbean Congress of Labor and the British Trades Union Congress.

"In the spirit of free trade unionism," Meany said in his message, "we pledge our full support to the preservation of free and democratic trade unionism and to secure the fullest benefits for all workers. Free and independent trade unionism must be promoted and maintained."

Hillman Honors Given Writers and TV Teams

New York—Sidney Hillman Foundation awards for the best work of 1962 in the mass communication field have been presented to two authors, a newspaper editorial writer from the South, and two television program teams.

The $500 cash awards, 13th in an annual series created by the Clothing Workers in memory of the union's first president, were presented to the winners at a luncheon. The awards went to:

- Michael Harrington for his book The Other America, called by the judges "a lucid and pentrating study of poverty" in the United States.
- Margaret Parton for writing Sometimes Life Just Happens, published in the Ladies Home Journal and called a "thoughtful and humanitarian . . . defense of the Aid to Dependent Children program."
- Ira Harkey for editorials in the Pascagoula, Miss., Chronicle which scored Gov. Ross Barnett for trying to bar James Meredith, Negro student, from enrolling in the University of Mississippi.
- John Keats, David E. Wilson and George Dessart for the documentary program, "Conformity," presented on WCAU-TV, Philadelphia; and Warren Wallace for the documentary, "Superfluous People."

ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky presented the awards and said the winners have "willingly embraced controversy and demonstrated the courage to deal honestly and forthrightly with truths that are often unpleasant to hear."

Speakers at the award ceremony included Howard K. Smith, ABC television commentator and one of the three Hillman Foundation award judges.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner told the gathering that the forces of social progress, led by Hillman and other ACWA stalwarts, have made "great and historic gains" but "we must clearly recognize that today we have much further to go than we have come."

Harkey was applauded when he said he had "committed many foul un-southern crimes" when he "wilfully agreed with the Negro Mississippian that he is entitled to the rights of citizenship" and was "committing the most inexcusable crime" by aiding and abetting "Yankees in recognizing and honoring my un-southern villainy."

Factory Earnings Edge Up in March

The factory worker's take-home pay rose slightly in March after a two-month decline from December's record level, the Labor Dept. has reported.

Small gains in the workweek and average hourly earnings caused a rise to $86.11 in take-home pay for the factory worker with three dependents and to $78.43 for one without dependents. This is 50 cents above the February total and $1.10 above a year ago.

Because of the one-tenth of 1 percent rise in the cost of living between February and March, real earnings advanced by 42 cents and at $81.08 for the worker with three dependents, were 13 cents higher than a year ago.

Kaiser 'Progress' Pact Pays $80 in First Month of the workers, however, have not yet exercised their option to join the sharing plan and give up existing incentive systems.

(Continued from Page 1)

The plan was worked out over a three-year period by a "Long Range Committee" composed of union, company and public representatives. The nine-member committee was set up following the 1959 steel strike, in which Kaiser broke with other producers to reach agreement with the USWA and end the 104-day dispute.

It guarantees Kaiser workers receive at least as much in wages and fringe benefits as employes of other steel companies and also a monthly distribution of their share of cost savings. Individual sharing benefits vary according to base pay.

The four-year plan, which may be canceled at the end of the period by either company or union, effectively does away with contract deadlines on wages and other economic matters by removing the total amounts of money allotted to these benefits from the area of collective bargaining dispute. Normal bargaining procedures are followed on all other matters, however.

Auto Workers Sue:

$12 Million Damages Asked of 'Runaway'

Detroit—The Auto Workers have filed suit for $12.7 million damages in Wayne County Circuit Court against a company which "ran away" from a three-year contract with Local 831 by moving to Greenville, Tenn., last summer.

The firm is the Avis Industrial Corp., which shut its Hurd Lock plant in Almont, Mich., and hired new employes at its new plant in Tennessee. The union has asked the court to award damages covering lost wages, pension benefits, health and accident insurance payments, and other benefits lost by the 310 Almont plant workers.

The union contends the company was legally bound to meet the terms of an agreement with the UAW and its Almont local. The contract, signed three years ago, is for a term ending next Nov. 1.

UAW Regional Co-director George Merreli said that when the contract was being negotiated in 1960, the union heard rumors of a possible move to Tennessee and asked management to agree that in the event of a relocation, employes not wishing to transfer would be given separation pay based on years of service. The company refused, saying no plant removal was being contemplated.

Later it became known that the service department was to be moved and then the entire plant if that seemed advisable. The union voted to accept a pay cut of 42 cents an hour to keep the plant in Almont, the company accepted the wage cut but refused to change its plans, according to the union.

The suit charges that management notified the union on Sept. 12, 1961, that it was moving South and would allow the contract to lapse. Almont employes were willing to move but were not given the opportunity, the union said.

Several other suits have been filed against "runaway" employers by unions or workers. A key case involved the UAW and the Gemmer Manufacturing division of the Ross Gear & Tool Co., which left 716 employes behind when it moved from Detroit to Lebanon, Tenn. An appeals court ruled against the workers on the basis of the language of the contract.

Another major case grew out of the action of the Glidden Co. in closing its Durkee Famous Foods plant at Elmhurst, N. Y., in 1957, and moving to Bethlehem, Pa. A suit for damages was filed by workers who claimed their job rights survived the expiration of the contract. The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a lower-court decision against the workers. Recently U.S. District Judge E. L. Palmieri cleared the way for a second appeal to the appellate court by holding Glidden liable for damages.

TEACHERS' UNION CHARTER is presented to a new local of 300 New York City college professors at a New York ceremony. Pictured left to right: Pres. Charles Cogen of the United Federation of Teachers; Dr. Israel Kugler of New York City Community College, president, AFT Local 1460; and AFT Pres. Carl Megel, who signed the charter. Greetings were sent to the new local by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, head of the Industrial Union Dept.

Local Aides Named to Join Merger Talks

Chicago—Merger discussions between the Photo Engravers and the unaffiliated Lithographers were expanded to include 29 officers of locals representing about two-thirds of the 60,000 combined membership of the two unions.

IPEU Pres. William J. Hall and ALA Pres. Kenneth J. Brown were co-chairmen of a day-long conference bringing together local leaders and international officers of the two organizations to explore the terms of the proposed merger agreement and approaches to merger on the local level.

The conference approved the expansion of the merger committee by the addition of the presidents of IPEU and ALA locals in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Mineapolis-St. Paul.

The executive councils of both unions have responded favorably to the proposed merger agreement, drafted by a subcommittee of executive officers of the two organizations. Conventions of the IPEU in August and the ALA in September are scheduled to consider the proposal. If they approve, it will be submitted to referendum votes of the entire membership of both unions.

Convention Dates Set By 4 Labor Bodies

Four union organizations have set convention dates since the last convention calendar appeared in the AFL-CIO News. They are:

Seafarers, May 6-10, Washington, D.C.; Georgia State AFL-CIO, May 15-18, Savannah; Ohio State AFL-CIO, May 26-28, Cleveland; and Idaho AFL-CIO, June 10-12, Lewiston.

'Share-Wealth' Policy Proposed in Textiles

New York—The executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America has called on southern textile manufacturers to "share their signal prosperity" with their employes by putting into effect immediate and substantial across-the-board wage increases and fringe benefits.

The 22-member council, meeting here in quarterly session, pointed out that there has been no increase in southern textile wages since March 1962, despite the fact that corporate profits have been averaging 23 percent more than in 1961—a rate equivalent to a profit of 50 cents an hour on each worker's labor.

In another action the council, noting the recent purchase by Deering Milliken Inc. of seven Textron plants in the Carolinas, urged the Senate and House Judiciary committees and the Dept. of Justice to take steps to "prevent giant textile companies from obtaining a monopolistic stranglehold" on the industry.

In the matter of wages, the TWUA council said, the failure of southern employers to give their workers any share in recent profits is "inexcusable."

Poor Wages Worsen

The wages of textile workers have fallen from a 13 percent deficiency in 1948 to a point 30 percent below the national manufacturing average wage, now at $2.43 an hour, the board said. The disparity in fringe benefits is even greater and the gap, in the absence of any new benefits in 1963, is bound to widen, said the council.

Indications are that 1963 will be a "substantially profitable year" for textile employers, said a resolution citing increased worker productivity, a $25 million estimated annual tax saving from depreciation, "imminent changes" in the two-price cotton system, and possible further tax reductions.

The council called on Congress to enact the Talmadge-Humphrey bill as "the best way to achieve a one-price cotton system."

It said the bill, introduced by Sen. Herman E. Talmadge (D-Ga.) and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), would reduce the domestic cost of cotton by 25 percent, lead to an increase in mill consumption of at least 10 percent, and create job opportunities for 35,000 cotton textile workers.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock said the refusal of southern employers to share their good fortune flies in the face of time-tested American principles.

The resolution on mergers pointed out that four big firms—Burlington, J. P. Stevens, Cannon Mills and Deering Milliken—have boosted their share of basic textile employment from 10 percent in 1953 to 24 percent in 1963. It concluded:

"It is time for the appropriate agencies of government to review this threatening situation and take action to prevent the industry's giants from obtaining a stranglehold" on the economy.

Freeman Offers to Aid Members in Baltimore

Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, in a letter to all members of the IBEW's former Local 28 in Baltimore, has offered personally to assist them in transferring their memberships to other locals of the union.

Freeman's letter followed the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to review an appeal from a lower court decision upholding his revocation of Local 28's charter because it refused to end an unauthorized strike against Baltimore electrical contractors.

The IBEW president noted that each present active member of Local 28, except those subject to disciplinary action under the union's constitution, "is freely entitled to apply for membership" in any IBEW local, including the new Local 24 chartered by the international to replace Local 28.

He noted that neither he nor the international has control over any local's actions in passing on applications for membership. Nevertheless, he offered to use his "best efforts" as international president to persuade each IBEW local in the United States to accept one or more members of the former Local 28 into membership. IBEW members may work in any city that has work available no matter where their "home local" is situated.

Special Card Offered

Freeman further offered to issue a special card from IBEW headquarters to those Local 28 members unable immediately to gain admission to another local. This would continue the member's traveling privileges until June 30, 1964, or until he is admitted to another local.

Such a card would require the member to pay only the per capita tax to IBEW, which, Freeman noted, "may seem unfair" to other members of the union who also pay dues to their locals. He emphasized, however, that the international was willing to make this arrangement only on a temporary basis.

With regard to Local 28's funds and property and the interests of its members in pension trust funds, Freeman proposed that a corporate trustee be named to administer such funds. He noted that the pension fund had been described in testimony as actuarially unsound and suggested that the general funds of the local be used to bolster it.

Union Upheld In Operation Of Trust Fund

Los Angeles—A U.S. District Court judge has dismissed a suit by the Food Employers Council to remove the office of a jointly-administered health fund from the headquarters of Retail Clerks Local 324 on the ground that its location there violated the Taft-Hartley Act.

The management association also contended that payments to the union for services rendered in data processing and other technical work violated the act's prohibitions against employer payments to unions or their representatives.

Judge Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., dismissed the suit on both counts.

The employer group conceded that there was never any question of the honesty of the fund operation, but argued that its location in the union's Buena Park headquarters violated the law.

Local 324 maintained that moving the fund office, which has been operating at union headquarters since 1951, would result in higher administrative costs and mean reduced health benefits for the 10,000 local members and their families.

IAM Members to Vote On New Boeing Accord

(Continued from Page 1)

grave national concern. Any interruption of operations at the Boeing facilities at this time would have a serious impact on the defense posture of the nation. In view of the most recent developments and proposals in these negotiations since the last vote, I urge that the IAM withhold its announced strike action and resubmit this matter to the union membership."

The union and management had gone back to the bargaining table after Boeing workers voted to reject a contract settlement reached on the eve of a previous strike deadline, set for Apr. 15.

Principal objections of the workers had centered, the union said, on a so-called performance analysis system under which supervisors "rate" each employe every six months. The objections were most vocal at the Boeing plant in Wichita, where a proposed new three-year contract was overwhelmingly defeated in the previous vote conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The announcement of a modified proposal was the latest development in more than nine months of negotiations marked by more than 50 meetings of union-management bargaining committees.

Boeing negotiations were the last of a series with major aerospace firms. All others came to terms earlier with the Machinists and the Auto Workers, who had agreed more than a year ago to make improved job and income security their major contract goals.

The Boeing talks were so prolonged that union members were on the verge of walking out on several occasions but each time postponed strike action because of pleas by Pres. Kennedy, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Dir. William Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Last January, when all firms except Boeing had agreed to accept settlements recommended by presidential emergency panels, a Kennedy-appointed board urged Boeing to "show a sense of responsibility comparable" to that shown by the union.

That admonition brought no change in management's refusal to permit a vote on a union shop clause. Another walkout was averted only when Kennedy secured an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction against a strike.

Joint Study Held Needed at GE

San Francisco—General Electric Co. stockholders heard a union leader say at their annual meeting here that joint exploration of the facts and figures necessary for good faith collective bargaining could "result in a mutually satisfactory contract agreement by next Sept. 1."

The union man was John Callahan of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, chairman of the union's GE Conference Board. He said the company will have to accept the idea of the union as a joint participant in setting wages, hours and working conditions if it is to enjoy amicable labor relations.

The present three-year contract expires next Sept. 30. Last month a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner reported that GE was responsible for a 1960 strike because it engaged in bad-faith bargaining.

LUNCHEON AT WHITE HOUSE April 24 gave union officials from across the country chance to renew acquaintance with Pres. Kennedy, Vice Pres. Johnson and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. Guests included presidents of AFL-CIO affiliated unions, state federations and city central bodies, Pres. George Meany and Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Unions Key to Freedom, Kennedy Tells Students

Democratic trade unions are "a mighty weapon in the common struggle against poverty, ignorance and disease," Pres. John F. Kennedy assured the third graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development in a message read to the class by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at commencement exercises in Washington.

Three women and 29 men from Brazil were in the class which received diplomas from Meany and greetings from top leaders of labor, industry and government. The class was the third to take intensive training in a joint labor-management project aimed at developing democratic unionists from Latin America.

In his message, Kennedy congratulated the graduates and said the Institute program is "dedicated to the proposition that free and democratic trade unions are keystones in the arch of political democracy." He added:

"Your unions and ours can help elevate the people of Brazil, and of all the Americas, to a richer and fuller life of peace with justice."

Meany had one bit of advice for the graduates at the ceremony in the International Inn: "Push the development of free trade unions."

The graduates presented an embossed map of Brazil to the institute as a mark of thanks and expressed their appreciation to Institute Dir. Serafino Romualdi and other instructors in a graduation address made for the class by Canuto Machado Coelho Filho of Sao Paulo.

To Defend Rights

Expressing the graduates' intention to defend the rights of workers in Brazil and to fight against efforts at subversion by international communism, the speaker saluted the "magnificent example of dedication to trade unionism" given by Romualdi and his staff—Dir. of Education Sam Haddad, Assistant Dir. Clifford Valenciana, interpreters Pepe Sueiro and Lewis Dodd, student counselors Jose Estrada and Domingo Lamadriz, and others.

Other speakers included Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, who was toastmaster; Ambassador of Brazil Roberto de Oliveira Campos; Pres. J. Peter Grace of W. R. Grace & Co., chairman of Institute trustees, and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. Among those present also were AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Pres. Joseph Keenan, who is also secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Ambassador Hails Unions

Ambassador Campos asserted that free trade unions are "vital to orderly development through reform rather than revolution" and urged the graduates to help improve relations between the U.S. and Brazil. The group could, he pointed out, be "an active power" in Brazil's future.

Wirtz praised the institute as "one of the best things in our country" and told the graduates they were returning "as 32 ambassadors who can say to the people of Brazil that the people of the U.S. seek the same good things — better wages, better working conditions, and a better life for their families."

One of the graduates is Heloise Montenegro da Silva of Rio de Janeiro, president of the Union of Midwives of the state of Guanabara. She described the union as "the only exclusively female union" in the world and said it hopes some day to engage in bargaining.

IAM Names 10 Winners of Scholarships

The Machinists have awarded college scholarships to 10 of 819 candidates who competed in the annual judging for IAM grants.

The winners, chosen by a committee of educators not connected with the union, included eight high school students and two IAM members with families of their own.

Each scholarship pays $1,000 a year for four years of study in any accredited college. The program is financed by contributions from the IAM and its affiliates.

In announcing the awards during Machinists' Month, marking the 75th anniversary of the union's founding, IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes stressed the need for federal and state legislation to keep tuition low and to provide more community and two-year colleges and technical institutes as well as more scholarships "for students who really need them."

Unionists Guests of President

Pres. Kennedy was host at a recent White House luncheon given to renew acquaintances with a number of leaders of international unions, AFL-CIO departments and state and local central bodies.

Other guests included Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Assistant Sec. James J. Reynolds, and AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

The international union presidents included Russell K. Berg, Boilermakers; David Sullivan, Building Service Employes; Gordon M. Freeman, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Alex Rose, Hatters; John H. Lyons, Jr., Iron Workers; H. E. Gilbert, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen; John J. Grogan, Shipbuilders.

Also, Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse Workers; E. C. Hallbeck, Postal Clerks; G. E. Leighty, Railroad Telegraphers; George Burdon, Rubber Workers; Elmer Brown, Typographical Union; William D. Buck, Fire Fighters; Karl W. Griepentrog, Allied Industrial Workers.

Also, Howard Coughlin, Office Workers; William J. Pachler, Utility Workers; Felix C. Jones, Cement Workers; George Baldanzi, United Textile Workers; George Fecteau, United Shoe Workers.

Others included Pres. C. J. Haggerty, AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis, Union Label & Service Trades Dept., and the following central body officers:

Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts, California; Pres. H. S. Hank Brown, Texas; Pres. W. F. Strong, Maryland-D.C.; Pres. Raymond R. Corbett, New York; Pres. Victor Bussie, Louisiana; Executive Sec.-Treas. Sam Ezelle, Kentucky; Pres. J. C. Turner, Washington, D.C.; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., New York City; Sec. Oscar A. Ehrhardt, St. Louis.

AP Labor Reporter Takes Federal Post

Norman Walker, dean of labor reporters in Washington, has resigned from the Associated Press after 29 years of service to assume a new post with the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Some 50 labor reporters were joined by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a surprise farewell luncheon.

Writ Sought Against FEC:

Rail Panel Steps Up Mediation on Rules

New York—A presidential emergency board, with time running out, stepped up its efforts to mediate the railroad work rules dispute and avert a nationwide strike.

Chairman Samuel I. Rosenman told newsmen both parties "are trying seriously to avoid a strike," but said the operating unions and rail management "are almost as far apart as when we started."

The board moved its operations from Chicago to New York and scheduled, for the first time, a full-dress negotiating session bringing together officials of the railroads and the five unions involved.

Meanwhile, in a related development, the Justice Dept. filed for a federal court injunction to force the Florida East Coast Railway to withdraw the unilateral work rules changes it imposed on operating employes during a strike by "non-op" unions.

The department said the imposition of new work rules was barred when Pres. Kennedy set up the present emergency board. This froze the status quo for 60 days. The railroad, struck since Jan. 23 in a "non-op" wage dispute, claims that it withdrew from national bargaining before the emergency board was created.

In its injunction suit, which was being heard in U.S. District Court in Washington, D. C., as the AFL-CIO News went to press, the Justice Dept. said the railroad's "illegal" action is delaying settlement of the "non-op" strike and will "substantially reduce the chances" of settling the national work rules dispute.

The operating unions, which had previously been respecting the shop crafts' picket lines, joined the strike when the work rule changes were put into effect.

The emergency board has until May 11 to report to the President and thereafter both parties must negotiate for 30 days before being free to take unilateral action.

Rosenman said the board plans to keep the parties negotiating "day and nights and weekends in an effort to reach a settlement." Serving with him on the panel are University of Wisconsin Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger and Pres. Clark Kerr of the University of California.

While the most publicized issue in the dispute is the railroads' efforts to eliminate the jobs of most locomotive firemen, union and employer negotiators are far apart also on pay and mileage rules, job assignments, and union proposals for night and holiday pay and job protection.

Profit-Sharing Cited By UAW to Industry

Detroit—Profit-sharing is one of the ways in which auto manufacturers can divide a portion of their "fabulous earnings" with the workers who made them possible, Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther said here.

In a press conference following closed meetings of the union's General Motors Conference and Ford Conference, Reuther said it would be an "unconscionable crime" for the industry to raise prices next year in the face of mammoth profits.

Profit-sharing is a device and not a goal, Reuther told reporters who asked if delegates to the two conferences had voted to ask for plans similar to one at American Motors under a contract with the UAW.

Contract goals in 1964 negotiations will be based, the UAW's chief negotiator said, on the needs of the workers and their families. Workers are entitled to their equity whether they get it in the form of wages, fringes, or profit-sharing, he said.

GM has just reported first-quarter profits of $414 million, Ford $121.3 million and Chrysler $36.2 million. Under the profit-sharing plan now in effect at American Motors, every GM worker would have received more than $900 last year, Reuther said.

The union also issued a pre-conference statement to the effect that in addition to its profits, Ford gave its executives $41.9 million in bonuses this year—eight times the $5 millions paid in wage increases to workers for increased productivity.

In another development, the union and American Motors heads agreed at a meeting Apr. 26 to establish a joint study committee well in advance of 1964 contract negotiations. Ford and GM previously had agreed to advance study of the problems.

Meany Hails Alliance Of Labor, Armed Forces

The "partnership" of the country's workers with the Armed Services was cited by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a message urging all unions to participate in the observance of May 18 as Armed Forces Day.

"The slogan of Armed Forces Day, 'Power for Peace,' is one to which the labor movement heartily subscribes," he wrote in a letter to all national and international affiliates, state and central bodies, and directly affiliated locals.

"As you realize, union members are closer than most other civilians to the defense establishment. We literally created the tools which the men in uniform must have to keep America safe and free.

"It is most appropriate, therefore, that we all take part as fully as possible in the observance of Armed Forces Day and in the various 'open house' events that will be held at military installations during the period of May 11-19."

This annual celebration "is an opportunity to demonstrate" the "partnership," Meany said.

"I urge you to join in the program in your area and to encourage your members to attend as well," he added.

Fact Sheet on 88th Congress:

Federal Spending Means More Jobs

Fiscal Policy 'Powerful Tool' To Boost Lagging U.S. Economy

WITH SPENDING by the U.S. government at 20 percent of our yearly national income, the federal budget clearly has a tremendous impact on the American economy and on job opportunities for American workers.

Thus, fiscal policy—which means federal taxing and spending policies—can be a powerful tool to boost our lagging economy to the $600 billion mark and to cut down continuing high unemployment— or vice versa.

A net increase in federal spending expands demand for goods and services and results in bigger production and in more jobs.

A net increase in federal tax revenue has just the opposite effect. It cuts effective demand for goods and services and results in less production and fewer jobs.

The AFL-CIO is calling for an expansionary fiscal policy, including a $10 billion tax cut for low-income and middle-income families. But the good effects of the tax cut would be destroyed if federal spending is also cut. Therefore, the AFL-CIO urges that federal spending be maintained or increased beyond its present level.

Right after World War II, Congress enacted a landmark piece of legislation, the Employment Act of 1946, to assert the will of the government to prevent a recurrence of the human tragedy and economic loss resulting from the great depression of the 1930s.

In this law, Congress declared that it is the responsibility of the federal government "to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

To the extent that joblessness persists, to the extent that production and purchasing power lag behind our full employment potential, the federal government falls short of its responsibility. In meeting this responsibility properly, the federal budget has a double role.

First, it is an agenda of purposes and priorities in the form of a plan for the conduct and financing of the public business.

Second, it is the most powerful single tool we have for linking the private and public sectors of our economy in a common effort to achieve and maintain national prosperity.

'A Tool to Help'

When the economy is operating at full blast, when manpower is in short supply, when industry cannot produce fast enough to meet the demands of consumers who have extra cash jingling in their pockets, shortages and production bottlenecks cause prices to rise rapidly.

Such an era provides an inflationary situation. In such a time, sound fiscal policy calls for cutting back on postponable government spending and for bigger taxes to cut down excess demand for goods and services. In a period of inflation, sound fiscal policy will produce a surplus of income over outgo in the federal budget. Tax receipts will exceed federal spending and the tax surplus will reduce inflationary pressures.

But in a time of recession, when millions are out of work, when our economy is far below its full employment potential, sound fiscal policy will produce an excess of federal spending over federal tax revenue to increase purchasing power, to increase effective demand for goods and services.

Such an excess of outgo over income is labeled a "budget deficit," but it is really an investment in economic growth, an investment in jobs. Thus federal spending helps boost production and create jobs by expanding the nation's purchasing power.

In the last 10 years, the American economy has slowed down from the fast Korean War expansion rate to a sick snail's pace, interrupted by three recessions and marked by continuing high unemployment in excess of 5 percent for the past five years. The average yearly increase in total national production in 1953-62 was only 2.7 percent, whereas in 1947-52 it was 4.8 percent.

If we had made full use of our growing labor force and our increasing productive capacity since 1953, our growth rate would have been at least 4 percent a year. In the 1960's, our expanding labor force and the spread of automation will increase our potential growth rate to 5 percent a year.

The Kennedy Administration, the AFL-CIO has said, should call for an increase in public spending in addition to its proposals for a substantial tax cut to boost private spending, economic growth, and job opportunities.

The AFL-CIO wants improvements in the Administration tax proposals so that cuts will be concentrated in low-income and middle-income brackets and will be concentrated in one year instead of spread over three years.

Unfortunately, so far there is no clear commitment to a compensatory fiscal policy of federal spending to counteract the swings of the business cycle, to stimulate faster economic growth, and to provide more jobs.

Growth Restricted

In fact, the operations of the federal budget too often restrict economic growth. Instead of running a surplus in good times and a deficit in bad times, there has been excessive, unjustified emphasis on balancing the budget at all times.

These misplaced budget-balancing efforts have failed. In fact, they contributed to large budget deficits in the 1950s. They have also deprived the American people of essential public investment in schools, hospitals, highways, housing, and other public services.

The last AFL-CIO convention declared:

"A special, flexible public works program should be adopted that could be instituted quickly to counter recessionary declines of economic activities.

"Federal funds should be available for temporary grants-in-aid to the states and local governments to enable them to step up their public works programs of construction, repairs, and maintenance, when unemployment is at high levels.

"The President should have authority to institute such grants-in-aid when unemployment increases beyond a specified level and to maintain the program until economic activities rise towards full employment."

Fortunately, in 1962 the 87th Congress enacted a one-year $900 million job-creating emergency public works acceleration program along the lines urged by the AFL-CIO. This program provides federal aid to states and local communities to help them build essential public works—and thus helps create more jobs for American workers.

Congress appropriated the first $400 million for this program in 1962, and in 1963 Pres. Kennedy asked the 88th Congress to appropriate the remaining $500 million. The House Republican Policy Committee opposed any funds for the job-creating emergency public works program. In a key vote, the House voted 228 to 184 to spend $450 million for this program.

Voting for funds to continue the program were 208 Democrats and 20 Republicans. Voting against this job-creating federal spending were 151 Republicans and 33 Democrats. The Senate then approved the funds by a 60-26 vote.

The AFL-CIO calls for continuation of the accelerated public works program through fiscal 1964 with enough money to put more men to work on urgently needed federal, state, and local public works.

The fight in the House over the public works appropriations was a key skirmish in the 1963 "battle of the budget." This battle started, however, on Jan. 17 when Kennedy sent to Congress his proposed budget for fiscal 1964, the year that starts July 1, 1963, and ends June 30, 1964. It continued when he asked Congress to enact a $10 billion tax cut, spread over three years, to boost the economy. But his proposals would bring a tax cut of only $3 billion in 1963. The AFL-CIO believes that a tax cut of $10 billion in 1963 is needed.

Deficit Proposed

In his traditional administrative budget, Kennedy predicted federal spending of $98.8 billion and federal revenue amounting to $86.9 billion in fiscal 1964. This would result in a $11.9 billion excess of outgo over income.

Using a cash budget (see box on this page), the President predicted total cash spending by the federal government in fiscal 1964 of $122.5 billion, total cash income of $112.2 billion and a resulting cash budget deficit of $10.3 billion.

In his budget message, Kennedy pointed out that a substantial part of his proposed spending for fiscal 1964 might properly be considered investments, which could be carried separately in a capital budget.

In the "battle of the budget," conservatives accuse the President of "fiscal irresponsibility" in asking for a tax cut and, at the same time, keeping federal spending up.

A group of Republican congressmen called for a $10 to $15 billion cut in the 1964 budget. Former Pres. Eisenhower and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York, a potential contender for the Republican presidential nomination in 1964, also called for a $10 billion cut in the 1964 federal budget.

House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D-Okla.), challenging Republicans to tell where they would cut the budget, declared:

"If an effort to cut $10 or $15 billion is successful, it will be a real threat to our economic stability. It would mean more people out of work at a time when unemployment still is a critical problem."

Kennedy warns that big cuts in federal spending will mean the loss of many jobs. On Apr. 19, he said:

"I am strongly opposed . . . (to) the wholesale budget cuts that have been talked about, $5, $10, and $15 billion. I can think of nothing more ruinous to the security of this country and our economy."

As our national income goes up, federal tax revenues go up also. Those who fear bigger federal spending often fail to realize that our growing economy can easily afford increases in the federal budget. Federal spending ever since 1952 has averaged about 20 percent of our gross national product (GNP) or national income. It is no larger now.

In a $500 billion economy, 20 percent is $100 billion. But 20 percent of a $600 billion economy would be $120 billion. Even with the heavy costs of national defense and domestic welfare, the nation would find the burden easier.

Furthermore, expansion of the economy toward the $600 billion mark reduces the burden of the federal debt. Most of this debt stems from World War II—it rose from $37 billion in 1938 to $270 billion in 1946.

Burden Eased

Rising national income has already eased the relative burden of this debt considerably. In 1946 the debt was more than 130 percent of our annual national income. In 1962 it was only 55 percent of a much bigger national income.

As a nation, we are like a man who was earning $5,000 a year while owing a debt of $6,500 in 1946 and now is earning $13,000 a year while carrying a debt of $7,000.

We expect families to go into debt when they invest in a home. We expect corporations to go into debt when they invest in new machinery. We should also expect the federal government to go into debt when necessary to invest in job-creating economic growth which promotes national welfare and prosperity.

A shortsighted policy of trying to balance the budget at all times is self-defeating. Eisenhower sincerely tried to balance the federal budget every year he was in office. But his attempt to do this in 1957 was a basic cause of the 1958 recession which produced a record peacetime deficit of $13 billion in fiscal 1959.

An intelligent fiscal policy, therefore, depends on the state of the national economy. In boom times it will restrain inflation with higher taxes and budget surpluses. But when productive capacity far exceeds output, when millions are looking for jobs, federal spending is a vital tool to expand purchasing power, to promote economic growth, and to open up more job opportunities.

Fact Sheet Series On Key Issues

The AFL-CIO News is publishing on this page another in a series of Fact Sheets on issues before the 88th Congress—a study of the federal budget. The first was on tax policy.

Reprints of these Fact Sheets are available from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

Kennedy Calls the Budget An Investment in Future

"Until we restore full prosperity and the budget-balancing revenues it generates, our practical choice is not between deficit and surplus but between two kinds of deficits: between deficits born of waste and weakness, and deficits incurred as we build our future strength.

"If an individual spends frivolously beyond his means today and beyond his prospects for earning tomorrow, this is a sign of weakness.

"But if he borrows prudently to invest in a machine that boosts his business profit, or to pay for education and training that boost his earning power, this can be a sources of strength, a deficit through which he builds a better future for himself and his family, a deficit justified by his increased potential.

"As long as we have large numbers of workers without jobs and producers without markets, we will as a nation fall into repeated deficits of inertia and weakness.

"But, by comparison, if we enlarge the deficit temporarily as the by-product of our positive tax policy to expand our economy, this will serve as a source of strength, not a sign of weakness.

"It will yield rich private dividends in higher output, faster growth, more jobs, higher profits and incomes; and, by the same token, a large public gain in expanded budget revenues.

"As the economy returns to full employment, the budget will return to constructive balance."

—Pres. Kennedy's Jan. 21, 1963 Economic Report to Congress

Main Types of Budgets Used by Governments

Administrative budget. This shows the money coming into the U.S. Treasury's general fund each year, mostly from taxes on personal income and corporation profits, and the money paid out as a result of annual appropriations by Congress.

Cash budget. This shows all cash income and outgo including, in addition to items in the administrative budget, money paid into the social security and highway trust funds, money paid out in social security benefits and payments for interstate highway construction.

Capital budget. A number of other nations, but not the U.S., have a separate budget to distinguish long-term investments which will bring benefits in future years from current expenditures. The AFL-CIO has urged the use of a capital budget to give a more accurate picture of government spending.

A Tax Cut Now

REPORTS BY ADMINISTRATION spokesmen of an economic pickup in the first three months of the year are as welcome as the warming spring after the severe winter. But the signs of mild improvement are being badly misread by economic illiterates willing to sacrifice all on the altar of 19th Century theory.

A wide variety of economists have been noting for some time that the Council of Economic Advisers' estimate of the gross national product for 1963 was understated and conservative when presented in January. The CEA report also contained an estimated total value of goods and services produced in a range with a high and a low after its 1962 estimates were found to be somewhat optimistic when the final figures were in.

The first quarter improvement and pickup in the economy is within the range of the council's estimates. But granting that the second quarter may see further improvement, the basic question of a tax cut concentrated in the low and middle-income brackets is still an overriding necessity.

The past few years have proved conclusively that a rise in the GNP, especially a mild one, has not resulted in reducing unemployment. In 1962 the GNP rose and the unemployment rate remained basically unchanged.

In order to give the economy a shot-in-the-arm to pick up the lagging growth rate and bring the joblessness rate down sharply, a tax cut of greater scope than that proposed by the Administration is a top priority.

The real danger is that if a pickup of the size registered in the first quarter leads to a limited tax reduction, the pickup will fizzle out and the economy will return to its sideways crawl—or worse, turn downward into a recession.

It has been demonstrated beyond challenge that to make a dent in the intolerably high unemployment rate a sizeable and sustained increase in economic activity is necessary and a sharp rise in the GNP required. Without a tax cut of $10 billion put in the hands of consumers, the economy will crawl along while millions of Americans will suffer the poverty, bitterness and frustrations of unemployment.

Slipped Image

THE AMERICAN Medical Association has carefully been nurturing an image of reasonableness and moderation to cover its bitter-end opposition to health care for the aged. But the image slipped down around the AMA's ankles as it fought and lost a campaign to prevent federal loans to medical students as part of a medical education measure.

An indication of how far the AMA has departed from reality and is a prisoner of its own propaganda is that the American Dental Association refused to go along with the AMA and backed the bill with its student loan provision.

Passage of the measure, with the key rollcall providing a 68-vote margin for the Administration on the first new program to reach the House floor, reflects a rising concern with all aspects of medical care and education in Congress.

The vote on the medical education bill indicates clearly that if the health care for the aged bill is reported out of the House Ways & Means Committee, it will command a majority vote on the House floor.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, May 4, 1963 No. 18

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'I've Never Had This Sinking Feeling Before'

Assisted by AFL-CIO:

Histadrut Afro-Asian Institute Nurtures Growing Democracies

A TOTAL OF 353 STUDENTS from more than 40 countries have availed themselves of the full curriculum of Histadrut's Afro-Asian Institute for Labor Studies & Cooperation, now in its third year.

The AFL-CIO played a key role in the creation of the institute by providing moral and material support. Scholarships underwritten by the AFL-CIO and its international and national unions have enabled the enrollment of students who otherwise would have been unable to attend.

The institute's fifth semester, ending in April 1963, was attended by 51 students from Basutoland, Western Cameroon, Iran, Kenya, Nyasaland, Northern Rhodesia, Surinam, Swaziland, Tanganyika, Uganda and Zanzibar. They included seven under the age of 25; 17 in the 25-30 age group, and only two past 45 years of age. Seven of the students were women.

Alumni on their return to their home countries have become advocates of the principle that trade unionism is indispensable to the formation of democratic society, and should cooperate with but not be the instruments of government.

Many alumni hold high political office or occupy key positions in the trade union and cooperative movements in their countries.

Albert Ganzumba has just been elected minister of economic affairs in the Congo's Kwilu province, which with its 1.4 million inhabitants is the most populated of the 17 Congo provinces. Ganzumba has asked the institute "to find us . . . a man with a good and solid experience in economic development," and "to give two or three of my officials an opportunity to study at the Afro-Asian Institute."

From Amravati, India, alumnus S. T. Deshmukh reports that he is in charge of 500 cooperative units. Ram Tiaji, another institute graduate, manages cooperatives embracing 120 villages with 750,000 inhabitants in India.

Jumane Y. A. Gwao is on loan from the labor movement to the Tanganyikan Local Government's Service Commission. Three other graduates are area commissioners, including Mrs. Idi Lubumba, the only woman in such a post. Ten alumni are serving as development officers in Guinea. Others hold important positions in Uganda, Rhodesia, the Ivory Coast, Senegal, Togo and Nigeria.

Johnson Keragori, Kenya, has been re-elected president of the Kisii Farmers Cooperative Unions; Denthie Dembele, of Mali, has been appointed director of a regional farm.

The institute has stressed everywhere the importance of giving women a role in labor and cooperative organizations and in government.

Phyllis Wanjiru reports from Nairobi that in May 1962, a Women's Workers' Committee was formed under the guidance of the Kenya Federation of Labor and that "great and keen interest is being shown by women in the labor movement."

REPORTS TELL of the role of graduates in advancing trade unionism and cooperation in their countries. The Congolese Free Trade Union Federation writes:

"Our Labor Education Center held its first seminar on trade union education from Nov. 27 to Dec. 20, 1962 . . . Two of your former students have made a great impression. . . . We hope that it will be possible for the manager of our center to join your 1963 course."

S. N. Okpi, assistant registrar, Cooperative Division, Enugu, Nigeria, reports: "I came back from the seminar armed with the full advantages of the rural multi-purpose farmers Cooperative societies. . . . We are enrolling one cooperative officer for your institute's six-months cooperative course starting in December 1963. . . . Could you also enroll the manager of our biggest Marketing Union?"

Joseph-Henry Nion, supervising agricultural units in the Upper Volta, writes: "I must say that my stay in Israel helped me very much in finding a solution to the technical difficulties involved in establishing these societies."

In contrast to experience of African students elsewhere, Simao Andrade Freitas, Angola, reports a typical reaction of students at the Tel Aviv Institute: "A foreigner cannot long feel homesick in this really friendly atmosphere. . . . People of all ages speak to you and on the first occasion invite you to their homes."

A group of 120 Nigerians has formed an Association of Nigerian Ex-Students of Israel Institutions of Learning. Alumni from French-speaking West Africa have formed an association called Shalom (Hebrew for Peace).

Sekar Oliver of Malaya has summarized: "The most important thing—these aid programs are offered without strings attached."

Morgan Says:

Effusions from Frantic Fringe Make McGee's Hate File Bulge

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

TRITE AS THE PHRASE "write your congressman" may sound, Americans by the thousands continue to inundate their elective officials, from the President down, with letters of advice and protest. Indeed hardly any known official in Washington escapes mail from the citizenry, the target and the flow depending on the issue.

Morgan

Most of this outpouring of public sentiment is sincere, some of it is helpful and very little of it is ignored. It probably doesn't have anything to do with the beginning of the baseball season, but some governmental recipients think they detect a slight increase in the "kill the umpire" type of communication condemning the Kennedy Administration.

The White House is getting a little more "hate" mail now than during the first few months of the New Frontier, nearly all of it from right-wing sources and a good deal of it obviously inspired by organized groups. These effusions from the frantic fringe, demanding action today against tomorrow and in favor of yesterday, undoubtedly serve as important safety valves to let off the steam of frustration and thus avoid more drastic action but sometimes the verbal mauling of their victims is pretty violent.

Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming, for example, has a bulging file of "hate" mail, some of it from his home state but a lot from many other parts of the country especially Southern California and the South. His office attributes this dubiously widespread attention and its common denominator of vitriolic content to the fact that McGee is one of a small band of liberal senators, class of 1958, who have been marked for defeat in 1964 by individuals and organizations of the radical right.

Much of this kind of mail attacks the senator personally but some of it appears to regard everything that has happened in Washington since the days of William McKinley as an unmitigated disaster.

One of McGee's own constituents, in Lander, Wyo., wrote, "I am so far to the right of John Birch and Berry Goldwater that it makes them look like Liberals." He spelled the Arizona senator's first name not with an "a" but an "e" as in huckleberry. "Were I running the U.S.A.," this gentleman went on, "public schools would stop with the 9th grade and I wouldn't even allow the government to handle the mail."

"When," demanded a resident of Savannah, Ga., "can we ever overcome the damage done to this country by Roosevelt?"

A man in Los Angeles updated his wrath and pinpointed it on McGee. "I am amazed," he wrote, "that the people of Wyoming would elect such a consummate ass."

A resident of Lomita, Calif., obviously just as angry, managed to be a little more delicate. "I sincerely hope," he said, "you will pardon me for not doing you the honor of referring to you as a jackass; after all Christ rode into Jerusalem on one of these exalted beasts." But when he came to the senator's appearance on a television show discussing the John Birch Society, the Lomita citizen let his restraint slip. "You conducted yourself exactly as I had expected you would," he wrote, "like a Wyoming sheepherder with his brains knocked out."

Which may or may not have inspired a citizen in Cleveland to write McGee: "Dust off that one brain cell of yours. The U.S. should get out of the UN and the UN should get out of New York."

From San Pedro, Calif., came a darkly implied warning in the allegation that "your Socialist record is becoming well known," while a householder in Denver simply demanded to know: "What have you ever done besides being a politico?"

Without further explanation a Wyoming voter charged, "you was elect only through the deceit and treachery of Drew Pearson."

REFLECTING perhaps more than just his own isolated frustration, a man in Casper, Wyo., wrote his senior senator not long before income tax time: "I object to all this leagle-fleagle gobbly-gook. I object to the interference in my daily life and the theft of what I earn by the federal tax man. I object to the waste, inefficiency and general stupidity of the whole Washington mess."

And an anonymous woman in Cincinnati who identified herself only as "an old American lady," exhorted McGee and presumably everybody in Congress to "pray, pray, pray! Save us from destruction! Save us from the democrats! Save us from this awful spending and waste! Save us from the moon and nonsense! Save us from the old age medical bill and school bill! Save a billion people condemned to slavery by democrats!" In each instance she spelled Democrats with a small "d". In a postscript she said, "I note your voting record is very poor. Your are anti-American."

A man in West Palm Beach, Fla., got down to cases. "Senator," he wrote McGee, "take hold of yourself and accept the fact that the Almighty created you of the superior white race, apart from other races, the same as pure-blooded livestock."

Ah well, we're strange animals, all of us.

Washington Reports:

Equal Pay for Equal Work Bill Seen Sure of Action This Year

LEGISLATION that will require employers to pay women an equal wage for equal work will pass Congress this year, according to a Democratic and a Republican member of the Senate.

Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) said that Republican opposition of last year "has folded." He was interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO program heard on almost 700 radio stations. On the same program, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) said chances of passage this session "are excellent—I think this legislation stands well with my colleagues, and it certainly stands well with the country."

McNamara quoted Dept. of Labor surveys which showed that among managers and officials, women's wages are 40 percent of those paid men; among electrical workers, they average about 69 percent, and for service workers, women get 53 percent of the wage paid men.

"We are dealing here with almost the fundamental freedom," Javits declared. "We have brought the condition of women in our country to the point where they are entitled to the same consideration as men."

"I believe this discrimination exists because of an old, now out-moded belief that because men are the breadwinners they should be paid more," McNamara said. "While this may have been true many years ago, the fact is that today a substantial number of women are their own sole support. In fact, more than 4.5 million families are now headed by women."

BOTH MEN TURNED aside the argument that because of absenteeism and turnover, an equal pay bill would make employers hesitate to hire women.

"There may be some adjustments," said McNamara, "but on the whole, whatever dislocation may take place will be more than balanced off by the wage improvements that will result."

The bill, introduced by McNamara, would require all employers of more than 25 persons to pay an equal wage to those doing comparable work.

"The closest analogy that comes to mind is the Davis-Bacon Act, where in respect to federal government contracts, the prevailing wage rate must be paid in a community," he declared.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SPRING IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL is often a time of pure delight and this spring has been among the loveliest—a season of fine blooms in forsythia and magnolia, redbud and dogwood, tulips and azaleas. This annual renewal and refreshment is accompanied, regularly, by the sprouting here of all sorts of conferences, conventions and political gatherings—and it is very good for Americans from all over the country to make a pilgrimage once a year at least to their nation's seat of government.

One tends to notice, though, that everyone seems to pack along the same set of preconceptions he developed back home, and to go home again without having visibly modified them. The result is sometimes the adoption of weird and exotic resolutions by groups that apparently haven't the slightest idea what they are talking about.

The Daughters of the American Revolution each year spy grave dangers of subversion and undefined menace. One would think that if the subverters were as potent as the Daughters insist, they would long ago have succeeded in their nefarious plots against the commonweal.

This never happens, but the Daughters keep on passing resolutions against them after hearing the same old right-wing conservative speeches from, usually, the same group of speakers—Senators Thurmond of South Carolina, Tower of Texas, and the lately-mellowing Goldwater of Arizona. It gives the Daughters a sense of eager participation and, presumably, does no harm.

But what shall we say about the executive committee of the National Federation of Republican Women, which suddenly passed a resolution urging Congress to repeal the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Act?

This law passed by Congress just two years ago, said the GOP federation of ladies, "relinquishes in a three-stage, nine-year program the full military force of the United States to the United Nations. . . ."

Now this is really something and Rep. Frank Thompson of New Jersey, a rising Democratic leader, acknowledges that he was "astounded and alarmed." His "first thought," he says, was to get in touch with two of his New Jersey colleagues in Congress—both Republicans—who had cosponsored the Arms Control Act, Sen. Clifford Case and Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen. He felt they ought to be notified they "had helped lure the nation into a subversive plot."

But then he remembered that the bill passed the House with 290 votes and the Senate with 73 and was signed by Pres. Kennedy with no apparent qualms. So he read the act again—just to make sure his recollection had not slipped.

"To my intense relief, I found that we had not relinquished the armed forces of the United States, to the United Nations under a three-stage, nine-year program. In fact, I found no mention of the United Nations or a three-stage program or even a one-stage program," Thompson confided in a newsletter to his constituents.

His supposition must be that the Republican Women's executive committee had made a terrible mistake and confused our Disarmament Act with the John Birch Society's declaration of principles or some other such document, he remarked, but he is going to let Case or Frelinghuysen "break the sad news" to the GOP ladies. "I really can't bear to hear a woman cry," he said.

* * *

AT THE SIDNEY HILLMAN Foundation Awards luncheon, the distinguished news analyst, Howard K. Smith, made the announcement of the winners—one of whom is a Mississippi editor, Ira Harkey, who from the front line trenches fought the actions of Gov. Ross Barnett on James Meredith and the state university. Smith assured Harkey that he was in close harmony with the spirit of our times, and added this observation:

"I watch on television those films of Birmingham and Greenwood, and I see those cordons of big strong policemen, some with crash helmets, some with snarling police dogs, all with clubs and revolvers strapped to their belts. And I see an old Negro woman approach the registration office and several of the policemen take hold of her, turn her arm behind her back and pushed her to the paddy wagon. And I say to myself, what a pitifully unequal battle. Those poor policemen haven't got a chance on earth against that old woman."

WOMEN WILL GET "equal pay for equal work" legislation in this Congress, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), left, and Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.), author of the Senate bill, agreed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

'Easier Money' Means Savings On Mortgages, Auto Financing

By Sidney Margolius

"EASIER MONEY" is good news for your family. The greater availability of lending money this year is pushing down closing fees and mortgage rates on homes, and finance charges on cars and other goods.

However, the new trend also requires new planning for family savings. The record-high interest rates now being paid to savers by many banks and savings and loan associations may have to be trimmed. If the banks and associations can't charge as much on loans, they don't pay as much on savings accounts.

In many parts of the country, home-seekers and families who want to refinance present mortgages now can find both larger loans and lower rates. This trend stems largely from policies instituted by the Kennedy Administration shortly after it took office. First the Administration reduced the rate of FHA mortgages to 5.24 percent (plus an additional one-half of 1 percent for mortgage insurance). The reduction from the previous 5.75 percent saved homeowners $5 a month on a 30-year, $15,000 mortgage, or a total of $1800.

But the Administration also made more mortgage money available through the Federal National Mortgage Association, and this action has proved to be a real boon. Today in some cities, especially in the East, banks and insurance companies are offering mortgages for as little as 5 to 5.5 percent with the lower rates available to mortgage-seekers who can make substantial downpayments. In the Midwest, too, both the mortgage rate itself and the number of "points" or bonus home buyers or sellers often must pay have been reduced from as many as three or four points two years ago to as little as one point now.

A "point" is really an extra fee of 1 percent of the face amount of a mortgage. It has the effect of charging you more while seeming to keep the interest rate itself low. Two points are the equivalent of an additional one-fourth of 1 percent interest.

Some lenders now are offering conventional mortgages for even less than the FHA rate, although families which afford only small down payments usually find an FHA mortgage easiest to get. Actually it may be time for the Administration to cut the FHA rate again. Lenders are guaranteed against loss on FHA loans by the mortgage-insurance premium you pay.

If you are looking for a mortgage, the new trend calls for wider shopping to make sure you get the advantage of today's lower rates. Compare three ways: find out not only the interest rate each lender will charge, but also the number of points and the amount of closing costs. The more you can put down, the lower your mortgage costs will be.

People seeking to refinance mortgages for such needs as home improvements or children's education also are helped. Your mortgage still is the cheapest way to borrow money. A mortgage rate of 6 percent is a true per-annum 6 percent, since the interest is charged only on the declining balance. But a personal loan of $6 per $100 is really a per-annum rate of approximately 12 percent, since the fee is charged on the original amount of the debt.

FINANCE CHARGES on new cars especially have been forced down by "easier money." The chief competition is among credit unions, banks and finance companies. In many large cities, finance charges have dropped to $4.50 to $5.50 per $100 of debt on direct loans. This is about 50 cents per $100 less than a year ago. Often you get the best deal now by shopping for a loan among such cash lenders rather than arranging your payments through a finance company.

One danger in the new trend is the new longer terms being offered by lenders, with many offering 36 and even 42-month contracts compared to the safer 30-month plans. Longer terms may seem to make payments easier, but also cost you more interest.

Some banks and associations already have trimmed interest rates paid on savings accounts from the 4 and 4.8 percent widely available recently. A number of savings and loan associations in California and other West Coast areas still offer 4.8 percent but are feeling the pressure of declining rates.

As a result of this situation, Government "E" bonds take on new attractiveness for small savers. The bonds pay only 3.75 percent, but this rate is guaranteed for approximately eight years. However, "E" bonds still are not suitable for short-range savings—money you expect to draw on soon. Not until the third year do savings bonds reach 3 percent.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

Not Even a Cup of Tea Can Solve Some Mathematical Problems

By Jane Goodsell

I'VE TAKEN ALGEBRA, geometry and trigonometry, but I can't figure out the answers to these problems. Can you?

1—A "giant" size box of detergent contains 9 pounds, 13 ounces and sells for $2.59. The "economy" size contains 3 pounds, 2.5 ounces and sells for 79 cents. The "large" size box contains 1 pound, 8.5 ounces and sells for 41 cents. Which is the best buy?

2—A lady drives downtown to shop. She has a choice of four lots in which to park her car: Parking Lot A charges 35 cents for the first hour and 25 cents for each additional hour; Parking Lot B charges $1.50 for all-day parking; Parking Lot C charges 35 cents an hour, but gives one hour free if a minimum purchase of $1 is made at a certain store; Parking Lot D charges 20 cents for each hour. Which lot is the best bargain?

3—How can you divide three ice cream bars equally among four children?

4—A housewife buys a 48-inch loveseat to fit into a space that measures exactly 49.5 inches on her yardstick. When the loveseat arrives, it is an inch too wide to fit into the space. Why?

5—Two second graders start walking to school at 8:30. The school is four blocks away. The tardy bell rings at 9. The children arrive 10 minutes late. How is this possible?

6—Subtract a check for $69.95 from a bank balance of $38.17.

7—In order to pay the laundry man, Mother borrows $1.26 from Child A, who had owed Mother 53 cents. Child A also owes 24 cents to Child B, who owes Mother 12 cents. Child A insists that Child B borrowed $1.25 from her last Christmas and never repaid it. Child B protests that she did, too, pay it back. Who owes what and to whom?

8—A hostess invites four couples for a 7 o'clock dinner party. Knowing that none of the couples wants to be the first to arrive and that each couple is aware that none of the other guests wants to arrive first, what time should the hostess put an eight-pound roast beef, which requires 2.5 hours of cooking time, into the oven?

LABOR'S SUPPORT of an expanded, modernized vocational education program was emphasized by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, right, in testimony before a House Education & Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.), left.

'Part Folk Myth . . .'

Pamphlet Answers Attacks on Welfare

"WHAT'S A CHISELER? Anybody on public welfare, many people may answer. Part folk myth, part propaganda—and all ignorance—this blanket of public disapproval and misunderstanding is periodically spread over both the innocent and the few guilty on relief rolls."

Public Welfare, a new Public Affairs pamphlet, is an attempt to clear away such misconceptions and to explain what public welfare is and how adequate programs—which cover social security as well as direct assistance—benefit not only the recipients but the entire community. The author is Emma Harrison, who writes on social welfare topics for the New York Times.

Miss Harrison reminds the reader that attacks on unwed mothers and unemployed newcomers in a particular community still leave the question of "need" unanswered. The approach she urges in seeking a solution stresses rehabilitation.

"When the public yells 'chiseler,' " she writes, "when newspapers and magazines expose 'welfare frauds' . . . no one stops to think: Many people on public assistance never had the chance to become responsible human beings."

Her recommendations stress three aspects:

"More programs designed to meet individual needs, to encourage incentive, to restore or introduce to job or career opportunities, to educate. . . . More money and manpower. . . . Training programs to fill the startling void of well-trained personnel in a field where people of the highest skill and understanding are demanded. Better public understanding of what better public welfare programs can mean for all."

In answer to the understandable question of why there is need for welfare programs in a period of relative prosperity, Miss Harrison points to some of the disruptive forces in our increasingly complex life:

"The increasing need for mobile workers who come and go with the tides of crops and industry. . . . The population 'explosion' caused both by higher birth rates and by medical progress that finds more people alive beyond retirement years with growing, unmet needs. . . . Uneven opportunities—because of race, national origin, educational background, or locality—that limit the horizons of many people who aspire to participate in our 'affluent society.' . . . Greater need for additional income in families has also increased the number of women in the labor field, resulting in such related problems as the need for day care for their children."

The pamphlet offers a clear, succinct interpretation of public welfare; how it is related to other more visible public resources such as schools, parks, fire protection; its basic principles, and how time and money spent for rehabilitation can eventually reduce a community's expenditures for public assistance.

Public Welfare is available at 25 cents each; quantity rates are available from the Public Affairs Committee, 22 East 38th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

LATEST AFFILIATION to the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. is the Rubber Workers, whose union label is shown above. The URW joined the department just in time for the annual AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show, which will be held in the St. Louis Arena for six days beginning May 17.

Overall Approach Stressed:

TVA-Type Planning Called Key to Jobs

The success of the Tennessee Valley Authority in revitalizing an entire region holds a significant lesson for the nation as it attempts to solve present-day problems of depressed areas and unemployment, the AFL-CIO points out in an article in the April issue of its monthly magazine, the American Federationist.

The lesson TVA teaches, the article observes, lies in its comprehensive approach to resources development—"just as the problems are interrelated, so must be the solutions, and overall planning must be combined with grass roots cooperation."

Extending this concept to the current problems of economic stagnation in depressed areas and rural regions calls for "a policy of national planning with national goals of full employment, higher productivity, economic growth and stability" achieved through a "multi-purpose, integrated approach and a revitalized administrative organization," the magazine suggests.

The article, "TVA, the Controversial Success," was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as a Labor's Economic Review feature.

It traces TVA's growth and achievements in the 30 years since its creation during the first 100 days of the New Deal as, in the words of the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, "a corporation clothed with the power of government but possessed with the flexibility and initiative of private enterprise" for the general development of the Tennessee River Valley.

What TVA Has Done

The story of how TVA has met its goals, the article suggests, is best told in examination of some of its achievements:

- Its power system of dams and large steam electric plants makes up the world's largest electric utility, with an installed capacity of 12 million kilowatts.
- Domestic consumption of electricity in the valley is more than twice the national average, with 98 percent of the farms electrified as against 3 percent in 1933.
- Under the direction of the act creating it, TVA has sold electricity at the lowest possible price. Its rates have consistently declined over the years and "continue to do so now against the national upward trend in consumer electricity costs."
- Its "low-rate yardstick" has benefitted 1.5 million consumers in the seven-state region and has, by example, forced down rates of utilities in nearby areas.
- It has encouraged expanded river traffic, through improved inland navigational facilities, at a transportation cost saving of about $21 million a year.
- Through its dams, it has averted $180 million in flood damages since 1936 on the Tennessee system and downstream on the lower Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.
- It led the way, joined by the states, the Forest Service and private landowners, in a vast program of reforestation, improved management and fire protection that has built up forest lands in the region to some 14 million acres.
- With the states, it helped wipe out malaria, and its 10,000 miles of reservoir shoreline now boast camping, swimming and boating facilities which have turned the region into one of the nation's great recreational areas.
- Its water control and navigation system and its low-cost power have helped locate $800 million worth of new industry along the river.
- It stimulated the first real gains for the labor movement in the valley through a labor relations policy which in 1935 led to the first recognition by any federal agency of the right of workers to bargain collectively.

The act establishing TVA required it to pay "not less than the prevailing rate of wages" to its employes, with "due regard" to rates secured by bargaining.

Workers in private industry in the area, however, have not fared so well, the Federationist notes. Wage data TVA collected in 1962 showed manufacturing workers in the region were earning about 75 percent of the nationwide average wage.

"Although TVA helped to establish a base," the article observes, "wages in the region must be raised more rapidly by means of more widespread and intensive trade union organization."

IUE Members Study Impact of World Affairs

New York—A call for a "people-to-people" approach to world peace, with the labor movement providing the leadership, was sounded by Pres. James B. Carey in a speech at the union's Intl. Affairs Conference here.

"Let's try this 'person-to-person' contact, family-to-family," he said. "Let's have this economic and intellectual interchange. Let's have some IUE families in a Russian city and some Russian families in Syracuse and Dayton."

IUE Acting Sec.-Treas. George Collins, the keynote speaker, urged an IUE membership "second to none, an interested, informed membership capable of arriving at more practical solutions, intelligent decisions" on the problems of an uneasy world.

Dr. Frank Graham, UN special mediator for India and Pakistan and a former U.S. senator from North Carolina, endorsed Carey's proposal for a "people-to-people" quest for world peace.

Dir. Victor G. Reuther of the Auto Workers' Intl. Affairs Dept. called disarmament a "bread and butter issue" which the country "dare not leave to the professionals alone." He moderated a panel discussion on disarmament between Herman Kahn, physicist-mathematician director of the Hudson Institute; Roger Hagan, Harvard University historian and editor of the Council for Correspondence; Robert Crane, of the Center for Strategic Studies at Georgetown University, and Amitai Etzioni, Columbia University sociologist and director of the Council for the Gradualist Way to Peace.

Among other speakers were Norman Thomas, six-time Socialist candidate for President; Rep. Cornelius E. Gallagher (D-N.J.), a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee; Dr. Robert Alexander of Rutgers University; James Loeb, former U.S. ambassador to Peru; Pres. Samuel Hayes of the Foreign Policy Association, and Seymour Finger, economic and social adviser to the U.S. mission to the UN.

COLLEGE COUNSELING PROGRAM of Hotel & Club Employes Local 6 in New York drew hundreds of parent-members and their sons and daughters at a recent session. At top, Dean Charles C. Cole of Lafayette College (facing camera, left) and Richard D. Rooney, assistant secretary of admissions at Hamilton College, talk informally about getting into college and staying there. Below, more high schoolers and their parents ply the experts with their questions.

Dream of College Takes Shape For Children of Hotel Local 6

New York—The meeting had long since ended but they were still drifting out—sober-faced parents with sons or daughters, pairs of oddly subdued teen-agers, all still mulling over the answers they had received and the questions they had asked:

"Must I be at the top of my class to get admitted?"

"Can I go after military service?"

"If one turns me down, does that hurt my chances with others?"

"Should a student specialize on entering, or do you think there is more value in liberal arts?"

There were signs, too, that minds had been made up with surprising speed in the wake of this third college counseling session held by Hotel & Club Workers Local 6 for the high-school-age children of their members. Take, for instance, the dialogue between two elated boys who tore themselves away from the meeting with obvious reluctance:

"I never thought that college was for me," said one. "I had to be dragged here. Seemed to me that other people, rich people, DIFFERENT people went to college. Now I see that I can go, that I can find a college and work my way through—and that I'm good enough to do it."

'. . . I Can Get Advice'

"It wasn't just that I learned more about how to pick a college or how to find out what I want to know," said the other. "Now I know I can get advice. I know I can use the guidance counselors at school and the other places they told me about. I used to shy away from 'em—but not any more."

Local 6 had its first college counseling session a year ago. Experts talked about careers, admission requirements, where and how to get scholarships and other financial aid, and answered questions by the hundreds. It was such a sensational success that two repeats had to be held in a little more than 12 months.

A Record of Concern

By the way of background, it might be explained that Local 6 has had a concern with education and family problems for a long time. One of its early officers, the late Gertrude Lane, has been honored with a memorial scholarship which helps sons and daughters of local members go on to college. The local has devised a number of ways to raise the needed thousands of dollars and this year the number of grants was increased, thanks to the generosity of the cooks and waiters, the pantrymen and bartenders, who make up the membership.

The third counseling meeting was held in the local's auditorium, which also is a memorial to Miss Lane. The experts from the colleges who discussed various aspects of preparing for higher education were Richard Plaut, assistant director of admissions at Columbia University, who talked about entrance requirements; Richard D. Rooney, assistant secretary of admissions at Hamilton College, who discussed financial aids; and Dean Charles C. Cole of Lafayette College, who drew a broad picture of "who should go to college."

Then Rachel Gottfried and Patricia Henson, both daughters of waiters and winners of Local 6 scholarships, told what it is like to be in college. A student is freer in college than he is in high school, they emphasized—but unless he buckles down and really works, his college days won't last long.

After the formal presentations of the experts and the scholarship winners came a discussion. When that was completed, parents and children gathered in knots around the speakers. The questions became more specific, vague hopes became more definite—and many a foot was set for the first time on the path to a college degree.

Where to Write

Unions interested in establishing similar programs might find it helpful to draw on the experience of Local 6, which can be had by writing to William B. Mahoney, Hotel & Club Employes Local 6, 305 West 44th Street, New York City 36.

Material on financial aid and labor-sponsored college scholarships may be obtained from Dir. Larry Rogin, AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, 815 Sixteenth Street N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

House Vote on Medical Student Loans

Here is the rollcall vote by which the House defeated an attempt to kill the student loan provision of the aid to medical education bill. The vote was 239-171. Democrats voted 206-33 to keep the loan provision; Republicans voted 138-33 to eliminate loans.

On labor's scorecard, a vote to keep the loan section in the bill was a right vote (R), while a vote for deletion was a wrong vote (W). Other symbols: A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; NV—not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large.

ALABAMA

AL Andrews (D) W
AL Elliott (D) R
AL Grant (D) W
AL Huddleston (D) W
AL Jones (D) R
AL Rains (D) R
AL Roberts (D) R
AL Selden W

ALASKA

AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA

1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) R
3. Senner (D) R

ARKANSAS

1. Gathings (D) W
2. Mills (D) R
3. Trimble (D) R
4. Harris (D) R

CALIFORNIA

1. Clausen (R) W
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Leggett (D) R
5. Shelley (D) PR
6. Mailliard (R) W
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. Younger (R) R
12. Talcott (R) PW
13. Teague (R) W
14. Baldwin (R) W
15. McFall (D) R
16. Sisk (D) R
18. Hagen (D) R
33. Sheppard (D) R
34. Hanna (D) R
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Martin (R) W

Los Angeles County

17. King (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Vacancy
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Cameron (D) R
26. Roosevelt (D) PR
27. Burkhalter (D) R
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown (D) R
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) R
32. Hosmer (R) W

COLORADO

1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) R

CONNECTICUT

AL Grabowski (D) R
1. Daddario (D) R
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) R
5. Monagan (D) R

DELAWARE

AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA

1. Sikes (D) R
2. Bennett (D) R
3. Pepper (D) R
4. Fascell (D) R
5. Herlong (D) W
6. Rogers (D) R
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) R
9. Fuqua (D) R
10. Gibbons (D) R
11. Gurney (R) W
12. Cramer (R) W

GEORGIA

1. Hagan (D) R
2. Pilcher (D) R
3. Forrester (D) A
4. Flynt (D) R
5. Weltner (D) R
6. Vinson (D) A
7. Davis (D) R
8. Tuten (D) R
9. Landrum (D) R
10. Stephens (D) R

HAWAII

AL Gill (D) R
AL Matsunaga (D) R

IDAHO

1. White (D) R
2. Harding (D) R

ILLINOIS

12. McClory (R) W
14. Hoffman (R) W
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) W
19. McLoskey (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) R
22. Springer (R) R
23. Shipley (D) R
24. Price (D) R

Chicago-Cook County

1. Dawson (D) R
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. O'Brien (D) R
7. Libonati (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Finnegan (D) R
10. Collier (R) W
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) W

INDIANA

1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roush (D) R
6. Roudebush (R) W
7. Bray (R) W
8. Denton (D) R
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) W
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA

1. Schwengel (R) W
2. Bromwell (R) W
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Hoeven (R) W
7. Jensen (R) W

KANSAS

1. Dole (R) W
2. Avery (R) W
3. Ellsworth (R) W
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY

1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Snyder (R) W
4. Chelf (D) R
5. Siler (R) W
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUISIANA

1. Hebert (D) PR
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) R
4. Waggonner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Morrison (D) R
7. Thompson (D) R
8. Long (D) R

MAINE

1. Tupper (R) R
2. McIntire (R) R

MARYLAND

AL Sickles (D) R
1. Morton (R) W
2. Long (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) R
7. Friedel (D) R

MASSACHUSETTS

1. Conte (R) R
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) R
6. Bates (R) R
7. Macdonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormack (D) (Speaker) NV
10. Martin (R) R
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN

AL Staebler (D) R
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) W
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. O'Hara (D) R
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) W
12. Bennett (R) R
18. Broomfield (R) W

Metropolitan Detroit

1. Nedzi (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Ryan (D) R
15. Dingell (D) R
16. Lesinski (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA

1. Quie (R) W
2. Nelsen (R) R
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Olson (D) R
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R

MISSISSIPPI

1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Williams (D) W
4. Winstead (D) W
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI

1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) W
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) R
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) R
9. Cannon (D) R
10. Jones (D) R

MONTANA

1. Olsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) W

NEBRASKA

1. Beermann (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) W
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA

AL Baring (D) W

NEW HAMPSHIRE

1. Wyman (R) PW
2. Cleveland (R) W

NEW JERSEY

1. Cahill (R) W
2. Glenn (R) R
3. Auchincloss (R) W
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) PW
6. Dwyer (R) R
7. Widnall (R) PW
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) R
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) R
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) R
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO

AL Montoya (D) R
AL Morris (D) R

NEW YORK

1. Pike (D) R
2. Grover (R) W
3. Derounian (R) W
4. Wydler (R) R
5. Becker (R) W
25. Barry (R) W
26. Reid (R) W
27. St. George (R) W
28. Wharton (R) R
29. O'Brien (D) R
30. King (R) W
31. Kilburn (R) W
32. Pirnie (R) W
33. Robison (R) W
34. Riehlman (R) W
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) R
37. Ostertag (R) W
38. Goodell (R) W
39. Pillion (R) W
40. Miller (R) W
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City

6. Halpern (R) R
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Keogh (D) R
12. Kelly (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) R
17. Lindsay (R) R
18. Powell (D) R
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Healey (D) A
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Buckley (D) PR
24. Fino (R) R

NORTH CAROLINA

1. Bonner (D) R
2. Fountain (D) W
3. Henderson (D) PR
4. Cooley (D) PR
5. Scott (D) W
6. Kornegav (D) R
7. Lennon (D) A
8. Jonas (R) W
9. Broyhill (R) W
10. Whitener (D) W
11. Taylor (D) W

NORTH DAKOTA

1. Nygaard (R) W
2. Short (R) W

OHIO

AL Taft (R) W
1. Rich (R) A
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) W
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) PW
9. Ashley (D) PR
10. Abele (R) W
11. Bolton, Oliver (R) W
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) W
14. Ayres (R) R
15. Secrest (D) R
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton, Frances (R) W
23. Minshall (R) W

OKLAHOMA

1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) W
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) R
5. Jarman (D) R
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON

1. Norblad (R) W
2. Ullman (D) R
3. Green (D) A
4. Duncan (D) W

PENNSYLVANIA

6. Rhodes (D) R
7. Milliken (R) R
8. Curtin (R) R
9. Dague (R) W
10. McDade (R) R
11. Flood (D) R
12. Whalley (R) W
13. Schweiker (R) R
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Walter (D) PR
16. Kunkel (R) R
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) R
19. Goodling (R) W
20. Holland (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) W
23. Gavin (R) W
24. Weaver (R) W
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R

Philadelphia

1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Toll (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND

1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA

1. Rivers (D) R
2. Watson (D) W
3. Dorn (D) W
4. Ashmore (D) W
5. Hemphill (D) R
6. McMillan (D) R

SOUTH DAKOTA

1. Reifel (R) R
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE

1. Quillen (R) W
2. Baker (R) W
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) R
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) W
8. Everett (D) R
9. Davis (D) R

TEXAS

AL Pool (D) W
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) R
4. Roberts (D) W
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) PW
7. Dowdy (D) W
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) R
10. Thornberry (D) R
11. Poage (D) R
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) R
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) W
16. Foreman (R) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) R
19. Mahon (D) W
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) A
22. Casey (D) R

UTAH

1. Burton (R) W
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT

AL Stafford (R) R

VIRGINIA

1. Downing (D) R
2. Hardy (D) R
3. Gary (D) R
4. Abbitt (D) PW
5. Tuck (D) PW
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) R
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON

1. Pelly (R) W
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) W
6. Tollefson (R) W
7. Stinson (R) W

WEST VIRGINIA

1. Moore (R) W
2. Staggers (D) R
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R

WISCONSIN

1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) W
7. Laird (R) W
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) R

WYOMING

AL Harrison (R) W

Consumers Would Pay More:

AFL-CIO Opposes Price-Setting Bill

Consumers would have to pay higher prices under a so-called "quality stabilization" law, the AFL-CIO has charged.

Labor's continued opposition to legislation enabling manufacturers to control the retail prices of brand-name products was emphasized by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller in a statement to a House Interstate Commerce subcommittee.

If the bill became law, Biemiller said, "the right of the consumer to shop for the lowest price on a distinctly identifiable product would disappear."

Labor's warning that any type of "fair trade" legislation would mean higher prices was backed up by the head of the Justice Dept.'s Anti-Trust Div., Assistant Atty.-Gen. Lee Loevinger.

Loevinger, expressing the Administration opposition to the measure, told the subcommittee:

"The Dept. of Justice has found by economic surveys that consumers in states with so-called 'fair trade' laws pay from 19 to 27 percent higher prices than consumers in states without such laws.

"Projecting an average price increase of 20 percent for all sales that may be covered by the operation of a national price maintenance law shows that it would cost the American consumer billions of dollars and have a powerfully inflationary effect."

Biemiller urged the subcommittee to "explore less dangerous and dubious routes to the preservation of small business."

Strengthen FTC

Such alternatives, he said, might include strengthening of the Federal Trade Commission's powers to deal with "genuinely predatory price cutting" and such other small business aids as tax benefits, loan programs and encouragement of pooled purchasing arrangements.

Biemiller noted that the rate of business failures has been "consistently higher in states with fair trade laws." Chain stores and other large merchandisers, he pointed out, can offer lower-priced products under private labels which are identical to the price-protected brand merchandise, thus putting small business at a competitive disadvantage.

"In industries where price competition has been successfully eliminated for all practical purpose . . . the consumer's remaining protection—namely, competition among resellers—will have been sealed off by this bill," Biemiller stated.

He noted that the quality stabilization bill introduced this year—with an impressive array of sponsors—has been improved to meet some of the complaints raised in previous hearings. It now excludes prescription drugs and sales to government agencies, charitable and certain other nonprofit organizations.

"While we appreciate this effort to mitigate some of the most objectionable features of this bill, this in no way alters our opposition to it on general grounds," Biemiller declared.

Labor's interest in the bill, he said, is "from the standpoint of the consuming public of which wage-earner families form so large a part.

"All impartial evidence," Biemiller emphasized, "has indicated that prices of consumer retail products would rise substantially if federal resale price maintenance were to become law."

SUCCESSFUL ENDING of contract negotiations between the Rubber Workers and the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. brings smiles at contract-signing time in Columbus, O. Left to right, URW Special Rep. Robert Garber; URW Skilled Trades Dir. Edward Elkins, and Firestone Industrial Relations Dir. J. V. Cairns. The union won a benefit package of 24 to 25 cents an hour from Firestone, and also from Goodyear and B. F. Goodrich companies.

Schnitzler Asks Rise In Area Aid Funds

An Administration bill to increase federal help to depressed areas has labor's full support, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler reaffirmed before the Senate Banking & Currency Committee.

Schnitzler said the number of new jobs created through area redevelopment programs has not been "spectacular," but added:

"We never expected that at this point it would be. Most distressed areas were a long time going down, and it will require time—as well as aid and much effort—to restore them to good health."

A chief difficulty, he emphasized, has been "the inadequate overall rate of growth of the American economy."

Schnitzler said it is "highly encouraging" that the backlog of applications for area redevelopment loans "is sufficiently large to now require an increased lending authorization."

He urged the committee to approve the Administration proposal to raise the authorization for redevelopment loans and grants from the present $379.5 million ceiling to $835 million. A companion bill has been approved by the House Banking & Currency Committee.

Earlier Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges had told the committee that local projects already approved by the Area Redevelopment Administration will result in the creation of 39,000 new jobs.

Urging approval of the expanded authorization, he said:

"Without this additional legislation, much of the forward thrust of this new program will be blunted."

Schnitzler also urged the committee to close a loophole in the law which he said has enabled some private firms receiving federal loans to avoid complying with the Davis-Bacon Act prevailing wage requirements in constructing facilities.

It was the intent of Congress, he pointed out, that federal funds "not be used to depress existing wage levels."

7 Electrical Firms Settle In Price Fix

Seven electrical equipment manufacturers have agreed to pay the Tennessee Valley Authority and other federal agencies a total of $272,450 in settlement of triple-damage civil anti-trust suits resulting from the 1960 price-fixing conspiracy cases.

Last year the General Electric Co., which was named in all of the damage suits filed by the government, paid $7.47 million in settlement.

The seven companies in the latest out-of-court settlement, and the amounts they agreed to pay, are: Wagner Electric Co., $96,000; McGraw-Edison Co., $70,000; Moloney Electric Co., $60,000; Joslyn Manufacturing Co., $20,500; Southern States Inc., $12,500; Lapp Insulator Co., $7,850; Ohio Brass Co., $5,600.

Civil suits are still pending against Westinghouse Electric Corp., Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., Federal Pacific Electric Co., H. K. Porter Co., and Schwager-Wood Corp.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy noted that some 1,800 private suits are pending against companies involved in the price-fixing conspiracy and expressed the hope that settlements reached on the government suits "may help encourage equitable settlements of the private damage suits."

Dayton Labor Plans Apartment for Elders

Dayton, O.—The Dayton-Miami Valley Area AFL-CIO plans to build a $2.78 million, 11-story apartment building for senior citizens on an 11-acre tract here.

The project has been approved by the Community Facilities Administration but the Zoning Board of Appeals must still review a request for variance.

Labor Advisers Back Youth Training Report

Management, labor and the public must recognize "the need to invest in the education and training of youth today for the effectiveness of the labor force tomorrow," the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy has declared.

The tripartite group informed Pres. Kennedy of its endorsement of recommendations made by another White House advisory unit—the Committee on Youth Employment.

The youth report, the labor-management group said, should "be given the most immediate and serious attention by all segments of the society." The statement continued:

"Despite their deep interest in this situation, management and labor cannot resolve this problem alone. It calls for review by those at all levels of government, and particularly by state and local authorities, of their policies and practices affecting the availability of employment opportunities to youth."

Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, chairman of the labor-management advisory group, told a news conference that both union and employer members "generally" supported the youth committee's call for "immediate, bold and imaginative action" to improve job opportunities and training for young people.

Voice Group Loses Philadelphia Vote

Philadelphia—Over-the-road truck drivers in four locals of the ousted Teamsters voted 4,893 to 2,550 to retain the IBT as their bargaining representative, rejecting a bid to join an independent group known as the Voice of the Teamsters which indicated it would seek affiliation with the AFL-CIO.

It was the second vote conducted by the National Labor Relations Board among the group of 8,200 freight truck drivers and helpers represented by Teamsters Locals 107, 312, 331 and 470.

Last November the Voice group, was narrowly defeated in the first election, 3,870 to 3,274. The NLRB set aside the vote on the ground that violence had influenced the result. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

Pay Raise Given Up To Aid Unemployed

Detroit—Members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 58 have offered to give up a 25-cent hourly raise and to put the money in a pool from which eligible unemployed members would draw $50 a week, plus unemployment insurance, effective next Nov. 1.

Electrical contractors have agreed if contract language can be worked out satisfactorily. The raise was due May 1. About 650 of the local's 2,000 members are out of work.

'Chet' Dusten Retires from Regional Post

Chester C. Dusten, director of AFL-CIO Region XXI with headquarters in Portland, Ore., has retired after 25 years of organizing activity in the Pacific Northwest.

Assistant Reg. Dir. Claude Shaffer has been named acting director. He is a member of Grain Millers Local 61 in Portland.

Dusten joined the Woodworkers while working in a logging camp near Vernonia, Ore., in 1935 and became president of the local three years later. In 1940 he joined the IWA staff as an organizer and with George Brown, then also an IWA organizer and now legislative director for the Oregon AFL-CIO, played a major role in unionization of the Weyerhaeuser and Long-Bell lumber mills at Longview, Wash.

He became a field representative for the former CIO in 1942, working in Oregon, and in 1947 was named regional director for the state. At the time of the AFL-CIO merger he was appointed director of Region XXI.

Dusten, whose home is in Beaverton, a Portland suburb, has been active in campaigns to develop the power, irrigation and navigation potential of the Columbia River. He was a member of the Regional Manpower Board during World War II.

'Packing' Election Rolls Charged to Newspaper

Los Angeles—Accusing the Los Angeles Times of "a calculated campaign" to delay negotiations with the Pressmen until a new representation election is possible, the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO charged that the paper is advertising for and proposes to hire "scores" of new pressroom apprentices "with a view to packing the election rolls."

A resolution adopted by the central body said this was the same technique followed by Times management a year ago "in a vain effort" to defeat the Pressmen in the original election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Local 18 won the vote, 204 to 169 with 16 ballots challenged, to become the first union ever certified among Times employes.

"Procrastinating and destructive tactics" by management since then have prevented agreement on a first contract with the paper, which has been an open-shop stronghold throughout its 86-year history, the country federation declared.

It pledged its "full support and resources" to the Pressmen in their year-long bargaining effort and called on union members and other citizens to cancel subscriptions in protest against the Times' anti-union policies.

Unions in New York Back Fluoridation

New York—The New York City AFL-CIO has thrown its support behind Mayor Robert F. Wagner's efforts to secure authorization for fluoridation of the city's water supply to cut tooth decay among children "by more than half."

Chairman Michael Sampson of the council's Community Services Committee pointed out that only New York and Los Angeles among the 12 largest cities have failed to adopt fluoridation and that it has worked successfully in those cities which have installed it.

ILGWU to Take Appeal to Courts

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers said that as an issue of "basic principle" it would continue to test "the inappropriateness of a union recognizing a union of policy-making union officers."

The statement, carried in Justice, ILGWU publication, followed a decision by the National Labor Relations Board upholding a trial examiner's finding that the ILGWU had refused to bargain with the Federation of Union Representatives, a group made up of staff employes, and was guilty of an unfair labor practice.

The board's decision, reached unanimously by a three-member panel, also upheld the trial examiner, Samuel M. Singer, in ordering the ILGWU to bargain with FOUR for the purpose of negotiating a collective bargaining agreement.

The ILGWU had previously indicated in a declaration that it would, if necessary, carry an appeal on the issue to the federal courts.

'Economy Bloc' Defeated 60-26:

Senate Beats Down GOP Drive To Slash Public Works Funds

The Senate crushed a Republican attempt to slash the emergency public works appropriations—$450 million earmarked for job-creating projects in areas of heavy unemployment—and passed a supplemental money bill .The 60-26 vote was the latest in a succession of defeats for the GOP's "economy bloc."

Three weeks earlier, the House had overridden its Appropriations Committee to approve the public works money—the second installment of the $900 million emergency program authorized last year.

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), backed by GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), had sought to slash $200 million from the appropriation. Dirksen, referring to proposals for a new round of accelerated public works, told the Senate: "If this is the way to get the country moving, we are moving in the wrong direction."

The budget-cutting amendment, however, got the votes of only 21 Republicans and five Democrats, while 53 Democrats and seven Republicans opposed the slash.

Both labor and the Administration have strongly supported the program. The added $450 million will create about 220,000 jobs.

The economy issue was less clearcut in House action on a compromise $5.4 billion omnibus appropriations bill carrying funds for the Labor Dept., the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and several smaller agencies, including the National Labor Relations Board.

The House Appropriations Committee had made a paper cut of nearly $310 million from the President's budget request and voted $119 million less than the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year. However, the heaviest cuts were made in areas of statutory grants to states, which must be made up through supplemental appropriations later if the committee's estimate of costs proves low.

A floor battle to restore a $10 million committee cut in grants to help communities control water pollution failed largely because of Democratic absenteeism on the vote. The motion, by Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.), lost 147-124.

A Republican motion to recommit the bill was shouted down on a voice vote and the only success the economy-bloc had in trimming the bill below the committee recommendations came when Rep. Frank T. Bow (R-O.) moved to cut in half a $14,000 entertainment allowance for an international conference of social security officials. This was done by a 75-72 vote.

In other congressional developments:

- The House Banking & Currency Committee approved an Administration bill to authorize an additional $456 million in loans and grants under the Area Redevelopment Administration's program to assist depressed areas.
- The Senate voted $30 million to stock civil defense shelters. The House had eliminated all funds for the program and the Administration had sought $62 million in the supplemental appropriations bill.
- A House Labor subcommittee, headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), began hearings on a labor-backed fair employment bill.
- Pres. Kennedy renewed a request for legislation to broaden the base for political contributions. He proposed to Congress alternative plans of a credit against federal income taxes of 50 percent of contributions to a maximum of $10 or a tax deduction of all political contributions up to $500.
- A Senate Labor subcommittee held hearings on a series of bills aimed at improving conditions of migrant workers, most of which were passed by the Senate last year but died in the House. Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.) is chief sponsor of the legislation.
- A Senate Judiciary subcommittee completed its hearings on a "truth-in-packaging" bill introduced by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.). Hart said the testimony produced "irrefutable" evidence that "the packaging and labeling revolution of the past decade has resulted in competitive practices that are bad for the economy, bad for the businessman and bad for the consumer."
- A Senate Education subcommittee, headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), began hearings on the Administration's omnibus school aid program. Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz warned the committee that "unless and until the educational system is strengthened," unemployment problems will "get worse."

Meanwhile the House Education & Labor Committee reportedly planned to split the Administration's education package into a college aid bill and a "little omnibus bill" covering most other proposals.

New U.S. Pay Raises Sought by Kennedy

(Continued from Page 1)

tion for recruitment and retention purposes."

The President noted that unions representing government employes had complained of the "time lag" between BLS surveys and the effective date of salary adjustments based on the surveys. Terming the union comments "thoughtful and constructive," Kennedy promised that top Administration officials will review these problems with employe organizations.

The recommended increases would vary widely by grade, but would amount to slightly more than 3 percent for most postal workers and a large group of classified employes.

No increase was recommended for the numerically small group of classified workers in the two lowest pay grades, and increases for top-paid government career executives would depend on whether Congress raises the salaries of agency and department heads. An advisory group is currently studying executive pay levels.

The 1962 pay act provided an average 8.6 percent raise for postal workers, with an additional 2.6 percent raise on Jan. 1, 1964. Classified employes received an average 5.5 percent immediate raise, with another 4.1 percent in 1964.

The two-step increase was a compromise from the Administration's original plan to spread the raise over 39 months. Congress also voted larger raises for lower-paid workers than the Administration had asked.

In what Kennedy termed "the most important federal employe pay legislation in 40 years," Congress wrote into law the principle of annual salary adjustments based on comparability with private employment.

Blue collar, hourly-paid workers are not affected by the salary legislation, since their wages are set by wage boards on the basis of prevailing rates in the areas where they work.

Benefits Asked for 250 Displaced by Imports

The Intl. Union of Electrical Workers, with the AFL-CIO a proponent of Pres. Kennedy's Trade Expansion Act of 1962, has become the first federation affiliate to apply for benefits under the act for workers who lost jobs as a result of increased imports from foreign countries.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey and Gen. Counsel Benjamin C. Sigal petitioned the U.S. Tariff Commission for payment of adjustment benefits to 250 former employes of the Philco Corp. in Sandusky, O., on the ground that the company had shut down the plant as a result of its importation of transistor radios from Japan.

Carey emphasized that the petition "is not to be interpreted as a reversal of IUE's staunch belief in the relaxation of trade barriers."

"We have always been keenly aware that we cannot expect something for nothing, and that as in this case, some workers may be adversely affected," he said. "On balance, we must remember, the advantage—both in the electrical industry and for all industry combined—is on our side. Electrical exports outweigh imports 3 to 1."

Carey said the Sandusky closing was "particularly tragic" because many of the workers, members of IUE Local 701, had worked all their adult lives at the Philco plant and would find it difficult to obtain other work in an area of high joblessness.

If the Tariff Commission rules that the jobs were lost because of a rise in imports resulting from U.S. tariff concessions, the workers will be eligible for:

- Readjustment allowances equal to 65 percent of their average weekly pay for up to 52 weeks (subject to a ceiling of 65 percent of national average factory pay and to deduction of 50 percent of other wages earned or unemployment insurance benefits).
- Relocation allowances to help cover moving expenses of those taking jobs in other cities.
- Training in other needed skills with cash allowances during the training period.

Citizenship Group Elects McDonald

New York—Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, an AFL-CIO vice president, was elected a vice president of the American Immigration & Citizenship Conference at a meeting of the board of directors following the recent annual conference in New York.

FIFTY YEARS of great comic showmanship brought Jimmy Durante a Page One Award in entertainment from the Newspaper Guild of New York. Shown making the presentation at the Guild's Press Club recently are Local Sec.-Treas. M. Michael Potoker, left, and Pres. Wilfred E. Alexander.

AFL-CIO World Role Described by Meany

(Continued from Page 1)

that underlies our system than the system itself, because I imagine that people would resent us trying to impose our system upon them," he added.

"We don't tell these people that they should try to imitate our trade unions. We just try to show them what we do. But we do impress on them that the only effective trade union is a free trade union. That means a union free from government control. . . . If you don't have trade union freedom, you don't have freedom in any other segment of the society.

"Little by little," Meany said, "we are winning the cold war." The Communists, he emphasized, "make mistakes" which help our efforts. But he warned that "the Soviet timetable is 'infinity' " and "we have to keep wide awake and keep fighting."

He termed the attitude of most U.S. business interests in Latin America today "very progessive by contrast with what has gone on in the past." But he warned that countries whose governments are controlled by a handful of wealthy families while the mass of the people live on the edge of poverty "could go Communist overnight."

There is "no future," he said, in countries where the average income is only $150 a year.

'Fair Game' for Reds

"Until we can get these countries to help their own people, they are fair game for Communist propaganda," he said.

Meany traced labor's deep roots in international worker movements dating back to the late 19th century when the exchange of fraternal delegates with the British Trades Union Congress was begun.

He told the subcommittee how U.S. labor had helped set up anti-Nazi organizations only 10 weeks after Hitler assumed power in Germany—"six years before the American people as a whole realized the menace to our way of life."

He spoke of labor's help in reestablishing trade union movements in France, Germany and Italy in the aftermath of World War II—assistance in uniting the various democratic unions and frustrating Communist takeover of the European labor movement.

He related American labor's long interest in building an independent Latin American labor movement and told of the birth and development of the ICFTU and its regional affiliates. He spoke of the practical help given African union movements—jeeps to get around in, multigraph machines and realistic training in such areas as grievances, contracts and basic economics.

If the people sent to these countries were employes of the U.S. government, "they would lose their usefulness right away," Meany said. Many of the workers in the developing nations, he emphasized, "are distrustful of all governments—they have never had a government under which they had a happy experience."

Questioned about his dissent from the recent Clay Committee report recommending a trimming back of U.S. foreign aid programs, Meany said he would deal with that in a scheduled May 22 appearance before the committee on the foreign aid authorization bill.

He emphasized he was for an increase in aid programs and when queried as to his priority between more money for foreign aid and more money for education, retorted:

"I think America is big enough to do all these things."

Labor Opposes Bias Ban Repeal

A spokesman for the Greater Washington Central Labor Council has testified that the council opposes repeal of a "public accommodations" ordinance in Montgomery County, Md., and instead prefers "continuance and improvement" of the law, which makes it illegal for businessmen to deny service to patrons because of race.

The labor council is "opposed to discrimination anywhere," said Raymond Munts, who represented Council Pres. J. C. Turner, and believes that all persons, regardless of race, "should have the same rights of access as any properly behaved citizen."

Munts was one of nearly 100 witnesses who spoke against repeal at a hearing called by the Montgomery County Council in an area bordering Washington, D.C.

Labor Urges Action to Halt Job Bias

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 11, 1963 | No. 19

Congress Pressed on FEP Law

By David L. Perlman

Congress should act to "put the whole weight of the federal government . . . behind the principle and practice of equal employment opportunities," the AFL-CIO has urged.

While legislation can't cure prejudice, "it can eliminate discrimination," the federation stated in House testimony emphasizing labor's strong support of a fair employment bill introduced by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.). The Roosevelt bill would prohibit job discrimination because of "race, religion, color, national origin, ancestry or age" and would set up a commission to enforce the ban.

Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel, told a House Labor subcommittee that "by far the most widespread and most agonizing discrimination is perpetrated against Negroes" and "the type of discrimination that does the most damage, both to its victims and to the nation, is job discrimination."

Harris, who was joined at the witness table by Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, said a federal fair employment law would get at the "root" of discrimination.

Most Negroes are still "trapped in city ghettoes," he said, "by their own poverty, brought about by limited job opportunities," as well as by exclusion policies.

Chance of Job Basic

Equalization of educational opportunities, he noted, cannot be fully effective until Negro youngsters are motivated to continue their education by the prospects of jobs which will match their training.

Harris told the subcommittee that unions have succeeded in writing non-discrimination provisions into nearly one-fourth of major collective bargaining agreements.

Within the trade union movement, he said, "ancient citadels of racial discrimination—which, al-

(Continued on Page 11)

World Oil Workers Move To Back Shell Co. Strikers

New Group Asks Fast Tax Slash

A single comprehensive bill to reduce individual and corporate taxes by $10 billion has been urged by "The Citizens Committee for Tax Reduction and Revision in 1963."

The 40-man group—representing a broad cross-section of leaders in small business, labor, agriculture, housing, education and aging and welfare—declared its sole purpose was "to gain widespread public understanding and acceptance of the national need for prompt and effective action in this session of Congress to achieve a meaningful revision of federal income tax laws."

This revision would include "a substantial net tax reduction of individual and corporate taxes totalling about $10 billion, a substantial part to take effect as early as possible in 1963."

The seven representatives of the AFL-CIO on the committee in a separate statement declared that they joined in the committee's statement of principles be-

(Continued on Page 2)

PRES. KENNEDY LED the nation in hailing the Machinists' 75th anniversary as vivid proof that the progress of a nation is linked with the progress of a strong trade union movement.

Tribute from Kennedy:

Machinists Honored At Diamond Jubilee

By Saul Miller

The 75th anniversary of the Intl. Association of Machinists is dramatic evidence that the nation's progress and a free, strong trade union movement are inseparably linked.

That was the theme of the IAM's diamond jubilee banquet in Washington which heard Pres. Kennedy declare:

"A free, active, progressive trade union movement stands for a free, active progressive country." The Machinists "have represented one of the most powerful forces for progress . . . one of the most powerful forces for the future that we now have." (See box this page.)

The jammed and overflowing banquet hall at the Sheraton-Park Hotel heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany measure the IAM against the basic principles of trade unionism and declare:

'America At Its Best'

"The Machinists are not just labor at its best; they represent America at its best." The IAM is dedicated to the basic trade union proposition "that the ultimate objective of a union, in improving the lot of its members, is to improve and strengthen the nation as a whole." (See excerpts on Page 6.)

The more than 2,400 local leaders of the IAM, joined by representatives of government, labor and industry, heard Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz review the history of the union from its founding in an Atlanta, Ga., locomotive pit on May 5, 1888, by 19 machinists and declare:

"It is a very real honor to come here to salute the members of a union who have been the builders of democracy's past and who are today the architects of its future."

And they heard IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes, who presided at the anniversary banquet, dedicate the union to the "challenges of tomorrow." He said:

"It is important that we accomplish the ends we seek, not merely for our own gratification, but as living proof to all of the peoples of the world, all those who yearn to be free, that individual enterprise is synonymous with social justice and that within the structure of democracy lies man's best hope to achieve economic justice, political equity and personal dignity."

One of Largest

The union noted that from the handful of machinists who formed the association in 1888 it has grown to one of the largest in the AFL-CIO and that "more than 1 million men and women work under IAM agreements in 15,122 plants and shops throughout the U.S. and Canada."

Pres. Kennedy, paying high tribute to the trade union movement, said it was no "accident" that there has not been a depression between

(Continued on Page 4)

Aid Pledge Extended To OCAW

Houston, Tex. — Leaders of four world oil unions, pledging "foreign aid" to an American union, have voted full backing to the 2,200 Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers on strike against Shell Oil Co. here since last Aug. 19.

That backing will include strikes by foreign Shell workers if necessary, union leaders said at a press conference called by the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers after a visit to the OCAW picket lines at nearby Pasadena, Tex.

The delegates from abroad noted "with amazement," they said, that Shell management is attempting to impose working conditions at Pasadena "inferior to those prevailing in our own countries," and expressed "grave concern" lest those inferior conditions then be "exported" to Shell installations in their homelands.

First IFPW Aid for U.S. Union

The IFPW is a trade secretariat associated with the Intl.. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with affiliated oil unions in 73 free world nations. In its nine-year history, the IFPW has gone to the aid of unions in so-called "underdeveloped" countries on numerous occasions. This time, for the first time, a U.S. union is a beneficiary.

Participating in the conference were officers of oil unions in the Netherlands, Venezuela, Trinidad and Curacao, in the Netherlands Antilles. All bargain with Shell. They agreed on this four-point program:

- The delegates will make immediate representations to Royal Dutch Shell, parent firm of Shell Oil, protesting the U.S. situation.
- A conference of all oil unions

(Continued on Page 3)

Why Unions? Kennedy Answers at IAM Fete

Pres. Kennedy gave the nation a clear and concise answer to the question "Why Unions?" in his address to the IAM's 75th anniversary banquet in Washington. This is what he said:

"Those who may find fault with the labor movement today in the United States, as they find fault with so many things in this country, need only look abroad—in Latin America, in Europe, in all parts of the world—and see labor unions controlled either by the Communists or the government, or no labor unions. And when they find either one of those three conditions, they find inevitably poverty or totalitarianism.

"Therefore, I think it is a fair judgment to make that a free, active, progressive trade union movement stands for a free, active, progressive country. And that is the kind of country I am proud to be President of."

"One of the great things about this country has been that our most extraordinary accomplishments have not come from the government down or from the top down, but have come from the bottom up. The Machinists, organized 75 years ago in Georgia, today represent 1 million men and women in Canada and the United States.

"They, as part of the whole AFL-CIO, representing nearly 13 million Americans, have represented one of the most powerful forces for progress, one of the most powerful forces for stability, one of the most powerful hopes for the future that we now have."

"I cannot think of a force over the last 30 years that has contributed more, not only to its own membership, not only to the membership of the Machinists, not only to the membership of the trade union movement, but for the well-being of our country."

URW Meeting Set On Goodyear Pact

Akron—The fate of a proposed new contract between the Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. may be settled here at a membership meeting of Local 2 scheduled for May 12.

The local, which has 9,500 members, rejected the contract and its executive board is recommending that negotiations on 12 points be reopened. Meeting the same day to reconsider a previous turndown is Local 131 in Los Angeles. Union rules require that chain-wide contracts be ratified by a majority of members in a majority of locals.

News Expert Pins Down A Couple of Loose Terms

Newspaper editors have been cautioned about loose usage of such terms as "right-to-work" and "fair-trade."

Roy H. Copperud, who writes the Editorial Workshop column in Editor & Publisher, trade magazine of the newspaper publishing industry, sounded this warning:

"In 'fair-trade laws' and 'right-to-work laws' we have a pair of political euphemisms. Fair-trade laws have nothing to do with fair trade from the consumer's viewpoint; their purpose is to force retailers to maintain a price structure fixed by the manufacturer, a strategem that the bargain-hunter, at least, considers highly unfair, and so does the cutrate merchant. But it is called free enterprise. 'Right-to-work laws' is a term concocted to make legislation that labor generally considers repugnant palatable to the voter. Their purpose is not to preserve any right to work, but to outlaw the union shop. Some carefully edited publications designate these kinds of legislation as 'so-called fair-trade laws, so-called right-to-work laws.'"

New Citizens' Unit Asks $10 Billion Tax Slash

(Continued from Page 1)

cause the "major domestic problem facing America today is unemployment . . . we need a tax bill" that will get America back to work.

The labor representatives stressed that "we will oppose any tax bill that does not serve this purpose," adding:

"The AFL-CIO position is for an immediate tax cut of approximately $10 billion with the major emphasis on the low and middle income family groups where the maximum economic thrust will result in high velocity purchasing power. We also favor an expanded federal budget to meet the serious deficits in the fields of education, housing, urban renewal, hospital and health services, highway construction and resource developments, all of which are essential if we are to stimulate the economy and get America back to work."

The committee named six co-chairmen. They are: Dr. Howard R. Bowen, president of Grinnell College, education; D. W. Brooks, general manager, Cotton Producers Association, agriculture; George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, labor; Phil David Fine of the law firm of Fine & Ambrogne, small business; Gerritt Vander Ende, president, Pacific First Federal Savings & Loan Association, housing; Aime J. Forand, president of National Council of Senior Citizens, aging and welfare.

Pres. Kennedy, welcoming representatives of the group at the White House, expressed pleasure at the committee's organization and its statement of objectives.

Recalling that he has repeatedly termed tax reduction and reform the "most urgent task" for Congress, Kennedy said the makeup of the group "broadly extends the consensus" in the nation that "tax revision, with net reduction of about $10 billion, is an appropriate target for legislative action this year."

Acknowledging that all members would not agree on all details of his own tax proposals, the President nevertheless said that by "enlarging public understanding of the need for action—this year—your committee can increase the likelihood of timely and meaningful legislation" pushing the country toward achievement of its economic goals.

Variations Acknowledged

The committee's statement of principles noted that membership in the group "shall not preclude the exercise by any member of his right to disagree with any specific features of the committee proposals, or to advance other proposals of his own."

The statement urged "prompt enactment during the present session of Congress, in a single comprehensive bill" of the following program:

- A substantial "meaningful reduction in individual tax rates."
- The removal of inequities and hardships in the tax structure.
- Reduction of corporate tax rates to aid small business.
- "A meaningul reduction in the rate of corporate income tax."
- Broadening the base of the tax system to remove "unwarranted special privileges, correct defects in the tax law and provide more equal treatment of taxpayers."

The statement declared also that the tax program "must be carried forward as a part of a comprehensive financial program that protects the nation against any danger of new inflationary pressures."

In a brief analysis of the problem, the committee said the current tax system exerts "too heavy a drag on employment, private purchasing power, profits and incentives," that it "invites recurrent recessions and prevents the full attainment of our national economic objectives of full employment and use of resources."

The labor representatives on the committee include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Federation Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, James A. Suffridge and Joseph D. Keenan, Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger and Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank.

Bowen presided at the committee and introduced Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon, Undersec. Henry H. Fowler and Lawrence O'Brien, special assistant to Pres. Kennedy. The Administration officials did not participate in the committee sessions.

Second Thoughts Spreading:

'Work' Law States Discover Progress Passes Them By

Questioning voices are being raised in states which some years back enacted so-called "right-to-work" laws on the assurance that banning the union shop would attract new industry and speed economic growth.

Some influential newspapers, and even some business groups, in "right-to-work" states are now asking aloud, in fact, whether the reverse may have been true. They see mounting evidence that these states have slipped even further behind their neighbors.

At the same time, in Congress, the first steps have been taken to lay the groundwork for repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act. Although the 1947 labor law allows workers and employers to negotiate a union shop, Sec. 14b enables states in effect to supersede federal law and make union shop agreements illegal.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N.J.) has introduced a bill to repeal Sec. 14b. Similar bills are being prepared by other members of Congress.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its February meeting, called for an intensified drive against "right-to-work" and Sec. 14b which, it declared, "invites states to compete in passing anti-union laws on the erroneous supposition that they attract industry."

Warning that collective bargaining "is being emasculated by state 'right-to-work' laws," Williams said repeal of 14b is the only path out of "the jungle of industrial strife."

Newspaper and business criticism from "right-to-work" states centers largely on the failure of the union shop ban to fulfill the promises of its sponsors.

The business editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Jim Montgomery, wrote on Apr. 30 that "Georgia's so-called 'right-to-work' law may be crippling the state's economic progress." He suggested that its repeal may be "long overdue."

Low Wages Continue

The states which have banned the union shop, "Georgia among them, are still dominated by low-wage industries," Montgomery pointed out.

He cited a "carefully documented indictment" of such laws by University of Vermont Prof. Milton J. Nadworny which appeared in the publication of New York University's Institute of Economic Affairs.

Nadworny pointed out that in states which have adopted "work" laws, "both hourly manufacturing wages and per capita personal income have been falling farther and farther behind the national averages."

Montgomery cited wage statistics for Georgia as an example of the "right-to-work" lag.

In 1950, he said, its average manufacturing wage was 39 cents below the national average. Last year, it was 62 cents below. In 1950, per capita income in the state was $474 under the U.S. average. The 1962 per capita income trailed the national average by $643.

The newspaper's business editor commented:

"That's progress?

"Or is it simply a revelation of the severe impact on Georgia of a so-called 'right-to-work' law designed to limit wage (and therefore income) increases?

"And just imagine how much worse Georgia would show up in comparison with U.S. averages excluding the 'right-to-work' states.

Second Thoughts in North

The handful of northern states which have banned the union shop are also hearing some second thoughts on the issue.

After the industrial relations counsel of the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce said the state's "work" law may cost it defense contracts, the Hutchinson (Kans.) News commented editorially:

"One of the promises of those who promoted the 'right-to-work' law in Kansas was that it would lure new industries to the state. It hasn't worked out that way . . . everyone is crying that Kansas is missing the boat as far as the nation's industrial expansion is concerned."

A columnist on the Newton, Kans., newspaper, The Kansan, said the state might have some second thoughts on its "work" constitutional amendment "if the adverse evidence continues to pile up against it." Columnist F. L. Alder commented:

"The giant concerns employing thousands of laborers have never been tempted by the right-to-work bait. They have welcomed the cooperation of union labor in the establishment of working rules and the fixing of pay schedules. They make bargaining work. They would have a tougher time of it entirely on their own. Most of them shun a right-to-work state as they would a pestilence."

In Indiana, the South Bend Tribune, which in 1957 had favored giving a newly-passed "right-to-work" law "a chance to prove itself," said earlier this year:

"We think Indiana's six-year-old law banning union shops has failed to right any wrongs and, worse, has increased labor tensions in Indiana's industry. We favor its repeal."

In similar vein, the Gary Post-Tribune said "it would be good for the Hoosier political climate" if the "work" bill were repealed.

Net Profits Move Up, No Dent in Joblessness

Corporate profits, which set an all-time record of $26.3 billion after taxes in 1962, are headed for new heights this year, according to the nation's leading business publications.

Business Week, a McGraw-Hill publication, set the tone of the reports going to business and industry across the nation in the headline on its profits story: "More zoom still ahead."

The Wall Street Journal told its readers in front page headlines that profits for the second quarter of 1963 will stay near the "record reached in late 1962." The 1962 fourth quarter profit rate, said the Journal, was a "peacetime record, having been exceeded only during the Korean War's scare-buying boom in the second quarter of 1950."

The profits stories broke at about the same time the government was reporting a slight rise in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment to 5.7 percent of the labor force and a total of 4.1 million persons unemployed in April.

Labor economists pointed out that a more accurate indicator of corporate earnings—cash flow, which includes after-tax profits plus depreciation allowances—rose a spectacular 12 percent in 1962 from $48.4 billion in 1961 to $54.4 billion last year.

The 1962 figure compares with a cash flow of $29.9 billion in 1953, an increase of 82 percent in nine years. They note also that while 1953 was a year of near-capacity operations, 17 percent of industrial capacity was idle last year.

Profit Situation

The profit situation as reported by the Journal looks like this:

After-tax earnings of 511 representative corporations in the first three months of 1963 were up 6.9 percent over the same quarter a year ago and close to the record rate of $27.3 billion registered in the final three months of 1962.

"This gain," says the Journal, "suggests that the net profits of all U.S. corporations in the first period were larger than the $25.6 billion annual rate reported by government for the first quarter of 1962."

Industries which showed gains from 1962 in the first quarter and "seem likely to show favorable comparisons again this quarter," said the Journal, include autos, electrical, farm equipment and petroleum. It adds:

"The better showings reported or indicated so far this year are not in most cases the results of changes in tax rules."

This indicates that the benefits of the investment tax credit and the faster depreciation rules are not showing up in the profits reports. They are accounted for, however, in the cash flow figures.

'Even More Hopeful'

Business Week says economists and forecasters "are even more hopeful" about profits in 1963 than the record-shattering fourth-quarter rate of 1962 and anticipate before-tax profits at the annual rate of $54 billion in the second three months of the present year.

The magazine quotes one unidentified economist for a major New York bank as saying that profit gains last year came in just "about the most unfavorable environment imaginable."

"Sales certainly weren't setting the world on fire" the quotation continued, "and prices in many areas were weak. If [profit] margins improved in spite of all this, then I'd say a company was in shape to make the most of good business."

Free Gifts to Highlight Union-Industries Show

Souvenirs and gifts worth thousands of dollars will be given away during the six days the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show—the world's largest labor-management function—is open to the public beginning May 17 in the St. Louis Arena.

The display of union-made goods and services, with exhibits worth millions of dollars, is free to the general public.

Among the gifts to be awarded are:

- An all-electric kitchen to be displayed by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which also will pay for the installation in the winner's home.
- A fiber glass boat offered by the Glass Bottle Blowers, which will feature in its display the world's largest portable glass furnace in operation.
- More than a quarter-million cigarettes, plus other gifts, to be given by the Tobacco Workers.
- Television sets and other appliances from the Retail Clerks.
- Twenty-two gas and electric stoves to be given away by the Stove Mounters.

Many of the exhibits will show union members at work. Among these will be many demonstrations of skilled craftsmanship, such as the national finals of the apprenticeship contest staged annually throughout the show by the Bricklayers.

The Carpenters also will demonstrate their apprenticeship program.

The Hotel & Restaurant Employes will offer live entertainment against a background showing the many services its members render.

The AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. stages the Union-Industries Show each year in a different city. It is directed by the department's secretary-treasurer, Joseph Lewis.

Award to ILGWU Confirmed:

Appeals Court Backs Judy Bond Arbiter

New York—Judges of the New York Supreme Court's appellate division have voted unanimously to uphold a lower court decision ordering Judy Bond, Inc., runaway dress firm, to pay damages of $83,461 to the Ladies' Garment Workers.

The court, sustaining a finding that Arbiter George J. Mintzer's award of damages was proper, rejected Judy Bond's claim that it constituted financial penalties and that payment would violate the Landrum-Griffin law and anti-trust statutes.

The ruling constituted another victory for the ILGWU and New York Blousemaker's Local 25 in a running fight carried on since December 1961, when the Judy Bond firm broke away from the employers' association.

The ILGWU struck the runaway firm on Jan. 9, 1962, after Judy Bond served notice that it would no longer be bound by the association's contract with the union. Since that date these things have happened:

- Judy Bond closed its operations here just as negotiations between the ILGWU and the National Association of Blouse Manufacturers were being completed and moved all its production processes to a plant in Brewton, Ala.
- The union picketed the struck firm's showrooms and offices and started a don't-buy campaign in which more than a million leaflets have been distributed to shoppers all over the nation.
- Mintzer, the impartial arbitrator for the blouse industry, sustained the ILGWU's charges that Judy Bond had breached the collective industry agreement and ordered the firm to pay $108,762 for losses suffered by union members.

The employer appealed to the courts, and was ordered to pay the Mintzer awards. Late last year the company paid $25,301 for requiring its shipping clerks to work a 40-hour week instead of the 35 hours called for in the 1961 contract.

The arbiter's finding that Judy Bond must make its fourth quarter 1961 records available to the union also was appealed, the company losing when the Supreme Court of New York County refused the company's motion for a stay.

The union now will move to collect these unpaid awards: $61,000 in damages due because the company violated its obligation to make all of its work in union shops and channeled 61,000 dozen blouses into non-union production; $22,461 to the union-industry health and welfare fund for payments the company failed to make on its non-union production.

An ILGWU organizing drive is under way at the Judy Bond plant in the South.

Labor's Changing Role Cited in News Program

Labor's active participation in world and community affairs may be the best means of reaching the "white coat" worker of tomorrow's automated industrial society, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers declared in a radio interview.

Both blue collar and white collar workers are being replaced, he said, by "the white coat worker, the technician, the semi-professional."

Beirne, an AFL-CIO vice president and author of the recently-published New Horizons for American Labor, was interviewed on the federation's public service program, Labor News Conference, carried by the Mutual Broadcasting network.

With a higher degree of education but with a job which may be limited to looking "at buttons and lights all day long," the worker of the future will have broad interests extending far beyond his employment, Beirne predicted.

With battles for better wages, hours, working conditions, vacations, pensions and medical benefits largely won, Beirne said, a chief attraction of the union movement may be as "a vehicle for the whole man to have his voice felt in all the elements of the things that make up his living," including international affairs, community activities and education.

Beirne said he foresees in such a future society a greater role for the central labor federation as contrasted with individual unions.

To develop leadership in new fields, Beirne said, the trade union movement will "have to rely upon the professionals more than we have" and "to search in our universities to pick out the best brains . . . to assist in the social scientific job that will be in front of us then."

One of labor's problems today, Beirne said, is that the picture of the labor movement which reaches the general public is based on the "man bites dog" theory of news, so that "the worst elements" of the labor movement receive the most attention in the press.

In terms of developing future interest, he said, a chief problem is that "the young men and the young women graduating from our high schools and universities today are ignorant of the labor movement."

Rhode Island Strikebreaker Curbs Voted

Providence, R.I.—A bill barring the use of professional strikebreakers moved to the desk of Gov. John H. Chafee (R)—and State AFL-CIO officials said they expected he would sign it.

Twice before—in 1960—gubernatorial vetoes had killed anti-strikebreaker legislation.

As passed overwhelmingly by both houses of the legislature, the bill prohibits any individual or firm from knowingly recruiting a person who "customarily and repeatedly offers himself for employment" to replace striking or locked-out workers.

It also makes it illegal for such a professional strikebreaker to offer himself for such employment or for an employer to hire him.

The maximum penalty for violation is one year in prison and a $500 fine.

Unions in the printing and newspaper industries have been in the forefront of a drive to enact city and state "citizens' job protection laws" barring strikebreakers.

FOREIGN OIL UNION leaders announce support for Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, on strike against Shell Oil Co., at press conference in Houston, Tex. From left, facing camera, are OCAW Intl. Rep. Forrest Craig; Pres. Don Wilkers of striking OCAW Local 4-367; Staff Rep. Manuel Varella, Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers; Carlos Pinerua, financial secretary, Federation of Petroleum Workers of Venezuela; Sec. Ben Ter Borch, Netherlands Petroleum & Chemical Workers Union, also IFPW vice president; IFPW Sec. Loyd A. Haskins, Denver; Sec. Hubert Spencer, Petroleum Workers Federation of Curacao; Pres. John F. F. Rojas, National Trades Union Congress of Trinidad & Tobago, and an IFPW vice president.

International Oil Workers Pledge 'Foreign Aid' to Shell Co. Strikers

(Continued from Page 1)

in the Caribbean area will be held June 3 in Caracas, Venezuela, with representatives present from at least 11 countries to discuss methods of assisting the strikers.

- If by the time of this conference the strike has not been settled to the satisfaction of the OCAW, unions represented will take such action as may be feasible and effective, including strikes and embargoes on oil shipments.
- A world conference of unions representing Shell employes will be held in Athens, Greece, in connection with a previously scheduled world congress of the IFPW in October. Long-range cooperative activities in contending with Royal Dutch Shell will be planned.

Carlos Pinerua, financial secretary of the Federation of Venezuelan Petroleum Workers, pointed out that his union's industrywide contract is open for negotiation and therefore his union is in a position to carry out a Venezuela-wide strike if necessary to support the U.S. strikers.

Gen. Sec. Hubert Spencer of the Petroleum Workers Federation of Curacao noted that his union's contract was closed, but that a Venezuelan strike would shut down his refinery by cutting off the source of its crude oil.

Pres. John F. F. Rojas of the Trinidad & Tobago National Trades Union Congress, said the Shell contract in that nation is under negotiation and that he would recommend a strike if necessary to support the U.S. workers.

Appeal to be Broadened

Ben Tar Borch, general secretary of the Netherlands Petroleum & Chemical Workers Union, promised to make strong representations to the home office of Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. and to publicize the situation among Europeans. A strike in the Netherlands is needless, he observed, because the flow of oil and oil products is from the western hemisphere to Europe.

Loyd A. Haskins, general secretary of IFPW, announced plans to report the strike situations to unionists in the many other countries. where Shell operates and to solicit their support for the strikers. Haskins is a former international representative of the Oil Workers.

The basic strike issue at Pasadena is a company demand for unilateral control over work rules, job descriptions, scheduling of work and contracting-out.

All four of the foreign union leaders said their workers were protected against such conditions by contract provisions and emphasized that work-force reductions and work-rule changes are carried out only in consultation with the unions. In a strongly phrased statement they conveyed a broad suggestion that Shell Oil is being used as an instrument of anti-union policies by the U.S. petroleum industry generally.

"We are gravely concerned that if the inferior working conditions proposed by Shell in Pasadena should be made to prevail, then these conditions will be exported to our own countries, thereby damaging our conditions," they said in their formal statement.

Regarding the root-source of Shell's demands to emasculate the contract at Pasadena, the statement said:

"We are curious to know if the policies followed by Shell in America are dictated by the Dutch and British owners of Shell or by the American oil industry. In other parts of the world, the various subsidiaries of Royal Dutch/Shell are among the more enlightened and progressive of the oil companies in labor relations.

"The comparative backwardness and harshness of the company in the U.S.A. is enough to make us suspect that in this situation Shell is carrying out not its own will, but anti-union policies of the U.S. oil companies.

"However, the fact remains that the U.S. Shell company is 65.31 percent owned by Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. of the Netherlands and the "Shell" Transport & Trading Co. of Great Britain. The ultimate responsibility for the behavior of the American subsidiary must rest with these owners."

ILGWU Names Janis To Regional Office

Cleveland — Sam Janis, veteran of 25 years of service with the Ladies' Garment Workers, has been named director of the union's Ohio-Kentucky region succeeding the late Nicholas Kirtzman. Janis will move his family here soon from Englewood, N. J.

Boston Local Sponsors Moderate Cost Housing

Boston—A 4,500-member local of the Building Service Employes will sponsor Boston's first moderate-rental housing development to serve families displaced by urban renewal.

The garden development—strikingly-designed two-story and four-story buildings for 202 families—will be located in the Washington Park urban renewal area of Roxbury.

Edward T. Sullivan, secretary-treasurer and business agent of BSEIU Local 254, said the union decided to invest its pension funds "in the city where we work."

Sullivan, who worked for four years to help make the project a reality, said it will make urban renewal "a living, vital thing. No family will be dislocated, no one will be bulldozed out of the way."

The $3 million project was announced by Boston's Mayor John F. Collins, who hailed the union's sponsorship of the non-profit development, to be known as Academy Homes.

Rentals, including heat, will range from $74.50 for a one-bedroom apartment to $105 for a four-bedroom unit. Approximately 70 percent of the apartments will have three or more bedrooms.

The development will be on a park-like site which had been occupied by the Notre Dame Academy and trees will be preserved. There will be play areas and parking facilities, outdoor storage areas and many apartments will have sliding glass doors opening into private patio gardens.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the project—which will be a non-discriminatory "open occupancy" development — featured BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan and Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver as speakers.

Academy Homes will be the largest moderate-rental project in New England and one of the largest housing programs sponsored by any local union in the nation.

THE IAM DIAMOND JUBILEE banquet was highlighted by a presentation to Pres. Al J. Hayes (seated left) of the original charter of the founding Atlanta, Ga., local to the 19 men who met secretly in a locomotive grease pit to launch the union. The presentation was made by George Beauchamp, general chairman of IAM Dist. 4 on the Southern Railroad and a former president of IAM Lodge 1. Holding the charter are W. V. Knowlton, financial secretary, and J. O. Stone, president of Lodge 1.

Machinists 'Force for Progress,' Kennedy Tells Anniversary Fete

(Continued from Page 1)

1945 and 1963, and that the efforts of Pres. Roosevelt in the 1930s and "those made by the trade union movement have laid a solid basis for the general well-being which has benefitted so many of our people over the last 18 years."

Reviewing briefly the legislative record of the first two years of his Administration and pointing to the $1.25 minimum wage and housing and urban renewal measures, the President said he was "astonished" to "see how difficult it is for us to enact" aid to education, assistance for jobless youth and modern transit facilities.

"This is a rich and prosperous and growing country," he said, "but I do think that we have an obligation to those who have not shared in that prosperity." We must fight, he stressed, step-by step in the 1960s so that when the IAM marks its 85th and 100th anniversaries the leaders of the 1960s will have been deemed to have met their responsibilities as well as did those of the 1930s.

Meany, noting the presence at the head table of two representatives of industry, welcomed them "because I would like very much for the industrialists of this country to know more about the trade union movement; know more about the things we stand for, the things we believe in; know more about the way we operate; perhaps even know more about the mistakes we make."

While labor may differ with the industrial world "as to what share labor receives of the wealth that is produced by our system, we are in complete accord insofar as the preservation of that system is concerned," he said.

Turning to the basic definition of what makes a good union, Meany said that neither longevity, size, power or the exercise of power are in themselves dependable yardsticks. A "good union," he stressed, must:

- Protect its members and win a reasonable measure of economic justice for them. Unions need to be strong in "terms of how well they can meet the needs and fulfill the proper aspirations of their members. A good union looks upon power as a means to an end, not as an end in itself."
- Be run by its members for the members — a representative democracy of the highest type.
- Be an honest union, not just "money honest," but with an integrity that extends to its relationships with employers, to "what it says to its own members, to the very formulation of its policies and to a sober evaluation of its own performances."
- "Look beyond its own horizons." It must be concerned with politics and legislation at every level. It must lend its support to community projects.

Applying these yardsticks, Meany said the IAM "meets every test" and that the AFL-CIO's pride in the Machinists "is shared by the entire nation."

Wirtz, noting the IAM's struggle to establish the nine-hour workday and the 54-hour workweek in 1901, commented that "disagreement with the present position of this union [for a shorter workweek] in no way denies the validity of your basic proposition that something must be done to meet the blight of unemployment in this country."

He praised the IAM for its position on automation and the need to share the benefits through the collective bargaining process. And he paid tribute also to the "broadening horizons and visions" of the union and its recognition that "the frontiers of the future and of freedom lie not just in this country but throughout the world."

Trade Stand Lauded

He noted specifically the IAM conference on trade expansion and that the union did not withdraw behind a protectionist policy but produced a "positive world trade policy for labor."

Hayes said that the problems that faced the union founders in 1888 are not those of the 1960s, but that the challenges of today "are no less difficult." He listed the millions in slum housing, the shortage of classrooms, the low incomes of retired workers, their medical care problems, and automation, that is "threatening to push millions of working families into the poverty from which generations of hard work and militant unions have freed them."

The IAM is dedicating itself on its 75th anniversary, he said, to the challenges of tomorrow, pledged to work "with every man, every organization, every institution of good will in the continuing fight for social, economic and political justice."

Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress noted the important role the IAM has played in the development of the Canadian labor movement and the leadership it has provided in historic struggles.

Stressing that "there is no place in my country for anti-Americanism," Jodoin noted that American trade unionists have helped build the Canadian unions.

"We need the international trade union movement today to maintain and improve our standards," the CLC president declared, "and to overcome the challenges of change.

"We need the international trade union movement to make sure that corporations based in the United States do not use their subsidiary operations in Canada to undercut the wages and standards that you have on this side of the border."

Court Backs NLRB:

Farming-Out Work Subject to Parleys

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has voted to sustain a landmark decision of a National Labor Relations Board majority that an employer must bargain with the union representing his workers before contracting out work they have been doing, even if the decision to "farm out" the work was made for business reasons.

The appellate court agreed with a four-man NLRB majority that the Town & Country Manufacturing Co., which makes mobile home trailers at Lawton, Okla., violated the Taft-Hartley Act by subcontracting its trucking operations to another firm and firing its drivers without consulting the union that represented them.

The court granted the board's petition for enforcement of its order, issued Apr. 13, 1962, that the company must take these steps:

- Rescind its decision to contract out its trailer hauling work.
- Reinstate the drivers it fired when it subcontracted the hauling.
- Bargain in good faith with the union on the question of whether the company should return to its former method of hauling trailers.

The court said in part that "we think it is clear the evidence permits of no other reasonable conclusion" that the management's decision to subcontract its work and to discharge its drivers was "the result in part at least of the company's determination to rid itself of the union."

When the NLRB reached its decision by vote of Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning, Gerald A. Brown and Boyd Leedom, it overturned a trial examiner's recommendation to find that Town & Country was "engaging in pretext" when it tried to justify its action on economic grounds.

Management's true motive, the board said, was "because the men had joined and selected the union as their bargaining representative." Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented, and Leedom joined the majority only in ordering management to restore its trucking operations.

The company in its appeal argued that Rodgers was right in his view that the order was beyond the power of the board to make. The appeals court agreed with the NLRB majority that the evidence was "overwhelming . . . that the action was motivated by anti-union sentiment and a desire to rid itself of the union."

The court also said it agreed with the NLRB majority that the decision does not mean the company is compelled to agree with the union, after "reasonable bargaining," that the work may not be contracted out.

It does mean, however, that in taking the steps the board outlined, management must in good faith bargain with the union certified as the employes' representative, it said.

The decision reversed an earlier decision made by the board before McCulloch and Brown were appointed by Pres. Kennedy to replace Eisenhower appointees.

It came in a case involving the unaffiliated Teamsters. Later the board, voting 2-1, also found unbargained-for subcontracting unlawful in a case involving the Fibreboard Paper Products Co. and Steelworkers Local 1304, Emeryville, Calif.

Local Trades Body Affirms Rights Stand

The Building & Construction Trades Council of Washington, D. C., has "unequivocally" affirmed as basic policy its determination "to make fully secure equal rights for all in every field of life."

In a resolution passed by the executive board, the council again expressed its intention of striving "to assure for all workers in our trades the full benefits of union membership without regard to race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry."

"We support," the resolution said, "and are pledged to carry out the policy of assuring and furthering nondiscrimination in union membership, in employment and in apprenticeship training, a policy mandatory and binding upon this council by previous actions of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., AFL-CIO, and of the AFL-CIO."

TRENDS IN INCOME and wealth distribution were described by Dr. Robert Lampman, left, a staff member of the Council of Economic Advisers, to union research directors and staffs at an all-day session in AFL-CIO headquarters. Also shown, right, is AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger. Other speakers included Marvin Miller, assistant to Steelworkers' Pres. David J. McDonald; Stanley Ruttenberg, economic adviser to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz; Robert Steadman, special assistant to Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara; and Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO European economic representative.

Phony Strike Film Upsets NLRB Vote

'Women Must Weep' Forces New Election

By Eugene A. Kelly

The anti-union propaganda film, "And Women Must Weep," was denounced as "one-sided" and "distorted" and its showing called "destructive of freedom of choice" as the National Labor Relations Board voted 3-2 to set aside an election lost by a union.

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch used this language in a concurring opinion to the decision, which ordered a new election among employes of the Carl T. Mason Co., Inc., who voted 50-12 in December 1961 against union representation at the firm's Itaska, Ill., plant. The union involved was the Teamsters, unaffiliated.

Board Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown, in the controlling opinion, cited anti-union documents sent to employes, a speech by the employer, and the film, taken together, as not conducive to a proper election atmosphere.

Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented, as they had previously in a case which brought the "Weep" film into the spotlight—Plochman & Harrison-Cherry Lane Foods, Inc.

The film, circulated by the National Right-to-Work Committee, purports to be a true account of a 1956 strike in Princeton, Ind.

McCulloch agreed that the "coercive statements" by the employer, as well as the film showing, destroyed the "laboratory conditions requisite for the holding of a free election" but in his concurring opinion was emphatic in condemning the film alone as enough to "create an emotional state of intimidation and fear."

"I do not believe," he said, "that the board should tolerate the use of propaganda devices such as this film in elections conducted under its auspices."

McCulloch said he further believed that the increasing use of such films, "purportedly documentary but in fact contrived, should be more extensively scrutinized" by the board or by other "appropriate and competent tribunals."

The film is not a documentary, he continued, but is a "staged production based on a contrived script, played by professional actors," and tells the story of "property destruction, violence, and the near-murder of a child" allegedly committed by a union during a strike "ostensibly called for no justifiable reason."

"A sophisticated person would probably recognize a film such as 'And Women Must Weep' for what it is, propaganda intended to create anti-union feeling, and will appropriately weigh or discount its one-sided and distorted message," said McCulloch.

"But such films are not meant for sophisticated audiences. I have no doubt that among audiences of working men and women, as well as others, 'And Women Must Weep' is emotionally overpowering.

"It pictures a labor dispute as one in which Americanism, religion, family, motherhood and innocent childhood are arrayed on one side, and goons, brutes, and murderers on the other or pro-union side. To achieve this result, dramatic liberties were apparently taken with the facts."

The film, the board chairman said, is not mere "prattle" common to elections, it does not contribute to the "sober and informed exercise of the franchise" and it has no relevance to an election at the plant of the employer.

"The clear tendency, if not the purpose in showing the film," he asserted, "was quite plainly . . . to create such an atmosphere of emotional prejudice that employes would not be able to make a reasoned choice" of a bargaining representative.

LEADERS OF AFL-CIO affiliates made up a second group of labor officials invited by Pres. Kennedy to renew acquaintance at a White House luncheon May 2. Here the President is shown as he makes a point to Pres. John J. Murphy of the Bricklayers, to his left. Federation Pres. George Meany is at Kennedy's right.

Union Officials Entertained By Kennedy

Union officials representing AFL-CIO affiliates made up the guest list of a second recent luncheon at the White House given by Pres. Kennedy to renew acquaintance.

Other guests included Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz; AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to Meany, and Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies. Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service was among the government officials present at the earlier luncheon.

The May 2 guest list included the following international union presidents: Daniel E. Conway, Bakery & Confectionery Workers; John J. Murphy, Bricklayers; Walter L. Mitchell, Chemical Workers; John F. Griner, Government Employes; Ed S. Miller, Hotel & Restaurant Employes; Jerome Keating, Letter Carriers; Harold C. Crotty, Maintenance of Way Employes; T. J. Lloyd, Meat Cutters.

Also, Edward J. Leonard, Plasterers; Anthony J. DeAndrade, Pressmen; Charles Luna, Trainmen; John M. Elliott, Street & Electric Railway Employes; A. F. Hartung, Woodworkers; Eddie R. Stahl, Aluminum Workers; Ralph Reiser, Glass & Ceramic Workers; Max Greenberg, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

Also, Arnold S. Zander, State, County & Municipal Employes; Jesse Clark, Railroad Signalmen; William Pollock, Textile Workers Union of America; John E. Mara, Boot & Shoe Workers; Eugene E. Frazier, Transport Service Employes; plus Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild and Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.

Central body officers present were: Pres. Joseph Davis, Washington; Pres. Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania; Pres. August Scholle, Michigan; Pres. John I. Rollings, Missouri; Pres. Miles C. Stanley, West Virginia; Sec.-Treas. Joseph M. Rourke, Connecticut; Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom, Illinois; Sec. W. J. Bassett, Los Angeles; Pres. Jake Friedrick, Milwaukee.

13 Cent-an-Hour Staff Strikes Hilton Hotel

El Paso, Tex.—The mighty Hilton Hotel chain, with cash registers tinkling in 34 swank caravanseries on the Main Streets of America, has been challenged by some of its lowest-paid workers to tell why it pays less than bracero wages here.

From a picket line in front of the local Hilton Hotel, 125 members of Hotel & Restaurant Employes' Local 628 have been telling the traveling public that some El Paso Hilton workers get no wages at all, but must live on tips; others have been paid as little as 13 cents an hour.

"Such inexcusable 'gutting' of workers must stop," says Local 628 in its role of David facing the mighty hotel Goliath. "These Hilton employes have had to exist on starvation incomes. There is no excuse or justification for this shameful condition."

A handbill printed by the local lists wages of braceros—transient workers, many from Mexico—as 70 cents an hour, plus utilities and "keep," under U.S.-Mexican contract regulations. Workers in interstate commerce get $1.15 an hour, but hotel workers are not protected by the law.

Local 628 says it has affidavits from workers citing wages such as these:

- A porter who does odd jobs and shines shoes seven days a week for $27 a month—about $6 a week.
- A worker who got only tips in 20 years of work at the hotel and is the sole support of his family.
- An employe who tries to support a family of 10 on wages of 49 cents an hour.
- Another worker who was paid $1.04 a day, or 13 cents an hour.

Ending the first month of their strike for a first contract, Hilton workers have been telling the public that those who "barely exist on such meager earnings are the victims of cruel and inhuman exploitation" and "cannot support their community nor provide for their old age."

If allowed to continue at this level, the union asserts "many will ultimately become objects of charity, to be supported by the society they themselves were unable to support."

The lowly-paid workers, after many years of sweatshop wages, voted for Local 628 in a National Labor Relations Board election several months ago. They walked out when negotiations failed to produce terms they could live with.

Charles A. Paulsen, organizing director of the union, says his union has contracts with 28 Hilton hotels—but none in Texas, Louisiana or Georgia. One reason might be that the Texas Hotel Association is strongly opposed to unions, he says. The hostility of the association, he adds, appears to be "more marked than in other states."

Workers in Israel Help ILGWU to Win Strike

New York—A flying trip to Israel by Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers and support by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, played a major part in helping settle a nine-week strike at American plants of the Rhoda Lee Blouse Co.

The strike ended with a new three-year contract providing wage hikes of 4 percent now, 3 percent in September and another 3 percent in May 1965, plus other improvements for 200 Rhoda Lee workers at Elberton, Ga.

When the Elberton strikers went back to work, so did 100 other Rhoda Lee workers at plants in New York City and Mt. Carmel, Pa., who had walked out in sympathy. The union agreed to call off a consumer boycott campaign.

The strike began Feb. 19 during negotiations on contract renewal when the company offered, and the ILGWU refused to accept, substandard conditions. While pickets marched on their wintry patrols, the union charged that the firm was keeping up production by importing blouses made by union labor in Israel and marketing them with a Rhoda Lee label sewed over the Made-in-Israel label.

Stulberg flew to Israel and convinced officers of Histadrut that Israeli workers should not be used to help break a strike in America. They agreed, and the strike was settled after Stulberg returned.

Workers in Mt. Carmel and New York City are back at work under contract terms similar to those in area blouse agreements, the union reported.

ILGWU Wins Honor with Ad

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers has been presented with the national mass media brotherhood award of the National Conference of Christians & Jews for an "outstanding contribution through advertising to the cause of better human relations and the ideals of democratic equality."

The ad was captioned "Cual de estos hermosos bebes es mio?" ("Which of these handsome babies is mine?"). It shows a view of newborn babies through a hospital nursery window and carries text pointing out that they look pretty much alike as babies and "discover prejudice" only as they begin to grow up.

The award was shared with the Wexton Co., which prepared the advertisement for the ILGWU. It was presented at the annual meeting of the Advertising Writers Association of New York.

Community Health Plan Filing Eased

The Labor Dept. has simplified the reporting requirements under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act for administrators of community-rated Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans.

Henceforth, each local Blue Cross or Blue Shield plan will file its own financial report annually with the department and plan administrators will be required merely to indicate in their reports that this has been done.

Before this variation in the regulations was granted, administrators of such plans were required to attach copies of Blue Cross and Blue Shield financial statements to their annual reports. In communities where the same Blue Cross and Blue Shield organizations served many separate community-rated plans, this resulted in duplicate filings by the hundreds, the Labor Dept. reported.

The balance of the reporting requirements for each plan is unchanged, and the variation does not affect group plans for which separate experience ratings are used.

Work to be Done

THE 19 MEN who met secretly in a locomotive grease pit in Atlanta, Ga., in 1888 to form the Intl. Association of Machinists were courageous, albeit desperate men. They faced a live and efficient blacklist, the yellow dog contract and the bitter-end union-smashing philosophy of "captains of industry."

These were the times, as IAM Pres. Al Hayes noted in marking the union's 75th anniversary, when workers interpreted in bitterness and anger their "rights" to be to "live in poverty and insecurity, the right to send children into the mills, mines and factories instead of into the schools; the right to be maimed or killed in an unsafe or unsanitary work place; and the right to be thrown on the industrial scrapheap without concern when sickness, injury or advanced age reduced a worker's efficiency."

In 1963 the IAM is an effective, strong, democratic and responsible union, worthy of the tributes paid it on its diamond jubilee. But while unions have made tremendous strides in assuring the worker a fair share of the wealth he produces by creating a form of industrial democracy, there are still segments of business and industry that fight trade unionism as bitterly and violently as did their predecessors in the 1880s.

Labor's work is never finished. The IAM's 75th anniversary celebration, with its looking backward to the union's origins, focuses attention on these unfinished tasks. Until all men and women who work are free from an employer's threats and coercion, free in fact to join a union and bargain collectively, the labor movement will not rest.

An Emerging Crisis

THE AMERICAN ECONOMY is heading for new woes if the present trend lines on profits and unemployment hold up as expected for the rest of the year.

The record-shattering profit rate in the last quarter of 1962, the sharp increase in the first three months of 1963 and expectations of as high or even a higher rate in the second quarter have effectively snuffed out the "profit squeeze" lament.

While profits are zooming to new records and the economy as a whole is showing a slight improvement as reflected in the gross national product, unemployment remains persistently high and stuck on dead center. The April jobless rate inched up slightly to 5.7 percent, which translates to 57 out of every 1,000 persons looking for jobs last month and not finding them.

The serious implications of an economy showing a rise in production and sales, a record-high profit rate and an unchanging unemployment rate is further complicated by a new rise in spending for plant and equipment stemming from tax credit legislation and the stepped-up depreciation rate and a continuing influx of youngsters into the labor force.

These are the symptoms of a growing imbalance in the economy, the kind of imbalance that triggered recessions in 1958 and 1960.

This condition will be further aggravated, if the economy moves into high-volume operations in the rest of 1963, by a skyrocketing cash flow to corporations, the combination of after-tax profits and depreciation allowances that showed a 12 percent increase in 1962 over the preceding year.

Unemployment will yield slightly, if at all, to the stimulus of a new round of investment in capital expenditures. The critical areas are increased purchasing power, job-creating programs and concentrated attention to long-term, chronic unemployment.

If these steps are not taken, the imbalance reflected in the zooming profits and unchanging unemployment reports spell potential danger to the goal of a vigorous, growing economy.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Gervase N. Love, Eugene A. Kelly, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, May 11, 1963 No. 19

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Poor Guy, He Can't Get It Off the Ground'

At Machinists' Anniversary:

Meany Defines Four Standards On What Makes a Good Union

WHAT IS THE DEFINITION of a "good union"? What are the basic qualities involved?

I suppose there are a number of answers, depending on where the question was asked. I am quite sure that some management quarters still hold to the idea that like the good old western pioneers "the only good Indian is a dead Indian." So maybe there are some in industry who think the only good union is a dead union.

But I would like to approach it from another point of view. Is it simply a matter of longevity? Can we assume that the IAM is a good union because it has lasted for 75 years? I would say no.

I don't mean that the question of age should be brushed aside. Obviously it is one indication that a union is serving a useful purpose, but it is not decisive. All established institutions—including unions—tend to be self-perpetuating. So, age is not an adequate test.

Now, there is a question of size. Size is clearly not a way to measure quality. There are good unions in the AFL-CIO which are not as large as the Machinists union. And I can think of one union offhand that is much larger but which I don't happen to think is a good union.

Then there is the question of power, the power to win economic battles, the power to sustain strikes until they are won. A good union needs necessarily to be a strong union, no question about that. But, here again, power alone is not enough. There are strong unions which are not good unions. When we talk about union power we must always ask, "power for what?" And this in itself makes it clear that strength, even though it is necessary, does not necessarily result in a good union.

What about the exercise of power? What about strikes?

The newspaper editorial writers would have us believe that a good union never gets involved in a strike. It is true that some good unions have long records of industrial peace. And, of course, this is commendable—as long as the interests of the members have been protected and advanced during the periods of industrial peace. But that is possible only when employers, too, sincerely want a fair agreement, not one that will give workers less than they properly should receive.

Some good unions have a great many strikes. They are found in those industries where management as a whole has never become reconciled to collective bargaining; where its aim is not only to force the hardest economic bargain, but to hamper in every possible way the effective functioning of the union itself.

The strike record of a union is not a good measuring rod. And neither is the opinion of the newspapers a good measuring rod.

NOW, HAVING RULED OUT these factors, let us take a look at the positive side. Let us consider what qualities need to be present for a union to deserve the title of a good union.

First and foremost, a good union must be able to protect its members and win a reasonable measure of economic justice for them. That is what those few courageous machinists were thinking about 75 years ago; it is what we all need to continue to think about today.

Second, a good union must be run by the members and for the members. It must be a representative democracy of the highest type. Yes, there must be leaders—strong leaders, able and willing to stand firm for what they believe is right, and to fight for it against what might appear at times to be a popular position. But they must always be subject to the support or the rejection of the general membership of the union.

Third, a good union must be an honest union. I am not only referring to finances; just being "money honest" is not enough. The integrity of a good union is all-inclusive. It extends to its relationships with employers; to what it says to its own members; to the very formulation of its policies and to a sober evaluation of its own performances.

Fourth and last, but by no means least, a union must look beyond its own horizons. It must recognize and fulfill its proper role in the life of the nation and the community in which it lives. A good union is concerned with politics and with legislation at every level. It lends its support to community projects and to community services, such as the United Fund and the Red Cross. It is dedicated to the proposition that the ultimate objective of a union, in improving the lot of its members, is to improve and strengthen the nation as a whole.

The Intl. Association of Machinists meets every test that I have set forth.

They do a good job for their members on wages and other economic matters.

They are an outstanding example of representative democracy in action.

Their integrity, by any definition whatsoever, is unchallenged.

Their civic spirit—no matter where you measure it, or in what context—is unsurpassed.

Morgan Says:

Unions, With All Their Faults, Are An Asset to Nation's Society

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., DST.)

SOME PEOPLE may complainingly catalog the following essay as a commercial for the sponsor of this program and in a sense that may be so but the material comes from, of all places, that aristocrat of industrial publications, Fortune Magazine. Fortune's May issue contains an article entitled "Labor Unions Are Worth the Price" by Max Ways which is worth calling to the public's attention.

Morgan

Labor has just received kind words from another source. Speaking at the 75th anniversary dinner of the Intl. Association of Machinists, Pres. Kennedy—as if to encourage more union support for his program—noted pointedly how hard it was to pass such "progressive" legislation as aid to education, mass transit and assistance for jobless young people. Then he said, "a free, active, progressive labor movement stands for a free, active, progressive country . . . "

Making allowances for a little political propaganda to a sympathetic group of voters, fair-minded readers of the Fortune piece would have a hard time brushing aside the core of the President's statement, despite the recent rise of anti-union sentiment and the concomitant public clamor that "strikes must go."

Indeed the theme of Author Ways' article is that unions, with all their many faults, are an asset to the American society. But, he adds, unless the public understands them better for what they are—namely a complex and sensitively human part of the complex American market system—it may insist on drawing government more deeply into the settlement of labor-management disputes to the detriment of the market and of society as a whole.

Interestingly enough, the Fortune report blames "liberal intellectuals" for much of the damage to the "image" of organized labor. "The same group (of liberals)," it says, "that 10 years ago gave labor leaders too much credit for the improved lot of the American worker now heaps on labor leaders too much blame for the discords of American life. Unions are said to belong to the past while government is seen as the main hope of the future in labor situations, as in so many other fields."

But this reasoning, the article warns, would soon bring the situation to a point where "no real bargaining occurs anywhere because one side or the other thinks it will get a better break in Washington than in a test of bargaining strength."

Ways observes that unions, on the whole, have not dived into featherbedding for the fun of it. "The vast majority of American labor leaders say—and honestly believe—," he writes, "that technological advance (including automation) should move faster" but their great dilemma is "how to speed progress and at the same time cushion the painful impact of change . . . "

THE ARTICLE praises and quotes a new book, "The Economics of Trade Unions" by Albert Rees of the University of Chicago. While it is sharply critical of some union policies and practices, the book declares that "by giving workers protection against arbitrary treatment by employers, by acting as their representative in politics, and by reinforcing their hope of continuous future gain, unions have helped to assure that the basic values of our society are widely diffused and that our disagreements on political and economic issues take place within a broad framework of agreement."

With so much emphasis on "big unions," one might conclude, if he listened only to the arguments of labor baiters, that "management is gradually being pushed into a corner where it has less and less control of the enterprises for which it is legally responsible." But, Fortune cautions, "anybody who observes the American business scene knows that picture to be false; management has, in fact, a greater degree of control than it had 50 years ago, and its control increases

"When they encroach upon the right to manage, American unions are not trying to take over enterprises (as dominant European unions tied to Socialist or Communist philosophy might try); they are trying to restrict or cushion change or to give the workers a sense that some power over the job is in their hands."

This can create a messy picture of collective bargaining and it is messy because unions "must be deeply involved in that most untidy, shifting, and relative of all human institutions, the market . . . "

In a kind of illuminating footnote with accent on the positive, Machinists Pres. Al J. Hayes said that about 98 percent of all U.S. labor-management contracts are made without any strikes.

Washington Reports:

'Staggering Losses' Predicted If Transportation Aid Bill Fails

URGING THE HOUSE to follow the lead of the Senate and pass the Mass Transit bill, Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. (D-N.J.) asserted, "We desperately need this opportunity to improve mass transportation facilities in the urban areas."

"If we don't (get this bill passed in the House), believe me, the losses—human and monetary—can be staggering in the next 10 or 20 years."

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), minority whip, said he expected House approval if the Rules Committee gives the "members an opportunity to vote on this legislation." Williams and Kuchel were interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on nearly 700 radio stations.

Williams said that the bill proposes to deal with the "increasingly critical" transportation problem in urban areas.

"We have tried to meet this need exclusively from the fare box, but it can't carry the load of improving the systems, modernizing them and extending them," he added. "We must have a public contribution. That is what this grant and loan program is designed to do."

The senator said loans will be made where possible, and grants, on a matching basis, where necessary, with the money going to the local governing bodies and through them to the carriers.

Kuchel told of the growth of people and cars in the Los Angeles area, one of the major problem communities.

"Half a century ago," he reported, "235,000 people lived in the Los Angeles area. In 1960, there were 7.5 million people and by the year 2000, it is estimated there will be 17.5 million people in the Greater Los Angeles area.

"In 1920, in the Greater Los Angeles area, there were 224,000 motor vehicles. In 1960, this had increased in 3.8 million automobiles and trucks, and in the year 2000, the estimate is for almost 10 million cars and trucks."

THE SITUATION is similar in the San Francisco area where 146,000 motor vehicles have grown to 2 million, he said.

Kuchel noted that San Francisco recently voted a $792 million bond issue to undertake its own mass transportation development in a five-county district, and is hoping for federal assistance under the bill to implement the program.

Williams said the problem is considerable in all parts of the county since 80 percent of the people now live on 2 percent of the land.

He reported that an amendment included in the Senate bill would protect collective bargaining and union positions in case of the sale of a private company. He declared that the annual national loss because of traffic congestion is $6 to $8 billion.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

NOT MANY AMERICANS have recently contributed more lucidly to an informed public opinion than Sen. Kuchel of California, who made the Senate chamber a great forum once again with his full-scale exposure of the merchants of "hate and venom, slander and abuse," who operate the "self-styled 'I-am-a-better-American-than-you' organizations."

Sen. Kuchel has good qualifications for opening up an attack on the extremist right-wing "fright" groups, which he terms correctly to be "not as dread or foreboding" as a Communist menace to freedom "but equally offensive and evil" to the rational and the reasonable.

He met the right-wing zealots head-on just last year in his campaign for re-election. Where other Republican candidates in his state temporized with the John Birch Society spouters, Kuchel stood up and denounced them. He made it perfectly clear that he was seeking a return to the Senate on the basis of his own moderate, decent and rational record—and that he rejected the counsels of the lie-mongers and right-wing agitators seeking to take over his party in the state.

He was re-elected by 700,000 votes while former Vice Pres. Nixon was losing by 300,000 to the Democratic governor, Edmund G. Brown. It was a vote of confidence from his people that was a credit to them as well as him.

Now Kuchel has done us the further service of speaking up to warn the whole nation of the incredible flood of evil gossip and fantastic untruths circulated by those "in the ranks or the clutches" of a handful of right-wing zealots who profess "to see our government crawling with Communists" and who stir up the ignorant to believe nightmares of plots and conspiracies to sell out the country.

* * *

"FRIGHT MAIL" is what Kuchel calls the hundreds of letters pouring into his office each week saying that "thousands of Chinese Communist troops are poised on the Mexican border for an attack on California," that a U.S. military training exercise in Georgia—Operation Water Moccasin—is a conspiratorial United Nations exercise to "take over" our armed forces, that an Arms Control Act is another conspiracy in sedition.

The writers of the "fright letters" have been persuaded that "there are African Negro troops, who are cannables, stationed in Georgia"; that there are "UN plans to place Mongolian and Congolese troops over our dear United States"; that there are "16,000 African troops, already in Georgia, with rings in their noses and ears" and "this time the UN and our State Dept. have gone too far."

And who are the fright merchants who stir up poor sick minds to believe this nonsense? Some ascribe their convictions to the Rev. Theodore Jackman, who makes speeches for the John Birch Society, whose founder invented the theory that former Pres. Eisenhower was a "mere stooge" or "a Communist assigned to the specific job of being a political front man," and that former Sec. of State John Foster Dulles was a "Communist agent."

* * *

THE "CURIOUS FACT," said Kuchel on the Senate floor, "is that the fright peddlers, from the simple simpletons to the wretched racists," profess to be conservatives but "they defile the honorable philosophy of conservatism as thoroughly as the Communists defile the honorable philosophy of liberalism."

"I have nothing but seething contempt for the originators of the hoaxes and swindles," for "they are doing a devil's work far better than the Communists could do" by spreading fear, spreading suspicions, spreading senseless tales of subversion and treason, the senator continued.

Kuchel invited both Democrats and Republicans to join in an effort to reclaim the victims of the swindlers, to reclaim the "pro-Americans devoted to defending our nation against defilement of both the extreme left and extreme right."

A brave, honorable speech and a public service.

TRAFFIC CONGESTION is costing the country $6 to $8 billion a year, Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), left, asserted as he and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) urged the House to pass the Mass Transit bill and help urban areas solve the problem. They called for passage of the measure, which has been approved by the Senate, in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Low-Cost Vacations Possible With Help of Unions and Co-ops

By Sidney Margolius

ONLY 23 YEARS AGO about one-fourth of all workers got paid vacations, in most cases one week. Today almost all plant and office workers get paid vacations, the majority for two weeks. Over a third of the contracts recently surveyed by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics now provide three weeks after 10 years, and the majority provide the three weeks after 15 years.

You can make your vacation this year a memorable, meaningful one without excessive cost if you take advantage of developing community facilities.

At a pioneering conference of the AFL-CIO Community Services committee recently, public-opinion pollster George Gallup reported that seven out of 10 adults tell his researchers they watch TV westerns regularly, but only one person in eight took an adult education course last year, and just one in three read a book all the way through. But as Leo Perlis, AFL-CIO Community Services director, pointed out, free time used constructively can be a wonderful opportunity for a family to enrich both itself and its community.

Both labor unions and consumer co-ops increasingly are developing vacation facilities, institutes and group travel arrangements for their members. Here are suggestions and guides for purposeful vacations often at less expense than visiting commercial resorts and amusement parks:

Summer institutes: Various summer institutes sponsored by unions and co-ops provide an opportunity to broaden your educational backgrounds, and increase your effectiveness in union and co-op work. These often are held at college compuses or in such famous and beautiful vacation areas as Estes Park in the Rocky Mountains; Camp Sierra at Shaver Lake, Calif.; the Finger Lakes in New York State, and the lake areas of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Your local union and co-op can tell you about those available in your area. The institutes provide time for both classes and recreation, and usually have activities for children as well as parents.

Summer courses: Another vacation combining education with recreation is summer courses available at many colleges. For some you have to enroll formally, but others let you attend individual courses as you wish, for moderate fees. Among the courses available are arts and crafts, public affairs, family and child development, and physical education courses such as swimming, gym, tennis, golf, and folk dancing.

Family camping: Camping vacations are the most economical, since they reduce the cost of food and lodging which typically are half the expense of a vacation.

State park commissions at the various state capitals can give you information on parks and camping facilities. For information on facilities in national parks and forests, write to Forest Service, U. S. Agriculture Dept., and to National Park Service, U. S. Interior Dept., both at Washington 25, D. C.

To keep down expenses, choose parks within a day's travel. Car touring expenses are not cheap. Even for two people, the AAA estimates that it costs $31 for vacation travel by car, on the basis of 300 miles a day. This includes about $10.50 for meals, $11 for lodging, $7 for gas and oil and $2.50 for miscellaneous.

Non-discrimination guide: One of the most useful guides for many working people is "Travelguide," a comprehensive directory which lists thousands of hotel and motel facilities all over the country. Not only does the guide give details on costs of accommodations, but also data on local points of interest and distances, and indicates those establishments which do not discriminate because of color, creed or national origin.

The directory was developed by William H. Butler, a well-known musician, and has been used for many years by labor people and others from all ethnic groups who prefer to patronize only establishments having no restrictions. It is available for $2 from Travelguide, Inc., Box 4252, Grand Central Station, New York, N. Y.

Farm vacations: You'll find an increasing number of farms offering recreation and vacation facilities this summer.

The 1963 Vacation Directory of Farms & Ranches is available for 50 cents (or 65 cents if you want it sent first-class), from Farm Vacations and Holidays, Inc., 36 East 57th Street, New York 22, N. Y. It lists 200 farms in 39 states and three Canadian provinces whose owners take paying guests, with descriptions of the facilities.

You also can get lists of farms providing vacation facilities from state departments of commerce at state capitals.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

WELCOME TO THE BOARD was given Pres. William J. Hall (left) of the Photo Engravers and Pres. Hunter P. Wharton (center) of the Operating Engineers by Pres. Edmund P. Tobin of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. following their election as directors of the firm at the annual meeting in Baltimore.

Revealed by BBB Survey:

'Underselling' Claims Reported Increasing

A RECENT SURVEY of Better Business Bureaus in more than 70 major market areas has revealed an increase in the use of underselling and similar advertising claims which cannot be substantiated.

Claims include such phrases as "we will not be undersold," "why pay more?" "lowest prices," "you pay no more," "we sell for less," "we will not knowingly be undersold," "we guarantee to have the lowest prices," "unchallenged prices," and many others.

The survey was conducted by the organization's "bait and comparative price advertising" committee, headed by Dan M. Berry, Jr., general manager of the Greater Nashville Better Business Bureau.

Berry said that the increase in the use of underselling claims can be traced back to issuance of the Federal Trade Commission's "Guides on Price Advertising," promulgated in October 1958. These guides, he said, have had a salutary effect in improving the advertising of comparative prices and the use of manufacturer's list prices to designate comparatives. But they opened the door to this new set of abuses.

"For more than 30 years advertisers generally have been aware of the fact that they cannot have a monopoly on values," Berry commented. "Further, in a free economy such as ours, price fluctuations are constant and widespread which makes it well-nigh impossible for any advertiser to be certain that he has the lowest prices and is underselling or meeting all prices of every outlet in his trading area."

The survey showed that while questionable comparative prices are "still with us," they do not appear to be on the increase. Manufacturers' list prices, on the other hand, are "definitely fading away."

Furniture, drug, apparel, appliance and auto advertisers were singled out as the greatest abusers of unsupported underselling claims.

While so-called discount stores frequently rely more on such claims than other stores, branches of leading national retail stores are not without criticism in some cities.

The BBB committee called on all advertisers to use only statements which can be fully proven and which do not reflect against competition. It said BBBs will intensify their efforts to meet this growing problem through education and by exposure of abuses.

From Soup to Nonsense:

There Are Days, Even Nights When Slings, Arrows Pile Up

By Jane Goodsell

THAT'S LIFE FOR YOU: When you want to get a letter off in a hurry, you can't find a stamp.

When you buy a whole roll of four-cent stamps so you'll have them on hand, they raise the postage to five cents.

When you figure that the dinner party you've been invited to is a small, informal little get-together, and your long-sleeved red wool is just the thing for the occasion, everybody else is dressed in slinky black.

When you wear your bare-backed black sheath because it's Saturday night and you were invited three weeks in advance, so it must be a gala affair, every other woman present is wearing a casual little shirtwaist dress.

When you rush through dinner and leave the dishes sitting on the table in order to get to the play by 8:30, the curtain doesn't go up until 9:05.

When you figure that plays never start on time so you might as well stack and rinse the dinner dishes, the curtain rises promptly at 8:30 and, by the time you arrive, the first act is half over and you never get the characters straight.

WHEN YOU DASH upstairs from the basement to answer the telephone, it turns out to be somebody who wants to nominate you for chairman of the club Ways & Means Committee.

When you decide not to bother running upstairs to answer the phone because it's sure to be somebody you don't want to talk to, you find out two days later that it was someone who wanted to give you a couple of tickets to the hockey game that night.

When you've spent the whole day cooking your husband's favorite dinner — goulash and deepdish apple pie—he staggers into the house complaining of a headache and moaning that he must be coming down with the flu.

When he comes home, sniffing the air eagerly and shouting that he's hungry as a bear, you're warming up last night's tuna fish casserole.

When you're feeling wide-awake, alert and bouncing with energy, it's time to go to bed.

When you feel sluggish, confused and faint from exhaustion, it's time to get up and face the day.

"How many trading stamps did you say it took?"

On CLC Anniversary:

Canada Union Membership 'Holding Up Well'—Jodoin

Ottawa, Ont.—Union membership in Canada has been "holding up well" in spite of heavy unemployment and major changes in industry, Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress said in an article in Canadian Labor, official publication of the organization.

Jodoin undertook an appraisal on the seventh anniversary of the founding of the CLC by merger of the former Canadian Congress of Labor and the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress in 1956.

"We have done well since the founding of our congress," he observed. "Despite heavy unemployment and tremendous shifts in job opportunities our membership has held up splendidly. Reports of a slipping trade union membership have been greatly exaggerated. The downward trends that have appeared have been extremely slight—far less than those experienced in some other periods of labor history.

"There seems to be reason for hope that even these minor adjustments are nearing their end."

Jodoin chided "those who have found comfort" in lowered union membership and who "also have been forecasting the end of production workers." It is true, he conceded, that white collar job opportunities have been growing more rapidly, "but anyone who thinks that the 'blue collar' people are going to disappear from the scene is sadly mistaken."

'Going to Be There'

"There are hundreds of thousands of production workers on the job in plants across Canada every day of the week," he added, "and they are going to be there for a long time."

He also took issue with those who claim white collar workers show "great reluctance" to join unions, pointing out that "a great many" have already joined and that "the number is growing."

"There is growing recognition in their ranks," he maintained, "that despite differences in the shade of collar there is little or no difference in the fundamental problems of all workers and employes. This and other factors lead us to believe that we may be approaching important developments in this field."

Disputes Being Studied

Jodoin also disclosed that the CLC Executive Council is considering an improved method of handling jurisdictional disputes.

"None of us expected that with the merging into one congress these problems would automatically disappear," he said. "Since the merger we have had a great deal of success in settling differences between affiliated organizations in an amicable and reasonable way . . .

"Nevertheless, the rare occasions on which serious difficulty has been encountered are naturally of great concern to us. This matter has been given top priority by the Executive Council."

Jodoin said it is vital to the entire labor movement "that we concentrate on the great responsibilities which we face rather than spend our time and strength on less vital differences."

"We are now firmly established as one congress," he added. "The lines that once separated us into two groups have rapidly disappeared. Together we must move forward to an even greater contribution to our membership, to our country, and to the cause of bread, peace and freedom for all."

HONORARY DEGREE of doctor of laws was conferred on AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by the University of Massachusetts at its Centennial Charter Day ceremonies. Shown with Meany in the robing room prior to the start of the convocation are Massachusetts Gov. Endicott Peabody, left, and John E. Powers, president of the state senate.

Peace Corps Seeking Trade Unionists' Skills

The skills and experience of America's senior citizens are urgently needed by Peace Corps missions to countries in many parts of the world, Jules Pagano, director of the corps' Professional, Technical & Labor Div., has reminded retired union members and those approaching retirement.

More than 125 volunteers in the 51-75 years age group who "were reluctant to see their experience and training wasted" are now serving overseas with the Peace Corps, he said.

"For the retiring union member," he added, "the Peace Corps offers the opportunity to continue a career."

Among the skills needed, Pagano said, are those of the plumber, sanitarian, tailor, veterinarian, well-driller, carpenter, machinist, mason, auto mechanic, roadbuilder, building trades instructor, electrical worker, welder, vocational teacher and bricklayer.

To qualify for the Peace Corps a person must be an American citizen over 18, in good mental and physical health, and have a desire to serve. Volunteers serve two years, including the training period. They receive allowances to cover food, clothing, housing, travel, medical care and incidentals, and are expected to live within them. At the end of service they received $75 for each month, or a total of $1,800.

Married couples are eligible if both can qualify and have no dependents under 18.

Pagano pointed out that in Brazil a retired machinist is working in rural development and in East Pakistan a former union member is in charge of a technical school workshop.

Kind the Corps Wants

"These are the kind of special people the Peace Corps wants, a kind that can be found in abundance among the retired personnel of the organized labor movement," he said. "They must have the physical abilities and the intelligence to meet the demands of the emerging countries, the dedication to put their capacities to work and keep them there, and the willingnes to do all this in remote mountain villages, in deserts, in jungles, in towns, factories and schools.

"They must know the social and political institutions of the U.S. and be able to answer questions intelligently. They must have the leadership qualities developed by the labor movement and the ability to work with groups under stress."

Questions may be addressed to Pagano at the Professional, Technical & Labor Div., Office of Public Affairs, Peace Corps, Washington 25, D. C.

LEGISLATIVE CONFERENCE of AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries hears Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) discuss his truth-in-lending bill. Another major speaker was Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, who spoke on the pending bill on equal pay for women. Shown on platform, left to right are Mrs. Beatrice Weiland, president of the auxiliaries; Mrs. Marcella Beatty, executive director; Mrs. Elda Luebbert, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Winnie Christmas, legislative chairman.

Work Rules Decision Narrows FEC Dispute

A federal court order has narrowed the strike on the Florida East Coast Railway to the original controversy which led to a walkout by non-operating unions last Jan. 23—the railroad's refusal to match the 10.28 cents an hour raise agreed to by all other major railroads last year.

Operating unions, which had joined the strike last month when the railroad suddenly announced unilateral work rules changes, called off their strike when the railroad withdrew its announcement in compliance with a court order. They continued to observe the non-operating unions' picket lines, however, as they have since the start of the walkout.

Direct negotiations between the company and the non-op unions were scheduled to be resumed in Jacksonville May 10—for the first time in nearly two months. The meeting was scheduled after an exchange of letters between FEC Board Chairman Edward Ball and J. H. Hadley, the unions' strike chairman.

U.S. District Court Judge Luther Youngdahl in Washington, D.C., granted a Justice Dept. request for an injunction prohibiting the work rules changes on the ground that the issue is part of the national work rules dispute which is before a presidential emergency board.

Meanwhile, in New York, the national work rules dispute simmered closer to the deadline for the emergency board to make its report to the President, with no sign of a break in the long deadlock.

One member, Pres. Clark Kerr of the University of California, told newsmen the board would seek an extension of time only if it appeared that there was progress towards settlement. He added:

"You really don't know until the hour of midnight—or close to it—where you really do stand."

After the board reports, both sides must maintain the status quo during an additional 30 days of negotiations.

Commenting on the work rules dispute, Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen told a BLFE state meeting in Colorado:

"Strip the 'featherbedding' propaganda from the railroad work rules dispute and you will find the real issue to be the destruction of more than 85,000 necessary jobs.

"If management is given unilateral control of job assignments, which are now subject to collective bargaining, the result would be the greatest single job destruction program ever experienced by the American economy."

Labor's Hospital Views Circulated

An AFL-CIO Executive Council policy statement on hospitals stressing strong opposition to discrimination or segregation against patients and physicians is being distributed by the federation's Community Service Activities.

The statement recommends that the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals include non-discrimination against patients or physicians in its requirements and that the Hill-Burton Act be amended to bar federal grants to institutions which discriminate because of race or color.

The council statement, adopted in February, also urges local unions to adopt a unified policy on hospital care and to follow through on this policy in dealing with hospitals, doctors, Blue Cross and hospital insurance firms.

1,000 Projects Set Up Under Training Act

More than 1,000 projects with 38,092 trainees have been approved under the Manpower Development & Training Act since funds became available in September 1962, according to a joint announcement by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Anthony J. Celebrezze, who share administration of the legislation.

The projects as of May 1 had been approved in 49 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands at a total cost, for allowances and training, of about $47 million. The allowances vary by state but average $35 a month nationally.

In April approval was given to the highest monthly total of projects to date—184, for 7,057 trainees, the report showed.

As of the end of April, approximately 5,000 trainees had completed training courses and nearly 7 of every 10 had been placed in a job—usually one related to his training.

Two-thirds of the trainees have been men. About half were drawn from the ranks of the long-term unemployed, those out of work for 15 weeks or longer. About 20 percent had been jobless for 52 weeks or more.

SEAFARERS' DELEGATES from all parts of the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico and the Caribbean area hear AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany address the union's 11th biennial convention in Washington. Seated at Meany's right are SIU Pres. Paul Hall, and James A. Suffridge, president of the Retail Clerks, also a convention speaker.

Meany Tells Seafarers:

More U. S. Spending Needed With Tax Cut

A cut in federal income taxes must be accompanied by more federal spending, not less, if the nation is to achieve a full employment economy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in an address to the Seafarers' 11th biennial convention in Washington.

It makes no sense, Meany told the 200 delegates, to enact a $10 billion tax cut to create "X number of jobs," only to turn around and destroy an equal number of jobs by trimming $10 billion from the federal budget.

"It is just as simple as that," he declared. "One negates the other."

To those who suggest that the nation "cannot afford" a tax cut without a corresponding reduction in spending, Meany observed that "when we get into a shooting war, we manage to afford a lot of things." and now, in the cold war, "there is no great complaint" about the billions of dollars being spent on defense and space needs for the security of the nation.

"I think we can spend billions of dollars for the things of peace," he added. "We need more hospitals in this country. We need more roads. We need better transit facilities for our major cities. We need better homes for the American peole. We need more and better schools for the children of America."

"I am sure that America can afford those things" and at the same time "give this economy a shot in the arm," he declared.

Meany was chief speaker in the opening days of the convention, which also heard among others AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge; Irving Brown, representative of the Intl. Conferation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations; Pres. Russell M. Stephens of the Technical Engineers; Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., and Under-Sec. of Commerce Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr.

Union Back in ITF

SIU Pres. Paul Hall informed the delegates that the Intl. Transportworkers Federation had just withdrawn its suspension of the SIU and that the union had therefore resumed its membership in the international trade secretariat.

The ITF action followed a meeting in Washington Apr. 27 between Hall, SIU Executive Vice Presidents Morris Weisberger and Calton Tanner and Gen. Sec. Peter De Vries of the ITF. It resolves a dispute between the two organizations that began in 1961 over differences between the SIU of Canada and the British National Union of Seamen.

The convention shortly thereafter adopted a resolution, submitted before the ITF action became known, pledging the union's cooperation with the federation.

Other actions included resolutions condemning proposed legislation to impose compulsory arbitration on the maritime industry, pledging support of the ICFTU and the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., urging federal action to promote maximum development of the American-flag merchant fleet, and calling on federal agencies to ship government cargoes on American-flag vessels.

Expressing support for the campaign of the SIU and other maritime unions for a stronger U.S. merchant fleet, Meany declared that the task was to "impress on the Congress and on all the American people that what the maritime industry needs is not repressive legislation, but encouragement and support to build up the industry."

The labor movement, he went on, has much to do, "but I think we're in good shape to do it."

"We want a better America," he declared. "We want a better share of the wealth that is produced under this system. We want it in wages. We want it in conditions. In other words, we want the things that American workers have wanted from the very inception of the trade union movement."

Benefits for All

He observed, however, that as labor moves toward these objectives, "society as a whole benefits, not just union members."

Reviewing the accomplishments of labor over the years, he noted that the free public school system and such legislative gains as workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, shorter hours, industrial safety standards and child labor protection "are not on the statute books because the industrial giants of the 19th Century decided that these things were good for America."

"You got them because labor fought for them and because they were right," he declared.

The National Association of Manufacturers, Meany observed, has opposed "from 1900 right up to the present moment, every single thing that happened in this country that was for the good of the people."

"It seems that they are trying to keep that 100 percent record intact," he said.

Thus, he continued, "we've got to lead the fight for the things that are important on the job, in the home and in the schools, for if we don't, who will?"

Rules Fight, Mergers Mar BLE Centennial

Detroit, Mich.—Railroad mergers and the work rules dispute threaten jobs of half of the nation's 700,000 railroad employes, marring what should be a happy occasion, 1,000 delegates and visitors celebrating the centennial of the Locomotive Engineers were told by Roy E. Davidson, grand chief engineer.

"The year of its centennial celebration finds the Brotherhood engaged in a long and bitter dispute with the railroads over work rules," he stated at the official welcome in Cobo Hall here.

"Our pleasure in this happy occasion could easily prompt me to say the hardships of the past all have been eliminated—but the hard truth is that the Brotherhood has never faced so many difficult problems.

"An emergency board, meeting right now in New York City, is wrestling with the monumental work rules dispute. We were told by the board and the Administration that a railroad strike would not be tolerated.

"That put terrific pressure on us. That wasn't conducive to genuine collective bargaining.

"Besides the work rules dispute, which threatens things we have been a century seeking, there is a wave of monopolistic corporate merger proposals which could reduce jobs from the present 700,000 to 300,000."

The 65,000-member union, composed of 41,000 workers and 24,000 retirees, is the country's oldest rail labor organization. It is in the midst of a 60-day cooling-off period during which union and company representatives are meeting with the board named by Pres. Kennedy to study the work rules dispute.

The BLE is one of five operating brotherhoods which last March sought an injunction barring the railroads from effecting "unnegotiated" rule changes. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that both parties were free to engage in "self-help."

Railroads announced the changes would go into effect Apr. 4 but Kennedy, in an effort to forestall a national rail strike, appointed the emergency board to study the dispute. The board's report was scheduled for May 11. Negotiations might extend to June 11, end of the cooling-off period.

Much of the convention time was set aside for entertainment, tours of the city, and a trip to Marshall, 106 miles west of Detroit, where locomotive engineers first met in March and April of 1863 to discuss organizing. Organization took place in Detroit, however. Div. 1 of the Brotherhood of the Footboard, as the BLE was first known, was organized May 8, 1863 at the old Firemen's Hall, a site now part of Detroit's Civic Center where Cobo Hall is located.

Free Cuba Group Joined By Unionists

A new nonpartisan Citizens Committee for a Free Cuba has been established with headquarters in Washington and a number of labor officials as members.

In the first issue of a newsletter, the committee warned of "growing Castro-Communist infiltration" in Latin America which it said could demoralize democratic forces, "who are beginning to feel overwhelmed before the combined power of the Cuban military-police state, the Soviet Union and Red China."

The newsletter also described a training camp in Cuba's Pinar del Rio province for pro-Castro guerrillas from Mexico, Puerto Rico and other Latin American countries; the use of children 12 to 15 years old in elite Cuban army units commanded by Joel Iglesias, and a Cuban sugar production crisis caused in part by sabotage.

Union officials on the membership roster include Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Seafarers Pres. Paul Hall, Upholsterers Pres. Sal B. Hoffman, Sleeping Car Porters Vice Pres. Benjamin F. McLaurin; Irving Brown, United Nations representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and Jay Lovestone, AFL-CIO director of international publications.

NEW secretary-treasurer of Hotel & Restaurant Employes is Robert L. Diefenbach, who took office May 1 on the retirement of Jack Weinberger. Diefenbach, 53, has been assistant to Pres. Ed S. Miller for the past seven years.

Defense Education Aid Expansion Is Urged

Expansion of the National Defense Education Act to provide more federal assistance to both schools and students has been urged by the AFL-CIO.

The federation told a House Education & Labor subcommittee that the NDEA program, since its adoption in 1958, has helped "hundreds of thousands of young Americans" to receive "better teaching, better counseling and better opportunities for higher education."

The program's achievements "merit its extension and enlargement," AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair declared. Lawrence Rogin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, joined in the testimony.

The subcommittee had before it what its chairman, Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), termed a "working bill," a pared-down version of proposals made by Pres. Kennedy in his omnibus aid to education bill.

Fair told the subcommittee the AFL-CIO was "shocked" to find that the existing provision for "forgiveness" of up to half of loans made to students who teach in public schools after graduation had been dropped.

He strongly endorsed the Administration proposal which would continue the forgiveness provision and extend it to include students who taught in non-profit private schools and both public and private colleges.

Another new Administration proposal, which the AFL-CIO urged the subcommittee to include in its bill, is modeled after the New Deal's National Youth Administration program.

The federal government would pay half the salary for students employed part-time by colleges on work of "an educational character."

Kennedy proposed the program as an aid to "needy college students unable to carry too heavy a loan burden."

The AFL-CIO asked that the amount authorized under the Administration program, which would permit assistance to only about 1 percent of college students, be at least doubled.

Mental Health Campaign Given Backing by Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called on members of the organized labor movement to support the fund-raising drive of the National Association for Mental Health, under way during May with the slogan "Save the Lost Children."

Expressing the hope that new research will achieve a breakthrough soon, Meany said the plight of many mentally ill children has gone unrecognized and that many forms of childhood mental illness remain "practically unaffected" by even the best of modern treatments.

At least one person in every 10 has some form of illness that needs psychiatric treatment and at least 50 percent of American hospital beds are filled by mentally ill persons.

Meany pointed out that the labor movement is aware of the plight of the mentally ill and realizes also that many adult victims have received treatment enabling them to "return to their jobs, their families and their communities."

Comparable Measures:

House and Senate Groups Approve Equal Wage Bills

A labor-backed equal pay for women bill has won 24-3 approval from the House Education & Labor Committee and a companion bill won endorsement from a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Despite opposition from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and other employer groups to a federal equal pay law, the bill won considerable bipartisan support in the House committee. Its sponsors may seek to bypass the Rules Committee and speed it through the House under a suspension-of-the-rules procedure — which bars amendments, but requires a two-thirds vote for passage.

The House committee bill would make the equal pay requirement a part of the Fair Labor Standards Act. It bars employers from paying women less than men for jobs of "equal skill, effort, responsibility and which are performed under similar working conditions."

Wage differentials based on seniority, a merit system or incentive rates would not be affected.

Employers would have one year after the bill's enactment to eliminate pay inequities based on sex. In addition the House committee added a provision—not sought by labor and, in fact, opposed by the AFL-CIO—which would add another year's exemption if discriminatory rates were provided under a collective bargaining agreement. The Senate subcommittee bill does not contain this provision.

Earlier, in testimony before both the House and Senate committees, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler had emphasized labor's support of a "comprehensive and effective" equal pay bill and opposed any "exceptions."

In other congressional developments:

- The House Labor Committee voted approval of an AFL-CIO-supported bill to include the value of fringe benefits in determining prevailing wages which government contractors must pay under the Davis-Bacon Act. However, Republican members served notice that they will seek to block the bill in the House Rules Committee until legislation providing judicial review of the Labor Dept.'s wage determinations is reported favorably. A fringe benefit bill died in the Rules Committee in the last Congress.
- Faced with solid Republican opposition, House Democratic leaders postponed a scheduled vote on a temporary increase in the national debt limit so as to gain another week in which to round up votes.
- House opponents of the Mexican farm labor program, which allows big growers to contract for Mexican agricultural workers known as "braceros," planned a major floor fight against a proposed two-year extension. Labor, religious, consumer and small farmer organizations have called for an end of the program, declaring it has kept down wages of U.S. farm workers.
- The House approved—293-10—a pay raise averaging 12.6 percent for career members of the armed forces. The bill was passed with an amendment which had the effect of raising the retirement benefits of 108,000 servicemen who retired before 1958.

Health Center Medal Urged for ILGWU

Authorization of a special medal to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the country's first union health center, established in New York by the Ladies' Garment Workers, has been urged on Congress in bills introduced by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.-N. Y.).

The ILGWU and its affiliates now operate 13 health centers and other unions run hundreds of others. Humphrey credited the leadership of ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky for helping this development.

Strong Labor Support Given Job Equality Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

though relatively few in number, have been a painful embarrassment to the rest of us—are crumbling at last." The AFL-CIO's "own internal machinery for insuring adherence to the federation's anti-discrimination policy has been enlarged and strengthened," he declared.

Harris noted, however, that "contrary to popular impression, very few unions have any effective voice in hiring policies, even in apprenticeship."

While "persuasion is far preferable to prosecution where human relationships are involved, there needs to be the ever-present possibility of effective enforcement in order to make persuasion more persuasive," he declared.

Earlier the subcommittee heard Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers declare that in the absence of federal legislation, "more remains undone than has been done" to eradicate bias in employment.

'Bridle on Immorality'

Carey, who testified also as secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., said a fair employment law would be "protection" for leaders of organizations seeking to change discriminatory practices and "a bridle on the immorality" of "those who are apathetic in the face of injustice or who actively promote discrimination."

Harris proposed several strengthening amendments to the Roosevelt bill, but emphasized that labor considers it "a good bill" which is "clearly intended to do the job and to do it effectively."

He told the subcommittee:

"To say that we strongly support this bill would be a gross understatement. We have been fighting for these principles for many years.

"It is argued, we know, that discrimination springs from prejudice—from bigotry—and that legislation cannot cure it.

"We will agree that legislation cannot cure prejudice. But legislation can prevent at least a part of the fruits of prejudice from coming into harvest. Legislation is the way—the only sure way we know—to limit the degree to which people can act on their prejudices.

"It can eliminate discrimination. "It is the practical approach. If we waited for the prejudices themselves to vanish, the wait would be infinitely, intolerably longer.

"It seems to us that the time for waiting is long past."

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL Foundation trustees look on as Pres. Kennedy signs legislation granting a federal charter to the organization. Members of the board include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, David Dubinsky and Joseph D. Keenan.

LABOR'S RECORD for honesty and dedication compares favorably with that of any other group, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler tells Coopers Union convention delegates. Also pictured at Washington meeting are: CIU Pres. James J. Doyle, seated left, and Wilson Morrison of Louisville, chairman of convention's constitution committee.

35-Hour-Week Goal Adopted by Coopers

The Coopers will seek in all future contracts to win a 35-hour workweek and severance pay for barrelmakers who face the loss of their jobs due to technological changes.

Meeting in their 36th biennial convention in Washington, D. C., delegates from one of the nation's oldest trade unions approved those recommendations and also agreed to join with employers in encouraging the use of new charred oak containers for whiskey to spread work opportunities in the trade.

The convention, which ratified a statement by the Bourbon Institute to "foster a wider appreciation of the fine, smooth, soft qualities of United States bourbon," also:

- Returned Pres. & Sec.-Treas. James J. Doyle to office for his 18th term, and chose four new vice presidents—Ernest D. Higdon, Louisville, Ky.; Robert Shaw, Memphis; Howard Rollins, Baltimore; and George Calvert, Peoria, Ill.
- Increased strike benefits from $10 to $20.
- Authorized an assessment of $1 a week per member when the defense fund falls below $30,000.
- Raised minimum dues from $2 a month to $3.
- Agreed to count service in the industry prior to the Prohibition years as part of the 40 years of continuous service required for honorary members, who need not pay dues.
- Chose Cincinnati as the 1965 convention site.

Doyle, who has been a cooper for 64 years, noted his 79th birthday during convention week. He shares the birth date with former Pres. Harry Truman.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler urged members to join in fighting for the goals of the modern labor movement—aid for students who need education, federal planning for mass transit problems, equal pay for equal work by women, measures to combat hard-core unemployment, medical care for the aged, and extension of civil rights.

Ruth Murray of the Ladies' Garment Workers and Albert Knabb of the Associated Cooperage Industries of America also spoke at convention sessions.

In the president's report, which was approved, Doyle said barrel production has been affected recently by a lag in whiskey sales due to increased consumption of Scotch and Canadian whiskeys and vodka. The convention went on record against any further reduction in duty on foreign liquors, and in support of bills by Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.) and Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) to define the age of whiskey in terms of years of storage in charred new oak barrels.

Doyle said the union and two employers associations apparently have succeeded in heading off a proposal which would have allowed age to be claimed on whiskey stored in old barrels without a note to that effect on bottle labels.

Cost of Training Held Less than Joblessness

Rochester, N.Y.—"The worst possible debt we can pass on to members of the next generation is to have them unable to make a living," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared in a Sidney Hillman Foundation lecture at the University of Rochester.

Wirtz addressed 1,000 students, faculty members, union and industry leaders to launch the 1963 lecture series honoring the late president of the Clothing Workers. Sidney Hillman lectures bring prominent public figures and leading educators to colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Scoffing at the contention that the U.S. can't afford to spend money to train young people in needed skills, Wirtz said the alternative is "to carry them all their lives at an infinitely larger cost to both private and public sectors of the economy."

"Every dollar spent to train a young worker will be returned many-fold," he added.

Last year's Manpower Development & Training Act, Wirtz said, was a "start" on what must be done, and enactment of the pending Kennedy Administration youth program is "imperative."

Wirtz noted that last year the nation had lost 900 million man-days of work because of unemployment compared with 19 million days due to strikes. He added:

"If we could get the unemployment figures down, our other problems would be far easier to handle."

Wirtz said that efforts by unions and employers to "start early to get agreement before the strike pressure comes" represent "constructive, creative bargaining."

Group Opposes AMA Stand:

Physicians Renew Fight for Health Care

A committee of prominent physicians has reaffirmed its support of social security hospital insurance for the aged and announced plans "to intensify our efforts to distribute reliable information on this issue to our colleagues and to the general public."

The Physicians Committee for Health Care for the Aged through Social Security declared after a two-day meeting in Washington, D.C., that it has been "greatly encouraged" by support from a "large number of physicians throughout the country."

Committee members and other doctors supporting the hospital care bill were praised by the National Council of Senior Citizens as "men of high courage who represent the best ideals of American medicine."

Noting that most of the physicians supporting the social security program are members of the American Medical Association, former Rep. Aime J. Forand, president of the senior citizens council, said:

"It takes high courage for a doctor to oppose the AMA—for the medical monopoly has always been bitter and relentless against those who protest the edicts of the controlling hierarchy."

Forand declared that "older Americans are shocked and dismayed by the campaign of untruths and distortion being waged by the AMA."

He called on members of his organization to send letters of encouragement to local doctors who openly support the social security hospital care program.

The physicians committee, headed by Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, was founded last year by a group of leading doctors including a Nobel prize winner, a recipient of the AMA's distinguished service award, and a former president of the American College of Physicians. To the general public, however, the best-known committee member is Dr. Benjamin Spock, whose books on baby and child care have guided millions of mothers throughout the world.

AMA Claim Disputed

In a related development, Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.), addressing the Senate, sharply attacked the AMA for a "complete distortion" in its claim in the AMA News that "Kerr-Mills Covers 93 Percent of Aged."

"Surely, if the AMA does not feel compelled to tell the truth to the American people, it should make some efforts—no matter how painful—to be honest with its physician members to whom this paper is primarily directed," McNamara declared.

He said the AMA had apparently obtained the 93 percent figure by "lumping together" the old-age assistance program for the totally indigent, which existed long before Kerr-Mills, with the program of medical assistance for the aged (MAA) established under the act.

It may be true that 93 percent of the elderly live in states with one or both of the programs, McNamara said, "but the AMA's word 'coverage' is grossly misleading. It is not true that 93 percent of the people are eligible for assistance under Kerr-Mills."

SOCIAL WORKERS and psychologists employed by the New York City Board of Education voted for the United Federation of Teachers as their collective bargaining representative in an election conducted by the American Arbitration Association. The picture shows a voter at association headquarters, where balloting was conducted. The tally was UFT 142, no union 8, void 1. The union represents 40,000 New York teachers and other school employes.

Strong AFL-CIO Endorsement Given Foreign Affairs Academy

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has given the federation's strong endorsement to the proposed National Academy of Foreign Affairs in a letter to Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Urging speedy enactment of legislation to establish the academy, Meany predicted that it could become "a potent weapon in advancing free institutions abroad."

Meany is a member of the Citizens' Committee for a National Academy of Foreign Affairs, which he said "will present the first real opportunity for the United States government to foster a coordinated study of foreign relations problems and to educate and train its officers in a rigorous and disciplined fashion."

"The academy," his letter continued, "can and should become an institution which can produce new ideas for the future and trained personnel to put them into action.

"It can and should become the center from which critical research and analysis lay the basis for the solution to tomorrow's problems as well as today's, and from which constant examination can assure proper and needed re-evaluation and adjustment of existing policies."

Meany wrote Fulbright that he had long held a deep interest in "the problems of sharpening our abilities, both private and governmental, to encourage the advance of freedom throughout the world, and concurrently to fight the ideology of communism in a forthright, intelligent and effective manner."

"A free, secure and economically healthy world is the ultimate goal of our nation's foreign policy," he observed. "We can achieve that goal only if we have the experience and the educational tools to meet the challenge."

Legislation Introduced

Legislation to establish the academy, which would be situated in Washington, D.C., has been introduced by Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) and Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D-O.).

Meany's letter to Fulbright, which he asked to be inserted in the record of hearings on the bill, emphasized that the primary purpose of the academy should be to provide training, research and study programs for foreign service officers and other government personnel involved in international relations and related fields.

The AFL-CIO president noted, however, that the proposed legislation also recognizes "the need to share the academy's resources with private individuals and groups." He cited as an example of effective private activity the AFL-CIO's own program to encourage the development of free trade unions around the world and declared:

"It must be plain to you, as it is to us, that a free trade union movement is the strongest opponent any totalitarian philosophy can have. Our role in world affairs is to see that free trade unions are nurtured and encouraged to grow in the new and less-developed nations.

"We help them to establish themselves, we provide them with basic services and equipment, and we train their officers in the effective operation and techniques for growth of free unions.

"One of our functions is to share with them our skills in fighting Communist infiltration in their own ranks. The free trade union movements in the United States and in the countries of Western Europe have learned these skills with great effort and considerable cost through the long fight which has virtually eliminated Communist infiltration as a threat to our own organizations. We share these skills willingly with our brothers in other lands.

5-11-63

"Other private groups can benefit from similar training. While the academy should not become a centralized bureaucracy attempting to lead and control the efforts of private citizens and private groups, it can provide the educational and training facilities to make them more knowledgeable and effective."

Rollcall Vote in Senate On Public Works Fund

The Senate voted to appropriate $450 million for job-creating public works projects in areas of heavy unemployment, after defeating a labor-opposed amendment to reduce the amount by $200 million. The vote against the cut was 60-26. Following is the rollcall:

FOR CUTTING PUBLIC WORKS

DEMOCRATS 5

Byrd (Va.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Thurmond (S. C.)
Lausche (O.)	Robertson (Va.)

REPUBLICANS 21

Aiken (Vt.)	Dominick (Colo.)	Pearson (Kan.)
Allott (Colo.)	Hickenlooper (Ia.)	Saltonstall (Mass.)
Boggs (Del.)	Jordan (Ida.)	Simpson (Wyo.)
Carlson (Kan.)	Kuchel (Calif.)	Smith (Me.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Mechem (N. M.)	Tower (Tex.)
Curtis (Neb.)	Morton (Ky.)	Williams (Del.)
Dirksen (Ill.)	Mundt (S. D.)	Young (N. D.)

AGAINST CUTTING PUBLIC WORKS

DEMOCRATS 53

Anderson (N. M.)	Hayden (Ariz.)	Morse (Ore.)
Bartlett (Alaska)	Hill (Ala.)	Moss (Utah)
Bayh (Ind.)	Holland (Fla.)	Muskie (Me.)
Brewster (Md.)	Humphrey (Minn.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Burdick (N. D.)	Inouye (Hawaii)	Pastore (R. I.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Pell (R. I.)
Church (Ida.)	Johnston (S. C.)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Clark (Pa.)	Jordan (N. C.)	Randolph (W. Va.)
Dodd (Conn.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Ribicoff (Conn.)
Douglas (Ill.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Russell (Ga.)
Eastland (Miss.)	Long (Mo.)	Smathers (Fla.)
Edmondson (Okla.)	Long (La.)	Sparkman (Ala.)
Ellender (La.)	Mansfield (Mont.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Engle (Calif.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Symington (Mo.)
Ervin (N. C.)	McGovern (S. D.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Gore (Tenn.)	McIntyre (N. H.)	Williams (N. J.)
Gruening (Alaska)	McNamara (Mich.)	Young (O.)
Hart (Mich.)	Monroney (Okla.)

REPUBLICANS 7

Beall (Md.)	Fong (Hawaii)	Keating (N. Y.)
Case (N. J.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Scott (Pa.)
Cooper (Ky.)

Hearing Finally Slated On Old Bias Charge

New York—A state Supreme Court judge has ruled that Cutters Local 10 of the Ladies' Garment Workers is "entitled to expeditious hearing" on charges of discriminatory practices that have been before the State Commission on Human Rights for nearly a year.

"The time for investigation is past as well as perchance the time for decision," Judge Thomas A. Aurelio said in quashing a subpeona issued by Investigating Commissioner Ruperto Ruiz seeking additional union records.

The local had protested that the purpose of the subpoena was to delay a public hearing, now set for May 15. It told the court that it planned to present the subpoenaed records at the hearing in proving the discrimination charges to be unfounded.

The charges were originally brought by Ernest Holmes. Although he later withdrew them, the local demanded a hearing to clear its name because the Human Rights Commission had issued a finding of probable cause.

The case figured in an investigation by a House subcommittee last fall into charges of discrimination within the ILGWU. The AFL-CIO Executive Council branded the investigation, headed by then Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.), as a "political vendetta."

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky, appearing before the subcommittee, denied flatly that the union practiced discrimination in any form and assailed the charges as "untruthful, irresponsible, a gross exaggeration, unfair, imaginative and done in a spirit of revenge."

Zelenko was later defeated in a Democratic primary when he sought renomination for his House seat.

Tax, Economic Programs Dominate Council Sessions

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII — Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year — Saturday, May 18, 1963 — No. 20

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL meets in St. Louis for its spring session. The meeting was planned to tie in with the annual Union-Industries Show, sponsored by the federation's Union Label & Service Trades Dept., scheduled to open May 17.

Foreign Aid Called 'Must' for Freedom

By Saul Miller

St. Louis—A tax cut and increased government expenditures to invigorate the economy, an equal employment opportunities law to insure equality for all Americans and a foreign aid program to provide for the Nation's security and promote a free, democratic world emerged as the major themes of the spring meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council here.

In its three-day session the council received reports of progress in internal operations with a sharp drop in the number of cases filed under the internal disputes plan; plans for a coordinated organizing drive in the Baltimore-Washington area patterned after the Los Angeles organizing program; and significant cooperation and progress in the West Coast operation.

The council singled out for special attention the widespread unemployment among Negro workers and urged all federation affiliates "to bend every effort" to alerting the nation to the "special economic and social dangers inherent in today's unbelievably high unemployment rate among Negroes." This task, said the council, "bears one of the highest priority labels of the federation's program."

In the international area, the council warned of the growing threat to the peace in the Middle East touched off by the Egyptian nuclear arms program and urged the U.S. government to discontinue aid to any country which violates the principles of the United Nations Charter.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, answering reporters' queries at a series of press conferences, made clear his disagreement with the contention that collective bargaining is "on trial" or is facing a "crisis" in the U.S. Because a few strikes, an extremely small percentage in terms of the agreements peacefully reached, receive national attention, it doesn't mean collective bargaining isn't working, he said.

Sharply stating his differences with the "crisis" approach, Meany said it represented a form of academic exercise that failed properly to comprehend the nature of collective bargaining. The possibility of strikes is inherent in the bargaining process, he said, and the lack of agreement rather than the contract agreement catches the national eye.

Hits Chamber Plan

In the bargaining area, the council leveled a sharp attack on the proposal adopted by the recent U.S. Chamber of Commerce convention to abolish exclusive representation rights for unions. This "would mean the end of collective bargaining," the council warned, "and would destroy any change of sound, constructive relationships between labor and management." (See story Page 3.)

In the economic field the federation said that labor will oppose "any tax reduction policy that fails to concentrate its benefits among low and middle-income taxpayers—that fails to focus on creating jobs and reducing unemployment." (See story Page 2.)

The council called also for increased government expenditures to meet public service needs, declaring that the AFL-CIO "is not afraid to say that America's special need at this moment in history is deficit financing."

It warned that the modest improvement in economic activity of the past three months is far from assured through the rest of the year and that continuation of recent trends will probably leave

(Continued on Page 3)

Recommendations Made:

Rail Emergency Board Reports Better 'Climate' for Bargaining

By David L. Perlman

A presidential emergency board has issued a cautiously hopeful report on the railroad work rules dispute.

The three-member "blue-ribbon" panel conceded that its month-long mediation effort had failed to bring a settlement. But it reported to Pres. Kennedy that "considerable progress" has been made, both sides have "softened" their previous positions, and "a climate which can support genuine negotiation seems to have been created."

It proposed, in an effort to "stimulate bargaining," a compromise solution to the hot dispute over employment of locomotive firemen and an approach to pay revisions which would protect higher earnings of long-service employes while correcting "inequities" in the pay of other groups of workers. Both recommendations were a departure from last year's proposals by a presidential study commission, which the rail operating unions had sharply rejected.

By contrast, the union reaction to the emergency board's report was an expression of hope that "it can be a useful aid to the collective bargaining process" in the direct union-management negotiations which will follow.

Chiefs of five unions involved—the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen—declared in a joint statement:

"It is not a matter of accepting or rejecting the report, but rather one of recognizing that the report can be a useful tool in the search for a fair and equitable settlement of all matters in dispute, which must be brought about through true collective bargaining."

An industry spokesman said rail management is prepared "to follow the recommendations of the board to a final and binding settlement through arbitration, if necessary."

Kennedy Meets Board

Pres. Kennedy, after a White House meeting with Board Chairman Samuel I. Rosenman and his colleagues, Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger and Dr. Clark Kerr, declared:

"The future of free collective bargaining may very well depend upon the reaching of an agreement here by negotiation as provided by the Railway Labor Act."

Declaring that "uninterrupted operation of the nation's railroads is imperative," Kennedy said the government is prepared, if necessary, to help the two parties reach agreement "but the ultimate dependence must be upon their own efforts."

The emergency board noted that in recent years railroad employment has been slashed 40 percent although the volume of rail traffic has been "substantially the same."

Railroad productivity gains "have outstripped those in industry gen-

(Continued on Page 10)

Court Sets Out Rule On Dues 'Dissenters'

By Willard Shelton

The Supreme Court has spelled out general principles under which railroad union-shop dissenters may obtain forgiveness of any portion of their dues used for political purposes to which they object.

The court said further that "since the unions possess the facts and records," they rather than individual objectors should "bear the burden" of establishing "the proportion of political to total union expenditures." Unions should then be subject to an order to rebate or reduce dues to dissenters by that proportion, the court ruled.

In St. Louis for an AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting, federation Pres. George Meany said a council subcommittee was being set up to study the decision and its possible impact.

The court gave no definition of what might be considered "expenditures for political causes" or whether the term might be construed broadly or narrowly.

The 7-to-1 decision came in a North Carolina case in which 37 employes of the Southern Railway obtained a state court injunction prohibiting two rail unions from enforcing dues payments. It was decided under the Railway Labor Act that governs rail industrial relations.

The majority opinion was writ-

(Continued on Page 11)

Birmingham Seen Proof Of Need for Rights Law

St. Louis—The "hideous events" in Birmingham have harshly exposed the need for "true equality of citizenship and true equality of opportunity for all Americans," especially in employment, the AFL-CIO declared.

The federation's Executive Council renewed its appeal to Congress "to make equal employment opportunities the law of the land" if future Birminghams are to be prevented.

The civil rights statement fully supported Pres. Kennedy's decision to move troops into Alabama as "the only path open to him." It stressed that the "basic remedy" for the injustices of which the events in Birmingham "are a symptom" is "fully securing" the fundamental rights of the Negro citizens of America.

In a companion statement stressing "the unbelievably high unemployment rate among Negro workers," the council called on all affiliates to exert an all-out effort to alleviate the situation.

Pres. George Meany told reporters that the council was "shocked" by the methods used by Birmingham police to quell the Negroes' protests for equal treatment and that "setting dogs" and using fire hoses is completely out of place in the American tradition.

The Negroes in Birmingham,

(Continued on Page 4)

FIRE WARDEN CORPS of Ladies' Garment Workers in New York observed its fifth anniversary with a rally that also paid tribute to the 146 garment workers who died in the Triangle fire 52 years earlier and the 24 killed in the Monarch Undergarment blaze in 1958. Speaking is Fire Commissioner Edward Thompson. Behind him are James P. Meehan, heroic mounted policeman of half a century ago, who was the first to enter the burning Triangle building; Josephine Nicolosi, who was trapped behind a locked eighth-floor door which Meehan smashed; Florence Pearl Joannides, Triangle worker saved when she leaped to the roof of a descending elevator, and Leon Stein, editor of the union's official publication, Justice, and author of the 1962 book, "The Triangle Fire."

Council Hits 'Crackpot' Campaign To Undermine U.S. Constitution

St. Louis—Three proposed constitutional amendments being circulated among state legislatures would "subvert the sovereignty" of the United States and "implement the political and economic program of reactionary big business," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The council called on all unions "and particularly AFL-CIO state central bodies" to be fully aware of the dangers embodied in the amendments and "oppose them with their full strength."

In some cases, the council added, adoption of the amendments "must be blamed simply on the lack of alertness on the part of many who would and should have opposed them."

"The extreme, even crackpot, character of these proposals, has lulled opponents into a false sense of security, and in some instances the legislative approval was managed very, very quietly," it noted.

Adoption of the amendments, the council said, "would give state legislatures the power to rewrite the constitution and would perpetuate rural minority control over these legislatures."

The statement pointed out that while the Conference of State Governments is promoting the amendments and is composed primarily of state legislators from rural areas, "the shadow of reactionary big business falls across the picture."

The chairman of the group is Speaker W. Stewart Helm of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, who is employed by the Sun Oil Co., owned by the Pew family, which has long supported a string of reactionary causes.

Cloak for Big Business

Statements by those promoting the amendments, the council added, "leave no doubt that the rural minority control over the United States which these amendments seek would be used to implement the political and economic program of reactionary big business."

One proposed amendment of the Constitution by a vote of the legislatures of three-fourths of the states without approval of Congress or by a national convention. Legislatures, presently inequitably apportioned, could thus amend the Constitution by votes representing as little as 15 percent of the population.

A second amendment would deprive the federal courts of power to entertain suits challenging the apportionment of state legislatures. The "flagrant outrages" of malapportionment in the past "at long last induced the intervention of the federal courts," the council declared, and "that intervention has been welcomed by every national leader of stature."

The third amendment would create a so-called "court of the union" consisting of the 50 chief justices of the state supreme courts which would be convened intermittently at the request of five state legislatures and would have authority to overrule the Supreme Court of the U.S. in cases involving federal-state relationships.

'Court of Disunion'

"This aberration," the council declared, "might better be called a 'court of disunion'."

The proposal's supporters, the statement said, are not merely critical of decisions invalidating state laws but are critical of decisions upholding the power of Congress to legislate on old age pensions, unemployment insurance, labor relations, wages and hours and other areas.

The council cited a statement by Chief Justice Earl Warren that the amendments "would radically change the character of our institutions" and make "profound changes . . . in the stability of the United States Constitution."

It added:

"The world is growing steadily smaller and so is the United States. The people of the different states are more and more interdependent economically. The number of problems which can effectively be handled only by the federal government is increasing, not decreasing. The insistence of our citizens on a larger measure of social and economic justice is increasing, not decreasing.

"This is not the time, and we do not think it will ever come, to revert to the Articles of Confederation. We believe that the economic theories of Adam Smith and Herbert Spencer are likewise out of date."

Detroit Firemen Denounce Alabama 'Hose' Tactics

Detroit—Use of fire hoses against Negro demonstrators for racial equality in Birmingham, Ala., has been condemned in a strongly worded statement by the Detroit Fire Fighters.

Officers of the 1,700-member local urged their international union to "bend every effort" to halt assignment of firemen and fire equipment to disperse demonstrators in the southern city.

The request was sent to Intl. Pres. William D. Buck by Pres. Robert E. Tighe and Sec. Marion M. Hollen of the local union.

"We are appalled," the Detroit officers wrote, "that fire fighters affiliated with this great brotherhood of Intl. Fire Fighters, which has been publicly recorded as being opposed to racial discrimination, should become part of any effort to thwart the endeavors of American citizens to seek equal rights with other citizens. . . . "

Tighe and Hollen, who said they were voicing the views of the DFFA board, noted that the "tradition" of fire fighting has been the protection of lives and property and said they opposed the idea that firemen and their equipment should "be called upon as a law-enforcement agency of this nature."

"We realize," they added, "that Fire Fighters must carry out orders given to them," but they urged the international union to muster its prestige and influence to secure a stop to such orders "for the good of the fire service and our national image."

Council Serves Warning:

Tax Cut Must Focus On Creation of Jobs

St. Louis—The AFL-CIO has warned that organized labor will oppose "any tax reduction policy that fails to concentrate its benefits among low and middle-income taxpayers—that fails to focus on creating jobs and reducing unemployment."

The tax policy statement, and two others on the national economy and increased government expenditures to meet public service needs, spelled out the Executive Council's views on current economic developments.

"The AFL-CIO is not afraid to say," the council emphasized, "that America's special need at this moment in history is deficit financing. That means a tax cut in the lower and middle-income brackets and increased government expenditures."

Pres. George Meany told a press conference that the AFL-CIO is in "general agreement" with Pres. Kennedy on the approach of a tax bill, that the President is working hard for tax legislation and is stressing aid for low and middle-income groups.

He said the AFL-CIO will continue to press for a shorter workweek and that hours reduction would make a "significant impact on the unemployment problem."

No Job Gains Certain

The council warned that continuation of recent trends will probably leave about the same level of joblessness by the end of the year as the 5.7 percent rate in April. The "modest improvement in sales and production of the past three months," it said, "after a half-year's lull, has been hardly enough to absorb the increase in the labor force."

A sustained advance of economic activities through 1963 and 1964, at the "modest pace of the past few months," is "far from assured," it added.

The tax statement noted that leading business spokesmen have given a priority to a 10 percent reduction in corporate taxes. These proposals, the statement declared, "will not and cannot meet the test of reducing joblessness."

There is no evidence of a general shortage of funds for investment, the supposed need to be met by a corporate tax cut, and tax cuts aimed primarily at increasing investment funds "cannot possibly meet the priority requirements of 1963, to boost sales, production and jobs."

The council repeated its recommendation to Congress for a $10 billion tax cut retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963, for low and middle-income taxpayers, declaring that as such tax savings are spent and spread through the economy "they will add some $20 to $30 billion to total national production."

'Economy' Self-Defeating

The federation made clear once again its opposition "to any effort to accompany tax reduction with cuts in the general level of federal expenditures." Such action, it said, would nullify the job-creating impact of tax reduction and would be self-defeating.

The council analysis of the current state of the national economy noted that little further advance of the high level of auto sales and production can be expected, that the recent build-up of steel inventories will also level off in the months ahead and the "impact on the economy from anticipation of tax reduction will wear thin as the weeks pass."

Business investment is increasing, but this "will prove to be temporary if consumer and government demand fails to increase sufficiently," it said. A lower rate of improvement in sales and output "will result in rising unemployment as the labor force continues to grow and the installation of new, automated equipment displaces workers."

On public spending, the council declared that America's unmet civilian needs are "gigantic and growing." These include 750,000 new classrooms in the next 10 years and increased college facilities; 1 million more beds in the nation's hospitals; 35 million new dwelling units by 1975, or 2.3 million units a year now; mass transit, urban renewal, water and sewage systems, libraries, outdoor recreation and many others.

In recent years, the statement pointed out, only two new major federal programs have been inaugurated that utilize public works to restore employment and one of them—the 1962 Public Works Act—is scheduled to die at the end of the year.

The council called on Congress "to enact a vastly expanded program of job-creating public facilities of permanent value to the nation," including increased resources for the Area Redevelopment Administration and extension of the Public Works Act with an appropriation of $2 billion.

Aid to Free World Called Indispensable to Security

St. Louis—The AFL-CIO restated its support of the foreign aid program "in the strongest possible terms" and declared it "indispensable to the security of America and to the survival of liberty."

The Executive Council joined "completely" in Pres. George Meany's "sweeping dissent" from the findings of the majority report of the Clay committee proposing "drastic changes."

"The council voiced its even stronger dissent from "interpretations" of the Clay report "by those who would use it as an instrument to destroy the foreign aid program itself."

It restated its belief that foreign aid's major purpose is to promote a free, democratic world; that it is not only "far cheaper than war, but [that] a major share" of the money spent comes back to the U.S. in purchases of American goods; that foreign aid programs should lay greater stress on the role of free trade unions; and that aid programs be designed to promote economic and social well-being for the developing countries.

Council Acts on Economic Programs

Bold Spending Plans Seen Pressing Need

(Continued from Page 1)

the unemployment rate at the end of 1963 at the 5.7 percent level of April.

The council called on Congress to enact the basic reforms and improvements proposed by Pres. Kennedy in his message on unemployment insurance. The council statement declared that the increasing "threat to the solvency" of the system, plus the pressures on state legislatures to reduce benefits, meant that basic reforms are essential. (See story Page 12.)

In another statement the council warned that the U.S. Employment Service "is being subjected to new and dangerous attacks" from private fee-charging agencies in a campaign that is designed to "undermine and cripple" the service.

It called on Congress to investigate this "collusive campaign" and pledged AFL-CIO support in strengthening of the employment service through appropriations and other means. (See story this page.)

On civil rights, the federation gave its full support to Pres. Kennedy's action in moving troops into Alabama and renewed its appeal to Congress "to make equal employment opportunities the law of the land" if future Birminghams are to be prevented. (See story Page 1.)

The council lashed out at the action of a group of state legislators in attacking the basic constitutional structure of the U.S. through a series of proposed amendments that would "implement the political and economic program of reactionary big business." (See story Page 2.)

Few Dispute Problems

Meany told the council there was a sharp drop in the number of cases filed under the internal disputes plan in the first four months of 1963—28 new complaints compared with 155 for all of 1962. Since the plan went into effect 60 percent of the cases have been resolved by mutual agreement through mediation. (See story this page.)

The federation president announced also an organizing drive in the Baltimore-Washington area with a target of approximately 100,000 unorganized workers. He hailed the cooperative progress in Los Angeles, terming especially significant the elimination of internal dissension. (See story this page.)

On foreign aid, the council restated its support of existing programs in the "strongest possible terms" and gave all-out backing to Meany's sharp dissent from the Clay Committee report which recommended cutting back the program and urged drastic changes. (See story Page 2.)

Meany announced also that the council had approved a joint wage research bureau in Japan involving the AFL-CIO, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Japanese trade unions to study Japan's complex wage problem.

The council scheduled its next meeting to start Aug. 12 at Unity House, Pa., the Ladies' Garment Workers vacation center.

THE NEWEST MEMBER of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians, is greeted at St. Louis council meeting by Pres. George Meany. Kenin was elected a council member and federation vice president last winter.

'Industrial Anarchy' Seen in C of C Move

St. Louis, Mo.—The U.S. Chamber of Commerce proposal to abolish exclusive representation rights for unions "would mean the end of collective bargaining and would destroy any chance of sound, constructive relationships between labor and management," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

If the proposal is adopted, the council warned, it would "substitute industrial anarchy for industrial democracy. We do not intend to let that happen in America."

At its recent convention in Washington the chamber adopted a resolution without recorded dissent calling for the abolition of exclusive representation rights. Under the plan a union would be authorized to bargain only for its own members, those not represented would have no protection.

The council, analyzing the proposal, said it would allow an employer to cut wages unilaterally for those workers not represented by the union, and "would inevitably spell the end of collective bargaining." It would force workers "to compete against each other," the council warned, "thus undercutting their own economic stability and the economic stability of the nation."

Historically, the council noted, there have been a number of attacks on exclusive representation. It pointed out that the issue came up in the debate in 1947 on the Taft-Hartley Act but that the T-H law "retained exclusive representation, for even the late Sen. (Robert A.) Taft realized that the alternative is anarchy."

The proposal "would not merit serious notice now" had it not been embraced by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce—the first organization "of real importance to do so," the council said.

"No employer who sincerely accepts the principle of collective bargaining and expects to maintain a stable collective bargaining relationship with his employes, can possibly endorse this notion," it added.

That the chamber adopted this position, the council said, "is a sad commentary on the extent of its surrender to the 'know-nothings' on the industrial and political scene."

Citing the chamber's conversion to the so-called "right-to-work" laws, which forbid the union shop, and the argument against these laws that a certified union, being legally obliged to represent all workers, should be allowed to require them all to be union members, the council declared:

"The chamber would now answer the argument by destroying the basis for it—and by destroying the whole structure of labor-management in the process."

Action Urged To Keep Peace In Mid-East

St. Louis—The AFL-CIO has urged the U.S. government to "discontinue all aid to any country" in the Middle East which refuses to pledge "complete compliance" with the United Nations Charter and its provisions for maintenance of peace.

The Executive Council declared it was "deeply disturbed" by the "ambitious nuclear armament" program of Egypt's Pres. Nasser and "equally dismayed" by the United Arab Republic's constitutional provision stating the "avowed purpose of destroying another member state of the United Nations—the Republic of Israel."

These are ominous developments "seriously undermining the precarious peace which has prevailed in the Middle East for nearly seven years," the council said. The statement welcomed Pres. Kennedy's "firm assurance" that the U.S. would, if necessary, take action outside the UN to halt any aggression in the Middle East. It urged the government to appeal to each UN member in the Middle East to pledge its adherence to the UN charter.

It also asked the government to request that the UN guarantee the territories of all mideast member states "on pain of the imposition of economic and political sanctions against offenders."

American aid to the Egyptian people and the Nasser regime, the council said, should be used to advance the well-being of the people and in preserving the peace in the Middle East.

Swedish Unions Report '62 Gains

Stockholm—Total membership of the 41 affiliates of the Swedish Federation of Trade Unions increased by 21,342 during 1962 to 1,522,563 on Jan. 1, 1963, out of a total population of 8 million.

Baltimore-Washington Organizing Drive Set

St. Louis—A coordinated organizing drive patterned on the Los Angeles campaign has been approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council for the Baltimore-Washington area.

The objective is the approximately 100,000 unorganized workers in the two-city complex.

Pres. George Meany told reporters that selection and assignment of unorganized target plants among the various unions cooperating in the drive will get under way shortly. The lessons and techniques of the Los Angeles campaign will be applied, he said.

The Los Angeles formula has proved "very significant," he stressed, because "we have eliminated any internal dissension" and this was accomplished by the local unions and the international representatives in the area.

There has "not been one disagreement as to who organizes what plant," he said, and 500 plants have been cleared with the various unions involved and assigned for organizing.

The West Coast drive, he said, will move into higher gear shortly with larger plants involved. The work to date, he stressed, is a compliment to the representatives and local unions who have worked together without rivalry and in harmony to accomplish the organizing objective.

Meany's announcement of the Baltimore-Washington campaign followed presentation of a report to the council by Organization Dir. John W. Livingston on the Los Angeles campaign. Nearly 7,000 new members have been added in the first four months, he said, and unions have won 38 NLRB elections and lost 15. As of May 1, he added, 46 election petitions were on file for 4,000 workers and six elections had been scheduled.

More organizing staff and funds are needed as the campaign approaches the "acid test period," Livingston reported. The solidarity of participating unions and their interest remains at a "high level," he said.

In other organizing developments, Livingston reported:

- In the last three quarters, AFL-CIO unions have maintained a 54 percent victory record in NLRB elections, "a slight improvement."
- In the first three months of 1963 AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for 55,302 persons, the second highest quarterly figure since 1958 when the NLRB began reporting such data on a quarterly basis.
- AFL-CIO unions filed 1,604 petitions for elections during the quarter, second highest for any quarter in the past five years.
- Coordinated organizing campaigns are under way or being shaped up in Maine, Rochester, N. Y., and other areas.
- There has been a sharp increase in organizing activities among federal employes as a result of the President's executive order on recognition and bargaining, and the AFL-CIO has contributed substantial manpower to this effort.

Meany Calls Hoffa No Scout 'Model'

St. Louis—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters here "I believe in the Boy Scouts" but "Jimmy Hoffa is not a good model for the American boy."

His comment came in reply to a query as to his reaction on Hoffa's announcement of a $336,000 Teamster gift to the Washington, D. C., area Boy Scouts.

Disputes Plan Filings Show Sharp Drop

St. Louis—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany reported a sharp drop in the number of cases filed under the internal disputes plan in the first four months of 1963.

He told the Executive Council that only 28 new complaints were filed with his office in the January-April period. This compares with 155 for all of 1962.

Since the effective date of the convention-voted plan for settling disputes between unions, 183 complaints or claims of "justification" have been filed of which 109—or about 60 percent—have been resolved by mutual agreement through mediation. Nineteen cases are still in the mediation process.

Impartial Umpire David Cole has made determinations in 47 cases. He found violations in 35 and 12 complaints were rejected as not violating the constitutional provisions.

The Executive Council subcommittee has received 20 appeals from Cole determinations and denied 18. One was withdrawn and one was referred to the council. In this case the council held that Cole's determination should stand.

It added, however, that "as a matter of general policy and future application" of the plan, two or more AFL-CIO affiliates operating under a title of convenience in multi-union bargaining units "do not thereby sacrifice any rights they would otherwise enjoy to protection from raids either from outside or inside the unit."

The report noted also that 11 complaints of non-compliance were received by the council subcommittee, that compliance was achieved in four cases, noncompliance found in four others and three cases are pending. The Journeymen Stone Cutters Association and the National Maritime Union are in noncompliance with the plan in two cases each.

Probe Urged Of Attacks On USES

St. Louis—The AFL-CIO called on Congress to investigate "the collusive campaign of false information" launched by private fee-charging employment agencies against the U.S. Employment Service.

This campaign, the AFL-CIO Executive Council said, "is clearly designed to undermine and cripple" the USES. At a time when a strong and effective employment service is essential to the national interest, the private agencies, said the council, are engaging in activities contrary to the "public good."

Noting that the federal government has no authority to regulate the private agencies and that state regulation varies from none at all to wholly inadequate licensing statutes and supervision, the council pointed out that these private agencies in most areas are free to discriminate in their services against racial and religious minority groups.

The council urged all AFL-CIO affiliates to recommend to Congress the need to strengthen the USES through appropriations and other means and to investigate the campaign being waged against it. It said that any investigation should determine "the kind of legislation needed to protect the public interest."

AMERICAN LABOR'S ROLE in the "front lines" of the Cold War is discussed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany with members of a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee headed by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.), right. Standing is Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr. (R-N. J.).

Birmingham Seen Proof Of Need for Rights Law

(Continued from Page 1)

he stressed, were simply seeking the rights guaranteed them by the Constitution, rights that had been denied them.

The hope is that "responsible people" in the South will move to help secure real equality to all citizens, Meany said.

Issue of 'Timing'

He commented, in reply to a query, that he did not believe Rev. Martin Luther King and his followers moved too quickly in the Birmingham situation and added:

"I would be the last one to take the position that the Negroes are shooting from the hip and moving too fast. I think they have been patient for a long, long time . . . I would not criticize Rev. King for fighting for what I think is right."

The action, he reiterated, was neither precipitous nor rash.

The AFL-CIO president noted also that unions in the South are not free of discrimination but that the federation is working all the time at the task of improving the situation and educating the members to the concepts of equality for all persons.

The statement on Negro joblessness pointed out that the rate of unemployment among Negro workers is 2.5 times that of the national rate, indicating a possible total of 1.5 million Negro jobless. Negro workers also constitute about 36 percent of the longterm unemployed, and in some metropolitan centers 75 percent of Negro teenagers are out of work and out of school.

Citing the activities of a number of Negro organizations to awaken Negro workers to the dangers of the situation and to participate "in building a sense of urgency" for a solution, the council added:

"No worker is secure in a job until all workers are secure—no matter what their color. Awakening America to this fact is a major task, but even more difficult is alerting our nation to the special economic and social dangers inherent in today's unbelievably high unemployment rate among Negro workers."

The statement, strongly condemning the racial disturbances in Birmingham and noting the "revulsion of most Americans," said the events in the city should not be allowed to obscure the basic issue —the need for true equality "in Boston as well as Birmingham, in Michigan as well as Mississippi."

'Inadequate Reality'

The council said voting rights and educational rights have been "firmly sustained by legislation and by the courts" although "inadequately realized." It added that new measures are needed such as abolition of the poll tax and of literacy tests unequally applied.

Noting also that equal access to public accommodations has been guaranteed as far as possible, the council added:

"But job rights, which are the controlling factor in economic status, remain untouched on the federal level except in employment in companies having contracts with federal government. Only a fortnight ago the AFL-CIO again appealed to Congress to make equal employment opportunity the law of the land. We renew that appeal."

Goodyear Pact Ratified In Canada

Toronto — A strike by 2,100 Rubber Workers at tire plants of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in Bowmanville and New Toronto has ended with acceptance by the workers of a new two-year agreement pointing the way toward other tire industry settlements in Canada.

The vote came as Goodyear workers in Akron, O., rejected a recommendation by the URW Local 2 executive board and called a special meeting for May 19 to reconsider contract terms they had previously rejected.

The agreement with Goodyear of Canada, Ltd., calls for wage hikes of 10 cents an hour in two installments, plus 6 to 6.5 cents in other benefits.

The union also won an increase in the basic pension to $2.80 a month per year of service, formerly $2.16 for the first 25 years and $1.60 subsequently; a full union shop, and other improvements. The wage agreement calls for a 4-cent boost retroactive to Feb. 24 and an additional 6 cents a year later.

At Bogota Parley:

Stronger Role for Labor Urged In Hemisphere Fight on Poverty

Bogota, Colombia—Latin America's democratic trade unions should be given a bigger role in the hemisphere's fight against poverty, ignorance and disease, ministers of labor from 19 nations declared at an Alliance for Progress conference here.

"There can be no effective economic and social development planning unless the legitimate rights of labor are recognized," the conference declared.

The labor ministers called for "concrete" advances in "wages, employment, working conditions, social security, health, housing and education."

During the six-day meeting, U.S. Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz emerged as a forceful and eloquent advocate of the U.S. position that "investment in human beings is the first priority of economic development."

He said the U.S. government considers a "decent" family wage "an immediate, not long-range goal of the Alliance for Progress."

Higher living standards, he emphasized, "are as much a priority of economic growth as are increased levels of capital investment."

Beirne in Delegation

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, head of the Communications Workers and a member of the U.S. delegation, declared that the AFL-CIO "wholeheartedly endorses" the proposals advanced by Wirtz "as a positive and concrete plan to bring the Alliance program to the people."

AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew C. McLellan, an official observer, declared that Wirtz made a "tremendous contribution" through his emphasis on worker participation in the Alliance program.

The U.S. delegation included Assistant Secretaries of Labor George L-P Weaver and Daniel P. Moynihan, Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.), and Ambassador to Colombia Fulton Freeman.

Taking part as observers with a voice but without a vote were representatives of a number of trade union organizations, including the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT).

The determination of the delegates to reach effective solutions to the many problems facing the Alliance was underscored by Colombia's Pres. Guillermo Leon Valencia, who told the opening session that if "the Alliance is not successful, communism will take over."

Delegates were conscious, too, of the sharp criticism rendered last year by a group of world trade union officials who reported, after a first-hand survey, that "we found no evidence that organized labor is participating, or even being consulted in a meaningful way, in national economic and social development planning . . . The declared intent of the Alliance for Progress, in this regard, is being ignored."

Ouster of Haiti's Duvalier Demanded by ICFTU

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has called for the ouster of Haiti's Dictator Francois Duvalier and has urged the Organization of American States to help restore democracy in Haiti.

ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu, in a message to the OAS, declared that Duvalier's efforts to continue in office beyond the expiration of his presidential term through "a fake election . . . should not be allowed to go unchallenged."

Only through the "overthrow" of Duvalier "can democracy be re-established and human and trade union rights restored," Becu declared.

He noted that the ICFTU has repeatedly protested the suppression of trade union rights by the Duvalier regime.

Rail Clerks Warned on Jobs Loss; Harrison Gets New Executive Post

Los Angeles—Nearly 1,100 delegates to the 22nd convention of the Railway Clerks, meeting here for six days, heard warnings at the opening session against the inroads of automation and the dangers of compulsory arbitration.

The warning against the job loss caused by technological progress came from Pres. George M. Harrison, who pointed out that there has been a 36 percent drop in employment for clerks in the past 10 years—10 years which have seen a loss of 500,000 jobs on the nation's railroads.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) sounded the warning against compulsory arbitration, saying that "no domestic issue is of more concern to our present system of economic freedom."

Harrison, who told delegates that he did not want to stand for re-election as president but would prefer to stay on in an advisory capacity, outlined the gains of the organization since the last convention in Milwaukee four years ago.

Referring to his 45 years of service to the union, Harrison said he wanted to get rid of the "back-breaking day-to-day-burden of being your grand president," but added that he had consented to stay on, at suggestion of the executive council, in an advisory capacity.

The delegates responded by electing Harrison chief executive. Other officers, including a new president, were to be elected later in the week.

Four-Year Gains

The gains Harrison outlined have included two national agreements totaling wage increases of 15.28 cents an hour; medical care for dependents of railroad employes; $4,000 in life insurance for brotherhood members; increased retirement annuities; and increased unemployment benefits, plus extension of the period such benefits can be paid.

There were also wage improvements on airlines, where the brotherhood holds contracts, and increases in Canada, express, and other transportation fields.

In his keynote address, Harrison said there can be no solution to the problems of the railroads unless the economic problems of the country are solved, too.

"We are," he said, "urging the federal government to adjust its monetary and fiscal policies so as to encourage economic growth and economic expansion."

He also said that the government must find a solution to the problems caused by economic advances or "instead of automation becoming a blessing for the people of our country, it will be a curse."

"Thus far all indications point to the destruction and elimination of work opportunities at a more rapid rate than we have been able to create by new industry and economic growth," he said.

Outlining the union program for the future, Harrison listed among its goals better wages and working conditions; a shorter workweek "unless we can get jobs for everybody at the present 40 hours;" continued opposition to railroad mergers and so-called "right-to-work" laws; and improvements in railroad retirement, social security, and railroad unemployment insurance.

Lost Jobs Cited

Morse said he has asked for the establishment of a national committee to look into the problem being created by the encroachment of automated processes.

Citing "staggering" statistics, among them the fact that 25,000 workers are being idled each week by the introduction of technological advances, Morse noticed that the Clerks union had only 170,140 railway members—the lowest in 40 years.

Turning to proposals that labor disputes be solved by compulsory arbitration, Morse said: "I want to go on record that this is one senator who is never going to vote to impose on American employers—and American workers—a system of compulsory arbitration.

"If you set up such a system for the settlement of labor disputes, you take away from both workers and management their economic freedoms," he declared.

Power Over Prices

"If a board of arbitration has the power to fix wages and working conditions, it will also have the power to fix prices and determine how industry can cooperate."

Morse said that while legitimate rights of labor and management must be protected, "we must all realize, as patriotic Americans, that the rights of the American public must always prevail if we are going to maintain this system of freedom."

Delegates voted to increase dues from a minimum of $4 to $4.50 a month. They also heard Leon Keyserling, noted economist, echo Harrison's contention that problems of the railways are so intertwined with the nation's economic problems that neither can be solved separately.

LABOR MINISTERS from 19 Alliance for Progress nations are shown in session at Bogota, Colombia, as they adopted a program calling for greater trade union participation in the social and economic development of Latin America. Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who headed the U.S. delegation, is shown at right taking part in the dedication of a statue of George Washington in the Colombian capital. The six-day conference was attended by trade union leaders from the Americas as well as government officials.

(AFL-CIO News photos by Frank Alexander)

19 Alliance for Progress Nations Meet

THESE CHILDREN live in homes and attend a school built with Alliance for Progress funds—the giant Ciudad Techo development in Bogota which will eventually house 100,000 people. It is a tangible evidence of progress in raising standards.

A COLOMBIAN FAMILY puts the finishing touches on the Ciudad Techo home it will occupy, one of 12,000 housing units in the Alliance project. To keep costs down, families complete the homes they will live in themselves.

LABOR'S ROLE in Latin American growth is discussed by, left to right: Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.), AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, and AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew C. McLellan.

SEC. OF LABOR W. WILLARD WIRTZ signs the final report of the conference, which called for advances in wages, working conditions, health, housing and education.

OPENING SESSION of the labor ministers' conference was addressed by the President of Colombia, Guillermo Leon Valencia, who warned that if "the Alliance is not successful, communism will take over."

. . . Or None Is Free

THE RACIAL DISTURBANCES in Birmingham have been shocking by any standard. They should not have happened; they must not continue; they must never occur again anywhere in America.

Obviously the Negro citizens of America—no matter where they live—are entitled to exactly the same rights as any other citizen. They are entitled to be treated with the dignity due a human being. They must be fully as free as every other citizen or none of us is free at all.

It was the failure of Birmingham to heed this simple code of Americanism that led to the hideous events that caused the President to take the only path open to him—a Presidential decision the AFL-CIO fully supports.

But the revulsion of most Americans to the events in Birmingham should not be allowed to obscure the basic issue—the need for true equality of citizenship and true equality of opportunity for all Americans, in Boston as well as Birmingham, in Michigan as well as Mississippi.

Finger-pointing at Birmingham, or at the South in general, does not relieve the rest of the nation from its responsibilities.

★ ★ ★

THERE MUST BE no further delay in the confirmation by federal statute of the rights to which every citizen is entitled. Among these rights, equal opportunity in employment has been the most grossly neglected.

Voting rights and educational rights are already firmly sustained by legislation and by the courts, even though they have been most inadequately realized, and even though additional measures—such as the abolition of the poll tax and of literacy tests unequally applied—are necessary. Equal access to public accommodations has been guaranteed as far as possible within the limits of federal jurisdiction as presently defined.

But job rights, which are the controlling factor in economic status, remain untouched on the federal level except for employment in companies having contracts with the federal government.

Only a fortnight ago the AFL-CIO again appealed to Congress to make equal employment opportunity the law of the land. We renew that appeal.

Fully securing these fundamental rights is the basic remedy for the injustices of which the events in Birmingham are a symptom. That is the only ultimate solution for Birmingham and for those other Birminghams that, under different names and in varying degrees, are strewn across the length and breadth of this nation.

—Statement on civil rights adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting in St. Louis.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, May 18, 1963 No. 20

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Hurry Up with That Bait!'

Father Rice Says:

Nation Would Be the Loser If Labor Stayed Out of Politics

The following is excerpted from the column "Politics and Unions" by Rev. Charles Owen Rice which appeared in the May 2, 1963, edition of the Pittsburgh Catholic.

AMERICAN LABOR UNIONS cannot stay out of politics. Politics governs this free country and determines its laws. A political process elects the men who make the laws and the men who enforce them. Politics operates in the very act of law making itself and its pressures attend the deliberations surrounding every significant legislative proposal.

Historically, law and its enforcers have powerfully affected the health, even threatening upon occasion the very existence, of the labor movement. Throughout most of our national life, law and majority opinion were hostile to trade unions and kept them weak and small.

Thirty years ago both the people and the law got friendly, and certain rights were guaranteed to the union. As a result trade unions flourished like the green bay tree. But popular and political favor are fickle and for some time there has been a nibbling at labor's rights. Since World War II there has been introduction of some of the old grim hostility on two occasions.

Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin were major assaults against the labor movement. They have not destroyed the movement but they have frozen it and reduced it. The idea of the statutes was to purify unions but that has not been the result. They have done precious little to make the unions better, but a great deal to make them weaker.

A rise in political favor established modern unions on a firm footing, a decline damaged them. Trade unionism received real damage. It cannot grow and can hardly stay even. While this is bad enough it is not the whole story. There are things which labor could do and should be doing, but cannot do.

With the onset of automation in office and clerical occupations white collar workers are threatened and need unionization, but they are not getting it. Other categories of workers are in even more need of help and they also are denied. You would be amazed how many people are working long hours for low pay under bad conditions.

Changes in the law and its enforcement since New Deal days make it almost impossible for these workers to help themselves and unionize spontaneously, and almost equally difficult for unions to move in and help them. The employer has a formidable arsenal of tricky weapons that can be used to prevent unionization or break it up in its early and vulnerable stages. Only a rolling wave of unionization like the one of the 30s would be effective.

Labor has to be politically active to prevent further erosion of its rights, and to try to win some of them back again. Of course, political effort by itself is only part of the story and, if labor is unpopular enough, the best political organization and the hardest work will profit little. On the other hand, if labor lets politics go it invites destruction.

LABOR'S ENEMIES very naturally want to hobble it politically. Corporations were hobbled and the unions had to expect some of the same. They are restricted in the fashion in which they can spend money. Dues income may not be used directly for politics and its indirect use is dangerous. Voluntary contributions are necessary and the movement tries hard to get them legitimately.

The charge is made that union leaders exert a too powerful control on the voting of their members and deliver them to the big city machines. The charge is ridiculous because the members vote as they please and, generally, when they vote the way of their leaders it is because they are personally motivated in that direction. Trade unionists are less likely to register and vote than club women and coupon clippers.

COPE, the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, exists to stimulate the rank and file and to support lobbying in Congress and legislatures. It has had no runaway success but it is reasonably effective.

Recently its delegates from three states met in Pittsburgh. Its national director had died. His name was James McDevitt. He was an easy man to praise because he was decent as well as dynamic, sincere as well as effective. McDevitt saw the necessity of political action and he worked tirelessly. Representing the very best in labor he fought skillfully for the sort of legislation that benefits the underdog and he helped good causes that were not directly of interest to unions.

If labor ever were nullified politically the country would lose its strongest and most effective champion of decency and progressive legislation.

Morgan Says:

Observers at Odds in Predicting Results of President's Journey

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

IN JUNE Pres. Kennedy makes his second official journey to Europe and although there will undoubtedly be some handsome crowd pictures and some brave speeches, his trip is not expected to turn the tide of history. In fact some observers are echoing that World War II fuel-conserving motto and asking "is this trip really necessary?"

Morgan

Some Administration officials would be just as pleased if the President weren't crossing the Atlantic this summer, so lean are the prospects for any tangible advantage to the U.S. in particular or the western alliance in general. "A little bit of nothing," was the way White House sources assessed the probable results of the chief executive's swing to Italy, West Germany and Ireland.

However, the compulsions of diplomacy and protocol being what they are—not to mention the insistence of the press on finding hidden motives whether any are there or not—it is very difficult to cancel a high-level hegira of this kind without creating more misgivings and misunderstandings than may come anyway from the empty pleasantries of the impending communiques. At any rate even though Mrs. Kennedy's pregnancy forced postponement of their state visit to Rome until 1964 the President felt he should go ahead with a "working trip."

Perhaps the thing State Dept. officials privately are most unhappy about is the inevitable emphasis on the disarray of the Atlantic alliance and U.S. differences with Gen. de Gaulle—all of which will be underlined in news dispatches unless Kennedy and the French president, as seems highly unlikely now, contrive to have some kind of courtesy meeting in Paris or somewhere en route.

Officially the line is that since the President visited both Paris and London in 1961, with his dreary Vienna summit encounter with Premier Khrushchev squeezed in between those stops, nothing could be more logical than for him now to visit the other two key members of NATO, Italy and West Germany, without the slightest affront to the British or La Belle France. The truth seems to be, however, that if the glacial de Gaulle were to melt sufficiently to tender an invitation to lunch, the President would happily accept even though the meeting could do little to reconcile their deep differences on nuclear and Common Market policies, the operable idea being, apparently, that though allies are bound to have their differences it would be better to admit it in friendly meeting than to make them seem more jagged and irreconcilable in the austere act of the two chiefs of state avoiding each other when only a few kilometers apart.

So far there hasn't been a discernible inkling from Paris that de Gaulle is at all inclined toward a meeting now but, interestingly enough, the White House has not excluded the possibility from its contingency planning.

AS TO SET SEGMENTS of the trip (apart from the President's sentimental—not to mention political—journey to the Kennedy ancestral home in Ireland) his on-the-ground survey of two allied governments in difficult transition may prove useful to him.

Because of serious election losses to both right and left the Fanfani administration can hardly be more than a caretaker regime as host to the president in Italy. Nobody has come up with a really definitive explanation as to why the Italian Communists made such unexpected gains at the polls but some U.S. officials theorize, hopefully, that the Kennedy presence and a few well-chosen words about the interdependence of the alliance may nourish the now dented image of the Italian moderates.

Actually however the direction of the Italian government can't be charted reliably until the July meeting of the Nenni Socialists. If they then choose to endorse—or at least not reject—NATO, the augury for another center-left Italian coalition government will brighten. But if they incline toward equivocal relations with the Communists, more western headaches will surely lie ahead.

The path ahead for West Germany is by no means clear either, what with the octogenarian Adenauer still finding it hard to step down and put the chancellorship in the hands of Economics Minister Ludwig Erhard, whose Christian Democratic party choice for the successorship Adenauer detests.

There is as well the almost inevitable danger of having Kennedy's visit to Germany viewed as a popularity contest with de Gaulle—especially since the President is going to Berlin and the general, on his incredible campaign-like tour, did not. But such are the hazards of personal diplomacy in the jet age.

Washington Reports:

GI Opportunity for Education Seen Needed by Cold War Vets

YOUNG MEN and women serving in the armed forces today need and deserve the opportunity for an education, after their term of service, as much as the veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict, according to Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), who has introduced a GI Cold War Education bill in the Senate, and Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.), one of the bill's 39 co-sponsors.

Interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations, Yarborough reminded listeners of men in "South Vietnam, where they don't know what turn in the road will bring about an ambush."

"We have had men shot down in Navy planes, ships fired on, men on the alert in Berlin," he added.

"During the Cuba crisis our men were off Key West" at a time when nuclear war threatened, Mrs. Smith recalled.

The bill would provide 1.5 days of college or other training or education for each day spent in military service, not to exceed three years of such education, for those who served after Jan. 31, 1955, the date the Korean conflict bill terminated. Yarborough explained that veterans who attend school would also get $110 a month if they were single, $130 if married, and $160 with two or more dependents. To be eligible a veteran must have had more than six months service.

YARBOROUGH POINTED OUT that the 46 percent of young men who enter the armed services are handicapped, compared with those who did not serve, when they are released.

"The non-veterans had an opportunity to continue their schooling or training, to found a business," he said. "Those who are defending our freedoms and security are discriminated against unless they get this educational opportunity. They are a high percentage of the jobless. They cannot compete with those who have not served. The situation is unjust, unfair, inequitable."

Mrs. Smith said the bill would "be one of the greatest investments for the United States that can be made." She said the veteran, his family, the educational system and the country, all benefit.

Both pointed out that although most attention is paid to college education for veterans, experience shows that a much larger number (two-thirds) got high school, vocational, on-the-job or on-the-farm training. They also noted that experience has shown that educational opportunities for veterans stimulate others to seek further education.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE REPUBLICANS STAGED a $1,000-a-plate dinner here a few days ago ($300,000 for the Senate GOP Campaign Committee, the spillover for the party's House campaign unit) with Sen. Goldwater of Arizona as the stipulated hero but with Michigan's Gov. George Romney making his first full-scale Washington public appearance and coming close to stealing the show. A party functionary made a wisecrack: "While Rockefeller was in South America, Romney joined the Republicans."

Political reports in this town suffer an occupational disease: they tend to swing too far too fast. Let a candidate stub his toe and he is promptly written off as an exposed blunderer. Let the governor of New York remarry—which may prove a very serious handicap indeed but, again, may not—and he is journalistically dropped on the ash heap.

The wisecrack from the GOP functionary quoted above has a good deal of wisdom. Romney did "join the Republicans" at the fund-raising dinner for GOP senators. He spoke actual kind words about Republicans. He indicated that only a genuine Republican could reclaim the country.

From anyone else this would be expected. But only a year or so ago Romney contended he didn't know whether he was a Republican or a Democrat; he was a "citizen," and he seemed to think he might "sell" people on some "citizen's" operation that miraculously would solve difficult political and economic clashes the way he "sold" a possibly temporary automobile idea. He was still talking about a "citizen's party" when he recently discussed matters with Goldwater privately. Suddenly, in public, he became a declared Republican, which distinctly made him sound like a willing candidate.

* * *

ABOUT ROMNEY AND ABOUT a few other subjects, Gov. Rockefeller and Sen. Goldwater share some profound convictions—a fact it is oddly difficult to get people to understand.

It became apparent last July, when on Gen. Eisenhower's Gettysburg farm the astonished GOP congressional regulars learned that a full-fledged "National Republican Citizens Committee" had burst forth.

The Arizona senator denounced this "committee" as a front group, declaring it was operated by the "same old crowd that had been controlling Republican conventions ever since Willkie." It was authoritatively learned—and printed here—that he suspected it was a holding operation involving former Vice Pres. Nixon, Fred Seton, a former Eisenhower cabinet member, and possibly George Romney.

More significantly, Goldwater was convinced that Rockefeller was as "incensed" about the "committee" as he was. It took from Rockefeller, he noted, the money-raiser he wanted for his own New York re-election campaign.

* * *

ROCKEFELLER AND GOLDWATER have these things in common:

They do not admire Nixon or the campaign he ran in 1960. They suspect him of an irresistible desire to prove himself a "king maker"—like Thomas E. Dewey—if a collapsible candidate on his own. They do not overwhelmingly admire Gen. Eisenhower's presidency, considering its overtones of "crusade" and aloofness from actual battle to have been unrealistic. They do not admire Mr. Eisenhower's belated if not halfhearted support of Nixon in 1962.

They suspect that Mr. Eisenhower and the money-raisers, the financial men who levy campaign contributions, may very well have some kind of plan to put over Romney. They suspect Romney of shallowness if not worse—though it may be merely that they resent late-comers.

They genuinely like each other as plain-spoken party regulars, of different viewpoints on issues but within the framework of the traditional GOP. They respect each other. In the field of national power, they consider themselves menaced.

And so the New York governor, re-elected in a northeastern industrial state, and the Arizona conservative have developed a community of interest that certainly will add fascination to the Republican convention next year as the political pot boils.

COLD WAR VETERANS deserve the same kind of GI education assistance given to those who fought in World War II and the Korean conflict, according to Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), left, who has introduced such a bill, and Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.), one of 39 co-sponsors. They appeared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

HONORARY MEMBER Virginia Graham, ABC television personality, gets a bronze membership "card" from American Airlines stewardesses represented by the Transport Workers for aiding them in their fight against a company regulation requiring stewardesses to retire at the "ripe old age" of 32. Surrounding Miss Graham and Nancy Collins, AA system council master executive chairman, are, left to right, AA Stewardesses Mary Fran Dannemiller, Marilyn Lewis and Sherry Ogden, and Trans World Airline's Karolyn Woods.

'Most Explosive Social Problem' Seen in Neglect of Youth Job Crisis

The youth unemployment crisis could be ignited by continued neglect "into one of the most explosive social problems in the nation's history," declared Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning.

The high jobless rate of young people—about triple that of adults—is at the core of the broader unemployment problem and is hardly encouraging for the kind of future adult leadership the nation will require in the space-atomic age, he added.

In releasing a Labor Dept. manpower research bulletin on "Young Workers: Their Special Training Needs," Henning declared that "the facts suggest a crisis of immediacy which has, in truth, totally escaped the widespread concern of our people."

He said the report dramatizes the national need for passage of Kennedy Administration proposals in the areas of economic growth, youth employment and education.

More than 5.5 million young people will be seeking their first jobs in the next three years at the same time that low-skill non-farm jobs are disappearing, the report stressed. They will account for three of every four new labor force entrants in the 1963-65 period.

Of this group of non-college-bound youth, nearly 3.5 million will have high school educations and some 2 million will be school dropouts.

The report said that the job-finding problems of these teenagers are complicated by inadequate training, lack of vocational guidance, poor motivation and frequent job changes.

Additional Difficulties

"The handicaps faced by racial minorities, school dropouts, juvenile delinquents, physically or mentally disabled young persons and rural youth," it added, "create additional personal burdens and employment problems."

The report noted that the youth employment problem will be "especially acute" in some states because the upsurge will not occur uniformly.

The highest rate of increase of 14 to 19-year olds entering the labor force in 1960-65 will occur in the Pacific Coast States. California will have the greatest numerical boost, with a net gain of 297,000; New York will be second with some 113,000.

In 11 states, the 1960-65 growth of teenage jobseekers will exceed the total increase of non-farm jobs which occurred in these states in the 1957-62 period. In a 12th state, West Virginia, the number of teenagers in the work force will decline slightly; this state suffered a loss of 69,000 non-farm jobs in the 1957-62 period.

Overall, these 12 states experienced a total net loss of 358,000 non-farm jobs in 1957-62. And yet they will have an increase of 552,000 teenage jobseekers in 1960-65.

Problem States Listed

The report said these five states will have the greatest difficulty in providing jobs for young workers: New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and West Virginia.

The other states in this group of 12 are: Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Delaware, Louisiana and Montana.

In some states where the youth employment problem may be difficult, the report noted, the situation will be aggravated by the reentry into the labor force of college graduates, youngsters with some college and married women.

The report did note an encouraging trend, however. The proportion of teenagers at work or seeking work who also continue with their schooling increased from about one-third in 1950 to nearly one-half by 1960. The sharpest improvement occurred in the Northeast, where the percentage rose from 25 percent to 47 percent. Even so, the report warned, many out-of-school teenagers will be searching for work even if this trend increases.

The report called attention to large groups of especially disadvantaged youth:

- The 12 million youngsters under 18 from families with total money income of less than $3,000 in 1961, circumstances inducing youngsters to drop out of school, fall into dead-end jobs and repeat the parents' pattern.
- Non-white youths whose jobless rate is double that of other teenagers, even for those with high school diplomas when compared to white graduates, and whose jobs are found primarily in low-paying service occupations and in farm work.
- Juvenile delinquents, rural youth, children of migrant workers, handicapped youth, young married workers and school dropouts.

Minority Trainee Program Broadened

The Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity in Apprenticeship & Training has announced a five-point program to broaden opportunities for minority groups and to enforce a policy of non-discrimination.

Some 160,000 apprentices are enrolled in about 7,000 labor-management programs registered with the Labor Dept. and can be employed on federal contracts.

The 15-member group, at its first meeting, acted to multiply the information centers, such as now operate in New York City and Washington, D. C.; encourage counterpart state groups; gather data on the extent of minority representation in apprenticeship; devise enforcement machinery for the non-discrimination clause; develop pre-apprenticeship guidance programs.

Father of Scholarship Winner Is Dead

A veteran railroad trade unionist, long ill with cancer, was told shortly before he died on Mar. 31 that his son, Allen Thomson, Bisbee, Ariz., had won a four-year AFL-CIO college scholarship.

The AFL-CIO News learned of the death of C. A. Thomson, a former local chairman of the Railroad Signalmen, too late for inclusion in the biographical sketches of the six scholarship winners.

AFL-CIO Study Shows:

High Wages Mark Of Major Exporters

"High-wage, highly-unionized" industries accounted for the bulk of U.S. exports last year, according to an analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research in the current issue of the American Federationist.

The study, an Economic Trends & Outlook feature of the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, points out that the U.S. has "done very well" in the highly competitive world market.

In 1962, as has been the case for more than a half a century, the U.S. exported more goods than it imported. Last year's favorable "balance of trade" came to $4.3 billion.

In "flat contradiction" of the claim that high wages are pricing the U.S. out of world markets, the article points out that the wage gap has been more than overcome through "research, technology and skilled labor."

The problem of world trade—and of the U.S. share of the market—is not a simple question of "underselling" competitors or even of producing better-quality goods, the analysis emphasizes.

One factor is the economic health and prosperity of the nations with which the U.S. trades. The article points out:

"Buyers in other countries, like people everywhere, tend to buy more when they are rich and thriving than when threatened by a rainy day.

Confidence a Factor

"When its economy is booming, a nation imports much more than when there's a recession because the boom not only creates needs for more goods to keep going but also because businessmen feel confident about buying."

Likewise, a slowdown in the U.S. economy may have a crippling effect on the economy of nations which depend on the U.S. as a market for their products — particularly raw materials. This, in turn, reduces their ability to buy American products.

"It is almost as if developing nations catch a virus when the U.S. economy has a cold," the article observes.

Although the U.S. is the world's largest trader, buying and selling more than any other nation, its economy is much less dependent on trade than that of many counties whose "economic life" depends on their ability to export the goods they produce.

So long as world trade grows, the U.S. can increase its exports without damage to the economy of friendly nations, the article notes. But it suggests that before the battle for shares of market becomes too intense, the U.S. should remember that the industrial nations with whom it "competes" for overseas business are also the chief customers for U.S. products and America's political allies.

'Substantial' Joblessness Still Hits Major Areas

Nearly one-third of the nation's 150 major job centers continued to suffer substantial unemployment in April, according to the Labor Dept.'s monthly survey of job trends.

The number of areas with substantial unemployment—that is, 6 percent or more jobless—totaled 47 in April. This compared to 48 in March, 46 in February and 44 in January.

After hitting an all-time high of 101 in April 1961, with the nation in the throes of the 1960-61 recession, the total areas with 6 percent or more jobless moved steadily downward to a total of 40 last November. Since then, there has been a slow climb upward.

The low for the same period in recent years was the total of 35 for April-May 1960.

In the generally static picture for April, there were three changes: New Orleans and the Gary-Hammond-East Chicago area were taken off the substantial unemployment list, and San Jose, Calif., was added.

New Orleans traced its job improvements to space programs, shipbuilding and fabricated metals. The Gary-Hammond-East Chicago area showed improvement in the steel industry. Both were reclassified from the 6 to 8.9 percent category to the 3 to 5.9 percent grouping.

The San Jose area moved into the 6 to 8.9 percent jobless category due to job losses in ordnance and electrical machinery plants and immigration at a rate faster than the growth of local job opportunities.

Within the list of 47 areas with substantial unemployment, there were two changes. Atlantic City improved from the 12 percent or over jobless group to the 9 to 12 percent category with a pickup in resort activity. Miami moved into the 9 to 12 percent jobless category as a job survey of Cuban refugees indicated higher unemployment than estimated earlier.

The Labor Dept. also reported a slight increase in the total of smaller areas with substantial unemployment, which rose to 176 from 174 in March. This list had been down to 166 last October after hitting a high of 231 in mid-1961. The low for this period in recent years was the total of 113 in April-May 1960.

Four smaller areas moved into the 6 percent or over jobless category in April: Visalia, Calif.; Bradenton, Fla.; Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Olean-Salamanca, N. Y.

Two smaller areas were taken off the list: Danville and Paducah, Ky.

Striking Workers At Post-War Low

The number of workers involved in work stoppages beginning in the first quarter of 1963 dropped to the lowest level since the end of World War II, but time lost through stoppages totaled sixteen-one hundredths of 1 percent—higher than in any year since 1959, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. has reported.

Approximately 655 stoppages began in the first three months of this year, and 138 stoppages continuing from last year brought the total number of workers idled to 288,000. The increase in idleness was due largely, the BLS said, to newspaper and longshore strikes.

In March, all measures of strike activity were reported low. Only one stoppage involving 5,000 or more workers was in effect—the New York newspaper strike.

Sponsored by NAM:

Business-Industry 'PAC' Being Formed

A new Business-Industry Political Action Committee, dedicated to the election of "conservative-oriented" candidates for Congress, is being formed under the auspices of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The purpose of the committee will be to raise money from individual "memberships," varying from $10 to $99 a year, to help finance campaigns of such candidates, an NAM spokesman told the AFL-CIO News.

It is "natural" and "to be expected," another spokesman said, that in some areas the operations of BIPAC will bring it to a collision course with the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education.

Formal announcement of BIPAC's organization is expected within a few days, together with names of directors and its staff director.

Specifying that the business-industry committee (BIPAC) is not an official arm of the NAM, the association's vice president for public relations, Edward I. Maher, said that the NAM nevertheless "approved the idea" of such a group and is giving it "support and encouragement."

Five businessmen, all NAM directors, have been named members of what is to be expanded to a 15-member board of directors for BIPAC.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce says that it will have no official connection with BIPAC, but a chamber spokesman added that he had "no doubt" some members will go into the organization.

Earl B. Steele, director of the CofC news bureau, observed that the chamber has had in effect for several years an Action Course in Practical Politics, which supplies literature and other aids to local chambers for political schools.

Operation to Be Permanent

The BIPAC operation, however, appears designed to operate on a major and permanent scale in the money-raising and political education fields to nominate and elect "business-oriented" candidates for Congress.

Denying published reports that the NAM had approved a $100,000 contribution for expenses of BIPAC, Maher conceded that initial funds might be furnished as "walking-around money" in the form of a "loan."

The NAM's director of public affairs, Robert L. Humphrey, is now working to set up the BIPAC organization. Maher said the committee will operate independently of the NAM after it is functioning.

The "membership" scale under consideration, he said, would consist of annual dues of $10, $25 and $99 a year. The membership might be paid by "top" business or corporation people, he indicated, the $25 fee by "second-rank officials such as vice presidents" and the $10 fee by others.

Maher declined to list the NAM directors already chosen as BIPAC directors.

The BIPAC membership fees would come from individuals, not from corporations, according to spokesmen. Corporations are prohibited by the Corrupt Practices Act from use of corporate funds for federal political purposes, just as unions are prohibited from use of union funds.

The presumption would be that BIPAC would seek to elect or re-elect "conservative-oriented" candidates in "marginal" congressional districts, where the edge of victory in the past has been 5 percent or less, or in sparsely settled states where relatively small campaign contributions might have a substantial impact.

Admirer of COPE

Humphrey, the NAM public affairs director who has been instrumental in sparking the BIPAC project, said he had been "behind such a committee for a long time."

"I have always admired the COPE operation," he told the AFL-CIO News. "I have read the records clear back and it is my opinion that no organization in politics could function except along the COPE pattern."

Humphrey rejected a published report that BIPAC expected to be a central organization that would also draw in the American Medical Association's political arm, AMPAC.

Conceding that BIPAC and AMPAC might have "a natural community of interest" in regard to certain candidates, he said BIPAC nevertheless was conceived as strictly a businessmen's committee and it was not to be expected that the AMA would give up its independent operation.

On the selection of candidates to be backed or opposed in various areas, Humphrey said the committee would set up its own procedures which he presumed would then be announced.

Appeal Urged From Ruling On Equal Time

Cleveland — Two unions which lost a representation election among May Co. department store employes here three years ago will urge the National Labor Relations Board to appeal a decision of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, they said.

The court ruled that management was not guilty of an unfair labor practice when it refused to give union organizers equal time and facilities to talk to store workers during working hours.

"The issue is an important one and should be appealed," union attorneys said. "Such conduct by an employer is, we feel, objectionable."

The unions involved are the Retail Clerks Local 880, and Office Employes, Local 17.

The Cincinnati court reversed an NLRB finding that the company was guilty of an unfair practice because company officials called employe meetings during working hours to talk about the union, but refused equal time to the unions.

In the Apr. 28, 1960, election the employes voted 1,959-891 against union representation. An NLRB trial examiner recommended dismissal of the union charge but the board voted 3-2 against dismissal.

Ex-YCW President Named to CLC Post

Ottawa, Ont. — Romeo Maione, assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the Canadian Catholic Conference and from 1957 to 1961 world president of the Young Christian Workers, has been named assistant director of the Canadian Labor Congress Intl. Affairs Dept.

MORE THAN 4,500 UNION MEMBERS and their families stand for the singing of the national anthem at the East Tennessee labor rally called in Kingsport, Tenn., to solidify support behind five printing trade unions on strike since Mar. 11 against the Kingsport Press. After a parade through the town, rally speakers called for intensified backing of the 1,600 members of the Bookbinders, Electrotypers, Machinists, Printing Pressmen and Typographers seeking a fair contract from the company, one of the nation's largest book printing firms.

ILGWU Releases New Fashion Film

A new edition of a feature that has always proved helpful in luring women members to union meetings has now been made available by the Ladies' Garment Workers, a 12-minute color film, "Fashions — 1963," which shows what's new in wearing apparel.

Mrs. Min Matheson, ILGWU Union Label Dept. director, also has announced the availability of a series of fashion booklets: How to Be Well Dressed; Your Trousseau and How to Plan It; Travel in Style; How to Dress Your Little Girl; Mother-Daughter Guide to Fashion; College Wardrobe and Your Dream Wardrobe.

Requests for showing of the film and copies of the booklets, both of which are free, should be sent to the ILGWU Union Label Dept., 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

IBEW Wins 6 to 12 Cents In Omaha

Omaha—The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, representing 3,500 workers at the Western Electric Co.'s Omaha works here, has scheduled a membership meeting May 19 for a vote on proposed wage increases of 6 to 12 cents an hour, effective May 13.

IBEW Local 1974 and management have agreed to extend other terms of the agreement while negotiations continue on a week-to-week basis during the next 90 days, with the union preserving its right to strike.

IBEW Intl. Rep. R. K. Garrity said these issues have not been settled:

- A union request for improvement of a company-paid hospitalization and medical care plan.
- Revision of the current pension, vacation and holiday plans to provide better benefits.

The IBEW has had bargaining rights at the Omaha plant since 1957. The contract which the parties have agreed to extend had a May 12 termination date. This is the first time, Garrity said, that a full agreement has not been negotiated by the termination date.

The settlement on wages may set a pattern for negotiations between Western Electric and the union in other IBEW-represented units, according to Paul Menger, IBEW director of manufacturing operations.

IAM-Boeing Contract Ratified in Secret Vote

St. Louis—Machinists and aerospace workers employed by the Boeing Co. have voted by secret ballot to ratify a new three-year contract negotiated by the IAM and the company. The count was 14,205 yes, 4,688 no, with 24 void ballots.

IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes made the announcement of the vote here to signal the conclusion of contract talks between the IAM and the aerospace and missile industry. Boeing was the last to settle with the union, which postponed several strike deadlines and took the third and final vote on contract terms at the request of Pres. Kennedy.

Boeing employes previously had voted down two other contract proposals by management. In his statement here, Hayes reported that 18,917 ballots were cast by Boeing workers at all primary and remote locations—at Seattle, Wichita and Cape Canaveral installations of the company, and at 17 Minuteman and Sky-speed missile bases.

Said Hayes: "The tally was certified by an official observer from Local 834 in Wichita, Dist. 751 in Seattle, and an official representative of the National Labor Relations Board," which supervised the balloting.

The new agrement provides first year wage increases of 11 to 14 cents an hour retroactive to Sept. 16, 1962; further hikes of 5.5 to 9 cents in the second and third years; a new cost-of-living clause; improvements in health and welfare benefits, pensions, union security and job evaluation, with job inequities to be corrected at an additional cost of $3.25 million within six months.

Under a revised rating system which was a major point in negotiations, management agreed to give greater weight to seniority in layoffs, downgradings and recall of workers.

The settlement was hailed by Federal Mediation Dir. William Simkin as "a new tribute" to the effectiveness of free collective bargaining, achieved without a "serious work stoppage." IAM Vice Pres. Harold J. Gibson, Seattle, said the new pact brings noteworthy improvements of which the employes "can justly be proud."

The IAM said the contract will add about $1 million a month to the wages of 40,000 Boeing workers in the first year—and additional amounts later. After the third raise, rates will range from $2.205 to $3.585 an hour.

Capital Prelate Assails 'Sin of Discrimination'

A call for united action by members of all faiths to "root out the social evils that blight the nation's capital" was issued by the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, archbishop of the Washington Catholic diocese, at the 25th annual meeting of the Washington Urban League.

The League re-elected Pres. J. C. Turner of the Greater Washington Central Labor Council to another three-year term as a board member. Also on the board but not up for re-election are Assistant Dir. Donald Slaiman, AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, and Business Rep. Joseph Beavers of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

Archbishop O'Boyle called on civic groups to take the lead in "fighting the sin of discrimination" and urged a program including merit hiring and promotion, adequate housing open to all, the breaking down of ignorance and indifference to racial crises, and concentrated effort to help young people.

He urged "deliberate and well planned efforts" by all citizens to know one another and "understand one another's views and problems." He suggested that critics of open housing occupancy "examine some of our properly integrated neighborhoods to see what happens when all citizens, regardless of color, live harmoniously in pleasant surroundings."

Executive Dir. Sterling Tucker reported that in 1962 the league started three new programs and continued to make progress in vocational services, leadership training, housing, welfare and health programs. The new programs deal with young people of school age, new neighbors, and job placement.

Tucker reported also that discrimination against Negroes in housing has brought the city to the edge of serious trouble.

A $1,000 CHECK for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference is presented to a Birmingham, Ala., clergyman by officers of Drug & Hospital Employes' Local 1199, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, at a New York rally attended by 2,500 workers. Left to right: Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, New York City Central Labor Council; Vice Pres. Cleveland Robinson, RWDSU Dist. 65; Rev. Nelson H. Smith, head of the Alabama organization; Vice Pres. W. J. Taylor of Local 1199; Rev. George Lawrence of Antioch Baptist Church, and RWDSU Dist. 65 Pres. David Livingston. The rally celebrated enactment of the hospital bargaining bill and the fourth anniversary of the local's 46-day strike against seven hospitals.

Agreement on Job Security Pact Splits Work Among Firm's Plants

New York—A unique job-security plan providing for an equitable division of jobs in Maidenform, Inc., plants in New Jersey, West Virginia and Puerto Rico has been negotiated by the Ladies' Garment Workers and the company.

The new job-security provisions are incorporated in a national agreement announced by ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky. Separate economic provisions have been negotiated for 711 workers in Maidenform's Bayonne, N. J., and Perth Amboy plants, and negotiations in three West Virginia plants are continuing, the union said.

For more than a year the union, alarmed by the job decline in mainland plants, urged measures to end an apparent policy of job attrition with no replacements for those retiring or leaving for other reasons. Said Dubinsky of the new pact:

"There are signs that Maidenform will expand and diversify its production in the future. The new job-security contract insures that . . . this will not be done at the cost of jobs lost by senior company employes."

The new agreement is keyed to employment on the base date of Mar. 16, 1963. It provides that:

- If production remains stable, there will be no reduction in jobs in the five mainland plants. Vacancies will be filled to maintain the Mar. 16, 1963, level at plants in Bayonne, Perth Amboy and Princeton, N. J., and Clarksburg and Huntington, W. Va.
- If the need for workers declines and the number of jobs is to be reduced from the Mar. 16 level, the cut will apply equally to mainland and island plants. An upturn in production would signal a recall on an equitable basis.
- An increase in jobs beyond the level of the base date would leave management free to expand production without limitations. Puerto Rico production can be increased, provided there is no reduction of jobs in mainland plants below the Mar. 16, 1963, level.

In the new pact the company also agrees that all expansion in its women's apparel production will be in shops under ILGWU contracts.

The union said the agreement removes the fear that job reduction, if unregulated, would seriously affect the economic life of Bayonne and Perth Amboy because of the number of work opportunities involved.

ILGWU Vice Pres. Edward Kramer reported these gains in benefits for 570 Maidenform workers in Bayonne and 141 in the Perth Amboy plant:

Wages Up $3-4

A 5 percent wage boost for pieceworkers; 5 percent more an hour or $3 a week, whichever is greater, for time workers; and a $4 weekly raise for material handlers. All minimums are raised, with the operator's minimum going to $1.40 an hour as of Apr. 1, to $1.45 next September and to $1.50 a year later.

West Virginia negotiations are continuing under the direction of ILGWU Vice Pres. Angela Bambace.

Strong Merchant Fleet Pressed by Seafarers

A vigorous program to enlarge and strengthen the American-flag merchant fleet and provide expanded job opportunities for seamen was given strong backing by the Seafarers at their 11th biennial convention in Washington, D. C.

Pres. Paul Hall and other top officers were retained for another term by some 250 delegates representing the Atlantic, Pacific, Gulf Coast and inland waters and the maritime, fishing, canning and allied industries, and transportation services.

To promote more effective functioning of the union and to implement convention resolutions, the delegates approved a series of changes in the SIU constitution, authorized the establishment of several new departments, and increased per capita payments by affiliated unions to a total of 75 cents per member per month.

The new departments to be established are Organization, Research & Education, Civil Rights, Intl. Affairs, Legislation, and Public Relations.

Major speeches during the five-day convention were made by Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William P. Schnitzler of the AFL-CIO; U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States deLesseps S. Morrison; Under Sec. of Commerce Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr.; Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning; Maitland Pennington, special assistant to the Maritime Administrator; National Labor Relations Board Solicitor William Feldesman, and Federal Mediation Director William Simkin.

Speakers from Congress included Senators E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska), Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), Russell B. Long (D-La.), Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), Frank E. Moss (D-Utah), William Proxmire (D-Wis.), and Harrison A. Williams, Jr.; and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.).

Officers elected, besides Hall, are Executive Vice Presidents Morris Weisberger, Pacific district; Hal Banks, Canada; Cal Tanner, Atlantic, Gulf & Lakes; and Vice Presidents Dominic Abata, transportation services; Lester Ballinger, cannery workers; Lester Caveny, fish cannery workers; Capt. John M. Fox, Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific; Mrs. Andrea Gomez, Cannery Workers; George Johansen, Alaska Fishermen's Union; William W. Jordan, Jr., Marine Firemen; Burt E. Lanpher, Staff Officers' Association; L. P. Taylor, Intl. Union of Petroleum Workers, and Ed Turner, Marine Cooks and Stewards.

Delegates approved 91 resolutions and recommendations involving problems in the industries with which the union bargains, and social welfare programs.

Douglas congratulated the SIU on the "great victory for decent trade unionism" won by 6,000 Chicago cab drivers who left the expelled Teamsters and joined the Seafarers. Now "there are no payoffs and no sweetheart contracts," Douglas said, "and Teamster locals in other cities want to break away" from Pres. James R. Hoffa and Joey Glimco of the IBT. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt interests.

Welfare Benefits Bettered:

Clothing Union Wins 17.5 Cents in Wages

New York—A new three-year contract providing wage increases of 17.5 cents an hour, increased health and welfare benefits and a third week of vacation has been won by the Clothing Workers for 125,000 members in the men's and boys' clothing industry.

Employers estimated the cost of the contract "package" at 26 cents an hour. The agreement, covering 700 clothing manufacturers in all parts of the country, was reached by the ACWA and the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the U.S. after two months of negotiations.

The current contract expires June 1, when the wage and welfare benefits of the new pact become effective. The additional week of vacation starts next year for all workers with a year or more of service. Wages and working conditions may be reopened at the end of the first and second years.

Directors of the employers' group and ACWA local unions and joint boards have ben asked to ratify the new agreement, including these welfare plan improvements:

- An increase in disability benefits to 50 percent of earnings, or $27 to $50 a week in payments.
- A $5 boost in daily hospital allowances for members and their dependents—from $18 a day to $23.
- A raise in the incidental hospital expense allowance from $75 to $125 for members, and from $75 to $100 for dependents.
- An increase in surgical payments, which are on a fixed-fee schedule, from the $275 maximum to $300 for both members and dependents.

The union negotiators were headed by ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg. Board Chairman Morton J. Baum of the Hickey-Freeman Co. was head of the employers' labor committee.

Potofsky said the union's "major goals of a substantial wage increase, another week of vacation and improvements in the health and welfare program have been realized" and expressed confidence that union members "will give this agreement their whole-hearted approval."

Board's Approach 'Sensible'—Meany

St. Louis—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told newsmen here that he considered the presidential emergency board's recommendations "a sensible approach" to solution of the railroad work rules controversy.

He said he is "not pessimistic" about the chances of a settlement during the 30-day negotiating period. If employers will agree with the unions that the economic consequences of wiping out jobs is a problem for the entire industry, it will be a "first step" towards working out solutions, Meany declared.

Rail Bargaining Climate Better, Board Reports

(Continued from Page 1)

erally by a wide margin," it said, adding:

"Unfortunately the industry's techniques for collective bargaining have not made similar advances."

Noting that the parties are required to maintain the status quo for only 30 days after the emergency board's report, the board members warned:

"There has been an unfortunate tendency in this industry to postpone real collective bargaining until the final hour. That hour is about to strike. . . . This dispute can and must be resolved, promptly and constructively, peacefully and privately."

To resolve the locomotive firemen dispute, the emergency board recommended a national rule providing that:

- A railroad may eliminate a fireman's job when it becomes vacant rather than hire a new employe. However, the union may challenge the job discontinuance on the basis that it would "endanger safety or unduly burden other employes." If the parties could not agree, the issue would be referred to a "referee."
- No regularly employed fireman, unless hired after it was evident that his job might be eliminated, would be laid off. Firemen with less than 10 years seniority could, however, be transferred to other rail jobs with guarantee against reduced earnings for at least five years.
- Employes should have the option of receiving a special severance allowance and an educational or retraining scholarship, or, in the case of older workers, an early retirement plan financed by the railroads.

In another section of the report, the board emphasized "the important human values involved" in technological changes "over which the employes have had no control."

Both railroads and society have benefitted by these changes, the board said, and "should share generously in the burdens which have been cast upon the workers by the dislocations."

This recommendation contrasts with the presidential commission's 1962 report which proposed job guarantees only for workers with more than 10 years seniority and with the original railroad proposal to abolish—immediately and outright—the use of firemen-helpers on freight trains.

The board gave indirect support to the unions' contention that railroads generally are not in the dire financial straits they claim, but are in fact prosperous, by declaring:

"We were impressed with the evidence submitted to us that the vitality and earning capacity of the railroads as a whole are improving, that the productivity of its workers is rising at a rapid rate and that the industry can face the future with confidence and even optimism."

Three-Year Drive Wins Plant for IWA

Durham, Ont.—The Woodworkers have won bargaining rights for nearly 250 employes of the Maple Leaf Veneer Co. here after a three-year organizing campaign.

Twice previously the union lost Ontario Labor Relations Board elections after anti-IWA petitions were circulated. Another petition made the rounds this year but it did not win enough support to weaken the IWA application and the board issued a certificate.

High Court Upholds NLRB:

'Super-Seniority' Outlawed As Lure to Strikebreakers

The Supreme Court has knocked out as illegal the "super-seniority" policy by which business firms have attempted to undermine unions through awards of "extra" seniority to employes they can induce into strikebreaking.

The court unanimously upheld the National Labor Relations Board decision that it was an unfair labor practice for an employer to give 20-year ""extra" employment credits both to new employes and union members who deserted a strike to return to work.

The case involved the Erie Resistor Corp., Erie, Pa., which was struck by Local 613 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers after a contract expired Mar. 31, 1959.

The company notified the local on May 28, 1959, that "super-seniority" terms would be put into effect. Pleading the pressure of intense competition and strong demands from its customers for continued service, the company argued that it had a legitimate business motive in staying in operation. It had, in fact, continued operations although at a sharply reduced pace throughout April and May.

Local 613 voted on May 29 to continue its strike specifically in protest of the super-seniority plan, and at that time, the NLRB later ruled, the strike became an unfair labor practice dispute.

The board in a unanimous decision held that all strikers not previously replaced permanently were entitled to reinstatement when the strike was abandoned, regardless of the company's desire to implement its "super-seniority" pledges to workers acquired after that date. The board also ordered back pay for workers not reinstated and for layoff periods they later suffered by the company's application of the super-seniority formula.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals refused to issue a compliance order, rejecting the labor board's ruling that a preferential seniority policy is invalid per se during a strike. The NLRB took the case to the Supreme Court for review.

6th Circuit Upheld

In another case the 9th U.S. Circuit Court reached the same decision as the 3rd Circuit, but in still a third case the 6th U.S. Circuit Court reached the opposite conclusion. The effect of the Supreme Court's decision in the Erie Resistor case is to uphold the NLRB and the 6th U.S. Circuit Court.

The board's decision, overruling its trial examiner in the Erie case, pointed out that super-seniority obviously offered special individual benefits to strikers to induce them to abandon a walkout. It continued:

"Employes are henceforth divided into two groups: those who stayed with the union to the end and lost their seniority, and those who returned before the end of the strike and thereby gained extra seniority.

"This difference is re-emphasized with each subsequent layoff, for those who supported the union most faithfully are likely to be the first laid off . . . The effective reward of nonstrikers and punishment of strikers inherent in super-seniority stands as an ever-present reminder of the dangers connected with striking, and with union activities in general."

Noting this language with approval, the Supreme Court in its opinion, written by Justice Byron R. White, said that super-seniority "by its very terms operates to discriminate between strikers and nonstrikers, both during and after a strike, and its destructive impact upon the strike and union activity cannot be doubted."

The concern of Congress "for the integrity of the strike weapon" has remained constant, White observed, and the labor board has been given a "special function of applying the general provisions" of the law "to the complexities of industrial life."

The issue of "super-seniority," he said, "lay well within the mainstream" of the NLRB's function.

Effect Described

The effect of the company's "super-seniority" announcement was described by the court. The first official announcement was made June 10, 1959, and by June 14 the company had picked up 34 "new" employes, 47 others recalled from layoff status, and 23 returning strikers.

The union offered to give up certain contract demands if the company would abandon super-seniority or arbitrate. The company refused, and in the following week, 64 strikers and 21 replacements took jobs. The number of returned strikers rose to 125 the following week and the local surrendered. The eventual upshot was that 129 strikers were not returned to their jobs and 173 workers quit the local.

The "claimed business purpose" of the company was not sufficient to outweigh the "necessary harm to employe rights" in this procedure, the NLRB held, and the court said that this was "a judgment which we sustain."

The case was remanded to the appellate court for further proceedings including reinstatement of the strikers and back pay.

High Court Establishes Dues Dissenters' Rule

(Continued from Page 1)

ten by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., with Justice John Marshall Harlan dissenting. Justice Arthur J. Goldberg did not participate in the case.

The court made it clear—as it had done in June 1961 in a decision reversing a Georgia state court injunction—that the union-shop section of the Railway Labor Act was valid and remained in effect.

The Brennan opinion reversed the North Carolina injunction and said the 37 plaintiffs within a reasonable time must pay to the unions "all sums required" by a union-shop contract clause "including arrears."

The majority also observed that in the trial court only 14 of the 37 plaintiffs testified that they objected to use of dues money for political causes, and that no evidence was offered or finding made as to the proportion of dues funds thus expended.

Any dissenter refusing to pay up his dues arrears or failing to prove his objection to the political use of part of the dues must be dropped from the case, Brennan's decision declared.

The trial court, the high court ruled, could not apply the principles of the decision without a finding of the amount of political expenditures and the proportion to total expenditures including purposes "germane to collective bargaining."

The court, in saying that unions "bear the burden" of proving the proportion of political spending acknowledged that "absolute precision" is not to be expected.

It acknowledged the "practical difficulties" arising from the fact political expenditures may rise or drop. And it reiterated that no court could "infringe the unions' right" of uniform dues and assessments for activities "germane" to bargaining and their right to make political expenditures from dues paid by "non-dissenters."

The court suggested that if a union "agreed upon a formula" for determining political spending and "made available a simple procedure" for dissenters to avoid this proportion of dues, "prolonged and extensive litigation" might be avoided.

The court attached as an appendix to the decision a section of a British Trade Union Act of 1913 allowing dissenters to claim exemption from payments into a political fund held separately. It also attached a copy of the form of the exemption notice.

U.S. DEPT. OF TREASURY Family Program Citation was presented to Auxiliary of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 5-246A, Augusta, Kans., for being the first group in the country to achieve its goal in the 1963 Freedom Bond Drive. Shown at the ceremony, held by the local in honor of the Auxiliary, are, from left, Mrs. Marcella S. Beatty, executive director of the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries; Mrs. Billy Butler, president of the honored Auxiliary; Mrs. Florence Smith, president of the Kansas State Council of AFL-CIO Auxiliaries; Lorin Sibley, savings bond drive director for Kansas, and OCAW Pres. O. A. Knight.

THESE LOS ANGELES congressmen were among members of the state's congressional delegation who met with William J. Bassett, executive secretary of the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor, when he was in Washington, D. C., for a White House luncheon. Left to right: Rep. Edward R. Roybal, Bassett, Rep. Charles H. Wilson, and Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, all Democrats.

U.S. Child Care Center Proposed by Humphrey

Construction of a national child care center in the nation's capital, to serve as a model for other centers and as a laboratory for research in the problems of dependent children who require long-range care, has been proposed by Sen. Hubert M. Humphrey.

Humphrey spoke at an AFL-CIO Community Service Activities conference on Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Problems after a visit to Junior Village, District of Columbia home for dependent youngsters. He is a Minnesota Democrat.

A national center, he said, would be an aid to research and would help ease the "overcrowding and hopelessness" he found at Junior Village. There has been enough publicity, indignation and anger "over the appalling and degrading conditions" at the institution, said Humphrey, adding:

"I am sick and tired of knowing that nurses must feed 12 or more babies from the same spoon and that children must be denied the privilege of going to the bath room in the morning because there aren't enough hands to help them."

Humphrey said he will introduce legislation for a national child care center, and predicted passage by Congress of the pending Youth Employment bill.

CSA Dir. Leo Perlis called on labor to push for concerted action in the field of juvenile delinquency, youth employment, and a National Service Corps. Other speakers were David Hackett, special assistant to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy; James E. McCarthy, director of Mobilization for Youth, New York City; and Clinton Fair, AFL-CIO legislative representative.

Hackett said present programs dealing with delinquency are not adequate and called for a comprehensive program dealing with youth problems at the community level. McCarthy reported that major needs of young people on New York's lower East Side are education and employment. Fair called on labor to support legislation to help meet youth problems.

Most of the conference delegates were from towns which have received grants from the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Crime.

Hoffa, 6 Others Indicted On Jury-Fixing Charge

Nashville—A federal grand jury has indicted Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa and six other persons on charges of attempting to fix the jury that heard Hoffa's 1962 trial here on an accusation of illegally accepting payments from an employer.

Hoffa promptly said he would plead not guilty.

The 1962 trial, involving a government charge that Hoffa had accepted $1 million in illegal payments from Commercial Carriers, Inc., an automobile transport firm, ended in a mistrial when the jury failed to agree on a verdict.

U.S. District Judge William E. Miller, who presided, announced that two jurors had been dismissed at a closed hearing during the trial and that attempts had been made to influence them. He ordered a special grand jury to investigate.

Hoffa was indicted on one count of conspiracy to influence two jurors and a prospective juror, the Justice Dept. announced in Washington, "in exchange for money or favors."

Hoffa and the other six were named in one count each of attempting to influence specific jurors. The others are:

Ewing King, president of Teamsters Local 327, Nashville.

Allen Dorfman, Chicago insurance broker who has handled Teamsters' insurance.

Larry Campbell, a business agent of Teamsters Local 299, Detroit, of which Hoffa is president.

Thomas E. Parks, Nashville, Campbell's uncle.

Nicholas J. Tweel, Huntington, W. Va., president of Continental Tobacco Co.

Lawrence W. Medlin, Nashville, a merchant.

This is the fifth federal indictment of Hoffa since 1957. He has been acquitted in two cases (once after a hung jury), had a mistrial in the third, has not yet been tried in the fourth. In the latter case an original indictment was dismissed as defective and he was reindicted.

The Teamsters were expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

GO with the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Kennedy Asks Jobless Pay Overhaul

Urges Federal Plan For Long-Term Idle

Pres. Kennedy has renewed a request to Congress for federal unemployment compensation standards which would result in higher weekly benefit ceilings and extended coverage. He also proposed a new permanent system of supplemental federal benefits that would enable jobless workers to receive up to 52 weeks of payments.

An earlier proposal, submitted to Congress last year and not acted on, would have limited the combined state and federal benefits to a maximum of 39 weeks.

In expanding his 1962 request, Kennedy noted that when benefits were temporarily extended in 1961, "nearly two-thirds (of eligible workers) exhausted the 13 additional weeks of benefits" without finding a job.

"More and more workers have remained unemployed for long periods of time in the last few years," the President observed.

Kennedy's proposal for basic reforms and improvements in unemployment insurance was hailed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting in St. Louis.

The council said congressional action is essential to repair "basic weaknesses" of the system which have shown up during periods of severe unemployment and to relieve pressures on state legislatures to reduce benefits and extend disqualifications.

Because of inadequate state programs, the council noted, at least one-third of the unemployed did not receive benefits during the last three recessions, and less than 20 percent of wages lost because of unemployment were recovered through jobless benefits.

The new bill would provide:

- Extension of coverage to an estimated 3 million additional workers. Employers of one or more workers would be brought under the act, as compared with the present standard of four or more.
- States would be required to provide weekly benefits equal to one-half of wages up to a maximum of 50 percent of the average statewide wages in 1966, advancing by 1970 to two-thirds of the average.
- Beginning with the 27th week of unemployment, a worker who has exhausted his state benefits would receive an additional 13 weeks of federal benefits if he had worked at least 26 weeks in the preceding year and 78 weeks in the last three years. For each two weeks of employment beyond the 78 weeks, he would be entitled to another week of extended benefits to a maximum of 26 weeks.
- To finance the program, the taxable wage base under federal law would be raised from the present $3,000 to $5,200 and the regular federal unemployment tax of four-tenths of 1 percent would go up to seven-tenths.
- An advisory committee representing employers, workers, government and public experts would be established to review the program.

Kennedy's 1961 proposal was similar in its provisions for an additional 13 weeks of benefits, but it lowered the eligibility requirements during periods of continued heavy unemployment. It also limited added benefits to half the amount provided by the state, which would result in less than a 39-week maximum in some states.

CONGRESSMEN AND SENATORS from both political parties filled the tables at the annual congressional dinner and reception given by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther is shown addressing the group. Other speakers included the majority and minority leaders of the House and the Democratic and Republican whips of the Senate.

Struck Railroad Spurns Arbitration

Rail unions accepted but management flatly turned down a request by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz for arbitration of the Florida East Coast Railway dispute.

Non-operating unions struck Jan. 23 after the railroad refused to match the 10.28-cent hourly raise agreed to last year by all other railroads.

The arbitration proposal was turned down by Edward W. Ball, board chairman of the railroad, and accepted by G. E. Leighty, chairman of the coordinating committee of the non-op unions.

IUD Bids Congress Act For Full Employment

Members of Congress from both political parties, attending the annual congressional dinner of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., were urged to "get the legislative process in high gear and do the things that will make it possible to put America back to work."

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther warned that the nation faces a "recurring crisis" in collective bargaining because labor and management by themselves "can't solve the problem of unemployment."

With full employment, he declared, "95 percent of the problems at the bargaining table would evaporate."

Reuther urged Congress to implement the "never used" Employment Act of 1946, "which commits our country to pursue public policies . . . to achieve maximum employment, maximum production and maximum purchasing power."

He listed as other areas of legislative priority:

- Remedying the "very serious deficit" in education.
- Health care for the aged "when their medical needs are the greatest, their economic resources are the most inadequate."
- Action in the field of civil and human rights. Declaring that "neither political party can be proud of its failure" in this area, Reuther called on members of both parties to join in "a coalition of responsibility and public conscience so that America can move to bridge that moral gap between what we preach and what we practice."

The gathering also heard from the Democratic and Republican leaders in the House—Majority Leader Carl Albert (Okla.) and Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) — and the assistant leaders in the Senate — Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and GOP Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.).

In a dramatic display of bipartisan opposition to the radical right, Humphrey praised Kuchel's recent speech denouncing extremist "fright" groups as "one of the finest ever delivered in the Senate " and led an ovation for the Californian.

Albert told the group that Administration leaders in the House "intend to pass" both the Youth Opportunities bill and fair employment legislation.

Kuchel urged labor to work for its goals within the Republican Party as well as the Democratic Party and Halleck charged that labor's rights are threatened by "undue" government interference in collective bargaining.

Earlier the IUD executive board denounced "police brutality" against Negroes in Birmingham and declared:

"The strength of the federal government must be brought to bear upon the side of those who dare stand up for their constitutionally guaranteed civil rights."

In another statement, issued jointly with a group of economists, educators and businessmen, the IUD called for concentrating tax cuts in the lower-income brackets.

5-18-63

Administration Wins Debt Rise, Lashes GOP 'Irresponsibility'

The Administration won a major victory— by a narrow nine-vote margin—as the House beat back a Republican effort to block a temporary increase in the national debt calling.

Democratic leaders had warned that if the GOP's self-described "economy" move had succeded, it would have generated a fiscal crisis forcing the government to leave bills unpaid, slow down defense procurement, hold up welfare grants to states, and dump federally-held home mortgages on the private market in order to raise cash.

The Administration appeared headed for another victory in the Senate, where a House-passed feed grain bill, which could play an important part in a wheat farmers' referendum May 21, moved towards expected passage.

Passage of the bill, Kennedy supporters believed, might weaken opposition to the wheat acreage controls because farmers would be able to use some land diverted from wheat for feed grains. The GOP had sought to delay passage until after the referendum, which requires a two-thirds vote by farmers to continue wheat supports.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, a series of GOP amendments had been beaten back by substantial margins.

Ignoring charges of "fiscal irresponsibility," House GOP members voted with near unanimity against the debt ceiling rise which Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon, a Republican, had said was necessary to meet seasonal fluctuations in government income and spending.

On the final passage vote of 213-204, only one Republican—Rep. Joseph W. Martin (Mass.)—voted to raise the debt ceiling. But a majority of southern Democrats, including some who usually vote with the GOP, supported their party leadership. The vote had been delayed a week in order to give the Administration more time to round up votes. The bill is now expected to pass the Senate without difficulty.

A repeat battle is likely later this year, however, since the House bill merely covers the period through August, after which further action would be necessary to prevent the legal limit from dropping from a temporary $309 billion figure to its "permanent" ceiling of $285 billion. An even higher temporary ceiling will be needed then, Treasury officials have said.

GOP Substitute Beaten

Before the final vote, the GOP was defeated 222-195 on a substitute motion to set a permanent ceiling of $305 billion. Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.), ranking Republican on the Ways & Means Committee, argued that this would force the Kennedy Administration to "live within its means." He said an increase in the debt ceiling above that amount would be a "stamp of approval" by Congress on a budget deficit.

Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) stepped down from the rostrum to remind the Republicans that House Democrats had helped the Treasury with recurrent debt management problems by voting to raise the ceiling on eight occasions during the Eisenhower Administration.

In other congressional developments:

- A House Education & Labor subcommittee voted unanimously to attach an anti-segregation amendment to a bill continuing the program of aid to federally-impacted schools for another year. The amendment would require school districts receiving grants because of large numbers of federal civilian or military personnel in the area to file desegregation plans with the U.S. Office of Education—and carry them out within the year.
- Labor's support for a bill to finance a "public defender" system for defendants in federal courts who are unable to afford to hire an attorney was emphasized in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee. AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said the right to adequate counsel is "essential to . . . basic democratic procedures."
- The supplemental appropriations bill containing $450 million for job-creating public works in areas of heavy unemployment was cleared in final form by both houses and sent to the President's desk for signature.

Fiberglass Workers Step Up Organizing

Philadelphia — The Glass Bottle Blowers' Fiberglass division, which has already organized the bulk of its industry, has undertaken a drive to complete its unionization and to institute nationwide bargaining for all plants.

Suffridge Hits 'Work' Group On Statement

The National Right to Work Committee has been accused by a union president of "a flagrant misrepresentation" of the views of the governor of Oklahoma on laws to ban the union shop.

Pres. James A. Suffridge of the Retail Clerks charged in a statement that a nationally-distributed leaflet put out by the "work" committee includes a quotation from Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon (R) which he had not authorized and which gives a "false impression" of his views.

Suffridge, who is a vice president of the AFL-CIO, noted that Bellmon had voted against a so-called "right-to-work" bill when he was a member of the legislature and at a recent news conference said that while he will submit the issue to referendum if a pending initiative petition is validated by the State Supreme Court, he would not take any part in the campaign.

The "work" leaflet "should be withdrawn from circulation and a public explanation should be made by the National Right to Work Committee," Suffridge declared.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 25, 1963 | No. 21

Meany Challenges Aid Cut, Says 'We'll Pay Our Share'

CEREMONIAL CUTTING OF A RIBBON opens the Union-Industries Show in St. Louis. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wields the scissors. Shown with him, left to right, are: Federation Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge, St. Louis Mayor Raymond Tucker, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept., Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the department.

Cold War Not Won, He Tells Congress

By David L. Perlman

American workers are prepared to pay their share, "out of humanity and enlightened self-interest, toward the cost of preserving liberty and peace," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Meany, speaking "as the representative of the largest single group of taxpayers in America," urged the committee to key its foreign aid authorization bill to "what is required" to achieve the nation's aim, and "not upon a mournful estimate of what we can 'afford' in budgetary terms."

He had dissented from budget-cutting recommendations of an advisory committee headed by former Gen. Lucius Clay, Meany said, because events of the past year have proved that "the need for foreign aid has not diminished . . . No decisive victory has yet been won in the battle between liberty and slavery."

Meany declared:

"We need to win the cold war, and we need to win it no matter what the cost to our treasury."

U.S. military power, combined with "a strong, effective foreign aid program," he said, is the nation's "greatest insurance" against a "hot" war which would destroy countless lives "and blow up more dollars in a few hours than our aid programs have cost since their beginning."

Meany told the committee that the AFL-CIO spends 23 percent of its budget on its own foreign aid program—to help strengthen free trade unions abroad—and is "proud of what it has accomplished."

The AFL-CIO "will never collect a cent in dues for these efforts," Meany said. "We look for our reward in the greater security of our country and the advance of human freedom."

(Continued on Page 12)

Equal Pay Bill Passes Congress

A labor-backed equal pay for women bill moved through both the House and Senate in less than a week—after an 18-year campaign for a federal law to outlaw wage discrimination because of sex. Similar legislation had been introduced in every Congress since 1945.

The Administration-supported measure was approved by voice vote in both houses. Minor differences must be resolved before the bill can be sent to the White House.

The legislation, which does not take effect until one year after enactment, prohibits wage discrimination by employers covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act but does not apply to firms not under the wage-hour law.

Both the House and Senate bills prohibit employers from "equalizing" wages by lowering higher rates for men instead of raising lower wages paid to women. The AFL-CIO had said this protection against wage cuts

(Continued on Page 11)

In Reuther Testimony:

5-Point Job Program Offered to Congress

The United States can't depend on "the blind force of the market place" to solve "persistent and intolerably high" unemployment, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Reuther, chairman of the federation's Economic Policy Committee, proposed an immediate five-point "program for full employment" and called for policies to keep pace with the fluctuating manpower needs of a rapidly-changing technology.

He warned that the lack of a national policy has "placed increasing strains on the collective bargaining process" since "no amount of collective bargaining can create enough jobs to go around—and the lack of enough jobs can seriously cripple some of the programs which are worked out at the bargaining table."

Reuther told the subcommittee, headed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), that unemployment resulting from a lack of demand can be reduced through:

- An immediate $10 billion tax cut concentrated in the lowest income brackets.
- Increased consumer purchasing power through such programs as hospital care for the aged, improved unemployment insurance, and measures to help raise the income of low-paid groups such as migrant farm workers.
- "A major increase in public

(Continued on Page 12)

Meany Condemns School Expulsions

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany registered an immediate protest with Birmingham Schools Supt. Theo R. Wright over the expulsion and suspension of more than 1,000 school children for taking part in anti-segregation demonstrations.

In a telegram, Meany called for reinstatement of the children and "a full and fair hearing" for each of them on any specific charges. Labor "insists," he declared, that their right to public education "must not be arbitrarily denied them and their schooling must not be disrupted."

Subsequently, Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the children reinstated.

Label Show Demonstrates Union Skills

By Willard Shelton

St. Louis—Labor is "big in America," and the Union-Industries Show is evidence of it, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the audience at opening ceremonies here of the big 370-place exhibition showing the products and services of labor and management in cooperation.

With the music of bands and the massing of colors, the show also heard Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz read a message from Pres. Kennedy declaring that "in the long view of history" this country's success in the "achievement of order in economic life will stand as one of the great American contributions to man's progress."

The exhibits of union-made products and union craft skills at the show were "only the material signs of labor-management harmony," the President's message said.

What is too often overlooked is the fact that "labor and management have established a rule of private law, based upon negotiated agreement, to replace the class antagonisms and warfare of the past," it declared.

Wirtz himself pointed out that in this country collective bargaining always needs to be "tough-minded," but that it is generally conducted "with a knowledge of the situation"

(Continued on Page 3)

Right-Wing Extremists Attacked in Congress

By John Barry

A full-scale attack on the far right-wing, focusing on Americans for Constitutional Action, was launched on the House floor by Rep. Ronald Brooks Cameron (D-Calif.) with a direct charge that ACA had been infiltrated and was substantially financed by backers of the John Birch Society.

The discussion of ACA's links with the Birch Society and other extremist organizations came three days before ACA was to hold a "gala reception" in Washington to present "distinguished service" awards to 153 members of the 88th Congress for high scores on the organization's conservative voting index.

Cameron, a House freshman, last fall defeated former Republican Rep. John Rousselot, then an admitted member of the Birch Society who has since become its organizer in the western states.

The California Democrat urged any of his House colleagues who might be tapped by ACA to reject the awards as "a mockery of the very ideals they purport to salute."

The Birch Society, he said, "is again seeking—through the ACA—to clothe itself in the honorable

(Continued on Page 11)

THE IMPORTANCE of the labor press in "getting our story told" was stressed by Pres. Kennedy at a White House reception for labor editors highlighting a two-day conference on national affairs set up by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

Labor Editors Told of Administration Goals

The Kennedy Administration spelled out in depth its fiscal and economic programs and policies—with a heavy emphasis on the problem of unemployment—for the nation's labor editors at a two-day session in Washington.

Cabinet members, economic advisers, White House personnel and top officials of the Labor Dept. participated in the question-and-answer, wide-ranging discussions of the state of the national economy, unemployment, taxes, labor relations, manpower and youth employment with 120 editors of union newspapers and magazines, members of the Intl. Labor Press Association.

At a White House reception for the editors, Pres. Kennedy emphasized the importance of the labor press in "getting our story told" to the people.

Receiving them in the State Dining Room, scene of diplomatic and state dinners since the administration of Thomas Jefferson, the President emphasized in brief remarks the urgency of a $10 billion tax cut, of maintaining a high level of government expenditures for social and economic purposes, in order to spur business activity and cut the rate of joblessness to 4 percent "by 1965."

Kennedy also emphasized the Administration's determination to obtain congressional passage "this year" of the Anderson-King bill for social security hospital care for the aged.

Reply by Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a response, remarked that many of the federation's programs and the Administration's were parallel —"although we might like to go a little faster."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who invited the ILPA members to the conference, told them in his opening remarks that "the problem of communication is today the single most serious problem in the field of developing labor relations."

Reiterating his optimism "about the likelihood of private constructive settlements" in rail and steel negotiations, Wirtz said collective bargaining today can look forward to a period "in which to strengthen itself". The future, he added, still holds "serious" problems for bargaining because of the high level of unemployment and job security situations. He said:

"I am not sure that collective bargaining could absorb or carry the problem of substantial reductions in employment in particular plants with an unemployment figure which would continue to be above 4 million."

Queried on the equity of the tax reductions for various income groups proposed by the Administration, Dillon said two-thirds of the total income tax revenue currently comes from those in the $5,000-to-$20,000 a year bracket and if there is an across-the-board reduction "it has to affect that particular area."

Salinger Speaks

White House Press Sec. Pierre Salinger, discussing the charge leveled against the Administration of "managing" the news, said the concept "that we could delude the highest trained group of reporters anywhere in the country, who are assembled here in Washington, and take them down blind alleys, to say that we can do that is first of all an insult to the reporters involved, and secondly is a perversion of the intent of government information."

Gardner Ackley, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, explained and defended the Administration's economic policy approach including its wage-price guidelines and the opposition to the shorter workweek.

The "chance for a recession in business activity in 1963 now seems remote and if the expansion continues even to February 1964 it will have extended its life to 36 months, surpassing the duration of the last two expansion periods," he commented.

The key to reducing unemployment, he said, is to stimulate demand. It would take a level of total demand $30 billion to $40 billion higher than it is now in order to reduce joblessness to 4 percent. The most powerful stimulus to demand, he stressed, would be a tax cut confined to the "lower brackets."

John F. Henning, undersecretary of labor, outlined Labor Dept. and Administration programs designed to combat unemployment, and Samuel Merrick, special assistant to the secretary of labor for legislative affairs, discussed the youth opportunities act. A manpower panel conducted by Henning, and including top Labor Dept. experts, fielded a series of questions on programs and developments.

The nature of the unemployment problem was presented by Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, who with charts plotted the course and the trend of current joblessness.

John W. Leslie, director of information of the Labor Dept., presided at the sessions. The two-day conference was planned and worked out with the officers of the Intl. Labor Press Association—Bernard R. Mullady, president, and Kenneth Fiester, secretary-treasurer.

Community Backs Union:

Local Unanimously Rejects Threat of 'Pay Cut—Or Else'

Greenville, Mich.—Threatened with loss of their jobs unless they took a 29-cent hourly pay cut, production workers at Gibson Refrigerators here voted unanimously to reject a company ultimatum which has angered the community as well as the union.

Nearly all 1,300 members of Auto Workers Local 137 turned out for the vote. The tally was 1,294-0 against acceptance of Gibson's "final offer," which was tied to a threat to move South.

Rejection of the 29-cent cut in wages and fringe benefits had been recommended by UAW officials led by Regional Dir. Ken Robinson.

The company proposal also called for a 5-cent annual raise in return for a five-year contract with no cost-of-living clause. Gibson's first offer, calling for a 47-cent wage cut, was turned down by the workers on Apr. 2.

Year of Talk

Hupp Corp., the Cleveland company which owns the Gibson plants in Greenville and nearby Belding, has been talking of moving to the South for about a year. It had given the workers until May 22 to accept.

Hupp is in good financial shape. It made some $4 million in 1962 compared to $2.3 million the year before, with the Gibson plants contributing almost half of the total.

The corporation's argument is simply that it could save $1.6 million by moving to a low-wage Mississippi area.

The firm manufactures refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners and dehumidifiers—40 percent under its own name and 60 percent under private name brands.

Nick Natiello, Gibson personnel director, argued the firm must meet competition from other refrigeration companies which have cut wage costs by moving to the South.

Rates Are Low

Gibson wage rates are low for both the industry and the Greenville-Belding area, according to union officials. Local Pres. George Truesdell pointed out that a Gibson assembler gets $2.14 an hour but a sweeper at Detroit Gasket's Belding Div. gets $2.16.

"Gibson wage rates," Robinson said, "are already 36 cents below those paid at Kelvinator. The company position boils down to the argument that it could make even higher profits if it went to the low wage area of the Deep South."

Robinson added that Gibson's profits have been good since 1957 and that the union helped the firm before by exercising restraint in collective bargaining.

"We've taken them from a loss to a profit position in recent years," he added.

Gibson has found little support in this conservative community of 7,440. Greenville and Belding (population 4,887) lie in the heart of a rural area about 150 miles northwest of Detroit.

A community meeting called by Gibson officials to rally public support was a flop. Many local businessmen have been openly critical of Hupp and Gibson. The threat of moving has brought adverse reactions.

Larry Brown, photo studio owner, puts it this way: "If Chuck Gibson (division president) asked me what to do—which he won't—I'd have to tell him go ahead and move because the town's fed up with threats."

Twenty-five years ago local merchants loaned Gibson money to keep it going.

"They saved Gibson," Brown said. "But Hupp runs things now and they have no roots here. Even if they needed money—which I'm convinced they don't—I'm not sure they could get it here."

Other merchants pointed out that Greenville's economy would suffer if the workers accepted the proposed pay cut.

"That's a big chunk out of anyone's pay," said Ed Getzen, chairman of the retail committee of the Greenville Chamber of Commerce. "People who don't get a decent wage don't buy things—including refrigerators."

Greenville is a dry town, except for the City Club whose 900 members include top Gibson executives. For some time it has been featuring "Gibson on the rocks"—a "panic cocktail" which differs from the regular drink in that it has no gin.

The bar also features a poster showing four overall-clad "hillbillies" with guns. Printed underneath is: "Our highly skilled and intelligent personnel are eagerly waiting to serve you.—Mississippi Chamber of Commerce."

Insult to Our Town

It's a wry joke that what Getzen, who also manages the City Club, says points up "an insult to our town."

The rejection of the Gibson ultimatum was anticipated by community leaders who are preparing to attract other industries to Greenville should the company run away.

Getzen pointed out that the skilled workers at Gibson plus the community's many other advantages could bring in "maybe two or three smaller companies instead of one big outfit."

His statement reflects a general business spokesmen's attitude that perhaps Gibson's size and influence as the area's largest single employer have worked to the disadvantage of Greenville.

ILGWU Fund Raises Benefits for Jobless

New York—Increases in welfare benefits for veterans of the garment trades who have been unemployed for long periods have been voted by trustees of the Ladies' Garment Workers' supplementary unemployment-severance benefit fund.

Fifty trustees, representing the ILGWU and employers, heard at their annual meeting here that applications for benefits had increased 65 percent in 1962 over the 1961 total.

During 1962, Administrator Louis Rolnick reported, the fund distributed $1 million in severance pay to workers whose firms went out of business, and gave $1.6 million in weekly SUB benefits to those unable to find other jobs.

Approving increases in payments because "the distress of unemployment grows more burdensome to an employe the longer he is unemployed," trustees headed by ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky voted to increase benefits as follows for those jobless members entitled, under fund rules, to receive more than 26 weeks of supplemental benefits:

- Workers who have been given one severance payment because their employer went out of business will get an identical lump sum payment if still jobless after one year. Such payments range up to $400.
- Weekly supplementary benefits will be raised 50 percent for workers who remain jobless after getting supplementary benefits for 26 weeks. Under the new schedule, payments will range from a low of $18.75 to a high of $37.50 a week, payable at the rate of three weeks for every year of prior employment.

The trustees authorized fund officers to study the possibility of making the 50 percent increase apply also to workers who do not meet the 26-week requirement. At present a worker must have been employed at least nine years by an employer who went out of business.

PROBLEMS AND POLICIES of the Kennedy Administration were spelled out at a conference of labor editors held in Washington by the Labor Dept. The program included a White House reception, at which Pres. Kennedy is shown with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (left); Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester of the Intl. Labor Press Association, and ILPA Pres. Bernard Mullady (right).

NILE Given Grant For Youth Project

The Labor Dept. has made a grant of $51,160 to the National Institute of Labor Education for a project aimed at setting up union-initiated and union-sponsored training programs for unemployed or under-employed young people.

The fund supplements an earlier grant of $10,000 from the AFL-CIO for the same project. The projected programs are intended to supplement government efforts to provide apprenticeships and other on-the-job training opportunities for those who fail to complete high school or who are barred because of race from other training opportunities.

Still Little Dent in Idled:

April Job Recovery Better Than Usual

By Robert B. Cooney

A strong job recovery in construction and gains in the manufacturing sector highlighted "a substantially better-than-seasonal job expansion" last month, the Labor Dept. has reported.

In its detailed job report for April, the department said non-farm payroll employment had increased by 800,000 to 55.9 million, 1 million higher than a year ago.

But, as the department's earlier summary report disclosed, there was no substantial dent in overall unemployment. The summary report showed an expected drop of 400,000 to a total of 4.1 million jobless in April. The key seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment edged up to 5.7 percent from March's 5.6 percent.

The nation's growing labor force again increased more than seasonally to a total of 74.9 million, the department noted, continuing its advance of the past six months. There were 1.2 million more people in the labor force than a year ago.

The impact of the postwar baby boom "is beginning to hit the labor force," warned Harold Goldstein, the department's manpower and job statistics expert.

Goldstein said the number of 16-year-olds is increasing by about 1 million this year over last. He said there will be a jump of 300,000 such jobseekers this summer compared to last.

The teenage jobless rate has been running at about 15 percent since February, somewhat higher than a year ago, the report said. It contained the warning that the teenage influx will push up their jobless rate by summer assuming no real improvement in the job-picture. The unemployment rate for non-white teenagers was "especially high" at 30 percent so far in 1963, it was noted.

The April job improvements, where improvement could be noted, were widespread.

A rise of 260,000 in contract construction to a total of 2.6 million was "substantially greater than usual for April," the report noted. This was the first gain in nine months after a steady downtrend which had totaled 100,000, seasonally adjusted, since July, the report added.

The factory sector gained 100,000 jobs to a total of 16.7 million in a month when small declines are usual, the report said.

Employment in the retail trade and service industries increased seasonally over the month by 260,000 and 110,000, respectively, the report continued.

The factory workweek declined by 18 minutes to 39.9 hours, the report said. The drop was mainly seasonal but may have reflected holidays in the reporting period, it added. Factory overtime averaged 2.5 hours, not significantly changed over the month.

Average hourly earnings of factory production workers stood at $2.45 in April, a 2-cent pickup over March and 6 cents over a year earlier. Because of the reduced workweek, average weekly earnings edged downward by 33 cents to $97.76, which was $1.20 or 1 percent above a year ago, the report said.

Poll Tax Ban Gets 33d Ratification

Dover, Del.—Delaware has ratified the proposed anti-poll tax amendment to the U.S. Constitution, the 33d state to do so.

With bipartisan support, the ratification resolution passed the Senate 10-5, after having been approved by the House, 24-8.

Five more ratifications are needed to meet the constitutional requirement that three-fourths of the states must ratify an amendment.

Last month, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had asked state labor bodies in eight states which had not yet acted to give "highest priority" to ratification. Since then three of the states—Florida and Iowa as well as Delaware—have completed ratification. Oklahoma, however, has rejected the proposition.

Union, Steel Broaden Non-Contract Talks

Pittsburgh—Steel union and industry officials have broadened the scope of discussions by their joint Human Relations Committee to encompass all contract areas, including wages, pensions and insurance—matters on which the contracts may be reopened at any time.

"It is our intention to discuss everything we can possibly discuss," USWA Pres. David J. McDonald told reporters following a brief meeting of the union's executive board here.

He said forthcoming talks of the committee would be a continuation of efforts to date, to which the board gave its unanimous approval. He reported that "no understanding had been reached on any subjects, either in the human relations area or the economic items on which the contracts may be reopened."

McDonald said the board had given full consent "to pursue the same course in the hope that the mutual problems we face in the steel industry may be resolved within the next few weeks."

"Failing a mutually satisfactory understanding, or in case mutual understandings are arrived at," he continued, "the board will reconvene to determine what further course we may take."

The Human Relations Committee has no authority itself to write new contract language, and the USWA so far have not exercised their right—effective May 1—to a formal reopening of the contracts on wages, pensions or insurance.

The contracts have no expiration date, but must run for at least two years from last June 30. They may be terminated on 90 days notice given after Apr. 1, 1964.

Injuries Down Among Ship, Dock Workers

Injury rates in longshoring and ship repair jobs under the Longshoremen's & Harbor Workers' Compensation Act dropped sharply in 1962 from 1961, the Labor Dept. has announced.

The longshoring rate went from 125.3 disabling injuries per 1 million manhours worked in 1961 to 108.2 in 1962, a decline of nearly 14 percent. In ship repairing, the fall was from 39 to 34.9, or 10.5 percent.

THE VARIED PHASES of the boilermaker's craft are depicted in this mural painted by Siegfried Reinhardt and hanging in the lobby of the Nooter Corp.'s St. Louis office building. The company has had contractual relations for many years with Boilermakers Lodge 27.

Labor Urges Bracero Plan Termination

The AFL-CIO has urged the House to vote down a bill which would extend the Mexican farm labor importation program for an additional two years.

In a letter to all congressmen, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller noted that last year 227,000 Mexican nationals [braceros] were employed in the United States to work on farms. He declared:

"With millions of jobless Americans looking for work, importation of Mexican workers further depresses the already low wages of American farm workers and takes job opportunities away from American workers."

The most recent statistics available show that the average U.S. farm worker earned only $881 and worked only 134 days in 1961, Biemiller pointed out. New developments in agricultural technology, he noted, are adding to unemployment and under-employment in rural areas.

"In view of these conditions," he said, "it is impossible to justify importation of Mexican farm workers to compete with already under-employed American farm workers."

The program, Biemiller emphasized, hurts the family farmer, who is forced to compete against "cheap labor," and benefits less than 1 percent of the nation's farms, "and these are generally the large, corporation-type farms."

The bill, approved by the Agriculture Committee, is expected to reach the House floor within the next few weeks.

Unionists to Aid Housing Equality

Two union representatives are among eight "busy" men Pres. Kennedy has named public members of his Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing.

They are Jack T. Conway, executive assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and a former deputy administrator of the Housing & Home Finance Agency, and Roland M. Sawyer of Pittsburgh, housing consultant to the Steelworkers.

The committee is charged with serving as a "watchdog" on implementation of the executive order providing for equal opportunity in housing. Kennedy expressed confidence that although they were "busy" men, the new members will work with former Gov. David L. Lawrence (Pa.), the chairman, to "make a valuable contribution to the overall effort of providing fuller opportunities for all our citizens in obtaining good and adequate housing."

Union-Industries Show Puts Skills on Display

(Continued from Page 1)

of people on the other side of the bargaining table.

"People are together," he said.

In his opening remarks, Meany pointed out that labor in this country "is no longer a downtrodden minority, a class apart."

"We take our part," he declared. "And this show portrays not only the skill of the individual workers but the products of that skill and management ingenuity. It shows what can be done when a worker has a say on the conditions and wages of his job, what share he gets."

Meany Cuts Ribbon

From the podium presided over by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh, president of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept., Meany and Wirtz led the procession to the exhibit hall to cut the white ribbon marking the formal opening of the show.

"Gateway to Progress" was the theme of this year's show—the 18th annual Union-Industries exhibition. The theme was drawn in part from the towering archway now under construction by union workers for the St. Louis waterfront—630 feet high, sure to be a dominant feature of the landscape where Thomas Jefferson's Louisiana Purchase will be memorialized.

Director of the show was Joseph Lewis, secretary of the Union Label Dept.

Inside the hall, the exhibit of the Bridge, Structural & Iron Workers was marked with a small-scale model of the archway, which will soar higher than the Eiffel Tower, twice as high as New York Harbor's Statue of Liberty.

Inside, also, was a model of the space capsule built by members of the Machinists at McDonnell Aircraft Co. in St. Louis—the type of capsule in which Maj. Gordon Cooper had just completed his 22-orbit travel in space.

There was information, proof of progress and plenty of fun for the thousands of St. Louisians and visitors who toured the show. Gifts and prizes valued at more than $80,000 were given away—everything from shopping bags furnished by the Retail Clerks to an $8,000 completely electric kitchen at the booth of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The Glass Bottle Blowers brought their portable oven and two expert Baltimore craftsmen to display the almost extinct art of hand-blowing bottles and ornamental objects.

Skills Demonstrated

The Bricklayers exhibit showed the work of their apprentices; the Carpenters displayed their construction and ornamental work; the Ladies' Garment Workers exhibited the latest models in sewing machines.

Presses ran at the exhibit of the Printing Pressmen; the Fire Fighters exhibited their equipment and handed out lessons in tying "rescue knots" and "chimney hitches."

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. passed out leaflets warning shoppers against deceptive practices in packaging; the AFL-CIO Auxiliaries exhibit proudly proclaimed "the women in your life"; the Hotel & Restaurant Workers displayed both a bar and an eight-place table setting of china and silver.

"We're giving away people, too," quipped one official—the "people" being a five-piece band offered to the prize winner to play four hours for a dinner party or dance anywhere in the St. Louis area between the time of the show and Oct. 1—"except weekends," it was specified.

One of the guests was Sir Tom O'Brien, general secretary of the National Association of Theatre & Cine Employes of Great Britain. A former member of Parliament and a member of the British Trades Union Congress executive council, O'Brien holds a gold membership card in the Theatrical Stage Employes of this country, given him last year when he visited the union's convention.

Meany 'Proud' Of Cooper's Flight

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said, "I am just as proud as I can be" of Astronaut Gordon Cooper's 22-orbit flight and "that we belong to a nation where we don't have to hide."

Meany stressed that the U.S. "is willing to take a gamble on failure, willing to show the whole world what we're trying to do."

"We don't have to cloud our experiments in an atmosphere of secrecy and then announce them to the world two or three days later," he added. "I'm proud to belong to a nation that will gamble on a thing like this."

Public Power Group Recognizes IBEW

Portland, Ore.—The Washington Public Power Supply System has recognized Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 77 as exclusive bargaining representative of its supervised employes.

"THEY'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES," title of a new film produced by the AFL-CIO in cooperation with the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped, applies to three of the "stars" of the production, Thomas Cooper, front row left; Robert Stokes, front row right, and Lindsay Gilchrest, back row right, all members of Local 1783, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Also in the back row are William P. Hilliard, left, president of the Pleasantville Instrument Corp., Pleasantville, N.Y., where the on-the-job scenes were filmed, and Pres. Robert Greene (center) of Local 1783.

AFL-CIO Film Shows Jobs for Handicapped

"All the handicapped worker asks is a fair chance" and labor will do its "utmost" to see that he gets it, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declares in a new film produced by the federation in cooperation with the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped.

The film, which deals with "the how of hiring the handicapped," is titled "They've Got What It Takes" and is scheduled for release soon.

The production features scenes of handicapped members of Local 1783, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, on the job at the Pleasantville Instrument Corp., Pleasantville, N. Y. It also contains messages from Meany and IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, who is vice chairman of the President's committee and whose union contributed to the film's production costs.

In his message, Meany notes the part the labor movement has played in helping to expand rehabilitation and training services for the handicapped, but emphasizes that "this is only the first step."

"The decisive point," he states, "is that handicapped workers must have a chance to use the skills they have," and as the film shows, "the opportunities can be found if both labor and management have the will to find them."

He said that the AFL-CIO "is deeply committed to the principle of equal opportunity. We believe that every worker has a right to the kind of job he can adequately fill."

The handicapped worker, Meany declares, "has the same right to be judged solely on the grounds of what he can do."

"His ability, not his disability, is what counts," he adds.

As top AFL-CIO representative on the President's committee, Freeman calls on all the 60,000 AFL-CIO local unions to cooperate with the committee's program and encourage the formation at the plant level of more union-management committees for the employment of the handicapped.

"Such committees are the best way to assist in the employment, re-employment or transfer of impaired workers, whether their disability stems from on-the-job or off-the-job sources," Freeman suggests. "They are important for morale reasons, too; for one of the strongest supports a handicapped worker can have is the help and understanding of his fellow workers in organized labor.

"The best place for a handicapped worker to earn his living is in his own community. In most cases, any community can absorb its handicapped into its industrial and commercial life to great advantage.

"We believe that real progress is made toward that objective when organized labor joins with representatives of management, the professions and the civic and welfare organizations in the community, in a unified program of cooperation with local rehabilitation and placement agencies."

Jobless Down In Canada, Still 7 Percent

Ottawa, Ont. — Unemployment dipped sharply in Canada during April but was still 7 percent of the labor force, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported.

The monthly survey showed 462,000 workers were without jobs and looking for them, a drop of 87,000 from March—when the rate was 8.4 percent—and 23,000 below the level of April 1962.

Employment increased by 134,000 to 6,097,000, or 90,000 more than in April of last year.

The number of long-term jobless—those unemployed for six months or longer—increased in April to 76,000 from the previous month's 68,000. Idleness among teen-agers remained disproportionately high at 78,000, or 14 percent of the unemployed. The Atlantic provinces continued to suffer most severely with 14.1 percent of the work force jobless.

In another report, the DBS said Canada's labor force totaled 6,471,850 at the time of the census in June 1961.

Justice Dept. Intervenes in Bias Case

The National Labor Relations Board has given the Justice Dept. approval to enter a board case based on a charge of racial discrimination by an unaffiliated local union representing employes of the Hughes Tool Co., Houston, Tex.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the department had asked the NLRB for permission to appear "because of its widespread significance for the protection of Negro workers from racial discrimination by labor unions."

A board trial examiner has recommended that the NLRB revoke the joint certification of Locals 1 and 2 of the Independent Metal Workers Union as representatives of Hughes employes because the division is based on racial lines.

Local 2, composed solely of Negro members, brought unfair practice charges against Local 1, all of whose members are white, accusing it of refusing to process the grievance of a Negro employe denied the right to bid on an apprenticeship opening.

The trial examiner upheld the unfair practice charges and urged revocation of bargaining rights, as Local 2 had asked, because Local 1 had not fulfilled "its statutory duty to represent fairly all employes in the unit."

NALC Retirement Project Opened

East Lake Wales, Fla.—Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Crane, formerly of Des Moines, Ia., have become the first tenants of NALCREST, a long-planned retirement community sponsored by the Letter Carriers.

Crane retired recently after 31 years of service as a letter carrier. He and Mrs. Crane were the first of 30 families scheduled to move into the $4.5 million project. It is expected they will be joined by some 900 others in time for a formal grand opening at the end of the year.

NALCREST, on 1,300 feet of Lake We-Oh-Ya-Kapka, is sponsored, owned and operated by the Letter Carriers and was built under the Federal Housing Administration program for low, regulated rentals to meet the needs of elders.

Claim Withdrawn:

Bias Charge Killed, ILGWU Vindicated

New York—A charge of racial discrimination against Cutters' Local 10 of the Ladies' Garment Workers was withdrawn May 17 by Ernest Holmes, a Negro who had complained before the New York State Commission for Human Rights that he had been denied membership because of his color.

The dropping of charges on joint stipulation to the commission, with the agreement of Holmes, came in the third day of hearings before a three-man board. By that time, under cross-examination by Emil Schlesinger, union attorney, Holmes was shown to have claimed that without a single day of previous experience in the craft, he was a qualified cutter on the day he was hired by Primrose Foundation.

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky declared that the withdrawal of the complaint while cross-examination of Holmes was still under way "burst like a balloon the campaign since April 1961 to smear the ILGWU with the charge of racial discrimination."

In June 1962 an investigating commissioner of the state commission had found "probable cause" for crediting the charge against the union. He informed the press of the nature of conciliation efforts and one result, the ILGWU said, was the spreading public impression that the union had already been found guilty.

"We hope," Dubinsky continued, "that the joint stipulation puts to rest for all time statements circulated in the press, radio, television and even before a congressional committee that a prior determination of probable cause was a finding of guilt."

The Holmes case was among those cited in a turbulent hearing last fall by a special House Labor subcommittee investigating charges of ILGWU racial discrimination. The investigation, headed by then Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.), was labeled a "political vendetta" by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, and Dubinsky flatly denounced the charges as "untruthful, irresponsible, a gross exaggeration, unfair, imaginative and done in a spirit of revenge."

The sole commitment of the union in the joint stipulation to the state commission indicates that Holmes' claim that he was a cutter —the claim on which he based the charge against the ILGWU—was entirely without foundation.

The commission agreed that Holmes is not in fact a trained and qualified cutter. In the stipulation in which it joined, Local 10 was directed only as follows:

"In line with its oft-asserted regular and general policy, as adopted by conventions of the ILGWU from its very inception, against discrimination of any person because of his race, creed, color or national origin, that it will, on the same basis as it applies to all other applicants for admission to membership, exercise its good offices in assisting the complainant to become a qualified cutter and to gain admission to membership in the union as and when he becomes a qualified cutter and becomes eligible for membership in the local."

Railroad Clerks Elect C. L. Dennis President

Los Angeles—C. L. (Les) Dennis of Chicago was elected by delegates to the 22nd convention of the Railway Clerks to head that organization for the next four years.

Dennis, a former vice grand president, succeeds to the position of grand president vacated by George M. Harrison after 35 years. Harrison will take over the newly-created position of chief executive.

Frank H. Hall, Canadian vice grand president for nearly 40 years, will also assume a new post, that of Canadian executive assistant to the grand president. Both positions were created so that the experience of Harrison and Hall might be retained while relieving them of the day-to-day burdens of the offices they occupied.

Other officers elected are:

Vice grand presidents W. C. McGovern, St. Louis; K. D. Shaw, Baltimore; C. E. Kief, Chicago; J. D. Bearden, Washington; G. R. Atkinson, Cincinnati; E. F. Downard, Canada; D. J. Sullivan, New York; D. A. Ligon, Houston; J. B. Haines, Chicago. The final four are new officers, filling vacancies created by retirements and by the assumption of new duties by Dennis and Hall.

Dennis served as general chairman of the Chicago & North Western system board for 17 years.

The son of a railroader, he held a wide variety of jobs before going to work as a freight handler for the C&NW in 1925.

He joined the Clerks in 1928 and holds membership in Wood St. Station Lodge 1198, Chicago. Active in lodge affairs, he held almost every office at one time or another, serving as financial and recording secretary-treasurer, and then as local chairman and division chairman in 1937. In 1939 Dennis won the BRC grand prize for signing the most employes into membership.

He was appointed acting vice grand president in 1956 and elected a vice grand president at the Milwaukee convention in 1959. He has been assigned to assist all air lines system boards in improving their rules, working conditions and rates of pay.

Dennis and his wife, Harriet, make their home in Chicago and have one son Jeffrey, 6. Mrs. Dennis is a member of C&NW System Lodge 1163, Chicago, and was her husband's secretary for 12 years.

The Dennis family is a genuine railroad family, with 16 members in rail service. His five sisters, Lorena, Alberta, Josephine, Imogene and Nona, all are BRC members and belong to C&NW Lodge 679, Chicago.

McCulloch Names Leff Chief Counsel

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch of the National Labor Relations Board has named Arthur Leff, 20-year veteran of NLRB service, as his chief counsel. Leff will succeed Arnold Ordman, who became general counsel May 14, replacing Stuart Rothman.

Leff, 55, joined the board in 1942 as an attorney and has been a trial examiner since Apr. 26, 1944. As chief counsel he will be the principal legal adviser to McCulloch. He will dissociate himself from cases before the board in which he participated as trial examiner, he said.

Fact Sheet on 88th Congress:

Federal Action Needed for More Jobs

Employment Act of '46 Focuses Responsibility

SINCE THE END of World War II, the U.S. economy has suffered four major recessions. Each recession has left a higher plateau of unemployment, a larger number of jobless workers.

After the 1953-54 recession, the unemployment rate failed to drop below 4 percent of the labor force. After the 1957-58 recession, it failed to drop below 5 percent. And after the 1960-61 recession, unemployment has stayed up above 5.5 percent.

For more than five years the rate of unemployment has been above 5 percent every month except one. It is a shocking, disgraceful record for the richest nation in the world.

For 4.5 million jobless American workers and their families it is a record of frustration, humiliation and human tragedy that cold statistics cannot show.

There are admittedly no simple solutions to the unemployment problem. Labor and business can work out some solutions through collective bargaining. State and local governments can help also. But the federal government must use its great resources to work toward an overall cure for the chronic unemployment sickness.

The responsibility of the federal government to attack continuing high unemployment stems from the Employment Act of 1946. This law is an outstanding achievement in the development of the American economy and a landmark piece of social legislation.

It sets forth as a major objective of national policy the goal of "creating and maintaining . . . conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities, including self-employment for those able, willing, and seeking to work."

Federal Role Outlined

The act further states that it is the responsibility of the federal government to promote "maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

It requires the President to make an economic report to Congress in January of each year. In this report he must:

1. Describe the nation's economic health.
2. Review federal economic programs and economic conditions affecting employment during the preceding year.
3. Set targets to carry out the purposes of the Employment Act.
4. Outline a program to achieve these targets.

The act also set up a Council of Economic Advisers to the President and established in Congress a Joint Economic Committee composed of eight senators and eight members of the House. The JEC conducts hearings and makes basic studies of economic affairs. It also must tell Congress, by Mar. 1 of each year, what it thinks of the President's report.

All these reports, public hearings and studies are designed to spread public understanding of the nation's economic goals and of the role of the federal government in achieving these goals.

To the extent that joblessness persists, to the extent that production and purchasing power lag behind our full employment potential, the federal government falls short of its responsibility under the Employment Act.

What does the record show? Has the federal government met its job responsibilities under the Employment Act?

Unfortunately, the unemployment problem is getting worse—not better. More than 55 out of every 1,000 workers now are jobless—too many out of work for too long. Millions of workers and their families are suffering the tragic consequences of unemployment.

In 1947 the 3.9 percent unemployment rate meant 2.3 million American workers were jobless. The 6.8 percent unemployment rate in 1958 reflected 4.7 million jobless Americans—68 jobless out of every 1,000 workers.

Lag in Jobs

In the first 10 years after passage of the 1946 law, the unemployment rate averaged 4.3 percent of the civilian labor force. In the last five and a half years, the rate has been close to 6 percent most of the time.

The unemployment rate is simply a measure of how effective our economy is in meeting the demand for jobs. The economy is clearly failing to meet that demand—and it is falling further behind because rising productivity enables it to turn out more goods and services with fewer workers.

The main reason for unemployment is lagging economic growth and the shortage of consumer purchasing power—customers with cash or credit to buy the goods and services our economy can produce. It's not that people don't want these goods and services. It's that too many Americans just don't have enough money.

Our rising capacity to produce goods and services—as a result of automation—is not matched by sufficient growth in jobs and purchasing power. Automation cuts the need for workers because employers can get the same amount of production with fewer manhours of labor.

This is a vicious circle. To provide more jobs, we must expand production. But if there is no market for these extra goods and services, if there is not enough purchasing power in the economy, employers have no reason to expand production. Thus opportunities to create new jobs are lost.

Automation, growth of the labor force, changes in job skill requirements, decline of some industries, and shifts in industry location also contribute to the unemployment problem.

Within the goods-producing industries, automation has brought a higher proportion of white collar workers such as salesmen and engineers and a lower proportion of blue-collar workers. There is more demand for highly skilled workers but little demand for unskilled workers.

Furthermore, progress in farm technology since World War II continues to push workers off the farms and into the cities. The number dropped from 8 million in 1947 to 5 million in 1962.

The total value of goods and services we produce in a year is called the Gross National Product (GNP). Full employment requires a GNP growth rate of 5 percent a year—but since 1953 our economic growth has average only 2.7 percent a year.

Our civilian labor force grew from 60 million workers in 1947 to about 72 million in 1962. By 1970 the labor force will reach 85.5 million workers.

To provide jobs for this increase in the labor force—including those now unemployed, those working only part-time, and those seeking jobs for the first time—to achieve the full employment goal set by the Employment Act of 1946, the American economy must provide about 18 million more jobs by 1970.

Through the 1960s we will see the results of the baby boom of the 1940s as 26 million young men and women, aged 24 and under, enter the labor force. Thus, by 1970, these young people will make up close to one-fourth of the labor force. The shortage of jobs will hit these young job-seekers the hardest. Enactment of youth employment programs is essential.

Unfortunately, too many of these new young job-seekers will lack the education, the skills, the training, and the work experience that will enable them to find jobs. In our rapidly changing economy, available jobs often require new skills that no one dreamed of 10 or 15 years ago. In 1962, more than one-third of total unemployment in the U.S. consisted of jobless youngsters between the ages of 16 and 24.

Social Dynamite

The situation is even worse than official statistics report because many young people who are out of school and out of work simply don't bother to look for jobs they know are not available.

The job-shortage hits Negroes particularly hard. Their unemployment rate is more than double the unemployment rate for white workers. Elimination of racial discrimination in employment is a partial solution to this situation.

Adjustment to new technology is not easy or automatic. In fact, it can be very painful for the workers who are forced out of their jobs by technological progress or automation.

In line with its obligation to promote job opportunity, Congress made a start in attacking structural unemployment through the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961 and the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962.

ARA supplies money and technical aid to help chronically depressed areas with declining industries. Such areas with persistently high unemployment are getting loans and grants to boost their economies and to open up new job opportunities. ARA also provides vocational training for jobless workers and makes subsistence payments—in place of unemployment compensation—to workers being trained for new jobs.

MDTA is another solid step forward in fighting structural unemployment. To combat manpower displacement caused by automation and technological change, MDTA helps new job-seekers and unemployed workers to acquire new, up-to-date skills through on-the-job training and retraining programs. But it does not meet the basic need—more jobs.

In spite of progress, there is still much to be done to help unemployed workers and to open up more job opportunities. ARA and MDTA can be truly successful only in a rapidly growing economy with high employment. Even with them in full operation, the major task will remain—to create jobs for the unemployed and for our growing labor force.

Under the present crazy-quilt of federal-state unemployment insurance programs, jobless workers too often find benefits are not available or are too small. Too often the programs are inadequate, unfair, and discriminatory. Therefore, the AFL-CIO has called for permanent reform of the unemployment compensation (UC) system along the lines proposed by Pres. Kennedy.

Collective bargaining can help ease unemployment problems to a limited degree.

Jointly established automation funds, more adequate severance pay plans, and supplementary unemployment benefits can help cushion the shock of job displacement and job loss. Labor-management agreements can also set procedures for scheduling work and overtime, transfers, lay-offs, and callbacks.

AFL-CIO Program

The AFL-CIO is calling for a 35-hour workweek to help provide more job opportunities, and through collective bargaining, labor unions are pressing for such a reduction from 40 hours, and for longer vacations and more holidays with pay.

Federal action under the Fair Labor Standards Act would be necessary to cut the time after which overtime rates must be paid. A double-time penalty rate for overtime work would encourage employers to hire more workers for extra production instead of working presently-employed workers longer hours.

The AFL-CIO is calling for expansion and extension of the job-creating accelerated public works program to build federal, state, and local public works in areas with serious unemployment.

The federation is backing an immediate $10 billion tax cut in 1963 to boost the purchasing power of low-income and middle-income families, whose spending does the most to expand production and thus open up more jobs.

The AFL-CIO is urging the federal government to push job-creating federal investment in public services. Aid to education, including vocational and technical education, can do much to upgrade the skills of American workers and to prepare youngsters who will be future workers.

Long-range public investment in housing and urban development, in health and welfare programs, and in natural resource development would also help create more jobs.

Action by Congress is essential for the government to meet its clear responsibilities under the Employment Act of 1946—and until Congress acts it bears the reproach and the burden of failing to carry out these responsibilities.

Source: Council of Economic Advisers

* Adjusted for seasonal factors

Fact Sheet Series On Key Issues

The AFL-CIO News is publishing on this page another in a series of Fact Sheets on issues before the 88th Congress.

This Fact Sheet is on unemployment. Previous Fact Sheets covered tax policy and federal spending.

Reprints of these Fact Sheets are available from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, 815 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Many Techniques Offer Hope for Job Creation

Tax Cut—A $10 billion tax cut in 1963 will help low and middle income families buy more goods and services, thus boosting job-creating private consumer spending.

Expansionary Fiscal Policy—More government spending for federal, state, and local public works, schools, hospitals, highways, water pollution control, and other wealth-producing projects will open up more jobs.

35-Hour Workweek—A shorter workweek, longer vacations, and more paid holidays can provide more job opportunities. A cut in the standard workweek from 40 to 35 hours can open up more than 2 million jobs.

Youth Employment—Enactment of youth employment programs such as the Youth Conservation Corps and the "home town youth corps" will make more jobs.

Education—Federal aid to education at all levels will boost funds for construction and help workers and their children prepare for higher-paying jobs in the future.

Mass Transit—Federal aid for city mass transit systems (with effective labor protections) will create jobs and help workers travel more easily from their homes to available jobs.

Foreign Aid—Most foreign aid from the U.S. results in direct job-creating sales of American goods. Thus foreign aid is just as important to our economy as it is to the nations we help.

Tax Cuts and Spending

THE AFL-CIO is unalterably opposed to any effort to accompany tax reduction with cuts in the general level of federal expenditures. Such action would nullify the job-creating impact of tax reduction and would be self-defeating.

While the AFL-CIO supports all economies that can be genuinely achieved in the operation of government, we firmly believe that the nation's public service and defense needs make increasing expenditures an urgent necessity.

The deficits in jobs and public services are the deficits that America must meet with speed and determination. The federal budget can be soundly balanced only when the American economy is balanced by full employment of manpower and productive capacity. We have full and abiding confidence in the ability of a growing American economy to sustain the expanded public service requirements of our growing population, as well as adequate national defense.

From the statement on taxes adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on May 15, 1963 in St. Louis.

The New Dilemma

AT HIS CONFERENCE for labor editors, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the dilemma facing the nation is that the economy could move to new, record high levels and still leave a critical unemployment situation. "There is good reason to think," he said, "that may be exactly what is happening."

The problem is quickly summed up by two figures the Secretary used—presently the number of jobs is increasing at nine-tenths of 1 percent compared to a rate of nearly 2 percent 10 years ago.

The drop in the job growth rate and the higher level of unemployment at the end of the last four recessions, he commented. is "a reflection of the fact that with the development of what we loosely call automation, you have a situation in which each time there are more and more people for whom there is simply not a demand in the new more highly-automated work force."

In addition to job displacement, there is taking place also a new and different "mix" in the work force—a smaller number of unskilled jobs and workers moving from manufacturing to service trades, which Wirtz said is "creating a great dislocation as far as the work force is concerned."

The Secretary's remarks are pertinent in a current continuing discussion of automation and unemployment. A number of economists, some of them in the Administration, describe automation as part of a long, continuing process of technological change and improvement and contend that its effect is not overly significant because productivity figures show no marked change from the year-to-year gains over the past decade.

These economists admit that there is a need to cushion the impact of automation with new approaches for specific industries and workers. But they almost solely rely on a general increase in economic activity as the answer—the answer that has worked in the past, they say, when a worker's skill has become obsolete.

There is no doubt that demand-stimulating programs aimed directly at increasing consumer purchasing power can overcome some of the problems caused by automation. But as Wirtz pointed out, new records of economic activity may be achieved and there may still be a high level of unemployment.

There is a vast difference between the technological changes of past years and decades and the automation of today. The difference is persistent, chronic, long-term unemployment in a period of rising industrial production and record-shattering profits.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, Harry C. Bates, Wm. C. Birthright, James B. Carey, David Dubinsky, David J. McDonald, Emil Rieve, Wm. L. McFetridge, Joseph Curran, M. A. Hutcheson, A. J. Hayes, Joseph D. Keenan, Jacob S. Potofsky, A. Philip Randolph, Richard F. Walsh, Lee W. Minton, Joseph A. Beirne, James A. Suffridge, O. A. Knight, Karl F. Feller, Paul L. Phillips, Peter T. Schoemann, L. M. Raftery, Paul Hall, Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, May 25, 1963 No. 21

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Birmingham

New Role of Unions:

Task of Alliance for Progress Almost Beyond Comprehension

ALMOST TWO YEARS AGO, 19 Latin American countries and the United States—members of the Organization of American States—signed the Charter of Punta del Este, creating the Alliance for Progress.

Wrapped up in this Alliance is our commitment to the economic, social and political advancement of Latin America.

"If the Alliance should fail," Pres. Guillermo Leon Valencia of Colombia declared, "communism will dominate the continent."

Just how much is at stake we here in the United States—and all those committed to free societies in the Americas—too little appreciate. The magnitude of the task is almost beyond comprehension.

In partnership with our Latin American friends we are asked to speed up the evolution of their social and economic systems to provide their citizens with the advantages of 20th century living—a speed-up that encompasses hundreds of years.

A start has been made against monumental obstacles of rigid traditions, ignorance, vested interests, fantastic birth rates, etc. We are witnessing tiny progress in such areas as land utilization, tax reform, public education and housing and the employment of resources and people.

Some six countries, for example, have reformed their tax structure, increasing their revenues. But these are almost piddling steps in contrast to the immensity of the job ahead.

The Alliance is not a give-away program. The Latin American countries must originate plans and programs which are reviewed by an ad hoc group selected from "nine wise men." The originating countries, theoretically, provide 80 percent of the cost and 20 percent is provided through U.S. loans.

Projects are already under way in a number of countries. One of the most challenging is just outside Bogota, a housing project that will provide homes for some 100,000 people. It is called Ciudad Techo. The Alliance constructs the shell of the home and under a self-help program, the occupant completes the job. Despite the high rate of unemployment, the demand for these homes far exceeds its 12,000 units.

So far as the achievement of its goals goes, however, the Alliance is lagging. The obstacles against it as listed above, plus open Communist opposition, have taken their toll.

Last year the OAS asked six union experts to study the Alliance program to ascertain, country by country, the role of trade unions in helping to advance it. The experts found the unions were being bypassed.

ALL OF THIS is background which led up to the calling of the Bogota conference of labor ministers to examine the entire program. What actually took place at the Bogota meeting and its resulting Declaration of Cundinamarca could provide a turning point.

Most of the delegations included trade union leaders. The U.S. delegation listed AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Joseph Beirne, though Meany had to withdraw at the last moment.

The meaningful work of the Bogota conference was conducted in committees at which trade union observers had a voice, though no vote.

Leader of the U.S. delegation was Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz. He was convinced that the free and democratic trade union movements were the closest to the people of the Latin American countries and if these unions had roles formally spelled out it would provide essential support for the program.

He recommended that for a country to qualify for programs under the Alliance it must "consult and collaborate" with its free and democratic unions. For labor ministers who had unions that were not "free and democratic" this was not particularly pleasing, but Wirtz won support. He faced his greatest threat from coffee-producing countries such as Brazil and Colombia which were more concerned with U.S. subsidies for their products.

The Declaration of Cundinamarca went much further in economic and social planning. In addition to the programs spelled out at Punta del Este it asked that labor ministries concern themselves with social as well as technical matters . . . that human resources be given top priority . . . that economic planning units include union representatives . . . that labor legislation, particularly minimum wages, be enforced . . . that on-the-job training be encouraged . . . that employment services be established . . . that labor statistics be brought up-to-date . . . that social security be adopted and/or extended, etc.

These may be merely fine words and lofty but unattainable goals; no one can foretell. But as Pres. Kennedy has noted, "want and despair need not be the lot of free men." We shall see. (PAI).

Morgan Says:

Time to Take a Tip from Kuchel And Tighten Our Grip on Sanity

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

MY MAIL RECENTLY has included several angry letters complaining that, by attacks on the radical right, I am damaging conservatives and the cause of conservatism in America. I rise to a point of order or at least of clarification.

I do not equate honest conservatism with the frantic fringe. Our society with its two-party system cannot survive without a constant exchange of responsible criticism of and from the left, right and center. My quarrel here is with those conservatives who, out of opportunism, ignorance of the facts, or a mixture, do not recognize the dangers, actual and potential, posed by the radical right to the internal security of this republic.

Morgan

These conservatives, and they are both Republicans and Democrats, are, I suggest, guilty of the same kind of carelessness that some American liberals were a generation or so ago.

Where the latter deluded themselves into believing that it was safe and smart to fellow-travel with communism, this conservative minority apparently reasons now that it is justifiable pragmatism to condone the lunatic line of the far right in order to upset the Democratic Administration in Washington. This is false and perilous logic.

The Kennedy regime is vulnerable on a number of fronts without having to resort to totalitarian tactics to attack it. I submit chilling facts are that, loathsome and treacherous as the Communist conspiracy is and as vigilant as we are always going to have to be against its internal and external threats, the conspiracy of the radical right is much more of a domestic threat to our country at this moment than the Communists.

When the senior senator from the most populous state in the union, a courageous middle-of-the-road Republican, finds it necessary as California's Thomas Kuchel did to devote a full-dress speech on the floor of the U.S. Senate to the "grave and evil hazards" to American freedom engendered by the radicals of reaction, then their activities have surely passed the shrug-off stage.

Pres. Kennedy has attacked this phenomenon publicly but it is useful to note, too, that some of the most eloquent and responsible warnings have come from the most respected Republicans, from ex-Pres. Eisenhower down. Republican Senators Javits of New York and Allott of Colorado associated themselves with Kuchel's remarks and praised his speech.

Nor was this by any means the first time that Kuchel had denounced the "I-am-a-better-American-than-you-are" fanatics. He blistered them in 1962 in rolling up a stunning 700,000 plurality for re-election to the Senate. If Kuchel becomes, as political gossip says he may, the Republican vice presidential nominee in 1964, it will not be due to any compromise with this frantic fringe of politics, one of whose major centers, Los Angeles, is in his own constituency.

AMONG OTHER THINGS, the country should be indebted to the senator for a new and illuminating definition of this extremist affliction: "a strange intellectual strabismus which professes to see our government crawling with 'Communists' and which, abandoning the processes of reason, pours its spleen upon anything or anybody which does not meet its own queer and puzzling dogmas." Webster's defines "strabismus" as a disorder of the eye which produces a squinting distortion of vision.

In his speech Kuchel reported he received 6,000 letters a month in the category of "fright mail," ranging from anti-Semitic, anti-Negro diatribes to charges of treason against him for refusing to recognize that Chinese Communist troops were poised in Mexico to attack us, that the UN was training cannibals in the state of Georgia to overthrow the government, that we should get out of the UN, dismantle NATO, stop foreign aid and repeal the income tax.

"It is ironic," Kuchel observed significantly, "that these very aims are very likely identical to the real hopes of the Kremlin."

Right-wing extremists, he said, do the "devil's work far better than Communists could do."

These extremist operators have two highly effective weapons which the puny radical left in this country simply does not have: money and respectability. Misguided millionaires have bankrolled some of these professional patriots, some of whom hide their carbolic hatred and rabble-rousing fears behind religion.

Conceivably some skittish elements of radio, television and the press have not reported the activities of this swollen phenomenon with sufficient comprehensiveness and candor, for fear of disturbing advertising and other revenues and of contributing to that dreaded thing, "controversy." But courage, the full facts and honest discussion of them are the most effective counterweapons against the extremes of both right and left and it's time we all took our cue from Kuchel and tightened our grip on our sanity.

Washington Reports:

Political Activity of Ultra-Right Seen Topping Left Wing of '30s

THE EXTREME RIGHT is now more active in American politics across the country than the extreme left was in the 1930s, Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.) declared in a radio interview.

"They have learned a lot of procedures in effective political organization and they are putting them into operation—and they have more money than the extreme left used to have when it was active," he said on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, now heard on nearly 700 radio stations.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), on the same program described as "almost beyond comprehension" the belief of some persons that there is "a great plot" among high officials in all branches of the government, the Pentagon and the United Nations "through which the evil leaders of communism will take over the country."

"That is so much poppycock," he asserted.

McGee said the extreme right has a right to be active in politics like any other group, but he denounced what he called "their retreat behind a cloak of secrecy."

"The whole weapon of the John Birch Society, for instance, has been secrecy," he observed. "They promise to organize in secret cells of 15, like the Communists do. They stay underground. Their program is action, not numbers. . . .They are an operational group and their design is to influence the key segments of local and other levels of government."

HE NOTED THAT the extreme right operates through a number of "front groups," among them the Manion Forum, the Dan Smoot Report, Kent Courtney's Independent American, and Life Lines.

Kuchel reported that the reaction to his Senate speech on the extreme right was "a healthy one" and that the bulk of the mail and telephone calls he had received were approving, giving evidence that "basically, the American people are decent people."

"I don't care whether the individual is a Republican or Democrat; he wants clean, honest, decent American government," Kuchel said. "He opposes extremes. He opposes communism and Communists. He also opposes those people who . . . could be described as Fascists, the right-wing extremists.

"And the strange thing is that the philosophy of the left-winger is almost on all fours with the philosophy of the radical right-winger in this country."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN has called for a "great national debate" on the three proposed constitutional amendments that are kicking around the state legislatures—a series of amendments that would destroy the national character of our government and that are being almost surreptitiously wangled through some state assemblies by rightwing promoters.

The Chief Justice restrained himself from discussing the merits of the proposals—one to abolish federal court supervision of state legislative districting; the second to authorize future constitutional amendments by the states alone, bypassing Congress; the third to establish a Court of the Nation, consisting of the 50 state chief justices, to supersede the existing Supreme Court as the final authority on constitutional questions.

Warren pointed out, however, that had proposals of such magnitude been made in the early days of the Republic, "the great debate would be resounding in every legislative hall and in every place where lawyers, scholars and statesmen gather."

Urging the bar associations of the country to take the lead in promoting wide discussion of the proposed amendments, the Chief Justice said that for them to remain silent would be "almost an abdication of responsibility."

"If lawyers are not to be the watchmen for the Constitution, on whom can we rely?" he asked.

The American Bar Association board of governors has already expressed opposition to the Court of the Nation nonsense and the bypassing of Congress in future constitutional changes. But it reserved judgment on the proposal to deprive the federal courts of power on state redistricting—and that subject will arise at the ABA convention next August.

* * *

A "GREAT NATIONAL DEBATE" on the proposals is exactly what their promoters fear and have been seeking to avoid.

The Constitution can be amended in the most drastic and sensational way any time a conviction rises in Congress and the states that amendments are desirable.

There have been amendments prohibiting the sale and possession of intoxicating liquors and repealing that amendment. There has been an amendment to authorize a graduated income tax.

There has been an amendment abolishing slavery and another guaranteeing federal rights to all persons against any deprivation of those rights by state legislatures. There has been an amendment—unwise in the conviction of many observers including this one—imposing a two-term limit on the service of a President.

The proposals now being whipped through some of the state legislatures fall into an entirely different category. They would simply subvert the character of the federal government.

They would take us legally back to the Articles of Confederation, which the Founding Fathers abandoned because they left the national government so weak as to be ineffective.

They would undo the work of James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, Benjamin Franklin and George Washington in setting up a nation rather than a conglomeration of separate "sovereign" states. They would repeal retroactively the labors of the constitutional convention of 1787.

It is inconceivable that these propositions would be supported by the American people once the nature of them becomes known. So on with the "national debate," so the people will be aware of what the "amendment" promoters are attempting to slip over on them.

* * *

IN THE DISMAL SWAMPS of Virginia politics, where U.S. Sen. Harry F. Byrd has reigned supreme so long, the Virginia AFL-CIO candidly acknowledges that the next legislative session is likely to be "one of the most backward-looking in many years."

Brewster Snow of the state organization nevertheless sees some chance of electing candidates who would "bolster the ranks of moderate legislators who can be safely expected to return to office." In elections this year, he writes in the state newsletter, the people will decide "whether we hold fast to our stagnation" in state government "or slide backward into the deadly muck of genuine reaction."

"THE AMERICA LASTERS:" Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.), left, used that term to describe extreme right-wing political operators, and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) referred to the same groups as "those who prey upon the American public." They were interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

'Easier' Credit Is 'Longer' Credit And May Get Buyers into Jams

By Sidney Margolius

TODAY'S "EASIER CREDIT," with its helpful new trend to lower interest rates, also means longer credit. Some auto dealers now are reported to be offering terms as long as 48 months. Such long terms pose a double danger: of overloading families with more installment debts than they realistically should try to carry, and increasing their finance costs.

If you pay off a $2,000 balance on a moderate-price car in 30 months, at a finance charge of $6 per $100 a year (approximately a true 12 percent per annum), your finance charge will be $300. But if you are persuaded to buy a higher-price car, leaving, say a $2,800 balance, with the argument that your monthly payments will be approximately the same, and you take 42 months to pay, your finance charge will total $588. You also will have to pay more for the collision insurance finance companies require.

Bankers themselves are getting worried about the increase in personal or wage-earner bankruptcies. Last year again, personal bankruptcies reached another new record high.

Easy credit is not the only reason why people get into such money jams. But it is one of the leading ones, Linn K. Twinem, chairman of the American Bar Association's consumer bankruptcy committee, recently told the installment credit committee of the American Bankers Association. Twinem charged that retailers are chiefly responsible for the 450 percent rise in wage-earner bankruptcies in the past 10 years.

Twinem listed these reasons for rising bankruptcies:

● Debtor's optimism: He does not plan ahead, and so takes on more obligations than he can meet.

● Severe garnishee laws. In some states, especially California, Illinois, Ohio and Oregon, garnishee laws take a large part of a debtor's wages and thus induce him to escape through bankruptcy. In other states, deficiency judgments may lead to a similar squeeze. A delinquent debtor may owe $2,000 on a car, have it repossessed, find that it brought only a few hundred dollars on the forced resale and that he has been charged with legal costs too, and so still owes, say, $1,300. He may then see bankruptcy as the only way out.

● Too abundant credit granting by careless dealers. Long car loans are an example. A family that buys a car this month on a four-year loan will still be paying for it in 1967. After three years, the car—assuming it was worth $2,500 new—will be worth only about $900. But the family may still owe about $1,000 including the balance of the finance and insurance fees and may not try hard to hold on to the car.

● Decrease in income due to loss of job or reduction in overtime work, when the family finds it has taken on more installment payments than it can handle.

● Sickness: One study showed that one-third of the indebtedness listed in personal bankruptcies consisted of medical bills.

● Marital difficulties and other misfortunes were the main cause of one of eight personal financial failures, a Yale University study showed.

If handled knowingly, a consolidation loan can be extremely useful to a family that has incurred numerous debts. Such a loan can "stretch out" overly-burdensome payments, and even can save on finance charges by enabling prepayment of higher-cost debts. One family was harassed by nine different installment debts and loans. True interest costs ranged from 12 to 22 percent. The family secured one loan at a true interest cost of approximately 10 percent to pay the others.

But consolidation loans need to be arranged with an understanding of the finance charges. Consolidation loans offered by small-loan companies merely may substitute a higher-cost debt, at interest rates typically 24-30 percent, for lower-cost debts. In that case it is preferable to arrange your own extensions of payments, and repay fastest those debts with highest finance charges.

The lowest-cost consolidation loans are provided by credit unions and commercial banks. Credit-union officials are very experienced in arranging such loans, in helping families get on realistic budgets and in saving workers from garnishees.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

A FEDERAL LAW is needed to wipe out discrimination in employment, the AFL-CIO declared in House testimony endorsing equal employment opportunity legislation. Thomas E. Harris, left, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO, discusses the bill with its House sponsor, Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.).

AAA Tells IAM:

Union Mechanics Do Better Auto Repairs

THE AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE Association said that the public would be better protected against unscrupulous and incompetent repair shops if all auto mechanics were unionized.

George Viverette, head of the Washington, D. C., AAA Emergency Road Service, told the Machinist, official weekly of the IAM, that apprenticeship training programs such as those sponsored by the IAM help to eliminate unqualified mechanics.

Viverette made his remarks following a series of articles in the Washington Daily News. Here's what happened when Reporter Gail Perrin took a "doctored" car, furnished by the AAA, to 30 different repair shops:

AAA mechanics checked the car first, then set the voltage generator too low. They estimated the cost of repairs at $4.

The car was taken to 14 repair shops and gas stations which advertised "expert mechanic on duty." Only one shop correctly diagnosed the trouble. Charges for making various suggested repairs ranged from $1.50 to $30.

Next, two wires in the ignition system were crossed. The car was taken to two more shops. At one, the mechanic knew what was wrong and said so. However, he was overruled by the shop owner who suggested a valve job.

After this, the car was driven to 13 more shops, this time with a spark plug wire dangling. Only six of the shops spotted the trouble and fixed it. Five tried to sell a motor tune-up and two fixed the wire but said something else was wrong. The cost for suggested repairs ranged up to $30.

Viverette said these findings were deplorable. He offered these suggestions:

Encourage mechanics to unionize. One of the AAA's top mechanics said, ". . . if all garages were unionized, you'd have better control of the type of mechanics who work on your car."

License mechanics by law.

Persuade filling stations not to let unqualified personnel attempt to repair cars or even recommend repairs. The AAA is already trying to do this.

Check the shop's reputation. Get a recommendation from a friend. Try to go to a union shop.

DON'T TELL a mechanic to "do anything necessary" to fix your car. Make him tell you what is wrong, what needs to be done, and give you a cost estimate.

Tell the mechanic you want the old parts he removes from your car. This will help prevent crooked shops from needlessly replacing parts.

Make sure your receipt is itemized and on the shop's printed letterhead. Ask for an explanation of every charge.

From Soup to Nonsense:

If the Club-Haters Have a Club, Tell 'Em to Forget All About Us

By Jane Goodsell

CLUBS, CLUBS, clubs, clubs! I'm fed up with them! In this group-happy era of ours, any excuse is a valid reason for organizing a club, drawing up by-laws and electing a secretary to keep the minutes.

There are sewing clubs and investment clubs and rug-weaving clubs. There are eating clubs, which are organized so the members can get together and eat, and dieting clubs which are formed so the members can get together and not eat. There are mothers' clubs and grandmothers' clubs and clubs for people who have hay fever. There are clubs for people who are left-handed and clubs for parents whose children are left-handed.

Even reading (a solitary pastime if there ever was one) has been converted into a group activity. Curling up by yourself with a book is unhealthy and anti-social. But reading can become an enriching social experience if you share your interest with others by organizing a reading group that meets on alternate Thursdays.

Actually, it matters very little which clubs you join because all clubs tend to become very much like each other, and the meetings of the ski club are practically indistinguishable from those of the needlepoint club.

The first few meetings revolve around drawing up the by-laws, electing the officers, setting the dues and deciding upon the date and time of future meetings. Once these decisions have been made, the club enters into its second phase, during which all these decisions are reconsidered. A new president is elected, the meeting schedule changed and the dues raised.

SINCE THERE has been so much confusion over the meeting date (which was switched from second Thursdays to fourth Tuesdays) half the members fail to show up on the scheduled evening, and a telephone committee is appointed to remind the members of the meetings. And, because the treasurer has reported a deficit and the members display an unwillingness to raise the dues again, it is necessary to stage a fund-raising event.

The original purpose of the club has long since been forgotten. The sewing circle isn't sewing, the birdwatchers aren't watching birds and the skiers aren't skiing. The reading club reads nothing but Roberts' Rules of Order. The organizational activities keep the members so busy that there's no time to do whatever they had in mind when they formed the club.

I'm fed up with clubs. And, just in case somebody gets the bright idea of forming a club for club-haters, count me out!

Subscription Form

$2.00 a year; $1.50 a year for group subscriptions

Circulation Dept.
AFL-CIO News
815 Sixteenth St. N. W.
Washington 6. D. C.

☐ Here's my check or money order for $2.00 for a year's subscription.

NAME .....

STREET & NUMBER .....

CITY ..... ZONE..... STATE.....

UNION & LOCAL NUMBER .....

Fourth Time in 5 Months:

NLRB Again Rejects 'Weep' Film Showing

Showing by an employer of the anti-union propaganda film, "And Women Must Weep" has, for the fourth time in five months, led the National Labor Relations Board to set aside the results of an election lost by a union and to order a second vote.

The latest case involved the Borden Co., dairy products firm in Lake Charles, La., and Meat Cutters Local 300.

A three-man NLRB panel, overruling the acting regional director of the board's New Orleans office, held that the employer's conduct in calling a dinner meeting the night before the election and in showing the movie, circulated by the National Right-to-Work Committee, had the effect of making it impossible for workers to make a free choice in the election.

Machinists' Pres. Al J. Hayes has called the "Weep" version of the strike a film "cleverly salted with fictitious events that never really happened." His union has made its own film telling the story of the strike and refuting "Weep" point by point. The IAM film, "Anatomy of a Lie," may be rented for $3 from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, 815 Sixteenth St. N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

The Borden workers voted against the union, 38 to 12, after seeing the movie last Sept. 26. The new election will be conducted by secret ballot at such time as the regional director finds appropriate, according to an order signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

The film is a hopped-up so called "documentary" purporting to tell the story of a 1957 strike in Princeton, Ind. Ostensibly a true account of a strike by a machinists' local at the plant of the Potter-Brumfield Co., the movie actually was a highly dramatized fictional account of callous union leaders, a helpless employer, unfortunate victims, including a baby who was shot, the board has found.

In the latest ruling the board reviewed the history of the election, noting that the union filed an objection to the employer's conduct which was rejected by the acting regional director. The board commented: "We do not agree."

The union pointed out that the employer had a dinner meeting for its employes and their wives on the evening before the election, when speeches were made and the anti-union film was shown, "creating an atmosphere which made it impossible for the employes to express a free choice in the election."

The board cited its decision in the first case involving the "Weep" film —Plochman & Harrison-Cherry Lane Foods, Inc., where an election held Sept. 6, 1961, at the company's Chicago plant was set aside.

In its latest decision the NLRB recounted that in the Plochman case, after viewing and considering the movie it "concluded that the impact of this film upon the average viewer, who could reasonably accept the characters and events as true, was in the nature of misrepresentation which exceeded the bounds of permissible campaign propaganda."

In these circumstances, the board members went on, and "in view of the fact that the film was shown less than 24 hours prior to the beginning of the election, we find that" the union objection "raises substantial and material issues affecting the results of the election" and "we shall set the election aside and direct that a new election be conducted."

The Plochman election was set aside last December. It involved the unaffiliated Teamsters. Since then the board has set aside an election lost by the Meat Cutters at the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. in New Orleans, and another at the Carl T. Mason Co., Inc., in Itaska, Ill., also involving the Teamsters. The movie was shown to employes in all these cases.

In the Mason decision, McCulloch wrote a concurring opinion saying that the showing of the film alone was enough to "create an emotional state of intimidation and fear."

NEW YORK MAYOR WAGNER witnesses signing in City Hall of contract giving 5,000 workers in 100 nursing homes a 35-hour workweek, $65 minimum wage, free meals, vacations and other benefits, including wage increases of $15 to $24 a week over four-year period, plus a pension plan called the first of its kind in health facility field. Signing above are Pres. Peter Ottley, left, of Building Service Employes Local 144, and Co-Pres. Eugene Hollander, right, of Nursing Home Owners' Association, with Association Vice Pres. Alan Portnick watching, rear.

U.S. Inspection Controls Urged in Meat Industry

Chicago—The Packinghouse Workers have called on Congress to extend federal meat inspection controls to packers and processing plants currently exempt, thus minimizing the danger of contaminated meat products reaching consumers.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, in a letter to all House members, urged passage of a bill introduced by Rep. Neal Smith (D-Ia.) which would apply federal standards of sanitation to slaughterers whose volume is 50,000 pounds or more per week and to processors with weekly output of 20,000 pounds or more, whether or not they are engaged in interstate commerce.

The measure would permit the Dept. of Agriculture to use state inspection departments where they exist and have adequately trained inspection staffs, but would require the state to follow federal standards regarded as essential.

"Since passage of the Meat Inspection Act almost 60 years ago, the public has assumed its meat supply to be safe from disease and contamination," Helstein observed. "In recent years however, there has been a proliferation of processors of meat products whose operations are beyond the present jurisdiction of the Meat Inspection Division of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture.

"Within this area of non-federally inspected establishments there are extensive abuses of the public's confidence which the federal government owes it to the people to correct."

Helstein cited a statement adopted by the UPWA executive board, which declared:

"The nation's packinghouse workers know from personal observation that the rigorous and continuous inspection of meats as they are processed into sausage, frozen dinners, lunch meat, or other meat products is just as important to the public health as is inspection for disease at the time the animal is slaughtered."

The union cited testimony of Agriculture Dept. experts warning against uncontrolled use of chemical additives which give meat products normal color, normal odor and flavor, even though spoilage, toxins or disease-producing organisms may be present. Another practice opposed by federal meat inspectors is the doping of meat with aureomycin or other antibiotics as a substitute for proper sanitation.

Union Sets 30-Hour Goal In Aluminum

Corpus Christi, Tex.—Collective bargaining goals of all locals of the Aluminum Workers in future negotiations should include the 30-hour work week, with no reduction in take-home pay, and job retraining programs provided by the employer, the union has announced.

The revised goals were adopted by delegates to the sixth biennial convention who also re-elected Sec.-Treas. Patrick J. Reilly, Sr., picked 13 vice presidents, and heard reports from Pres. Eddie R. Stahl and other union leaders on the continuing loss of jobs in the industry due to automation. Stahl's term runs for two more years.

After impassioned debate the convention rejected a proposal to raise the monthly per capita tax from $1.50 to $2 per member. The delegates approved resolutions of support for the tax revision program endorsed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, for revision of the Davis-Bacon Act, and for other labor-endorsed bills now pending in Congress.

The convention called for defeat of the Humphrey-Harris "quality stabilization" bill as another form of "fair trade," and repeal of Sec. 14 (b) of the Taft-Hartley law, which permits states or territories to forbid union shop agreements.

The AWIU executive board was authorized in another resolution to draft a plan under which present members would be retained in the work force after retraining by employers.

In the election for vice presidents, the winners were: East Coast, Jack Sarno of Cressona, Pa., incumbent, and Steve Schwartzkopf of Massena, N. Y.; West Coast, Willard Moffett of Longview, Wash., and James Price of Vancouver, Wash.; Central States, Arthur Hanks of East St. Louis, Ill., and Hilton M. Webster of Davenport, Ia.; Southern States, James Burroughs, Baton Rouge, La., and Claude Mitchell, Sheffield, Ala.

Returned to office as vice presidents at large were Kenneth Dommel, Lancaster, Pa., and Paul Rhine, Lafayette, Ind. Three others were elected to first terms—Allan Sutherland, Wenatchee, Wash.; Gilbert Wolf, Corpus Christi, Tex., and Ernest Capel, New Orleans.

Insurance Moratorium Urged During Strikes

St. Louis—Strong backing for legislation to permit a moratorium on insurance policy premium payments during strikes or lockouts was urged by Pres. George L. Russ of the Insurance Workers at the union's third biennial convention here.

Russ told delegates representing more than 20,000 industry workers that increased efforts are needed to advance such legislation in six states where bills are now pending. One is Massachusetts, where such a proposal needs only the governor's signature to become law, the convention was told.

The legislation, Russ reported, would primarily aid policy holders served by debit collectors—agents who make personal collections, in most cases, from workers who pay their premiums by the week or month. In strikes or lockouts such workers frequently lose their policies because management cancels them, he said.

When the convention opened, issues before the 280 delegates included a recommendation by the executive board for authorization to transfer funds from a restricted surplus to the general fund when needed to finance organizing activities.

Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen said the change is necessary if the union is to have adequate financing for its increasing activities. The defense and negotiating funds, Gillen said, have quadrupled since the IWIU was formed in 1959 by the merger of the Insurance Workers and the Insurance Agents unions, but the general fund needs a boost.

Also up for action was a proposal to reduce the number of vice presidents from five to three. Vice Pres. Charles G. Heisel told the delegates more staff members are needed, not fewer, to capitalize on the increasing awareness by insurance workers of the advantages of union organization.

Major convention speakers included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Jack Conway, executive assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Industrial Union Dept.; and Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Schnitzler outlined the political education activity of the federation, and other services of special interest to insurance workers. Also he contrasted the record of union officers with those of bank officers and employes, citing figures to demonstrate that the rate of stealing and embezzlement among bankers is much higher. There is no public demand for additional legislation to restrict bankers' activities, he remarked.

Special events for the delegates and their wives here included attendance at the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show.

World Textile Job Situation Found Unique

Geneva—Textile employment is declining in the major industrial countries and increasing in the underdeveloped nations, according to a report prepared by the Intl. Labor Organization for the 7th session of its Textiles Committee.

However, employment drops among textile workers were associated with increased joblessness in the economy as a whole rather than with decreased employment in the industry, the report showed. Exceptions to the general trend of decline were registered in several relatively industrialized countries, the report showed—Czechoslovakia, Ireland, Italy, Poland, Portugal, Switzerland and Yugoslavia.

The same tendency was reported for wages. The available statistics showed a downward trend relative to general wage levels in the industrialized nations, while in the developing countries they were closer to the general industry wage.

The committee, which was in session here for two weeks, also considered problems of apprenticeship, vocational training and retraining; working conditions and related problems in the underdeveloped countries; and actions taken by governments as a result of conclusions adopted at previous committee meetings.

U.S. textile labor was represented by Pres. George Baldanzi of the United Textile Workers of America and Research Dir. George Perkel of the Textile Workers Union of America.

GEORGE MEANY AWARD of the Columbus (O.) & Franklin County AFL-CIO Community Services Committee was presented to Sol Morton Isaac (left) for outstanding community service in the field of health, welfare and recreation. Also shown at the presentation ceremony are Robert A. Rosekranz (center), assistant director of the national AFL-CIO-CSC, and Executive Sec.-Treas. Robert W. Greer of the labor central body.

Job Toll of Automation Threat to Hosiery Union

Milwaukee—The 47th convention of the Hosiery Workers heard its president, Andrew Janaskie, outline major problems facing the union as automation continues to take an ever-increasing toll in jobs.

Janaskie pointed out that in just a few years the industry has lost 58,000 workers—more than 25 percent of its total—while at the same time annual production has soared from 35 to 70 million dozen pairs of women's hose. He attributed the job loss to major technological changes and said decisions made by the convention on how to combat this problem could well mean the difference between life and death for the union.

He told the 100 delegates meeting here that the union was also suffering from membership losses in those states where so-called "right-to-work" legislation threatens the labor movement.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, a principal speaker, also warned of concern that jobs are vanishing because of the inroads of automation. This has resulted in much more worker interest in organized labor as an element in job security, he declared.

The growing need for new jobs has become one of the top domestic problems, Schnitzler said, adding that the labor movement is vitally concerned with the creation of new work opportunities as hundreds of thousands of new graduates pour into a job market while automation is drying up many jobs which already exist.

He was critical of the way in which the daily press plays up labor's "shortcomings" while ignoring its many contributions to society. He pointed out that of the $500 million raised by community fund drives throughout the country last year, more than $175 million can be directly attributed to workers and their labor groups.

This, he said, has received little or no attention in the nation's press.

Schnitzler also warned of the mounting campaign of extreme right-wing groups seeking to amend the constitution in drastic ways and to abolish the federal income tax. Labor must be ever alert to prevent these reactionary interests from seizing political control, he said.

Philip Weightman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education urged delegates to redouble their efforts on the political and legislative fronts.

The convention had a heavy schedule of committee reports, resolutions and other related business during its four-day parley, in addition to election of officers.

AFM's String Students To Broadcast Concerts

East Lansing, Mich.—Concerts by talented young players will be broadcast nationally again this summer from the Congress of Strings at Michigan State University here, the Musicians have announced.

The broadcasts will take place after the free scholarship summer school programs begin June 23 for 100 of the nation's most highly talented string instrumentalists, chosen through community auditions by 700 U.S. and Canadian locals of the AFM. The students come from the ranks of 1 million musicians who play in some 15,000 youth orchestras.

AFM Sec. Stanley Ballard, who directs the Strings project, said the broadcasts will be arranged through the cooperation of National Educational Television and Michigan State University's video station WMSB.

Guest stars on the programs will include Eugene Ormandy, music director, Philadelphia Orchestra; Robert Shaw, chorale conductor; Rafael Druian, concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra, and William Lincer, solo viola of the New York Philharmonic.

The summer school is in its fifth season as a public service program designed to discover and encourage the best of America's string players between the ages of 15 and 21 and also to fill "existing deficiencies" in symphony and chamber music groups.

The congress was started as part of a continuing campaign by AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin and the union executive board to "win a greater measure of public support for live music," as the union puts it.

Winners of the annual AFM auditions receive eight weeks of instruction under first-chair musicians from top symphony orchestras. They appear in public concerts directed by conductors like Eric Leinsdorf, Josef Krips, Ormandy, Shaw and others.

The union said its program here has helped more than 20 students win permanent and apprentice appointments with orchestras.

Ohio State House Girded:

Big Demonstration Protests Raid on Compensation Laws

Columbus, O.—The largest labor demonstration in Ohio's history drew an estimated 8,000 to 10,000 AFL-CIO members from all parts of the State House in protest against pending legislation that would mean less compensation for injured and unemployed workers.

The last AFL-CIO turnout totaled 4,000 in 1958, when labor launched its successful campaign in Columbus against the so-called "right-to-work" proposal.

Bus and car caravans began converging on Columbus early May 15 and quickly flooded the 1,200-car parking lot at the Veterans Memorial in the downtown section.

The workers, their wives and children formed a solid phalanx, five and six abreast, on the sidewalks around the four sides of the State House.

Thousands of signs carried out the theme of the demonstration: "Save Ohio's compensation systems."

The signs also reminded Republican Gov. James A. Rhodes of his campaign pledge that "no harsh anti-union legislation" would be passed while he was governor.

Signs read "Police Dogs in the South—Wolf at the Door in Ohio?" and merely "Please, Governor."

Other signs specifically urged the defeat of two pending compensation bills. The unemployment compensation bill, which would cut jobless insurance benefits by $26 million a year, has passed the House and is before the Senate Commerce & Labor Committee. The workmen's compensation bill, which also would reduce compensation in many cases, has been approved by the Senate and is in a House Industry & Labor subcommittee.

A four-bus caravan from Youngstown displayed banners reading: "Governor Rhodes—15,000 unemployed in Greater Youngstown—big business cannot provide enough jobs—stop the destruction of our unemployment and plant injury benefits!"

One of the more elaborate displays was a gallows with a dummy swinging from the crossbeam with the following sign: "Don't Lynch the Unemployed." It was brought by members of Steelworkers Local 1330, Youngstown.

Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO called the demonstration "a huge success from the standpoint of the record turnout and the impression it made on the legislators who are supporting these two harsh anti-labor bills."

"We think it showed, beyond any doubt, that the workers of Ohio are seriously concerned over the possible effects of this legislation on the unemployed and injured," Cope said. "We also think it showed the solid opposition of workers to the pending legislation. We believe we made our point that these bills would hurt, not help, the injured and unemployed worker."

The unemployment compensation bill includes a so-called "variable maximum" system to determine weeks of compensation. At present, 99 percent of claimants qualify for the 26-week maximum. The "variable maximum" would reduce this maximum for most workers to anywhere from 13 to 16 weeks. It would require an employe to work at least 39 weeks in his base-period year to qualify for the 26-week maximum payment, and to work three weeks for two weeks of compensation. This one provision alone would cut benefits an estimated $14 million a year.

The measure also would reduce compensation by amounts received in pensions, one-half of social security benefits, separation pay and so-called "vacation pay" during plant shutdowns.

It would also eliminate compensation to mothers who cannot find work after their pregnancies and allow employers to harass claimants by opening up the appeals procedure.

Among other things, the workmen's compensation bill would deny benefits to the injured employe who remained on the job with no cut in earnings; force an injured worker to undergo surgery to correct his disability or forfeit all or part of his compensation unless the Industrial commission held the operation might substantially impair his health; eliminate the patient-physician privilege; reduce the time limits for filing occupational disease claims; stop payment of compensation in certain cases appealed by employers until the case is finally determined; and require doctors to base their determination of disability only on what they can observe and not allow them to consider related pains or symptoms.

NLRB Hits Company In Equal Pay Firings

A Los Angeles employer who fired six women workers to avoid bargaining on a union proposal that they be given equal pay with men employes has been hit by an unfair labor practice finding.

A 3-0 National Labor Relations Board decision upheld Trial Examiner Martin S. Bennett's finding that the Edmund A. Gray Co., Inc., manufacturer of pipe nipples, discharged its women employes without notice to the Steelworkers on a claim that the women could not lift heavy packages and therefore their work should be done by an all-male staff.

Bennett said the "heavy work" claim was a pretext and that the company was guilty of discrimination. Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom and John H. Fanning agreed and ordered management to reinstate the women workers, with back pay plus interest for any income lost since their dismissal last Aug. 2.

The panel also agreed with the trial examiner that the employer failed to bargain in good faith. He was directed to bargain on request with the union on wages, hours and other conditions of employment.

The USWA won an election and was certified as bargaining agent for about 60 workers a year ago. During negotiations on a first contract, management proposed hourly wage rates of $2 for women packers and $2.05 for feminine factory workers in each case lower than the men's rates.

When the union asked for one rate regardless of sex, management gave the women layoff notices. The NLRB rejected the company argument that the women insisted on lifting heavy packages contrary to orders.

OHIO AFL-CIO MEMBERS—8,000 to 10,000 strong—came from all parts of the state to ring the State House at Columbus in protest against proposed legislation that would weaken unemployment and workmen's compensation laws.

Birch Society, ACA Flayed:

Attack on Far Right Mounted in Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

political philosophy of conservatism."

"Half the top officers of ACA are also John Birch Society leaders, and about one-fifth of ACA's financial support comes from Birch members," he said.

"I know of no sitting member of Congress who would accept a medal from the Birch Society. Is it then appropriate to accept a medal from an organization only half-removed? I think not."

Only one House member—Rep. Frank T. Bow (R-O.)—rose to identify himself as one of those chosen for an ACA citation. Bow said he would accept the award "with honor" and charged that Cameron was applying "guilt by association" in a "sneer against many patriotic, fine American citizens."

Udall Joins Attack

Rep. Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.) observed that while he respected "the patriotism and good motives" of those who would receive the ACA awards, it was wise to remember that Robert Welch, Birch Society founder, had advised his followers "not to come out openly but to work through fronts, to infiltrate the PTA's, to start all kinds of big fronts and little fronts, loud fronts and quiet fronts."

Other Democratic House members who rose to compliment Cameron on his remarks and to add material on ACA's operations included Representatives John A. Blatnik (Minn.), John Brademas (Ind.), Charles S. Joelson (N.J.), Frank Thompson, Jr. (N.J.), Spark M. Matsunaga (Hawaii), Chet Holifield (Calif.) and Don Edwards (Calif.).

In his hour-long address, Cameron went into detail in tracing the ancestry of the ACA and the interlocking relationships of its leaders and financial supporters with the Birch Society and other right-wing propaganda groups.

He noted that the ACA had grown out of The Committee for the 48 States, established in 1955 to lobby for a series of constitutional amendments, among them provisions to limit the amount of federal income tax and to revise the electoral college to weaken the voting power of urban areas.

Cameron suggested that the committee may have been "one of the items the President had in mind when he expressed amazement that those organizations which are allegedly founded to defend the Constitution are most often those which seek to change the Constitution."

Links Described

He noted that the chairman of The Campaign for the 48 States, Robert B. Snowden, was initially the finance chairman of ACA and more recently has been an endorser of the Birch Society.

He identified retired Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers, vice chairman and secretary of ACA, as a Birch endorser as recently as February 1962, and noted that ACA Treas. Charles Edison is a member of the editorial advisory committee of American Opinion, the Birch Society publication.

Other Birch Society officers, members, endorsers and editorial advisers whom Cameron linked to the ACA as officials or contributors include Howard Buffet, George W. Armstrong, Jr., Robert B. Dresser, E. Ainsworth Eyre, William J. Grede, Fred C. Koch, Thomas Parker, J. Howard Pew and E. L. Wiegand.

Cameron charged that the right-wing extremists are peddling a "contaminated brand of constitutional conservatism."

He said that the ideals of constitutionalism and conservatism "are being cunningly translated into word symbols" that have special meaning to those who use them. He likened this to the "homage" paid by Fascists and Communists to the symbols of freedom and democracy while giving their own interpretation to the words.

"Birch ideology is ACA ideology," he declared, "but whether Birch or ACA, it is not the ideology—it is not the conservatism—acceptable to our forefathers . . . to members of this Congress . . . to the American people.

"It is extremism, a brand of political and social ideology not worthy of recognition in our nation's Capital on May 23—or any other day."

Holifield Voices 'Chagrin'

Holifield, expressing deep chagrin that he had scored as high as 11 percent on ACA's conservative voting index, noted that on two-thirds of the 73 record votes since 1957 tabulated by the organization, "ACA considers that the majority of the House has voted against the spirit and principles of the Constitution."

"Little wonder, then, that they are so hysterical," he observed.

Thompson ridiculed the voting standards set by ACA as adding up not to conservatism, but to reaction in their opposition to labor, farm supports, aid to education, public works and welfare programs and their support of private power monopolies and high interest.

The organization's views on water resources development, TVA and public control of nuclear energy, he added "are cut right out of Samuel Insull's family diary."

"Its position on welfare legislation," he went on, "is that of economy and economy and stop coddling the poor, the lame, the homeless. Send me your huddled millions and I will send you coupons to clip, and let us not let the poor eat our seed corn."

Speaker after speaker called attention to the "parallelism" between many positions of the extreme right-wing and those of the Communist world. As part of this "conglomeration of inconsistencies," Thompson cited three examples: Opposition to U.S. support of the United Nations in Katanga, opposition "on principle" to any foreign aid, and the campaign to "get the U.S. out of the UN and the UN out of the U.S." In all three cases, he said, the position of the rightists paralleled that of the Soviet Union.

AFL-CIO Supports Better Hearing Drive

The AFL-CIO is supporting Better Hearing Month to remind America of the need for more comprehensive and effective programs for the conservation of hearing, Pres. George Meany declared.

Pointing out that 15 million Americans have impared hearing — three million of them children—Meany said "this is a serious problem to workers, especially in workshops and plants where noise levels are unusually high."

The AFL-CIO, he added, is "proud" to join with other community groups promoting May as Better Hearing Month.

FOUR MEMBERS OF THE AFL-CIO Executive Council serving as trustees of the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation met during council sessions in St. Louis to plan labor's role in the fall campaign for funds. Pres. George Meany said labor will play a "major part" in the job of helping the committee set up its machinery and in the fund drive itself. From left the trustees are David Dubinsky, Meany, Joseph D. Keenan and Walter P. Reuther.

Wirtz Sees Negotiated Steel Pact

St. Louis—Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz expressed confidence that steel negotiations and the current railroad rules dispute will be settled through private collective bargaining.

"If this happens, as I am confident it will, then we will have taken a great step forward in private collective bargaining in the United States and will reduce the possibility of the intrusion of the government," he said.

Wirtz' comments came at a press conference after he spoke to the AFL-CIO Executive Council on his recent trip to Bogota, Colombia, for a meeting of labor leaders and the labor ministers of the 20 Latin American countries in the Alliance for Progress. He told the council that he felt the meeting "was probably the most significant development in international affairs which has taken place in the past year or perhaps longer."

He said that important decisions had been reached on the role of Latin American ministries in the work of the Alliance for Progress and on the role of organized labor.

Wirtz also met with an advisory committee of AFL-CIO leaders to dicuss ways in which American labor could make its greatest contribution to the success of the Alliance for Progress.

Discussing legislative matters, Wirtz said he told the council he was hopeful that the youth development bill, the hospital care bill and the equal pay bill would be adopted. He added that the Administration would throw its full weight behind the President's proposals for improvements in unemployment compensation.

N. J. Olde Tymers Honor Reardon

Newark, N.J.—Ye AFL-CIO Olde Tymers Club of New Jersey has selected Pres. Eugene M. Reardon of Operating Engineers Local 825, which covers all of New Jersey and part of New York State, as its outstanding labor man of 1963.

Reardon became president of the former Jersey City Local 303 in 1910, a year after joining. Forty-four years later he became president of Local 825, with which Local 303 and others had been merged in 1920. He also is a vice president of his international union and of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO.

He will receive his citation at Ye Olde Tymers' banquet in the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, on June 10.

Equal Pay Bill Passes After Fight of 18 Years

(Continued from Page 1)

was "essential" to the bill.

Before the House vote, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote all congressmen urging approval of the measure, "in line with long-standing AFL-CIO policy in support of equal pay for women workers," although the bill's limitations, he said, do not "fully meet" the need for "effective" legislation.

Equal pay, under the legislation, would be required for work requiring equal skill, effort and responsibility which is performed under similar working conditions. Wage differentials would be allowed only if based on factors other than sex.

Meanwhile, a major political fight boiled up as Republican leaders demanded that Congress approve a substitute wheat price-support plan following defeat of the Administration program in a farmers' referendum.

The Administration proposal would have maintained $2 a bushel supports for wheat allocated to the domestic market but only $1.30 for any excess production. The allotment for the first time would have been stated in terms of bushels rather than acres, thus withdrawing the incentive to farmers to get higher yields on fewer acres by piling on more fertilizers. In the referendum wheat farmers defeated the proposal solidly.

Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman said he had no plan to offer a substitute proposal and Rep. Carl Albert (D-Okla.), the House whip, said he did not believe "five congressmen from city areas" would back a substitute paying high supports without production limitations.

In other developments:

- The Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee gave unanimous approval to an $840-million mental health bill based on Administration proposals to help construct community mental hospitals and finance research in treatment of the mentally retarded.
- The House Ways & Means Committee began closed-door voting on the tax bill—a process which is expected to take about another month to complete. In one tentative vote, the committee sharply cut back the present sick pay exemption, limiting it to cases where a worker has been incapacitated for more than 30 days.
- Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) announced that, with agreement from the White House, his House Education committee would divide the Administration's omnibus education bill into four measures, thus separating the President's proposals on aid to higher education and impacted-area schools from the more controversial parts of the program, such as aid to elementary and secondary schools. Meanwhile, Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.) introduced a bill he said was designed to solve the controversy over aid to parochial schools by giving tax credits to parents who send their children to private schools.

Rise in Negro Hirings Reported by Big Firms

The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has reported a "substantial" increase in hiring and upgrading of Negroes by 65 big companies which employ nearly 2.5 million workers. The 65 firms have all signed Plans for Progress agreements pledging affirmative action to insure equal job opportunity.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, committee chairman, said the biggest percentage gains were in employment of Negroes for salaried office, professional and technical jobs, and in the skilled crafts.

The report showed:

- While Negroes made up 4.1 percent of the workforce of the 65 companies at the time they signed the "progress" agreements, they received 22.7 percent of the new jobs filled during the survey period of June to December 1962.
- At the start of the program, Negroes held 1.5 percent of the salaried jobs. They received 9.9 percent of the new jobs filled.
- While only 2.3 percent of the skilled craftsmen were Negroes, during the six-month period Negroes accounted for 15.9 percent of craft jobs filled.

In a companion report, the committee announced that it had ordered government contractors to take "corrective action" in 644 cases of discrimination during its first two years of operation.

The committee said it has received 1,738 complaints of discrimination. Of these, 698 are still pending and 141 were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because the employers did not hold government contracts. Charges were upheld and action taken in 72 percent of the remaining cases.

Meany Urges Full Foreign Aid Funds

People Ready to Pay, He Tells Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

Meany sharply challenged the Clay committee's majority report, which asserted that U.S. aid programs are "trying to do too much for too many too soon."

In 1949, he pointed out, the U.S. spent 11.5 percent of its federal budget on foreign aid and "today it is only 4 percent." He emphasized that of the nations which have received U.S. assistance since World War II, "more than half are now able to stand on their own feet economically."

Meany disclosed that he had given the Clay committee "a rather lengthy memorandum" which "called for an expansion of U.S. foreign aid in view of the continuing Communist threat to world freedom and the urgent needs of the millions of people in the underdeveloped countries."

'Positive Attitude'

If the report "had taken more account of the AFL-CIO's recommendations, he commented, it would have better reflected "the American people's positive attitude towards foreign aid."

Questioned regarding Pres. Kennedy's pared-down $4.5 billion foreign aid request—after an earlier budget estimate of $4.9 billion—Meany said he was willing to accept the President's judgment as to the amount needed for an adequate aid program. He said he did not believe the Administration had cut back its estimate as the result of the Clay report.

Meany also told the committee during the question period that he was and has been opposed to assistance to Communist nations. He emphasized that the foreign aid program, overall, has been the most effective means of blocking Communist expansion.

He said he thought the U.S. "should take a pretty good look" before giving aid to the United Arab Republic in view of Nasser's avowed goal of destroying Israel.

Dollars appropriated for foreign aid, he said, serve a double function by "promoting the nation's economy." In non-military expenditures, he continued, "the percentage of dollars spent in the United States is both high and rising."

Spending in U.S.

In 1960, he noted, 41 percent of all foreign aid dollars spent for commodity procurement "found their way to the U.S.. By 1962, the percentage had risen to 64 and for the second quarter of the 1963 fiscal year, Meany said, it was 79 percent.

The Administration's foreign aid bill, he said, "affects 700,000 jobs directly" and even more than that indirectly.

"These are jobs we can ill afford to lose," he added.

Meany spelled out his differences with the Clay committee majority, making these points:

- Labor takes "strong exception" to the Clay committee's insistance that aid should not be given to government enterprises which "compete" with private enterprise. While the AFL-CIO "wholeheartedly" supports the private enterprise system, "only the Soviet Union and its satellites attempt to impose their economic system on other nations. We should not try to imitate them."

America's objective, he emphasized, should be "politically free" societies, where the people may choose the economic system which suits them best.

- "I regard with special concern the recommendation of the Clay committee that the U.S. withdraw from Africa and leave the task of helping the new nations of that continent to their former colonial rulers."

Meany said that European aid alone would be inadequate and "the African nations would regard it as callous indifference to their needs if the richest country in the world, the U.S., appeared to write them off."

Africans, he emphasized, "do not want to be wholly dependent on their former colonial masters . . . We ought to favor a multilateral approach in Africa just as we do in the Alliance for Progress program."

- The Clay recommendations for setting "terminal points" for aid to particular countries is "unrealistic and self-defeating."

"Could we have fixed a terminal date for our support to West Berlin in 1947?" Meany asked.

He said "when the job is done, we can, we should—and we do—withdraw our aid."

- There is "a great need for more, not less, technical assistance." One area which should be expanded is help in development of cooperatives and credit unions, Meany declared.

- The Clay report, he said, failed to recognize the importance of assisting the trade union movement in the developing nations as "the best safeguard against exploitation of workers by greedy private employers and an all-powerful state . . . They are a bulwark against an imitation of the Soviet pattern."

He conceded there has been some "waste" in the aid program as there is "in every human institution."

Congress, he said, must rely on "the ability and integrity" of the administrators of the program "to keep waste to a minimum."

He added: "I urge you not to cripple an essential program because inevitable waste occurs."

SUPPORT FOR BIRMINGHAM Negroes in their demonstrations to affirm their rights was voiced by this rally of AFL-CIO union members in New York City. Central Labor Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale is shown addressing the rally, which grew out of the regular monthly meeting of council delegates and drew an overflow audience of more than 2,000 to Roosevelt Auditorium.

5-Point Full Employment Program Proposed to Congress by Reuther

(Continued from Page 1)

spending" in education, health, housing and other socially-needed programs.

- A "positive wage policy designed to increase consumer demand by increasing wages and salaries." Reuther said the government should give "active encouragement" to wage increases through collective bargaining "to correct the growing imbalance between consumer demand and capacity to produce consumer goods."

- Procedures "to invoke the force of public opinion" to keep down unjustified increases in administered prices so that economy-stimulating measures will not be "perverted to inflationary ends."

Swedish Plan Cited

Reuther suggested that the committee, which is undertaking a broad study of manpower and employment problems, examine the methods Sweden uses to encourage full employment.

Terming the accelerated public works program adopted by Congress last year a "great success," Reuther said there should be a "shelf" of federal, state and local public works which would automatically be put into operation whenever the economy signaled a downturn.

The U.S. at present has only "bits and pieces of a manpower program," he declared, "too often overlapping and duplicating . . . with no effective machinery for coordination."

An effective public employment service, Reuther emphasized, "is the key to an effective manpower program." He urged consideration of measures to bring about greater use by employers of the U.S. Employment Service.

Reuther said the start of the government's manpower retraining program has been handicapped by continued high unemployment. In a "natural" desire to show a good placement record, he said, administrators of the program have tended to choose for training the "cream of the crop"—workers who would have no trouble finding employment during more prosperous times.

This policy, he said, has left a "hard core" of unemployed, including older workers and members of minority groups "who come to feel that they have been shunted aside and have little chance to compete effectively for jobs."

The program, nevertheless, can make "a significant contribution" to the nation's manpower needs, Reuther declared. He emphasized that it would be "a major tragedy" if it were abandoned and warned that there is a "very real danger" of abandonment under the present law which requires states to provide matching funds beginning July 1, 1964. He strongly urged Congress to extend the program beyond that date without the matching-funds requirement.

Earlier the subcommittee heard Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz testify that monthly unemployment statistics do not reflect "the full impact and pervasiveness" of the unemployment problem.

Government studies indicate, he said, that approximately 14 million people were unemployed at some time during 1962—one out of five in the work force—and that over 4 million were jobless 15 weeks or more and about 2 million for more than half a year.

Continued heavy unemployment, Wirtz told the subcommittee, "represents a stunting of economic growth at a time when vigorous growth is critical to the continued good health of a free enterprise system."

EMPLOYMENT GAINS after recession low-points have failed to match the recovery in production, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a Senate Labor subcommittee. He used this chart to show that the job lag has grown after each recent recession.

5-25-63

Rubber Union, General Tire Agree on Pact

Akron—The Rubber Workers and the General Tire & Rubber Co. have reached agreement on a new two-year contract yielding wage increases of 16 cents an hour and other benefits, and providing also for establishment of a study committee to explore labor-management problems and make recommendations to both sides.

The agreement, similar in its economic provisions to those reached recently by other big rubber firms, becomes effective after ratification by the 3,300 General Tire workers in Akron and Waco, Tex., and approval by the URW executive board. The Akron workers already have ratified, and the Waco local has scheduled a vote.

In another contract development, members of URW Local 2 here reversed an earlier decision by voting to ratify a new two-year pact with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. That produced enough votes to result in chainwide ratification of the agreement—8 of 11 locals and 16,000 of 20,000 members.

Ratification by URW members at General Tire would leave only two major contracts unsettled—at the U.S. Rubber Co and the Seiberling Rubber Co., where talks are continuing.

New York Typos Re-Elect Powers

New York—Bertram A. Powers, who led Typographical Local 6 during the 114-day newspaper strike and lockout here and headed the unity committee formed by all unions at the papers, has been reelected president of the local.

The 10,000-member "Big 6" local voted 6,280 to 2,254 for Powers over John M. Kepple.

AFL-CIO News

Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year

Vol. VIII — Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. — Saturday, June 1, 1963 — No. 22

Meany Urges Major Push On Public Works Projects

School Aid Fund Rise Supported

There is no "bargain basement" solution to the "overwhelming need" for federal aid to education, the AFL-CIO has told Congress.

Labor's "only dissent" from the Administration proposal for federal assistance is that it is "too modest," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared in testimony before a Senate subcommittee.

"Adequate schools cost money, and we might as well accept this as a fact," he said, adding that it will take "at least twice as much money" as the President has asked to do the job.

Biemiller said the submission of the Administration program as a single-package bill has "contributed to public understanding of the scope of the problem." It doesn't matter if, at this stage, Congress divides the program into separate bills, he continued. Labor, he emphasized, supports the President's proposals, "whether taken together or one at a time."

However, he went on, the Administration is being unrealistic in proposing to limit federal aid to elementary and secondary education to a one-time program which would be "phased out" over a five-year period.

"Congress ought not to embark upon a fundamental program of this kind under any illusions that it will soon come to an end," he said.

'Polite Fiction'

Rejecting the "polite fiction" of a temporary program, Biemiller declared:

"When the federal government at long last acknowledges its responsibility for the education of its future citizens, it must continue to fulfill that responsibility."

He acknowledged that enactment of broad-scale federal aid to education "has been enmeshed in religious controversy" but emphasized that "within the framework" of the Constitution, "there lies an area in which seemingly irreconcilable positions can be brought together." He told the subcommittee:

"Private non-profit schools are now eligible for National Defense Education Act loans to buy equipment to teach science, mathematics and foreign languages. Such loans should also be available for the construction

(Continued on Page 8)

LADIES' DAY on the picket lines at the Kingsport Press featured a millinery competition among women strikers and the wives of male unionists. Prizes were given in various categories of beauty, originality, humor, etc. Five Kingsport unions have formed a united front in their effort to win fair contracts from the Kingsport Press, largest book printer in the nation.

24-Hour Picket Lines:

Union Spirit Blazes In Kingsport Strike

By Eugene A. Kelly

Kingsport, Tenn.—The flaming spirit of the old South has flared into life on a union picket line here in a new South stirring with expanding industry and awakening labor.

You can see the unquenchable never-say-die spirit in the faces of the 1,600 men and women who have forged five allied unions into one solidly united front at the strikebound plant of Kingsport Press, largest book printing plant in the nation, maybe the world.

"The old days are gone forever," said a pressman and a bookbinder at strike headquarters in Carpenters' Hall. "We just got tired of being pushed around. This company made a profit of more than $2.7 million in the last two years, and we want our fair share."

Pres. John Connolly of the Bookbinders and Pres. James Sampson of the Stereotypers, here for a rally May 27 in Kingsport Civic Auditorium, added some other reasons having to do with union security—protection against the new sophisticated machinery of automation, and the rights that go with service and seniority, nailed down in the union-management contract.

So did IBB Sec.-Treas. Wesley Taylor and William Sewell of the Machinists.

Contract negotiations, bogged down by the stubborn refusal of management to realize that the old "father-knows-best" technique won't work any more, took a hopeful turn as May ended, but leaders of the five unions in the Allied Kingsport Press Unions warned against premature optimism. The five are the Bookbinders, Pressmen, Stereotypers, Machinists and Typographers.

Management suggested, and the union steering committee agreed, to switch negotiations to New York City, with unsettled contract issues to be mediated by Arbitrator Theodore Kheel, who has helped settle recent disputes in the longshore and

(Continued on Page 3)

Cites Local Needs, Spur to New Jobs

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has appealed to Pres. Kennedy to push extension of the Public Works Acceleration Act through 1964, with a $2 billion appropriation to finance it.

"A federal program of this magnitude, plus the approximate $1 billion which would be added by state and local matching funds, would create about 300,000 badly-needed jobs, would help thousands of communities obtain public improvements of permanent worth and would substantially stimulate the national economy," Meany wrote the President.

He recalled that when the AFL-CIO a year ago testified in support of a one-year accelerated public works program, it did so "with the proviso that it should be extended if the national unemployment rate continues to exceed 5 percent." He noted, too, that both Congress and the Administration had implied that the act would be extended if joblessness remained at high levels.

"All evidence indicates that unemployment will exceed a 5 percent rate during the course of the year ahead," the federation president said. "The AFL-CIO therefore asks you now to urge the Congress to extend the act through 1964 and to appropriate $2 billion for that purpose so an adequate program can be assured."

Describing public works acceleration as "one of the most effective programs to meet the problem of unemployment," Meany said the need for it, and the eagerness of state and local governments to utilize it, are reflected in the response to the original measure, signed into law last September.

'Thousands' Given Jobs

"Thousands of workers in areas of substantial labor surplus have returned to work building essential public facilities of long-term worth," he noted, "and additional thousands have also left the ranks of the unemployed to supply the material

(Continued on Page 8)

House Kills 'Braceros' Farm Plan

By David L. Perlman

The House voted to kill the program of importing Mexican farm workers into the United States at the end of this year, defeating by an unexpectedly large 174-158 margin a bill to extend the program an additional two years.

Barring some future compromise reviving the program on a limited scale, the importation of seasonal farm workers will not be permitted after next Dec. 31.

On the rollcall, Democrats voted 121-80 against extension; Republicans voted 78-53 for continuing the program.

Labor has strongly opposed continuation of the system under which several hundred thousand Mexican nationals are brought into the United States each year to work on large farms, primarily in Texas and California. The AFL-CIO charged that the program has kept down wages and reduced job opportunities for U. S. farm workers, benefited less than 1 percent of farmers and hurt small family farms.

In 1961, when the program was last up for extension, it passed the House by a substantial 231-157 margin. Importation of Mexican

(Continued on Page 8)

Romney Hit on Shifts In Jobless Pay Law

Lansing, Mich.—The Michigan AFL-CIO has charged that a new unemployment compensation law signed by Gov. George Romney (R) makes an "outright gift" of $280 million in back UC taxes to some of the state's largest corporations and violates a pledge by Romney to protect jobless insurance benefits.

Democratic legislators declared that the new law also posed a "conflict of interests" in that American Motors Corp. would be among the major beneficiaries of the tax write-off. Romney is former president of AMC and is still listed as its chief stockholder.

The measure sharply modifies the effect of a 1959 decision by the Michigan Supreme Court, known as the Ford-Canton case. The state's high court ruled in the case that Michigan employes of the Ford Motor Co. were entitled to unemployment compensation when they were laid off because of what the company called "parts shortages" flowing from a strike by Ford workers in Canton, O.

Two attempts by Republican-dominated legislatures to reverse the ruling were vetoed by former Gov. John Swainson (D).

Romney signed the 1963 bill despite a protest from Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther that he was "morally obligated" to veto it because of its direct conflict with a commitment in his "State of the State" message to the legislature.

Wanted by Ford

Romney had declared that any new legislation dealing with the Ford-Canton decision should assure compensation for "workers unemployed as a result of labor disputes in which they do not participate and from which they will not benefit."

Instead, the bill signed by the governor incorporates "everything

(Continued on Page 3)

Kennedy Reactivates Labor Mediation Panel

Pres. Kennedy has reactivated the long-dormant National Labor-Management Panel in an effort to promote what he sees as a trend toward the peaceful solution of collective bargaining disputes.

At the request of Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, the President appointed six trade union officials and six management representatives to the panel, authorized by the Taft-Hartley law but inactive during the Eisenhower Administration.

The statutory purpose of the panel is to advise the mediation director "in the avoidance of industrial controversies and the manner in which mediation and voluntary adjustment shall be administered, particularly with reference to controversies affecting the general welfare of the country."

Simkin announced that he planned to call the 12-member group into session in Washington "at an early date." He had written the President urging that the panel be revived so that he could "utilize the expertise" it would make available "in order to intensify and extend the mediatory efforts" of the service.

In announcing the appointments, Kennedy said:

"The state of labor-management relations, with occasional excep-

(Continued on Page 2)

"ABUNDANCE AND FREEDOM" was the theme of the 58th annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy. LID officers and guests shown here are, from the left, Harry Fleischman, chairman of the LID executive committee and director of the National Labor Service, American Jewish Committee; Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.); Mark Starr, LID vice president and retired education director of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers; Nathaniel M. Minkoff, LID president and secretary-treasurer of the ILGWU's New York Joint Dress Board; Luther Evans, director of the international affairs library at Columbia University; Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

'Very Successful Session':

Labor-Backed Laws Enacted by Hawaii

Honolulu—The Hawaii legislature, in what the AFL-CIO council here termed "a very successful session," has passed a package of major labor-backed legislation including:

- A state version of the federal Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act, which stringently limits the power of state courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes.
- An anti-strikebreaker law, which bars third parties to a dispute from furnishing "replacements" for strikers and forbids the employment during a labor dispute of professional strikebreakers. Violation is punishable by a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine. The legislation also requires all "help wanted" advertisements during a labor dispute to contain notice that a strike or lockout exists and to be signed by the person authorizing the advertisement.
- A fair employment law.
- A Davis-Bacon-type law which provides that prevailing wages required to be paid on state construction projects include the value of fringe benefits. The AFL-CIO has for several years been seeking congressional enactment of a similar provision in federal law.
- A change in the "experience rating" system of financing state unemployment compensation benefits which will broaden the base of employer financing of the program. The law was amended to establish a minimum employer payroll tax of 1 percent of the first $3,600 of a worker's wages, with a maximum tax of 3.2 percent. Under present law, 60 percent of the state's employers paid no tax at all. The amendment was adopted for a one-year experimental period.

The legislature also tightened laws against false advertising, passed legislation requiring disclosure of finance charges on bank loans, provided for an elected school board, and liberalized the state's so-called "fair trade" law.

Exec. Sec. Harry Boranian of the Honolulu Central Labor Council said labor-backed bills have either been signed by Gov. John A. Burns (D) or are expected to be signed shortly.

One major labor-supported bill which was defeated was a land-reform measure that would have enabled people paying "ground rent" on land on which they have built homes to purchase the land after five years. Much of Hawaii's land, Boranian said, is held by a few big estates, and trusteeship arrangements forbid its sale.

The land reform bill passed the House, but three Democrats joined with Republicans to defeat it in the Senate on a 13-12 vote.

35-Hour Week Called 'Inevitable' By Beirne

New York—The increasing spread of automation and the job displacement problems it creates will make the 35-hour workweek "inevitable—in the telephone industry and in many, many others," Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers declared at the 58th annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy.

Beirne was one of the principal speakers at the conference, which also heard addresses by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) and Rep. William F. Ryan (D-N. Y.). At the league's annual luncheon, Norman Thomas presented the LID distinguished service award to the veteran author Upton Sinclair.

Beirne noted that the telephone industry is perhaps the most highly-automated industry in America, yet it now employs more telephone operators than before the first dial phone was installed.

Nevertheless, he observed, on a national basis the new technologies are creating "surplus man-hours," which in turn are contributing to the high level of unemployment, now nearly 6 percent.

Providing jobs for this "last 6 percent" of the nation's workers, the CWA president declared, is "the primary challenge of the American economic system."

He said the 35-hour week—"whether achieved through legislation or collective bargaining, or both—offers one means of distributing both work-time and leisure-time more equitably through society."

Other methods, he said, include longer vacations, sabbatical or pre-retirement leaves for older workers, and earlier retirement "on pensions sufficient to finance a life of dignified and creative use of the leisure time of senior years."

Hart, addressing the luncheon, described the growth of automation as one of two great revolutions in American life that are converging at one point in time.

The other, he said, is "the human revolution, the struggle for equal rights—civil and economic—by our Negro citizens which at last has caught the conscience of our entire people."

It is partly the technical revolution, he said, that makes the achievement of economic equality so difficult for Negro workers.

"In the nation today there is no skilled craft in which Negroes constitute more than 2 percent of the workers," Hart observed. "Yet it is in the semi-skilled and unskilled groups that the impact of automation strikes first."

He said the Negro's relative position in the labor force has been static for many years and now threatens to grow worse as automation spreads.

"The roots of this phenomenon—poor education, inadequate housing, lack of training, job discrimination in industry and union, the Negro ghettos of our cities—must be eliminated if our Negro citizens are to achieve full economic equality," Hart declared.

W. T. Connell Dies, Ex-Head Of Engravers

Natick, Mass.—Wilfrid T. Connell, president of the Photo Engravers from 1954 to 1962 and a former president of the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Council, died in Leonard Marsh Hospital here.

Born in Ripley, Derbyshire, England, in 1896, he was brought to this country while a child and served in France in the U.S. Army during World War I.

He joined Local 3 of the union in 1926 and served it, at various times, as recording secretary, vice president, president and business manager. He was elected fourth international vice president in 1946 and third vice president in 1952. He also served as chairman of the Massachusetts State Housing Board in 1944 and as a vice president of the National Association of Blue Shield Plans. He belonged to the American Legion and the Masons.

An international union delegation headed by Pres. William J. Hall attended funeral services in the First Congregational Church here. Surviving are the widow, Marian; three sons, Selectman Richard Connell of Northboro, Mass., Marine Lt. David Connell of Camp Lejeune, N. C., and Bruce, who lived at home; two grandchildren and two sisters.

Recreation Workers Win Wage Raises

New York—Three hundred and fifty employes of 18 Jewish community centers and YMHAs here returned to work under a new two-year contract providing substantial salary and fringe benefit gains.

The settlement ended a 14-day dispute which the union—Local 1707 of the State, County & Municipal Employes—termed a straight-out lockout. The deadlock over a new contract was broken at a negotiating session in the offices of the City Labor Dept., with Sec. Morris Iushewitz of the New York City Central Labor Council and City Mediator Morris Tarshis helping to bring about an agreement.

Social workers and other professionals will receive a $290 a year increase retroactive to Apr. 1, an additional $200 a year effective Apr. 1, 1964, and a further $100 on Oct. 1, 1964. In addition, on the anniversary dates of their employment, professional employees will receive annual increments of $260 during each of the two years.

Clerical and maintenance employes will receive $4 weekly wage increases dating back to Apr. 1, and an additional $4 the second year. Both groups will receive improved health insurance and other new benefits.

Pearson Names Labor Minister

Ottawa, Ont.—Allan Joseph MacEachen, minister of labor in Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson's new Liberal government, received part of his education in the United States.

He was born July 6, 1921, at Inverness, N.S., the son of Scottish parents, and received a bachelor's degree from St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, N.S., and a master's degree from the University of Toronto. He studied economics at the University of Chicago in 1948, and economics and social sciences at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1951-53.

He was first elected to represent Inverness in the House of Commons in 1953 and was re-elected in 1957, but went down to defeat in the Conservative landslide the following year. From 1958 until last year, when he was again elected to Parliament, he was a special assistant and consultant on economic affairs to Pearson.

Kennedy Reactivates Labor Mediation Panel

(Continued from Page 1)

tions, appears pointed steadily in the direction of greater maturity and responsibility."

He said he saw "an evident new willingness by both sides in our industrial life to solve disputes peacefully" and suggested that the new panel "could very well, as the Congress intended, become a useful tool in making industrial peace more certain and secure."

The President made it clear that the panel would serve the specialized purpose of advising Simkin on techniques for the solution of bargaining disputes, whereas the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy covers the whole spectrum of industrial relations and economic policy.

Union officials named to the new group are Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. and Auto Workers Vice Pres. Leonard Woodstock, for three-year terms; AFL-CIO Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris and Machinists Vice Pres. Jesse C. McGlon, for two-year terms; Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers and Marvin J. Miller, assistant to the president of the Steelworkers, for one-year terms.

Management representatives are Gerry E. Morse, vice president for industrial relations of the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., and Pres. J. Paul St. Sure, of the Pacific Maritime Association, for three-year terms; Wayne T. Brooks, industrial relations director for the Wheeling Steel Corp., and J. Curtis Counts, employe relations manager for Douglas Aircraft Corp., for two-year terms; Joseph V. Cairns, industrial relations director of Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., and Jesse Freidin, New York labor-management consultant, for one-year terms.

Des Moines Honors Veteran CSA Aide

Des Moines—James "Mac" McDonnall, veteran labor leader and community service worker, won a citation at a dinner given by 200 friends here for his 50 years of service to labor and the community. Pres. Robert McVay, Polk County AFL-CIO, presented a plaque and a check.

WDL Lists Openings for Apprentices

New York—A handbook which lists more than 3,000 openings for apprentices in the New York area was distributed for the first time at a conference on apprenticeship training called by the Workers Defense League.

The handbook describes the jobs, lists the necessary qualifications and tells where to apply.

It was published by the WDL to help launch a drive to overcome discrimination against young Negroes and Puerto Ricans and channel them into training in the skilled trades.

"Today 77,000 young people are out of work in New York City," said Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, who also is a vice president of the WDL and of the AFL-CIO. "Of these, twice as many are Negro and Puerto Rican as white.

"Although these youngsters don't know the figures, they know the facts. And the facts go beyond their condition of poverty and deprivation—the facts extend to the atmosphere of hopelessness in which these youngsters live, a hopelessness that kills initiative and paralyzes effort.

"Those authorities who are concerned about the crime rate and the growth of narcotics addiction should begin their search right here; the solution is jobs and the hope for a decent future for all our young people."

Unity Spirit Blazes:

Five Unions in Solid Front In Long Kingsport Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

newspaper fields. Kheel is to make non-binding recommendations, but picket line activities have continued around the clock without a letup.

Whether strike's end is near or far, the allied unions have agreed they will not go back to work until all five locals get fair contracts. That's what the strike is about, and that's why the spirit of the strikers has never wavered from the first day of the first walkout in Kingsport Press history.

Always in the past, management has been able to settle with one union and then force that settlement on the others, union spokesmen said. But something happened this year that surprised everyone, including management and unions alike.

Alliance Formed

What happened was that management, sure of its divide-and-conquer technique, became more unyielding than ever and the unions finally united in the allied group. The alliance became stronger when the first pickets took their stations, and previously unorganized workers decided not to cross the union lines.

Unity has worked so well that the New York Times described the situation under the headline, "Strike Cripples Kingsport Press." In a plant where production has been exceeding 40 million hardbound books a year, supervisors and strikebreakers have been getting them out at an estimated rate of only 4 to 7.5 million a year and the book trade has been raising hob with management over its failure to deliver its orders, especially textbooks for the fall school and college semesters.

The Times reported that publication of some important new books has been delayed and "numerous books of other publishers have been withdrawn from Kingsport" and taken elsewhere.

Leading customers of the printshop here include Alfred A. Knopf, Atheneum, Chanticleer, Grosset & Dunlap, Macmillan, Random House. Among textbook publishers have been Harcourt Brace, Holt, McGraw-Hill and some university presses, including New York University. Another big customer is the World Book of Field Enterprises, Chicago.

Many of those who have taken their two-hour turns on the picket line have found the companionship of fellow workers and the outdoor air pleasantly stimulating. Sometimes mountain air can be unpleasantly stimulating too, especially during 12 weeks of the bitterest, coldest, wettest, most uncomfortable picket-line weather many strikers have experienced.

'Strong for the Union'

One staunch union man is Kyle McConnell, pressman who left high school in Virginia to start work here almost 38 years ago at 10 cents an hour. After eight years of non-union conditions, he recalled, "we met in a field nearby and formed a union. Things are so different—that's why I've been strong for the union ever since." McConnell takes his turn at picket duty along with the newest and youngest of the strikers.

The strike machinery here has excited the admiration of visitors like Robert Munson, Bookbinders' international representative who helped run the big rally when Strike Director Carl King of the Electrotypers was called to New York for negotiations.

Each of the five cooperating unions provide two pickets at each of the eight picket posts and the company warehouse for a two-hour shift—more than 1,000 a day over a 24-hour stretch. Other unique features of this strike are the communications system, and the self-insurance system made necessary when management suddenly, without advance notice, dropped group insurance on strikers and their families.

The Unity Committee collects $2 a week from each striker and pays insurance claims out of a fund which provides better coverage than any commercial firm has offered.

The Carpenters have provided a hall free of charge for strike headquarters, and here an unusual two-way short wave radio station has operated day and night. Jim Sorah, pressman and amateur radio operator, set up a transmitter at headquarters and also in the downtown motel, and union staff representatives can keep in continuous contact with the picket lines through 13 patrol cars equipped with receivers.

The station has special temporary authorization from the Federal Communications Commission to operate three transmitters until June 29 under the call letters KUF 0001—the initials referring to Kingsport Unions First, according to operator Gordon Tipton.

The strikers have expressed appreciation to all union people who have donated to the strike fund, and urge no slackening of support. On May 27, members of Mine Workers' Dist. 50, unaffiliated, from neighboring Mead Corp. (papermakers), showed up to relieve pickets who wanted to go to the Civic Auditorium rally.

AFTER 35 YEARS as president of the Railway Clerks, George M. Harrison (center) stepped aside at the union's convention in Los Angeles and was elected to the new post of chief executive. He was succeeded as president by C. L. Dennis (left). They are shown with Sec.-Treas. George M. Gibbons, who was re-elected.

Romney Hit on Shifts In Jobless Pay Law

(Continued from Page 1)

which the Ford Motor Co. wanted in the way of disqualifying provisions," the State AFL-CIO executive board declared at a recent meeting in Port Huron.

"The language of this law is so broad in its application that an employer in a multi-plant corporation need only allege that his laid-off employe is 'assumed to benefit' from a strike in another plant and the employe will then be disqualified for unemployment compensation, or must prove that he is 'not guilty' as alleged by the employer," the board said.

The new law provides up to $5 a week more in compensation for eligible jobless workers, with the average estimated at $1.94, and lifts the effective benefit ceiling to $60 a week. The amount of a worker's wages on which the employer is taxed is increased from $3,000 a year to $3,600.

At the same time, however, employers who have accumulated large "negative balances" in their past UC tax accounts would be allowed to write these off by paying the maximum tax rate of 4.6 percent over the next two years.

Assailed on Pledge

Romney defended these provisions, declaring that they would strengthen the UC fund and stabilize employment. He accused critics of political motivations in raising a "smokescreen" over the forgiveness features after they recognized, he said, that the labor-dispute provisions "are fair and sound."

The State AFL-CIO replied, however, that even under the old law, companies with negative balances in the fund would have been required to pay "this same higher rate for an unlimited number of years until they could repay what they owe."

The statement said that Romney had "solemnly pledged on numerous occasions both privately and publicly that he would not tolerate a few dollars increase to bait unemployed workers into accepting a law which provided for further callous disqualifications, but this is exactly what this law would do."

Romney has refused to identify the major corporate beneficiaries of the tax writeoff section of the law, but a House legislative committee has given him a list of 20 firms—among them American Motors—which it said would receive the biggest shares of the $280 million in tax forgiveness.

With a rare majority in the House, Democrats passed a resolution calling for investigation of the "conflict of interests" charges, but Republicans refused to name three members to a bipartisan study committee, and the governor ignored the action by signing the bill.

State Democratic Chairman Zoltan A. Ferency declared that Romney's signature had "three important meanings" for the people of the state:

"Moral and direct conflicts of interest are not to be recognized by the administration; the interests of big business will be served at whatever cost to the smaller businessman or the worker by the administration; and the plight of the worker who loses his job through no fault of his own is worsened to a point where many will be forced to await long, drawn-out and expensive court tests only to learn they may not expect any compensation insurance at all."

Oklahoma 'Work' Foes Get Time on Challenges

Oklahoma City—Opponents of a so-called "right-to-work" law have been given an extension of time to challenge signatures on an initiative petition to put the proposal on a statewide referendum ballot.

The extension was granted by an Oklahoma Supreme Court referee after a hearing at which opponents challenged 12,184 signatures from Oklahoma County. Labor and other civic groups joining in fighting the attempt to outlaw the union shop have contested to date more than 27,000 signatures from 10 of the state's 77 counties.

The referee, Marion Opala, extended the time for challenges until July 24, with a progress report due on July 1.

Opponents must successfully challenge approximately 78,000 signatures of the more than 200,000 which have been filed in order to invalidate the petition.

At the hearing here, attorneys for the challengers questioned several circulators of the petition, including a circulation department employe of anti-union Oklahoma City newspapers, who said the company offered and paid 10 cents a signature for all names on petitions turned in by employes.

He admitted leaving petitions with business firms and returning for them after signatures had been obtained. This, labor attorneys charged, is contrary to Oklahoma law, which requires circulators of petitions to witness the signatures they obtain.

The production manager of the publishing company, Robert H. Spahn, is a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Committee for Voluntary Unionism, set up in 1961 to push the "right-to-work" drive.

Opponents of the "work" proposal have contended that the petitions contain tens of thousands of "fraudulent" signatures. Their attorney, William C. Kessler, declared:

"Payment of 10 cents or more a name certainly encourages a rash of fake signatures. Our investigation also convinces us hundreds of circulators failed to properly witness signatures."

Primary Loss Kills Chandler Comeback Bid

Louisville—The political comeback ambitions of former Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler were smashed by voters here who nominated labor-backed Edward T. Breathitt, Jr., as Democratic candidate for governor.

Breathitt, 38 and a newcomer in this state's often highly personalized politics, won six of the state's seven congressional districts. With 2,512 of 3,017 precincts reporting, he had 280,000 votes to 228,000 for Chandler.

Chandler, twice a former governor, a former U.S. senator and onetime commissioner of baseball ran as an Old Guard candidate with the backing of former Sen. Earle Clements. He was bitterly opposed by the Administration of Gov. Bert Combs, as well as by the great bulk of Kentucky labor.

Republican nominee for governor is Louie Nunn, who had only token opposition.

A Chandler ally, Harry Lee Waterfield, won the Democratic race for nomination as lieutenant governor.

Poll Tax Ban Ratified By Missouri

Jefferson City, Mo.—Missouri became the 34th state to ratify the proposed anti-poll tax amendment to the U.S. Constitution, bringing the number of ratification only four short of the three-fourths majority of 38 needed.

Adoption of the amendment may have to wait until next year since only two legislatures considered likely to approve ratification are still in session. These are in New Hampshire, where the House has already acted, and Maine.

In April, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany asked state labor bodies in eight states which had not yet acted to give "highest priority" to ratification. Four of the states—Florida, Iowa and Delaware, as well as Missouri—have since completed ratification.

The Arizona Legislature adjourned without action and the Oklahoma House rejected the measure, although the Senate had approved it. Maine and New Hampshire were the other states on the list.

Tax Cut Need Stressed to Grain Millers

Chicago—A tax cut and revision in the tax structure, which now "takes too much from those who have too little," were called for here by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Speaking before the eighth convention of the Grain Millers, Schnitzler told the delegates:

"We need to insist that the AFL-CIO program for a 35-hour workweek is essential to any program for cutting unemployment. We must support any program that means jobs."

Schnitzler described the progress being made in the AFL-CIO's coordinated organizing drive in the Los Angeles area. Nearly 7,000 new members were added in the first four months of the drive while unions there were winning 38 NLRB elections, he noted, and a similar campaign has been approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council for the Baltimore-Washington area.

The importance of state and local union leadership to the welfare of the nation as a whole as well as to organized labor was stressed by Schnitzler in pointing to efforts of right-wing groups working in state legislatures to weaken the power of the U. S. Supreme Court and the Constitution.

One of the proposals of the rightists, he said, "would permit amending the Constitution by a vote of the legislatures of three-fourths of the states without approval of Congress, or by a national convention.

At the conclusion of Schnitzler's talk, AFGM Pres. Roy O. Wellborn presented him with a union-made copy of the Bible.

Speak Up, Friends!

THE FOREIGN AID program's future is in danger in Congress today for essentially the same reason that civil rights has become an explosive issue—the responsible leaders have remained quiet, allowing the racists and the ultra-right to dominate the discussion.

Indicative of the situation was a comment by a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany—that his testimony strongly favoring an expanded foreign aid program, and the willingness of organized labor to pay its share, was the first affirmative, unequivocating testimony for the program the committee had heard to that point.

Organized labor's support of the foreign aid program dates back to its beginnings in the late 1940s. It has consistently and emphatically supported the programs and their adequate financing on the simple basis that the price of peace and freedom is never too great.

There are no dues dollars to be collected from trade union support of foreign aid, just as there is no dollars-and-cents return to the AFL-CIO for the 23 percent investment of its total budget to overseas operations. These are investments that are measured only in terms of assuring world peace, extending liberty and freedom, and providing for social justice.

As a part of the fabric of the nation, the labor movement supports the foreign aid program because it is in the national and world interest. But while the AFL-CIO represents, as Meany pointed out, the "largest single group of taxpayers in America . . . the largest parents' organization . . . the largest organization of young men and women who would have to do the fighting . . .," there are other groups and organizations which, in the national interest, must join this fight.

Opinion polls and other measuring devices indicate that well over a majority of Americans support the foreign aid program. But given the vicious attacks of the ultra-right, the cut-spending pitch of the short-sighted conservatives and the general impression among many congressmen and senators that no one really cares about foreign aid, the program is in trouble.

★ ★ ★

THE ULTRA-RIGHT WING campaign to scuttle the foreign aid program should not be underestimated. It draws support from a long list of discontents and malcontents that reflects the difficulties of providing leadership for the free world.

But it can be defeated if the responsible leadership across the nation speaks up loudly and clearly in support of the aid program, in support of a program designed to preserve and extend freedom and peace.

The drive to gut the aid program can be beaten when the American people more fully understand that their efforts to strengthen the free world have paid off; that they have helped bring liberty and social justice to millions around the globe; and that the cost has been infinitesimal—it is today seven-tenths of 1 percent of the nation's total output of goods and services—compared to the price of totalitarianism, or of war.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Gervase N. Love, Eugene A. Kelly, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, June 1, 1963 No. 22

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

House Committee Hears Meany:

Politically Free Societies Held Goal of America's Foreign Aid

The following is excerpted from the testimony of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on the foreign aid program.

FROM THE BEGINNING of the aid program it has been the policy of the U.S. not to impose its political or economic system on the recipient countries, but to leave it to the people of these countries to decide their own form of government and economic and social order.

Great Britain was one of the major beneficiaries of the Marshall Plan, although its Labor government carried out a vast nationalization program. Simultaneously, France, another big recipient of U.S. funds, also expanded public ownership and embarked upon a series of economic plans. It is in this light that I take strong exception to a cardinal thesis in the Clay committee's report, namely that our aid program should insist on free enterprise in the recipient countries, with primary emphasis on private capital investment.

In particular, the report demands that "the U.S. should not aid a foreign government in projects establishing government-owned industrial and commercial enterprises which compete with existing private endeavors."

American labor has always wholeheartedly supported our private enterprise system. Under this system our country has obtained the highest living standard in the world. Moreover, the labor movement has found that it can best protect the interests of the workers in a free economy as it exists in the U.S.

However, our economic system is possible only within the larger framework of a democratic society which has developed strong countervailing forces to private capitalism. These forces include free trade unions and free collective bargaining; farmer and consumer organizations; a Congress that acts as a watchdog in cases of abuse of economic power; anti-trust laws; social legislation; regulatory agencies and the like. As a result, the laissez-faire economy of the 19th Century has been changed into the "mixed economy" prevailing today in the United States, as in most other industrially advanced countries in the free world.

But these countervailing forces do not exist in most underdeveloped countries. Not only political democracy, but the national state as such is still in its infancy. Labor is numerically weak and farmers or consumer organizations are almost nonexistent. Parliament is controlled by a strong executive. The one-party system is common. Social legislation, if there is any, is better on paper than in practice.

In such circumstances the chances for an emulation of the "remarkable success and progress" of our own economic system are, to say the least, dim. There is, on the contrary, an acute danger that we will witness a repetition of the exploitation and anti-labor practices which threatened America in the early years of the industrial revolution. In too many instances, private capital in the new nations has been interested solely in making big profits fast, with no regard for the long-term economic development of the country, let alone the working and living conditions of the workers.

America's objective should be free societies—politically free, with the ultimate power in the hands of the people. That is the basic point. The people may choose to concentrate on government ownership, control and planning; that is up to them. They may want a greater degree of private enterprise; that is also up to them. This country's concern should only be that the choice is freely made, and that it can be freely altered.

Only the Soviet Union and its satellites attempt to impose their economic system on other nations. We should not try to imitate them.

IT IS CERTAINLY necessary to expose "doctrinaire biases against responsible private capitalist enterprise," as the Clay committee put it. But it is no less necessary to combat "doctrinaire biases" against responsible public enterprise and planning.

It is a fact that current basic needs of the underdeveloped countries cannot, to any large extent, be met by private capital. These needs include construction of roads, schools, hospitals, irrigation projects; the establishment of vocational training centers, health education programs and the like. Since in view of the prevailing poverty, domestic savings are insufficient, the required funds to carry out such projects must be provided by sources from abroad. Obviously, public aid (grants and long-term, low-interest loans) rather than foreign private capital are likely to be the main source.

In addition, the current climate is not propitious for private capital in many of these countries, as the flight of U.S. investments from Latin America shows. Of course, private capital has an important role to play in the development of the new countries. But public foreign aid is an essential prerequisite for the economic and social conditions under which private investment can be most efficient and beneficial.

Any other position on this issue would strengthen the Communists' anti-American propaganda in the underdeveloped countries. It might spell the doom of the Alliance for Progress, which is largely based upon governmental loans and grants.

Morgan Says:

For Die-Hard Segregationists, Time Seems to Be Running Out

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

BEHIND THE BLACK and bloodshot headlines on racial strife some heartening developments have been quietly taking place in many parts of the land to strengthen the protection of human rights. In order to keep our balance it is necessary to be as aware of this progress as of the defiant erosion of constitutional guarantees, undermining the nation's prestige and security, in other tortured communities.

Morgan

In a joint memorandum the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League have prepared a kind of box score on the fate of state legislation in 1962 and 1963 in the areas of housing, employment, public accommodation and education. It adds up to a slow but steadily broadening trend toward ending the miserable, immoral and illegal second-class citizenship for minority groups. Only the blindly prejudiced can fail to see the inevitability of this trend which, as it gains momentum, will leave behind, frozen into a kind of Herculean monument to pathetic pettiness, the die-hard efforts of extremists in Birmingham and elsewhere to preserve the sacred separation of black and white drinking fountains.

There is, as reported by that invaluable publication, Southern School News, an increasingly perceptible change for the better in mood and attitude in the South itself, paced, encouragingly enough, by civilized leadership in Georgia and South Carolina. So the current memo deals with developments outside the South and the border states.

There have been, for example, some solid gains against discrimination in housing despite the serious setback in California last month when the university city of Berkeley, yielding temporarily to the hate and fear campaigns mounted by selfish real estate and right-wing extremist groups, repealed a fair housing ordinance with teeth in it. But California's state government continues to press for stronger legislation to penalize discriminatory housing practices.

Massachusetts and New York strengthened laws to ban discrimination in sale or rental of almost all housing, public or private, except in owner-occupied two-family dwellings. Earlier Schenectady, N. Y., passed an ordinance prohibiting discrimination in private housing.

Alaska created a Commission on Human Rights with some enforcement powers. In Kansas the legislature tackled only timorously the problem of segregated housing but may come up with new laws by 1965. Wichita, Kan., which has reportedly the most rigidly segregated residential areas of any city in the country of comparable size, began to work on its own problem under the leadership of such civic groups as the Urban League.

Although the legislation was riddled with loopholes, Maryland in March became the 30th state to adopt a public accommodation law prohibiting discrimination by race or religion in restaurants, hotels and motels in some parts of the state. South Dakota earlier took similar action and New Mexico added penalty provisions to its accommodation law. Indiana, once a cradle of the Ku Klux Klan, has a new law declaring it state policy to provide all citizens with equal access to public conveyances and accommodations as their civil rights. Also the enforcement powers of the State Civil Rights Commission were increased.

A MONTH AGO Michigan voters approved the first state constitution in the union which establishes a permanent civil rights commission charged with the investigation of discrimination and protection of civil rights. Though they had Republican Gov. Romney's support, efforts failed in the legislature to write the Detroit anti-blockbusting ordinance into the state law and prohibit real estate brokers, agents and salesmen from practicing discrimination in the sale or rental of residential housing. But the effort will be made again.

Last fall voters of Idaho in a referendum repealed a provision of the state constitution that citizens of "Mongolian descent" may not vote, hold public office or serve on juries.

Other states where new anti-discrimination bills were introduced included Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island and Wisconsin.

The laws are changing and with the change the country comes a little closer to the goal of "equal justice under law" which is inscribed on the marble front of the U.S. Supreme Court building as one of the basic precepts of the American system.

One of the things that may be bewildering some whites now is that the Negroes are not asking their permission to be free. They are asserting their own freedom with inspiring dedication and great courage. As a Negro mother told a judge in Birmingham juvenile court, ". . . I know this, judge—these younger people are not going to take what we took." And the United States will be a better country because they won't.

Washington Reports:

Service Veterans in Congress Pose Possible 'Conflict' Problem

REP. RICHARD BOLLING (D-MO.) and Rep. Gerald Ford (R-Mich.) have raised the question of a possible conflict of interest affecting nearly half the members of the House and Senate.

Their resolutions, similar to others introduced in the Senate are based on a provision in the U.S. Constitution: "No person holding any office under the United States (the Executive Branch) shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

Bolling and Ford raised the question whether a member of Congress who holds an armed services reserve commission, and is thus under the executive branch of the government, can also be a member of Congress, the legislative branch.

Interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, now heard on almost 700 radio stations, Bolling said that resolutions before the House Rules Committee authorize and direct the House Committee on Judiciary to clarify the situation.

Ford pointed out that the number of members of Congress who hold reserve commissions increased after World War II, since 19 million persons had military service during that war and many were later elected to Congress. Bolling estimated that "there are almost 200 reserve officers among the 535 members of the House and Senate."

BOLLING SAID the precedents in this case are "very clear." Ford asserted his belief that the matter should be resolved clearly, because Congress considers matters involving billions of dollars affecting the military and "the Congress should be above reproach."

"Members of Congress have to vote every year on authorizations for the Army, Navy and Air Force, on weapons, personnel, pay, and on appropriations," Ford recalled. "Can a person who is in both the executive and the legislative branches be completely objective?"

The procedure, Bolling explained, would be for the Rules Committee to report the resolutions to the floor. The House could, if it wished, then ask the Judiciary Committee to look into the matter, perhaps hear witnesses, study precedents and come up with a report.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

FOR 13 MONTHS the nomination of J. Lindsay Almond, a former governor of Virginia, to the U.S. Court of Customs & Patent Appeals has been languishing in the Senate. There were no committee hearings on the nomination after Pres. Kennedy submitted his name last year. The President gave Almond a recess appointment thereafter and resubmitted his name for confirmation.

What has been the difficulty? Very simple, Almond was the governor who broke down Virginia's "massive resistance" to school integration—broke it down because it was no longer legally tenable. The sponsor of "massive resistance" was the state's senior U.S. senator, Harry F. Byrd. So Almond's nomination to the federal bench did not move.

Subcommittee hearings have at last been held, and Almond has been praised by lawyers and former officials of Virginia's government. Byrd has broken silence to the extent of stating he has "no comment" on the nomination. Confirmation of Almond in his judgeship is believed to be near.

* * *

IN A UNANIMOUS DECISION, the Supreme Court has told the city of Memphis that it can no longer delay the desegregation of its publicly owned, tax-supported recreational facilities—its parks and swimming pools and playgrounds. The opinion, written by the court's newest member, Associate Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, is notable on several counts.

It is "almost eight years," he pointed out, since the court ruled that "state-enforced racial segregation" could no longer be accepted for public recreational facilities. Yet the officials of Memphis, having made token gestures toward desegregating its public facilities, were now in court asking judicial approval of "even longer delay."

The governing constitutional principles "no longer bear the imprint of newly enunciated doctrine," Justice Goldberg wrote.

"We cannot ignore the passage of a substantial period of time since the original declaration of the manifest unconstitutionality" of segregation in public facilities such as parks and playgrounds. Neither could the court ignore its "repeated and numerous" reiteration of the doctrine in later cases and the "many intervening opportunities" given cities to bring their practices into line.

The court said, through the opinion, that it would accept no further "obeisance to the now thoroughly discredited doctrine" that "separate but equal" facilities are an excuse for procrastination in desegregating all public recreational facilities. In framing decrees dealing with such issues, Justice Goldberg said, "affirmative judicial action" is required.

* * *

EVEN MORE SIGNIFICANT, PERHAPS, is the warning in the opinion that token, foot-dragging desegregation of the public schools cannot be tolerated forever.

It is nine years, Justice Goldberg wrote, since the original decision that racial segregation in public schools was a violation of the Constitution. In framing its decree a year later, the decree directing desegregation at "all deliberate speed," he observed that the court took into account certain identifiable "difficulties" in eliminating racial classification—the fact that in the schools attendance is compulsory, "the adequacy of teachers and facilities crucial, and questions of geographic assignment often of major significance."

"It is far from clear," he declared, that this mandate of 1955 for "all deliberate speed" would today be "fully satisfied by types of plans or programs for desegregation" of public schools "which eight years ago might have been deemed sufficient."

"Any depriviation of constitutional rights calls for prompt rectification," said the justice. The rights of citizens under the Constitution are "present rights." They are not "merely hopes to some future enjoyment of some formalistic constitutional promise."

"The basic guarantees of our Constitution are warrants for the here and now and, unless there is an overwhelmingly compelling reason, they are to be promptly fulfilled."

ARE NEARLY 200 MEMBERS of Congress violating the Constitution unknowingly? Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo.), left, and Rep. Gerald Ford (R-Mich.) seek an answer to this question in resolutions they have introduced for an inquiry into the propriety of armed forces reserve commissions held by members. They discussed the issue on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program.

Labor and Employers Show Their Stuff

MERCURY SPACE CAPSULE cross-section featured Machinists' exhibit at AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show in St. Louis. McDonnell Aircraft Corp., where IAM represents workers, is the prime contractor. Shown from left are Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., show sponsor; AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz; and Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the Union Label Dept.

RONALD PFLEGER of St. Louis is the proud winner of the national apprenticeship contest of the Bricklayers, shown receiving award from union Pres. John J. Murphy.

HERE IS GENERAL VIEW of show's exhibit hall, with crowds surrounding the Glass Bottle Blowers' demonstration of the now almost extinct craft of hand-blowing bottles and decorative glass objects—a craft that often approaches an art.

HUNDREDS OF PRIZES—radios and outboard motors, an all-electric kitchen and shopping bags—were given away at exhibits of the products of manufacturers and service employers whose union workers produce the goods.

THIS GROUP OF WOMEN VOLUNTEERS, shown with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, and Richard F. Walsh and Joseph Lewis of the Union Label Dept., kept attendance at the exhibit booth of the AFL-CIO itself at the Union-Industries Show.

VISITORS TO THE SHOW watch in fascination as a union baker, Charles Rominger, completes the icing of a cake. Rominger is a member of St. Louis Local 4 of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

A FASHION SHOW presented by the Ladies' Garment Workers was a frequent feature during the six-day run of the Union-Industries Show. The United Textile Workers also presented fashion shows in which models displayed textiles.

Wisconsin Board Acts:

'Weep' Film Showing Voids Another Vote

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Wisconsin Employment Relations Board has joined the National Labor Relations Board in condemning the showing by employers of the anti-labor propaganda film, "And Women Must Weep," in an attempt to "mislead" their workers into voting against a union.

The showing of the film—circulated by the National Right-to-Work Committee—to a captive audience of workers at American Paper & Plastics Products, Inc., led the state board to set aside the results of a union shop referendum and order a new vote.

Local 200 of the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers had narrowly missed the two-thirds majority necessary under state law to authorize a union-shop agreement.

Four representation elections—at Chicago and Itaska, Ill., and New Orleans and Lake Charles, La.—have been set aside by the NLRB in recent months on the ground that showing of the film prior to the votes exceeded the bounds of permissible employer "free speech."

The Wisconsin board found the employer had shown the film "for the purpose of misleading the employes" and had "thereby interfered with their free choice in the referendum." This conclusion was "substantiated" by the company's denial of the union's timely request for an equal forum "to rebut the misleading impressions created," the board said.

One of the three commissioners dissented from the ruling, but only on the technical ground that the union had not objected to the showing of the film in the four remaining days prior to the referendum.

The majority held this was unnecessary since the board's rules permit objections to be filed up to five days after receipt of the official tally.

Board Viewed Film

The board acted after viewing both the "Weep" film, the anti-union movie, and a documentary film, "Anatomy of a Lie," produced by the Machinists as a rebuttal to the anti-union propaganda.

The "Weep" film purports to document a 1957 IAM strike in Princeton, Ind., at the plant of the Potter-Brumfield Co. Actually, however, it is a fictionalized account with a contrived script showing a brutal local president forcing his will on a small group of members to incite an illegal strike and terrorizing the community with violence. The film gives the impression that the shooting of a baby was the work of union "goons."

The facts, as the IAM's "Anatomy of a Lie" shows, are that only nine of 400 members of the local voted against the strike after hearing a plea by the real local president—a warm, grandmotherly woman—not to walk out on her account, but only if company provocations made a strike necessary. The IAM film also reveals the company's importation of strikebreakers and presents the testimony of the sheriff and the baby's father that there was no evidence whatever tieing the shooting to the strike.

"We are satisfied," the Wisconsin board concluded, "that the total effect of the film, 'And Women Must Weep,' was to impute the fear that the ugly prospect of union violence, family strife, community tension, disrespect for religion, night-time terror and even infant-shooting . . . was likely and could happen to employes of American Paper & Plastic Products, Inc.," if they voted for the union shop.

The IAM film, "Anatomy of a Lie," can be rented for $3 from the AFL-CIO Film Library, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

IWIU Elects George Rollins As President

St. Louis—George Rollins of Boston narrowly defeated incumbent George L. Russ in a spirited election here for president of the Insurance Workers Union.

Rollins received 208 electoral votes to 206 for the 69-year-old Russ, who had held the union's top post since the early 1950s.

The election climaxed the organization's four-day biennial constitutional convention, attended by nearly 280 delegates representing more than 20,000 dues-paying members.

William A. Gillen of Philadelphia was re-elected secretary-treasurer by acclamation. Re-elected to the five vice presidencies without opposition were Charles G. Heisel, Robert J. Nicholson, Arthur H. Higginson, Joseph Pollack and Robert L. Ponsi.

Victory for Rollins was made possible by almost unanimous support from the union's biggest locals. He received the important 65 electoral votes of Local 5, New York. St. Louis and Chicago units also threw their support behind Rollins, a long-time organizer among insurance workers.

In other actions, the delegates defeated a proposed constitutional amendment that provided for the transfer of some funds from the body's negotiating and defense fund to the general fund. The proposal, aimed at partly alleviating the union's urgent need for increased operating revenue failed to get the required two-thirds vote.

Also defeated, in a rollcall vote, was a proposed resolution to decrease from five to three the number of international vice presidents.

Training Project Set in New York

New York—The New York City Central Labor Council has been chosen by the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. to set up a pilot project for aiding displaced workers to regain their health and a new job.

With a $90,000 grant, renewable for three years, the council's Community Services Committee will operate a liaison office for union members who lose their jobs and for their families. CSC Dir. Louis Levine will be in charge.

Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale and CSC Chairman Michael Sampson hailed the grant as a "breakthrough" for workers displaced for health or job reasons.

Union School Opens In Peruvian Center

Lima, Peru—Twenty-nine young Peruvian trade unionists are attending the first trade union leadership training program at the new Peruvian Center of Labor Studies.

The center is administered by the American Institute for Free Labor Development, and is directed by Jesse Friedman of the institute staff. He is assisted by Napoleon Posada, organization secretary of the Peruvian white collar union.

PUBLIC INTEREST award plaque for safety and accident prevention work is presented to J. George Eichhorn, grand lodge representative of the Machinists, for the work of the union's paper, The Machinist. The award was one of 11 voted labor publications by the National Safety Council and presented at the NSC Labor Conference spring meeting. From left to right: Eichhorn; Victor Whitehouse, new chairman of the Labor Conference; Lloyd D. Utter, NSC vice president for labor and safety director of the Auto Workers, and Thomas A. Dillon, chairman of the awards committee.

Hosiery Union Picks Benet for Presidency

Milwaukee—Delegates to the 47th biennial convention of the Hosiery Workers here concluded their week-long parley by electing Adolph Benet of Chattanooga, Tenn., as international president.

Benet, former first vice president, defeated the incumbent, Andrew J. Janaskie by a narrow margin in a two-way fight for the top spot in the 10,000-member organization.

Major Banachowicz, former Milwaukeean and veteran secretary-treasurer, was renamed without opposition.

Ted Benton, Athens, Ga., was elevated from the second to the first vice presidency, and Carol L. Bush, Philadelphia, took Benton's place on the board. Both candidates were unopposed.

Board Members

Winners for the 11-member executive board posts were Helen Finnerty, Philadelphia; Winston Bartels, Portage, Wis.; Robert Beame, North Carolina; Barney Adams, Columbus, Ga.; Herman Rhyme, Clinton, Tenn.; Belle Felner, New York City; Bert Branham, Chattanooga; Alice Dauer, Chester, Ill.; David Williams, Paducah, Ky.; Joseph O'Leary, Martinsburg, W. Va., and Ida Murray, Philadelphia.

Filling in as trustees are Frank Bean, Paducah, Ky.; Edward Meinholz, Reading, Pa.; and Bessie Sharp, Knoxville, Tenn.

The union's two delegates to the AFL-CIO convention will be Benet and Banachowicz.

The convention voted approval of a resolution to seek congressional action to eliminate Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits individual states to pass so-called right-to-work laws.

Such "work" measures have seriously hampered Hosiery Workers' organizational campaigns, delegates said, since many northern mills have closed operations and moved to the South to escape unionization.

Delegates also asked Congress to enact corrections in the Landrum-Griffin Act and eliminate those provisions that interfere with legitimate activities of labor unions, retaining only those portions that are aimed against racketeers and crooks.

Other resolutions asked:

- Support for Pres. Kennedy's hospital insurance program for the aged through social security financing.
- Support for his 24-point program on federal aid to education.
- Support for AFL-CIO tax cut proposals.
- Enactment of the Youth Employment Opportunities bill as already passed by the Senate.
- Passage of legislation covering truth-in-packaging.
- Action by Congress to implement the Housing Act of 1961 with respect to the elderly, cooperatives and public housing.
- Support for federal aid to mass transportation facilities.
- Enactment of truth-in-lending legislation.
- Reduction of the workweek to 35 hours without a pay cut and amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide double time for all work beyond regular hours.
- Reapportionment in all state legislatures based on the principle of one man, one vote, to bring an end to rural conservative domination in state and federal governments.
- A federal program to establish a minimum of 26 weeks of unemployment compensation, with up to 13 additional weeks to workers exhausting basic state benefits.

Boot & Shoe Union Elects B. A. Hamilton

Boston—Bradford A. Hamilton, since 1961 New England regional director of the Boot & Shoe Workers, has been elected to the union's general executive board.

Job Safety Honors Given Labor Papers

Denver—Eleven labor publications were voted public interest awards by the National Safety Council for their initiative and originality in promoting accident prevention, the Labor Conference of the NSC announced at its recent meeting here.

The award presentations topped a two-day session of the conference at which delegates elected Victor Whitehouse, safety director of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, chairman, and John D. Connors, executive secretary of the AFL-CIO Committee on Safety & Occupational Health, vice chairman.

The conference also recommended to the nominating committee of the NSC board of directors the nominations of Whitehouse, Sec.-Treas. Arthur P. Gildea of the Brewery Workers, and Grand Lodge Rep. J. George Eichhorn of the Machinists, to serve as labor representatives on the board.

The spring meeting discussed safety programs to be presented to the 1963 NSC convention, training courses, publications and other activities. The conference is the program planning group for organized labor in the NSC.

The labor press awards went to the Intl. Operating Engineer, The Laborer, The Machinist, United Mine Workers Journal, Building Trades Edition of the Chicago Federation News, Voice of the Cement, Lime, Gypsum & Allied Workers, Local 1010 Steelworkers, NMU Pilot, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen Magazine, Local 1211 Steelworkers, and Waco (Tex.) Farm & Labor Journal.

Fund to Memorialize Late Kermit Eby

North Manchester, Ind.—A memorial fund honoring the memory of the late Kermit Eby, widely-known labor educator and college professor, has been set up by a group of friends under the honorary chairmanship of Robert M. Hutchins, chairman of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

The goal is a minimum of $20,000 to be administered through Manchester College here, which Eby attended, to provide scholarship aid and occasional lectures at colleges on subjects in which he was interested. Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and George T. Guernsey of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education are among sponsors of the committee.

Mrs. FDR Foundation Names Meany, Reuther

New York—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers were elected vice chairmen of the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation at a meeting of the Board of trustees here.

Other elections announced by the chairman, Adlai E. Stevenson, included Robert S. Benjamin, chairman of United Artists, executive vice president; Mrs. Anna Rosenberg Hoffman, industrial relations counselor, secretary; and Jesse W. Tapp, chairman of the board of directors of the Bank of America, treasurer.

Also chosen as vice chairmen were Marian Anderson, noted contralto; Dr. Ralph Bunche, United Nations under-secretary for special political affairs; Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer, philanthropist and writer; and Thomas J. Watson, Jr., chairman of Intl. Business Machines, Inc.

The foundation is seeking to raise a fund of $25 million by Oct. 11, 1964, the 80th anniversary of Mrs. Roosevelt's birth, which would be used to continue major projects to which she devoted her life.

A fund-raising campaign is being organized with Philip M. Klutznick, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, as chairman.

Meany Calls for Push on Public Works

Cites Economic Lag, Community Values

(Continued from Page 1)

and equipment required for those projects.

"At a time like the present, when the private sector of the economy is failing to fully utilize the manpower and productive resources of the country, no better program to put people to work and to permanently enrich the nation could possibly be conceived.

"The value of this act to the jobless, to the communities that are obtaining lasting public improvements, and to the national economy is so evident, it clearly should be continued as long as unemployment remains abnormally high."

Meany recalled that the initial $400 million appropriation to finance the program had been fully absorbed in 3,756 projects approved by the end of January. Since then, he said, a backlog of projects awaiting approval had accumulated to the point of requiring about $1.7 billion in federal outlays, whereas only $450 million in additional federal funds is available.

"Unless the program is extended, apparently $1.25 billion in public improvement requests already received must be shelved," Meany said.

These projects alone, he continued, represent an estimated 125,000 man-years of work. Moreover, the true backlog is "at least double this volume of essential public works" which "could quickly be gotten underway in areas of substantial unemployment if funds were available," he said.

Delays in meeting matching fund requirements and the government's policy of discouraging new applications because of the lack of funds have combined to conceal the true demand for public works projects under the act, he suggested.

"Unfortunately," he said, "the Congress has now cut the $900 million in federal funds initially authorized for a 12-month accelerated public works program to an $850 million appropriation to be stretched out to Jan. 31, 1964.

"Moreover, if action to extend the program for an additional 12 months is not undertaken during the present session of Congress, its expiration at the end of January is almost inevitable."

STRONG OPPOSITION to the cut in foreign aid funds proposed by the Clay advisory committee was expressed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. He is shown (left) with Rep. Thomas E. Morgan (D-Pa.), committee chairman, and Rep. Frances P. Bolton (O.), ranking Republican member.

House Votes 174-158 To Kill 'Bracero' Plan

(Continued from Page 1)

farm labor was begun during World War II as an emergency measure and has continued in the postwar period.

Party lines split in the face of a mounting criticism of the program during a period of continued heavy unemployment, coupled with growing evidence of public indignation over exploitation of domestic migrant workers forced to compete for a dwindling number of farm jobs with the "braceros."

In a burst of activity before starting a long Memorial Day weekend, the Senate sent to the White House two high priority Administration measures — an equal pay for women bill and a temporary increase in the national debt limit.

The Senate also approved by a near-unanimous vote a new large-scale program of federal aid to combat mental illness and retardation which Pres. Kennedy had proposed in a special message earlier this year.

Equal Pay Cleared

Administration leaders decided not to gamble on the uncertainties of a House-Senate conference to resolve differing versions of the equal pay bill, a procedure which would have risked a new Rules Committee bottleneck. Instead the Senate abandoned its version of the bill and voted to accept the House measure, thus clearing it for the President's signature.

The chief provisions of both bills are the same: an effective date a year after enactment, coverage and enforcement under the Fair Labor Standards Act, and a ban against cutting wages of male workers in order to "equalize" wages of women.

However, the House bill included a provision, strongly opposed by labor, which would add an additional year's "grace period" for equalizing wages when differing pay rates are spelled out in a union contract.

The Senate Finance Committee had approved a broader debt limit bill than the House version, but at White House urging accepted the House bill in order to avoid a difficult period of juggling the government's financing while the differences were worked out. A further debt limit rise will be needed before September, the Treasury Dept. has said.

Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee Chairman Lister Hill (D-Ala.) steered the mental health bill to a 72-1 victory. Only Sen. Carl T. Curtis (R-Neb.) voted against the measure.

With not a whisper of objection to the cost or to federal "intervention" in a health field, and with praise from both Democrats and Republicans, the Senate voted authorization for:

- A four-year, $230 million program of federal grants to construct community mental health centers—a sharp departure from the prevalent sytem of state institutions. Funds would be allocated on the basis of population and need, with the fedral government paying between 45 and 75 percent of the cost.
- An eight-year program, starting July 1, 1965, providing $427 million to help pay the salaries of the staffs of the new centers. The government would initially pay up to 75 percent of the cost, with the states and communities gradually increasing their share of the expense.
- Other programs totaling $185.5 million over five years involving grants for research facilities, for training mentally retarded persons and for training teachers of the mentally retarded, emotionally disturbed, crippled, deaf and other handicapped children.

Meanwhile the intensified national concern with civil rights was reflected on Capitol Hill and in White House legislative strategy meetings.

The Justice Dept. was reported working on a draft of new rights legislation and a presidential address to the nation was considered for the beginning of a major drive for new legal tools to battle discrimination against Negroes.

Full-Scale Federal Aid Seen Vital for Schools

(Continued from Page 1)

of classrooms devoted to these subjects, and English and social studies should be added to the list for which NDEA loans are permitted.

"We have long urged the extension of the forgiveness features of NDEA loans to all teachers—elementary, secondary, college and university, whether private or public—and we are pleased to see this provision included in the bill. This is one method by which federal policy can assist non-public education through completely constitutional means."

He said the AFL-CIO also urged consideration of extending the loan forgiveness provision to librarians and social workers, professions whose "essential public service" is not reflected in earnings of graduates.

Local and state governments in most areas have reached the limit of their ability to finance needed improvements in education, Biemiller said. He pointed out that "because states and communities have unequal resources, only the taxing power of the federal government can make equal opportunity a reality in education."

Unequal Burden

The mobility of American life, Biemiller told the subcommittee headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), means that "the poorly-educated, untrained child of one state becomes the unemployed worker of another."

"Inadequate educational facilities in one community imposes a burden on all communities," he added.

He strongly urged the subcommittee to include in its aid to education measures the "Cold War GI Education" bill proposed by Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.).

He supported, urging specific strengthening amendments and increased funds, Administration proposals for improving vocational education for both students and adults, assisting and expanding all levels of higher education, including junior colleges and developing a full-scale, federally-aided program to help millions of Americans with less than an eighth-grade education overcome the educational handicaps which keep them from being trained for higher-skilled jobs.

Biemiller said the additional $16 million a year the Administration is seeking for improving vocational education is "completely inadequate."

Urging that appropriations begin at $150 million the first year and expand to $400 million in the fifth year, he warned:

"Either Congress makes available enough money to the states to expand vocational education . . . or the proposed legislation will be just a piece of paper which will have an inconsequential impact."

Asking expanded help for college students, Biemiller told the subcommittee that the high price of higher education is limiting access to the better schools to a handful of exceptional scholarship winners and to children from wealthy families. He added:

"We of organized labor are not prepared to accept higher education as the prerogative of only the very rich and very bright."

7 in Congress Turn Down ACA Awards

Seven members of Congress rejected "distinguished service awards" of the right-wing political organization, Americans for Constitutional Action.

The seven were among 154 senators and representatives cited by ACA for voting records computed against the organization's conservative standards and in accord with what the ACA calls "the spirt and principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution."

Turning down the awards were Sen. Frank Lausche (D-O.), and Representatives Leon G. Gavin (R-Pa.), John Kyl (R-Ia.), Charles A. Mosher (R-O.), Richard S. Schweiker (R-Pa.), Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) and Fred Schwengel (R-Ia.).

In a letter to ACA Chairman Ben Moreell refusing the award, Schwengel wrote:

"When your organization, for example, rated me as 60 percent for liberty, leaving me to wonder where I was against liberty the other 40 percent, and yet offered me its highest award, I found your method of computation hopelessly beyond my understanding."

Bartenders Dedicate Two-Service Clinic

New York—Bartenders Local 15 has dedicated a new dental and podiatric center in union headquarters through which the 10,000 members of the local and their families will receive treatment without charge.

'Defender' Bill Given Backing By AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has reiterated its support for "public defender" legislation to assure competent legal counsel for all defendants in federal courts, even if they are indigent.

In a letter to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.), AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged approval of the Administration bill which would direct each federal district court to establish a program to furnish attorneys for defendants who cannot afford to hire a lawyer.

Federal funds would be authorized to pay for the services of local public defenders or private attorneys assigned to cases at fees set by the court, with a $15-an-hour ceiling. At present, lawyers assigned to defend indigents are compelled to give unreimbursed service.

"The right to adequate legal counsel is essential to maintain due process of law and other basic democratic procedures," Biemiller wrote. "This right must not be denied to any citizen simply because he lacks funds."

A similar statement was presented earlier to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is also considering the public defender bill.

University of Alaska Gets Unionist Regent

Anchorage, Alaska—Pres. R. E. McFarland of the Alaska AFL-CIO has been named a member of the board of regents of the University of Alaska.

6-1-63

Labor Film Fete Honors U.S. Entry

Tel Aviv—A prize for the best trade union education film was awarded to "This Union Cause," made by Labor Film Associates in the United States, at the 4th Intl. Labor Film Festival here.

Labor Film Associates is composed of the Auto Workers; Machinists; Rubber Workers; Communications Workers; Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. The prize-winning movie outlines the history of the U.S. labor movement and was made under the direction of two UAW aides—Education Dir. Carroll Hutton and Dir. Brendan Sexton of the Leadership Study Center.

The film festival was organized by the Intl. Labor Film Institute and Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation. First prize went to a Swedish entry, "Maximum," directed by Per Gunvall, demonstrating how physical stress at work in industry, offices and homes can lead to ill health, and showing how to avoid such stress.

You hit a Bull's Eye with UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Teenagers Trigger 5.9% Jobless Rate

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 8, 1963 | No. 23

President Steps Up Attack Against Job Discrimination

ONE HUNDRED BUSINESS LEADERS from all parts of the country were urged by Pres. Kennedy to take the lead in ending segregation in theaters, stores and other enterprises at a meeting in the White House. The President's audience included Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy (standing) and Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson (seated, foreground). The President the same day issued an executive order directing non-discrimination in apprentice programs operated with federal funds.

Meany Hails Plan, Urges FEP Law

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy has ordered a review of all federal construction programs to prevent "any racial discrimination" in hiring practices and announced that he would soon issue an executive order to assure fair employment in other construction work financed wholly or in part with federal grant-in-aid funds.

The President also directed Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to require the admission of young workers to federal apprenticeship programs "on a completely non-discriminatory basis."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed Kennedy's anti-discrimination order, noting that the President's action "and the further steps he announced that he intends to take in the campaign to wipe out racial discrimination in employment, have long been urged by AFL-CIO conventions."

"We welcome the full use of the President's administrative power in this area," Meany said, "but we hope it will be followed up by equal employment opportunity legislation covering all enterprises engaged in commerce.

"The AFL-CIO has long pressed for such legislation, for racial discrimination is not merely unpalatable; it is intolerable."

Meany's statement was issued in Geneva, where he is attending sessions of the Intl. Labor Organization.

"Denial of the right to work is unfair, regardless of its victim," the President declared in his order. "It is doubly unfair to throw its burden most heavily on someone because of his race or color."

His action was designed, he said,

(Continued on Page 12)

Interest on Backpay Wins Test

By Eugene A. Kelly

New York—The National Labor Relations Board's new policy of adding 6 percent interest to its awards of backpay to unlawfully fired workers has been upheld by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In a case involving an employe fired by the Reserve Supply Corp. of Long Island, Inc., the court said it was "entirely appropriate for the board to award interest" to compensate employe Fred Vannoy for the loss of his salary.

The company, in appealing the backpay and interest rulings, argued that the NLRB majority's new policy on interest was outside its lawful authority. The court disagreed, saying "we hold that the award of interest, like the award of backpay, is within the broad remedial authority of the board."

Admitting that the National La-

(Continued on Page 5)

1.2 Million Flood Market:

Teenage Influx Triggers Rise To May Jobless Rate of 5.9%

By Robert B. Cooney

The impact of teenagers seeking work caused the nation's jobless rate to swing upward to 5.9 percent in May, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The key rate of unemployment, adjusted to account for seasonal influences, was 5.7 percent in April and 5.5 percent a year ago. May's 5.9 percent rate means 59 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were actively seeking work and could not find it.

The May experience—with 1.2 million teenagers looking for jobs—means a day of reckoning has arrived in economic and social terms. Government and other manpower experts long have forewarned of the arrival at working age of the baby boom of the post-World War II years. The 1945 crop is now here.

Harold Goldstein, the Labor Dept.'s manpower and job statistics expert, told reporters a similar impact is expected in June when school closings will be complete. He said the teenage labor force to be counted in June is expected to be about 350,000 above June 1962.

He recalled previous warnings that "this is the year that the number of 16-year-olds [entering the labor force] increases by a million."

Total unemployment in May remained at 4.1 million instead of showing its usual April-May decline, the Labor Dept. said, because of "an unusually sharp increase" in teenage jobseekers. Unemployment among adults declined as expected.

"The sharp rise in the number of teenage jobseekers—up 300,000 over the month—was substantially more than the usual increase at this time of year," the department's summary job report said. "There were 1.2 million teenagers looking for work in May. Their seasonally adjusted unemployment rate rose to 18 percent from 16 percent in April; it had been 14 percent in May 1962."

Most of the additional teenage unemployed, the report explained, were students looking for fulltime jobs, either temporary summer work or year-round jobs for those permanently entering the labor force. This rise, the report added, was offset by the decline in the number of adult men seeking fulltime work.

The jobless rate for adult men, at 4.4 percent, was virtually unchanged over the month and from a year earlier, the report said. The jobless rate for adult women rose to 5.4 percent in May from April's 5.2 percent and was up from the 5.1 percent of a year earlier.

The highly-resistant problem of

(Continued on Page 2)

Death of Pope John Mourned by Meany

"All mankind is saddened by the death of Pope John XXIII, but his loss is most keenly felt by the world's workers," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

The Pope's historical encyclical, Mater et Magistra, "will stand to the end of time as an eloquent delineation of the human conscience and a charter of human rights," Meany said in a statement issued in Paris while en route to Intl. Labor Organization sessions in Geneva.

"Although his span of leadership was grievously short, the influence of John XXIII will never cease to brighten the lives and strengthen the hopes of working men and women everywhere," he said.

Agency Shop Upheld—But States Can Bar It

By Willard Shelton

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the validity of the agency shop under national labor policy but ruled that a state may outlaw such union security provisions under Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The court left open one issue arising in a second case—whether state laws banning agency shops are enforceable by the National Labor Relations Board or by state courts. It ordered later reargument of the issue.

In a unanimous decision the court held that General Motors Corp. was guilty of an unfair labor practice in refusing to bargain with the Auto Workers over the union's demand for an agency-shop clause covering the company's employes in the state of Indiana.

Although Indiana has a so-called "right-to-work" law, the state's appellate courts have ruled that its language does not prohibit the lesser union security provision of an agency-shop clause.

Under an agency shop, nonmembers of the union in the col-

(Continued on Page 5)

PRODUCTION WORKERS, members of the Ladies' Garment Workers Local 151 employed by the Teenage Beachwear Co., New Haven, Conn., responded to a call for help from the Red Cross when it was given material for making native-style garments for Algerian refugees and turned out the work well ahead of a deadline. Shown above with some of the union members who worked on the project are, from left, Joseph Brumberger, the plant manager; Mrs. Charles Watrous, Red Cross volunteer; Mike Primack, of the union; and Bert Cooper, ILGWU Connecticut manager.

List of Hardest-Hit Cut:

Area Labor Markets Show Some Gains

Job conditions improved in many of the nation's 150 major employment centers, dropping the number of areas with "substantial unemployment" to 43 in May from April's 47, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The department's Area Labor Market Trends report for May also said that "over three-fifths of the 150 major areas foresee overall employment gains between May and July."

Eight major areas were reclassified in May, all in the direction of lower unemployment. The report said this was the largest shift since January, when 10 areas were reclassified, all towards higher joblessness.

The four areas removed from the list of those suffering "substantial unemployment"—that is, with 6 percent or more unemployed—were Newark, N. J., New Brunswick-Perth Amboy, N. J., Battle Creek, Mich., and Lorain-Elyria, O. They moved into a group of 98 areas with 3 to 5.9 percent unemployed.

Brockton, Mass., and Atlantic City, N. J., were reclassified from the 9 to 11.9 percent unemployed category to the 6 to 8.9 percent jobless group.

Wheeling, W. Va., improved from the 12 percent or more unemployed group to the 9 to 11.9 percent group. Des Moines, Ia., was reclassified into the "relatively low unemployment" group, with 1.5 to 2.9 percent joblessness.

May's total of 43 areas with "substantial unemployment" compares to 54 a year ago, to 96 in the recession period of May 1961 and to 35 in pre-recession April-May 1960, when reports were bimonthly.

The Labor Dept. reported an increase in the total of "smaller" areas with substantial unemployment. This group rose to 179 in May from April's 176 with the addition of Bartow, Fla., and the inclusion of Albertville, Ala., and Carbondale, Ill., as the work force in these two areas increased in size sufficiently to qualify them for the "smaller" areas list.

In 18 of the 43 major areas and 104 of the 179 smaller areas of substantial unemployment, the department said, "high unemployment has been a relatively persistent problem over most of the past few years."

These areas and 464 "very small" areas make up a total of 586 areas officially classified by the Labor Dept. as "areas of substantial and persistent unemployment." They have been recommended to the Commerce Dept. for designation as redevelopment areas under the Area Redevelopment Act, the Labor Dept. said.

The department also said it had added one major area, one smaller area and 12 very small areas to its list of those eligible for aid under the Accelerated Public Works Program. All redevelopment areas and all areas with substantial unemployment for 9 of the preceding 12 months are eligible for such aid.

NLRB Examiner Hits Judy Bond 'Runaway'

Judy Bond, runaway blouse firm which deserted its union employes in New York City and fled to Brewton, Ala., has committed six unfair labor practices against workers in its new plant, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has found.

Examiner Joseph I. Nachman recommended that the board order the runaway firm to stop harassing employes who favor the Ladies' Garment Workers, to reinstate 10 fired ILGWU supporters with full lost pay and interest and to rescind a rule prohibiting employes from wearing ILGWU buttons or engaging in other union activities on its premises during non-working hours.

Judy Bond bought the Brewton Mfg. Co. plant in 1961 and moved its manufacturing and warehouse operations to Alabama late that year.

The United Garment Workers had held a contract at the Brewton plant since 1957, and that union entered into a new three-year agreement with Judy Bond in the face of an ILGWU request not to do so, because the latter was engaged in a strike and nationwide consumer boycott of the products formerly made in a New York plant which for a generation had been under ILGWU contract.

Last year the AFL-CIO Executive Council, applying the justification section of the federation's internal disputes plan for the first time, authorized the ILGWU to proceed with an organizing drive at Brewton despite the existence of the UGWA contract.

Since then Judy Bond has been hit with an arbiter's finding that it must pay ILGWU members whom it stranded a total of $108,762 in damages; a court order to open its records to the union; and a decision by the Appellate Div. of the New York Supreme Court on Apr. 25 unanimously upholding the arbiter's award. Last December the blouse firm paid $25,301 of the amount due but asked a court to remit the balance.

The latest findings by the NLRB examiner were that the company had violated the labor law by these actions:

- Threatening to close the plant or cut production if the ILGWU won bargaining rights.
- Threatening to fire employes who talked in favor of ILGWU, wore its union buttons, or carried a copy of its newspaper, Justice, into the plant.
- Laying off 10 ILGWU supporters, failing to take reasonable measures to prevent employes from evicting those who wore ILGWU buttons, and making "crystal clear" its intent to deal only with United.
- Enforcing an unlawful "no solicitation" rule to prevent the ILGWU from organizing.

The examiner found that UGWA Local 422, through its president and other officers, had "failed to take reasonable steps" to dissuade its members from evicting ILGWU supporters from the plant.

Teenagers Flood Into Job Market

(Continued from Page 1)

the longterm unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—remained unimproved. The report said this group declined by 100,000—less than was expected—to 1.3 million in May.

This was unchanged from a year ago; the longterm jobless totaled 920,000 in May 1960, before the last recession, and 637,000 in May 1957, before the 1958-59 recession. Low for the month in the postwar period was the 208,000 in May 1953.

On the employment side, the Labor Dept. reported those with jobs totaled 69.1 million in May, up by 1 million from April and by 850,000 over the year. The non-farm job total rose by 450,000—"a little below seasonal expectations"—to 63.9 million, but it was 1.1 million above a year ago.

Counted among the employed totals were 2.1 million non-farm workers on short workweeks for economic reasons, about the same as in the past three months but below the high levels of late 1962, the report said.

Labor force time lost, an index of the man-hours lost to the economy due to unemployment and part-time unemployment, rose to 6.9 percent in May from April's 6.6 percent "as a result of the failure of the jobless total to decline," the Labor Dept. said. This rate was 6.6 percent a year ago.

The report also noted that the total labor force—which includes the armed services—rose seasonally by 1 million to 75.9 million after a period of better-than-seasonal gains. This total was 1.1 million higher than a year earlier.

NLRB Aide Rules Against Fine of Rebel

National Labor Relations Board Trial Examiner Benjamin B. Lipton ruled after a hearing that Operating Engineers Local 138, New York City, imposed a $200 fine on Charles S. Skura, member of a "rebel" group, and later reduced it to $100, in "an act of retaliation and coercion" to discourage Skura and others from using the processes of the board.

"Nothing in the Landrum-Griffin Act," Lipton wrote, "entitles a union with impunity to impose a fine against a member for failing to exhaust union procedures before filing a charge with the board."

CWA Parley to Hear Reports on Bargaining

Detroit—The Communications Workers have called time out in their negotiations with the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. and CWA leaders will report the facts to the union's convention opening in Kansas City, Mo., June 10.

In announcing suspension of the talks, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said he was "disappointed and dissatisfied" with the pace of negotiations and "the meager content" of the company's proposals so far.

Noting that the Michigan Bell talks would set a pattern for CWA members in the entire Bell system, Beirne said that the company's "lack of a satisfactory bargaining program" could have "far-reaching consequences."

Beirne, who heads the CWA negotiators, said the convention would be given a complete report on the bargaining situation "and will take whatever steps it deems necessary to seek agreement on terms that will reflect the needs of communications workers."

The CWA also interrupted simultaneous contract talks with a number of other Bell companies across the nation. All will be resumed, Beirne said, "at some point" after June 14, the last day of the convention.

The present three-year Michigan Bell contract, which covers some 15,000 workers, expires June 12 and will be extended on a day-to-day basis, the CWA president said.

He reported that the company's wage offer so far "is only at the level of about 2 percent," whereas the union is seeking "substantial wage increases, which we know this productive, profitable and efficient company can easily afford."

CWA also has proposed full payment of hospitalization insurance premiums by the company, vacations of three weeks after 10 years of service and four weeks after 15 years, a minimum pension of $125 a month and elimination of the practice of deducting from pensions an amount equal to half the retired worker's social security benefits.

Beirne said that the Bell pension system, "with $5 billion in assets and an income from investments greater than its payout to pensions, could easily absorb such a desirable improvement."

The company has so far made no counterproposals in the pension area, he said.

Top U. S. Aides Enter Rail Work Rules Talks

Top-ranking government mediators have entered the railroad work rules dispute at the request of both union and management representatives who reported to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz that two weeks of intensive negotiations had failed to break their deadlock.

Wirtz, Assistant Labor Sec. James J. Reynolds, and National Mediation Board Chairman Leverett Edwards joined in a massive effort to bring the parties close enough together so that negotiations would continue beyond a June 12 deadline.

After that date—30 days from the time a Presidential Emergency Board submitted its report—the railroads will be legally free to impose unilaterally their job-slashing work rules proposals, and the unions would be at liberty to strike in protest.

The five unions—the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen; Railway Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen—represent some 200,000 operating employes.

In marked contrast to earlier negotiations, which broke up amid charges and counter-charges, both sides have been cautious and restrained in their comments although admitting they are still far apart.

Pamphlet Discusses King-Anderson Bill

A new publication on the need for hospital insurance for the aged through social security has been published by the AFL-CIO as part of its continuing campaign to secure action at the current session of Congress.

Entitled "Why America Needs the King-Anderson Bill," the leaflet, prepared by the Dept. of Social Security, analyzes the campaign against the measure and details the scope and nature of the problems of providing hospital care for the elderly.

The leaflet is available without cost in reasonable quantities from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

New Vote Ordered:

'Weep' Film Upsets 5th NLRB Election

Another representation election has been set aside by the National Labor Relations Board where the employer showed his employes "And Women Must Weep" and another anti-union "horror" film before an election lost by the Carpenters.

A board panel voted 2-1 to order another election—the third in a little more than two years at the plant of the Storkline Corp., Jackson, Miss. It found that the company "destroyed the laboratory conditions which the board deems necessary for ascertaining the uninhibited desires of the employes" by this course of conduct:

- Immediately upon receiving notice of an election in 1962, the employer "embarked on a new campaign to defeat the union" in which he sent eight letters to employes, made three speeches, distributed six other pieces of propaganda and showed two movies on five separate occasions.
- The new campaign, like one before it, was "keyed to the idea of instilling fear in the minds of employes who might be disposed to vote for the union—fear of physical violence, fear of strikes, and fear of job loss."

This conduct, said NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member Gerald A. Brown, exceeded the permissible bounds of campaigning. Member Philip Ray Rodgers, dissenting, argued that the union distributed 13 pieces of critical propaganda and had "ample opportunity" to answer and dissipate company claims.

The movie, "And Women Must Weep," circulated by the National Right-to-Work Committee, has figured in four other elections set aside by the NLRB since December 1962.

'Law and Order'

The other film shown to Storkline employes was "A Question of Law and Order," in which a narrator makes editorial comments while showing scenes of strike violence and of matters testified to before the McClellan Special Senate Committee.

The "Weep" film, made by professional actors, is not a documentary movie but according to McCulloch, in a concurring opinion in a similar case last month, "pictures a labor dispute as one in which Americanism, religion, family, motherhood and innocent childhood are arrayed on one side and goons, brutes and murderers on the other or pro-union side."

A factual film story of the strike referred to in "Weep" has been made by the Machinists. Called "Anatomy of a Lie," it may be rented for $3 from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Theme Was Strikes

In the Storkline case, the board said the employer's speeches and movies drove home his "general propaganda theme that a vote for the petitioner would result in strikes jeopardizing the economic security and physical safety of the employes and their families."

There was not the "slightest hint," they said, that the Carpenters engaged in any violence or made any threats and therefore the employer's campaign was waged on an issue of its own making. They added:

"It created a 'straw man' and then proceeded to frighten the employes into the belief that their physical safety and jobs were at stake in the election."

Job Equality Law Urged By Murphy

Newark, N. J.—Fingerpointing at Birmingham because of racial disorders there, or at the South in general, "does not relieve the rest of the nation of its responsibilities," Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey AFL-CIO said here.

"There must be no further delay in the confirmation by federal statute of the rights to which every citizen is entitled," he added. "Among these rights, equal opportunity in employment has been the most neglected."

Job rights, "the controlling factor in economic status," are untouched at the federal level except for empioyment in firms with U.S. contracts, Murphy pointed out, recalling the AFL-CIO's appeals to Congress "to make equal employment opportunity the law."

"Fully securing these fundamental rights," he said, "is the basic remedy for the injustices of which the events in Birmingham are a symptom. That is the only ultimate solution for Birmingham and for those other Birminghams that, under different names and in varying degrees, are strewn across the length and breadth of this nation."

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICERS of the Hosiery Workers, chosen at the biennial convention in Milwaukee, congratulate each other. They are Pres. Adolph Benet (left) and First Vice Pres. Ted Benton.

Decertification Fought In Jamestown Walkout

The Furniture Workers have asked the National Labor Relations Board to set aside a decertification election at the Jamestown (N. Y.) Sterling Co., at which strikebreakers were permitted to vote and most veterans of the 20-month walkout were denied the ballot.

UFW Pres. Morris Pizer charged that the NLRB regional office in Buffalo had denied the vote to strikers on the basis of the company's claim they had been "permanently replaced" without an adequate hearing to determine if this were so.

With the union's 49 challenges disallowed and 47 challenges to strikers upheld, the tally was 90 "no union" votes to 25 for the UFW. An additional group of 13 challenged ballots was left uncounted.

The decertification has been temporarily blocked by the union's appeal and Pizer said "the strike and all related activities are continuing."

"Should the final decision be against us, we will continue to publicize the facts of this dispute and continue our successful exposure of the non-union conditions at Jamestown Sterling," he added.

Pizer said the struck furniture company recently closed for several weeks because of lack of orders.

He declared that the decertification vote "was the result of the outrageously unfair provision of the Taft-Hartley Act which allows strikebreakers to vote . . . and denies the same fundamental right to the original strikers."

He termed it "another frightening example to the entire trade union movement" of the importance of repealing the Taft-Hartley Act.

The workers struck in October 1961 after the breakdown of negotiations for a first contract. Early in 1962, a special panel of the New York State Mediation Board held hearings on the dispute and recommended a settlement package that included wage increases and a union shop.

The company, which has boycotted the mediation hearings, rejected the proposal and blasted the state agency for trying to "railroad a solution."

IBEW Unit Turns Down Health Plan

Omaha, Neb.—An offer by the Western Electric Co. to pay part of the cost of a hospital-medical-surgical plan has been rejected by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers as "not acceptable from a company the size of Western Electric," an American Telephone & Telegraph Co. subsidiary.

The offer is a "step in the right direction," said IBEW Rep. Robert K. Garrity, but negotiations will be continued in an effort to improve the contract covering 3,500 IBEW members at the company's Omaha works here.

It was the first time in history Garrity said, that Western Electric had offered the union a partial payment toward a proposed plan providing hospitalization insurance and also to provide extra medical expense benefits and higher death benefits for retired employes. A council of IBEW local unions representing 70,000 Western Electric employes has sought such a plan for several years, he emphasized.

The Omaha agreement has been extended to Aug. 13 while negotiations continue on the medical plan, pensions, paid vacations and holidays. Put into effect May 13 was a wage hike of 6 to 12 cents an hour after membership approval.

USWA-Kaiser Plan Hits $389,000 in April

Fontana, Calif.—The "payout" from the long-ranging sharing agreement between the Steelworkers and the Kaiser Steel Corp. rose to an average of 66 cents an hour for the more than 4,100 workers covered by the plan in April, the second month of its operation.

The USWA and Kaiser announced jointly that total savings during the month in material, supply and labor costs amounted to $1,196,000 below costs for the comparable month in 1961, the base year for computing savings under the agreement.

The employes' share of this total—32.5 percent, or $389,000—is equivalent to an average of 25 percent of standard hourly wage rates for all participants, the joint announcement said. April payments under the plan, the statement continued, ranged from 19 percent to 49 percent of standard wage rates and averaged 66 cents an hour.

This compares with a payout averaging about 55 cents an hour for 3,930 covered employes in March, the first month the plan was in operation.

Expressing his pleasure at the success of the plan so far for both the workers and the company, USWA Pres. David J. McDonald added "there is real significance in the fact that while the company suffered a net loss in January and February, before the plan was in operation, there has been a net profit each month since the plan was started."

The sharing plan, worked out in three years of discussions by a committee of union, management and public representatives, was approved by Kaiser employes last January. It guarantees them at least as much in wages and fringe benefits as other workers in the industry, plus the monthly distribution of cost savings.

A number of the 7,000 workers at Kaiser's Fontana plant have not yet exercised their option to join the new sharing plan and give up existing incentive systems.

Consumer Price Index Stays at 106.2 in April

The consumer's cost of living remained unchanged between March and April as price increases for housing, used cars, newspapers and apparel were offset by lower prices for food and gasoline, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

The Consumer Price Index in April remained at 106.2, the BLS said. This means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period now costs $10.62. The April CPI is up 1 percent from a year ago.

The April CPI brings a 1-cent an hour cost-of-living pay increase to some 950,000 workers, primarily in the auto, aerospace and farm equipment industries. The hike results from quarterly reviews of the escalator clause in their union contracts.

In a companion report, the BLS said net spendable earnings of factory production workers "edged downward" by 27 cents in April to $86.04 for a worker with three dependents. This was traced to a seasonal drop of 18 minutes in the workweek, outweighing the second straight monthly increase in hourly earnings.

Construction Scales Increase 1.2 Cents

Wage scales of unionized building trades workers increased an average of 1.2 cents an hour, or three-tenths of 1 percent during the first three months of 1963, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. has reported. Since Apr. 2, 1962, the average increase was 14.4 cents or 3.8 percent.

Increases during the quarter raised the estimated average wage scale to $3.99 an hour among seven major trades in 100 cities. The range was from $3.08 for laborers to $4.50 for bricklayers,

Civil Service Workers Win Broadened Rights

AFL-CIO unions have won collective bargaining rights for 66,000 federal workers outside the postal service during the first 15 months of Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition in government establishments.

Affiliated unions won exclusive recognition as bargaining agent for 417,000 postal workers last year in the biggest union representation election ever held in the United States.

Most union locals in the federal government have only "formal" recognition, which entitles them to represent their members and to be consulted by management. However, a growing number have won exclusive recognition and written contracts by demonstrating their majority in a bargaining unit through secret-ballot elections or card checks.

A survey by the Bureau of National Affairs showed that as of mid-April, AFL-CIO unions had won exclusive recognition at 111 establishments, covering nearly every federal department and agency. Units ranged in size from a handful of members to the nearly 13,000-worker unit represented by the Metal Trades Council at the New York Naval Shipyard.

The survey covered only recognition agreements resulting from the presidential executive order.

AGVA MEMBER Gay Edmond selects the winner in a contest staged by Office Employes Local 400 in Las Vegas to raise funds for furnishing the local union headquarters. From left to right are Local Pres. Al Guzman, Chief Steward Gordon Stanton and Local Vice Pres. Bill Smith.

Kingsport Press Bars Proposals of Mediator

Kingsport, Tenn.—Management of the Kingsport Press, which proposed the name of New York Arbiter Theodore Kheel to mediate its dispute with 1,600 striking employes, has rejected Kheel's recommendations for settling a strike of five unions and refused to attend a scheduled meeting to talk about them.

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Printing Pressmen, who headed a union delegation at meetings with Kheel and the company May 27 and 28, said in a report to a packed meeting of strikers in the Civic Auditorium here that he was "bitterly disappointed" by the new stalemate in a strike which started Mar. 11 over contract terms.

Striking members of the Pressmen, Bookbinders, Stereotypers, Machinists and Typographers gave the negotiators a unanimous vote of confidence and the next day turned out 1,200 strong on streets around the plant to cheer the 90 pickets and display their unbroken solidarity.

The strike is the first here in more than 30 years at the nation's biggest hard-cover printing plant, which produced more than 40 million books a year before the strike, now is shipping at the rate of 4 to 7.5 million a year. In the last two years Kingsport Press made a profit of more than $2.7 million, workers say.

At the meetings with Kheel, the parties reached tentative agreement on contract clauses involving manning—the number of assigned workers per machine or process—and arbitration of disputes over assignments to new equipment or new processes. As to wage and hour clauses, Kheel made informal suggestions for consideration by the parties.

After returning here from New York, the union committee agreed to compromise its wage and hour goals in the interest of getting members back to work, but management notified the unions it was rejecting Kheel's suggestions and declined to meet.

Kheel had proposed a three-year contract with wage increases of 6 to 8 cents an hour each year; and a day-shift workweek of 38.75 hours at the same weekly pay previously given for 40 hours.

Another unsettled issue is the status of strikers and strikebreakers. The union position is that all strikers must be returned to their jobs without discrimination and in order of seniority. Management has stated its intention to retain all workers hired after the strike began.

Meanwhile the strikers are standing firm on their pledge to stay out until all five unions get a contract with decent wages and working conditions. A unity committee, formed last year, has foiled usual management strategy of settling with one union and then forcing that settlement on the others.

Wisconsin Redistricts For Congress

Madison, Wis.—Wisconsin's Democratic Gov. John W. Reynolds has signed a congressional redistricting bill expected to give Republicans an additional seat, calling it "fair and reasonable," and called on the GOP-controlled legislature to apply the same population standards to reapportionment of the state legislature.

Reynolds termed a pending Republican-sponsored state reapportionment bill "discriminatory, unfair, unconstitutional," and served notice that he will veto it if it is passed.

Both federal and state courts have ordered the legislature to reapportion the lower house.

The congressional redistricting law throws Democrat Lester R. Johnson, a six-term veteran from western Wisconsin, into a heavily Republican district represented by Vernon W. Thomson (R). A new district is created out of normally Republican Milwaukee suburbs.

Wisconsin is the first state which did not gain or lose a congressman as a result of interstate population shifts shown by the 1960 census to redistrict on the basis of population.

The 10 new districts range in population from a low of 382,000 to high of 409,000. This compares with the previous range from 299,000 to 530,000.

AFL-CIO Charges Gypping of Idle:

Federal Regulation Sought For Private Job Agencies

Federal regulation of fee-charging private employment agencies that are currently "milking" job hunters of more than $100 million a year should be given consideration by Congress in an overall investigation of the private agencies urged by the AFL-CIO, a federation spokesman has declared.

Raymond Munts, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, pointed out that there is no federal regulation of private employment agencies whatsoever, though much of their business is done across state lines, "even across national boundaries."

Furthermore, he noted, state regulation of the fee-charging agencies, where it exists at all, "is piecemeal, ineffective and outdated."

Munts was interviewed by Eric Tolmach of the Newhouse Newspapers and Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill Publications on Labor News Conference, the AFL-CIO program carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Backed by Executive Council

He recalled that the AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its meeting in St. Louis last month, had called on Congress to investigate "the collusive campaign of false information" launched by the private fee-charging agencies against the U.S. Employment Service.

The council's statement declared that the campaign is clearly designed to "cripple" the USES "at a time when a strong and effective employment service is essential to the national interest."

With only one-fifth of all job placements being made through either public or private employment services, Munts suggested that "legitimate" private agencies could be a national asset at a time when nearly 6 percent of the nation's work force is seeking employment.

He noted, however, that beyond the inadequacies of governmental regulation of the field, there is a real lack of self-policing against flagrant abuses.

The National Employment Association, spokesman for the private agencies, would do well to direct its efforts toward self-policing rather than to its campaign to cut the USES budget and curb its effectiveness, Munts declared. He added that the private agencies should use the $163,000 "war chest" they have assembled "in getting their house in order" instead of in lobbying against the federal service.

Attacks on the USES by the private agencies have included the charge that the public employment service was "neglecting the unemployed" and that 60 percent of its placements were workers shifting from one job to another.

This has been refuted by a USES poll of 22 state employment security agencies, during the week of May 19, which showed that unemployed workers accounted for 97 percent of the non-agricultural job placements.

Munts cited among the abuses of private agencies the case of a firm that misrepresented the nature of a job to a work-seeking client, but nevertheless insisted on the full payment of its $165 fee when the job proved unsuitable after two days.

Examples of "Gouging"

Another example of "gouging" permitted under current regulations, Munts said, required an employe to pay a fee of $109 even though she was laid off after eight weeks on a $70 a week job.

Munts particularly condemned the practice of some of the 4,000 private agencies in the country of charging job seekers a $5 registration fee even though they may perform no service for the client at all. This, he noted, is over and above the two to three weeks salary that is a standard charge for finding a client a job.

In one instance in the District of Columbia, he said, an agency charging a registration fee continued to refer workers to a cleaning contractor who took advantage of their labors and then refused to pay them.

"Now, it seems evident that in addition to the registration fee that the workers had paid the employment agency, the employer must likewise pay the agency something, or it wouldn't continue sending these applicants," Munts observed.

He noted, too, that private agencies have been guilty in some cases of discrimination against qualified Negro job applicants and of engaging in strikebreaking activities through referrals to companies involved in labor disputes.

Strikebreakers Supplied

Only one state, he reported, prohibits private agencies from referring strikebreakers, and only half the states even require that the jobseeker be notified that a company has been struck by its workers.

"The Wagner-Peyser Act, which set up the public employment service, is a kind of Magna Charta for the job hunter," Munts declared. "By setting up a service that is available to all, it frees job seekers from having to resort to commercial exploitation."

The increasing improvement in the USES's job referral functions in recent years is at the root of the commercial agencies' drive to curtail its services, Munts charged.

In addition to its task of administering the work test under the unemployment compensation system, he noted, the federal agency counsels students, provides job aptitude tests, and gathers statistics on existing and potential job needs by region and industry.

Thus, he said, it is "a clearinghouse for matching men and jobs, not only on a local basis, but on a state basis and increasingly on a national basis."

"The key to the Employment Service is in this placement work . . . to keep us from getting caught flat-footed, either as individuals or as a nation, when it comes to manpower, the demand for it, the training for it and the use of it," Munts said. "It is impossible for multiple competing private agencies to fulfill this kind of function."

Brooklyn ILA Locals Broaden Medical Care

Brooklyn, N. Y.—More service as well as a shift from the diagnostic to comprehensive medical care for Brooklyn dockworkers and their families was added to the Brooklyn Longshoremen's Medical Center along with a new $1.5-million wing.

The new wing was dedicated at the opening ceremonies to the late Anthony Anastasio, former international vice president of the ILA and president of its Local 1814. Anastasio, who died last March, sparked the idea of a medical program for longshoremen almost a decade a go. The six-year-old Brooklyn center was the first of three in the Port of New York financed by an 8-cents per man per hour payment into a joint labor-management welfare fund by the stevedoring industry.

"There is no better example than this center," declared James J. Reynolds, assistant Secretary of Labor and chief speaker at the opening, "of the enlightened fruits of good industrial relations."

Preventive medicine, according to Pres. Anthony Scotto of Local 1814, was "a featured service from the beginning" of the medical center program. Its expansion—some 400 longshoremen, wives and children a day use the facilities—from the simple detection of disease to free eye examinations and glasses to complete dental care made physical expansion of the center imperative.

A legislative fight, won this April, was necessary before the center could provide comprehensive medical care. New York medical associations keep a tight rein on group medical practice and special enabling legislation must be passed by the state legislature for each group wishing to offer a full comprehensive medical program.

The new wing, a striking modernistic glass and granite two-story structure a few blocks from Brooklyn's waterfront, will feature a department of physiotherapy as well as care of ambulatory patients. It will service all 14,500 Brooklyn longshoremen and their families—about 420,000 persons—from nine locals.

Local 1814 is the largest, with 8,500 members who handle about 50 percent of the cargo passing through the Port of New York.

A mural showing dockers at work, by artists Bernard Seamen and Phyllis Stevens, graces the foyer of the new building.

Union spokesmen attribute the successful utilization of the medical center, in part, to the granting of paid time off for workers to keep appointments. Over six years, the staff has been expanded from 74 to 120 and the cost of operation from $486,227 to $1,089,794.

Future plans, according to Scotto, include special facilities for the administration of radioactive iodine for the detection of cancer and a well-stocked pharmacy providing medicine without cost to patients.

In addition to Reynolds and Scotto, speakers at the opening included Alexander P. Chopin, chairman of the New York Shipping Association, Capt. William V. Bradley, president of the ILA, and Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers.

Corn Roast to Boost COPE Fund for '63

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers in Summit County here have agreed to join in sponsoring a corn roast for the benefit of the 1963 COPE fund campaign. At the roast July 21 in Tomsik Park, U.S. savings bonds valued at $100, $50 and $25 will be given as door gifts.

URW District Dir. Robert Hill listed these committee chairmen: Pres. Clarence Adkins of Local 2; Mrs. Beatrice Warwood, Ladies' Auxiliary president; Local 5 COPE Dir. Al Palmer; Joe E. Abbott, Local 9, and Bill Orosz of Local 7, URW field representative.

Unions Win Reversals:

High Court Upsets Job Suit Damages

The Supreme Court has set aside damage awards by two state courts in suits brought by individual members against their unions over employment rights.

By identical 6-2 votes, the high court ruled the state courts had no jurisdiction since the alleged conduct which gave rise to the suits was "arguably subject" to the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board.

Where this is so, Justice John M. Harlan noted in both majority opinions, Supreme Court doctrine set in San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon requires the state courts to defer to the "exclusive competence" of the NLRB.

States Reversed

The majority overruled the position of the state courts that the cases fell within the framework of the high court's earlier decision in Machinists v. Gonzales.

In the Gonzales case an individual charged he had been wrongfully expelled by the union in violation of his contract of membership and sought reinstatement plus damages for loss of employment after the expulsion.

The Supreme Court said in Gonzales that the state courts had jurisdiction, because restoration of membership was a remedy the NLRB could not afford to the plaintiff. It went further, however, and said that the state courts were not without power "to fill out this remedy" with an award of damages, even though these damages might be for conduct that amounted to an unfair labor practice under federal law.

Harlan emphasized that the Gonzales ruling "turned" on the court's conclusion that the suit dealt with purely internal union matters and not, as in the cases up for decision, with matters of employment.

In one of the cases, a member of the Shreveport, La., local of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, H. N. Borden, sued the Dallas, Tex., local for refusal to refer him to a specific job after accepting his clearance card. A trial court awarded him total damages of $3,832.

The Supreme Court noted that, depending on the facts, the local's action might be construed as unlawful restraint or coercion of Borden in the exercise of his rights, or it might be construed as protected union activity in guarding against the circumvention of a lawful hiring hall arrangement.

"It is sufficient for present purposes to find, as we do, that it is reasonably 'arguable' that the matter comes within the board's jurisdiction," the majority said.

In the second case, an Iron Workers' member, Jacob Perko, sued his local in Youngstown, O., for causing his discharge and preventing his re-employment as a foreman and superintendent because he allegedly violated a union rule. A jury awarded him $25,000 in damages.

Again, the high court said that the conduct charged to the local might be construed as an unfair labor practice and therefore it was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the NLRB to determine guilt or innocence.

The AFL-CIO had filed a brief in support of the two unions, urging reversals on the ground that the Texas and Ohio courts were "plainly wrong" in the cases. The federation also asked the Supreme Court to go further and repudiate the doctrine set forth in Gonzales because it had been a source of confusion to state courts, as the Borden and Perko cases showed.

The high court did not reach a re-examination of Gonzales.

Harlan's opinion in the Perko case said simply that "the rationale of the Gonzales case does not support state jurisdiction here, and we need not now consider the present vitality of that rationale in the light of more recent decisions."

Justices William O. Douglas and Tom C. Clark dissented in both cases, and Justice Arthur Goldberg took no part in either.

COMPULSORY ARBITRATION in the railroad industry was voted down by the Railroad Signalmen at a recent general chairmen's conference in Chicago. Shown during the meeting are, seated, from left, Pres. Jesse Clark, Chairman R. B. LeBaron of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and Chairman R. B. Park of the Pennsylvania Railroad; standing, from left, Sec. C. R. Scott of the grand lodge board of trustees; Canadian Rep. H. A. Stockdale, and Chairman A. N. Cotton of the Canadian railroads.

Agency Shop Upheld— But States Can Bar It

(Continued from Page 1)

lective bargaining unit are required to pay service fees to the union that negotiates contracts and represents them but the obligation is limited to these payments. They are not required to join the union.

Banned in Florida

In another unanimous decision involving the Florida "work" law, the court let stand a Florida Supreme Court decision that the agency shop as well as the union shop is prohibited by the statute's language. It upheld the state court in banning a service-fee clause for non-union members written into a contract between the Retail Clerks and Food Fair Stores, a retail chain.

Justice Byron R. White ruled in each case that the agency shop, insofar as it requires non-members to pay a union service fee identical with union dues, is the "practical equivalent" of actual "membership" in the union enforceable under a union-shop clause. It is subject to prohibition by a state under Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, White declared, just as a union-shop contract is.

The decisions came by 8-0 votes. Justice Arthur J. Goldberg did not participate in either case.

The General Motors case involved the Indiana "work" law only indirectly, GM choosing to rest its refusal to bargain on an agency-shop clause on the argument that the Taft-Hartley Act itself prohibits such a clause on a national basis.

The NLRB rejected this claim and ruled that GM's refusal was an unfair practice. GM appealed, the NLRB sought an enforcement order, and the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the company.

NLRB Upheld

The Supreme Court decision reversed the appellate court and restored the NLRB decision.

"We find nothing in the legislative history" of the Taft-Hartley Act, White wrote, "indicating that Congress intended . . . to validate the union shop and simultaneously to abolish . . . all other union-security arrangements permissable under state law."

"There is much to be said for the [labor] board's view that if Congress desired . . . to permit the union shop, then it also intended to preserve the status of less vigorous, less compulsory contracts which demanded less adherence to the union," he said.

In the Florida case, White wrote that the GM decision was a ruling precedent—that the kind of "service" arrangement under which non-union members pay fees identical to union dues is the "practical equivalent" of a union-shop agreement requiring membership and payment of dues "as a condition of employment."

"Whatever may be the status of less stringent union-security arrangements," he said, "the agency shop is within" the provisions that Congress in Sec. 14b intended to give the states the power to prohibit.

The issue of where state "work" laws should be enforced—whether by the NLRB as unfair labor practices or by state courts—was raised by U.S. Solicitor Gen. Archibald Cox.

"The obvious question is precipitated," White wrote, "as to whether a state as well as the board may enjoin such union security arrangements."

This involves the established principle that national labor law "preempts" the field from state agencies and courts, he continued, and whether a state law authorized under national law does not become a matter for enforcement by the national agency.

He invited Cox to file briefs and reset the undecided issue for fall argument in the court's next term.

Circuit Court Approves Interest on Backpay

(Continued from Page 1)

bor Relations Act makes no specific mention of interest, the court added:

"When the statutes are silent, the question of whether interest shall be awarded is to be determined in accordance with the historic principle that one for whose financial advantage an obligation was assumed or imposed, and who has suffered actual money damages by another's breach of that obligation, should be fairly compensated for the loss thereby sustained."

The appeals judges, applying the principles of a 1950 decision by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in a case called U.S. v. United Drill & Tool Corp., said it was clear that from the date of Vannoy's wrongful discharge, he stood in a debtor-creditor relationship and lost the use of his salary because of the company's wrongful conduct.

"The fact that the board has not heretofore seen fit to exercise its authority in this manner is immaterial," it continued.

The case involved a worker fired for campaigning against an "independent" local union and in favor of the Teamsters.

Earlier the same court had upheld the NLRB's right to change board backpay policy. Board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown had ruled that discharged employes were entitled to full backpay for the period from their firing to the date they are offered reinstatement.

Previously backpay had been "tolled" for the period in which the workers lost their claims before an NLRB trial examiner until this decision was reversed by the board itself.

City Unions Sponsor Display of U.S. Flags

Roanoke, Va. — This city had a display of American flags on downtown streets for Armed Forces Day even though the community had abandoned a traditional program.

The Roanoke AFL-CIO stepped into the breech and set up a Flag Committee which raised the necessary funds, purchased flags and installed new mounting brackets. Now union members install and remove the banners on national holidays.

AFL-CIO Asks Dividend Tax Credit Repeal

The AFL-CIO has urged the House Ways & Means Committee to repeal the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income so that "unearned income will be taxed at the same rate as earned income."

In a letter to committee members, now considering tax revision legislation, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote:

"We cannot believe that Congress and the American people think that the worker should be taxed at a higher rate than the investor. We cannot believe that Congress and the American people think that he who uses his brain and his muscle in productive efforts should pay more to his government than he who only cashes dividend checks."

Biemiller pointed out that before World War II, earned income was accorded a tax credit. This was dropped to raise revenue during the war period and, in 1954, the opposite principle was adopted when Congress enacted the 4 percent credit and $50 exclusion for dividend income.

"The labor movement is very much concerned that the whole trend of taxation of earned versus unearned income has been reversed," Biemiller declared.

Cope to Leave State AFL-CIO Post in Ohio

Columbus—Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO will resign his post for health reasons when the legislature ends its current session, he has announced.

Cope, who is 59, said the move was advised by his doctors because the "demands of the office are affecting" his health.

The executive board of the state body will be asked to meet soon to pick a successor. Meanwhile Cope will stay on the job until the legislature adjourns.

Cope has been secretary-treasurer since the former AFL and the former CIO merged in Ohio in 1958. At that time he was director of the Steelworkers' economics and international affairs departments, and he will return to that union, he said, to help develop its educational program.

A native of Elwood, Ind., Cope first worked in a Warren, O., tin mill where he was elected a union grievance committeeman at 16. Later he earned college degrees in economics and education, and joined the staff of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at Pittsburgh in 1936.

Cope has been a USWA district director in Canton and Youngstown, and an international representative for the union. From 1947 to 1951 he was European representative for the former CIO and helped form the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The Ohio AFL-CIO has been fighting to save the unemployment compensation system and workmen's compensation against attempts in the legislature to weaken both laws and Cope said he wants to stay on the job for the rest of the session.

U. S. to Collect $800,000 from Westinghouse

Westinghouse Electric Corp. will pay $800,000 to the Tennessee Valley Authority and other government agencies to settle claims for overcharges stemming from the electrical equipment industry's price-fixing conspiracy.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the settlement will bring to more than $8.5 million the amount the government has collected from companies which were defendants in the anti-trust cases. The largest single settlement, with the General Electric Co. last July, came to $7.47 million. Seven smaller companies have also reached settlement agreements, and civil suits are still pending against five firms.

The Westinghouse settlement is based on sales totaling $15.7 million. Of the overcharge payment, $430,000 will go to TVA and $370,000 to the other agencies.

The attorney general expressed the hope that the settlements reached with the government would help bring about equitable settlements of civil suits brought by municipalities and private utility companies which purchased electrical equipment at "rigged" prices.

Arbitration Award Gives $259 to Local

Toronto, Ont.—An arbitration board has ordered Bartoz Carpenters to pay $259 to Carpenters Local 1190 for failing to live up to its agreement to employ union members.

The award represents initiation fees and two months' dues for seven workers. The board ruled that a claim for an additional $1,400 in wages would have been punitive damages and thus outside the board's jurisdiction.

A Step Toward Equity

THE U.S. HOUSE of Representatives has courageously voted to end after 20 years a wartime-instituted program of importing Mexican farm workers into the U.S., bringing to a close a period characterized by raw exploitation of farm workers of both nations.

The wartime need for imported farm hands had long ago vanished and in the past decade the "braceros" were brought into the U.S. by large, industrial-type ranches and farms at wage and working conditions that undercut attempts by American farm workers to establish decent standards of living.

The House action on the bracero program opens the way to correcting the abuses and injustices heaped on American migratory farm workers, who have been denied the basic protections long available to the vast majority of American workers. House action on the bracero program is an important first step, but it must be considered only the beginning.

Watch the State Houses!

THE INSIDIOUS states' rights campaign to weaken the American form of government via the constitutional amendment route has been slowed by national exposure. But the danger is still real.

In 16 states the legislatures have adopted at least one of three amendments designed to rewrite the Constitution so that the United States would become a loose confederacy governed by a minority.

A study discloses that there are 38 states—the necessary three-fourths needed to approve a constitutional amendment—containing less than 40 percent of the population of the U.S. In the legislatures of these 38 states, malapportionment over the years has resulted in giving a minority of the population operating control of the lawmaking bodies.

All told, it is possible for legislators representing as little as 15 percent of the total U.S. population to rewrite the Constitution under the amendments proposed by the states' righters.

In the words of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) the proposed amendments are indeed "time bombs under the American constitutional system." The hot glare of national attention can defuse these instruments of destruction. The state halls must be vigilantly patrolled to prevent further spread of this anti-democratic virus.

Cold Facts on Jobs

THE TREMENDOUS SCOPE of the employment problem of the Sixties has been lost sight of in the vast array of statistics marshaled by all sorts of economists and analysts to prove a case.

AFL-CIO economists, after a careful and detailed study of the situation, have come up with meaningful figures that accurately portray the size of the task facing the nation.

To reach and maintain full employment in the seven-year period 1963-70, the nation needs an average of 4.2 million job opportunities a year, or 80,000 new job opportunities per week.

There are three factors contributing to these figures:

- The expected increase in the labor force between 1963 and 1970 calls for 1.3 million jobs each year.
- Increases in productivity will result in the need for 2.5 million jobs a year based on a productivity rate increase of 3 to 3.5 percent a year.
- To reduce present levels of unemployment and part-time work and to bring into the labor force persons now not seeking jobs because of the lack of opportunities calls for an additional 3.1 million jobs a year.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, June 8, 1963 No. 23

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Beginning to Mend the Fence

On Anniversary of Uprising:

Hopeful Beams of Light Seen Piercing Red Gloom for Czechs

By Vaclav Majer

THIS JUNE MARKS the 10th anniversary of the revolutionary uprising of the Czechslovak people in the West Bohemian industrial center of Pilsen. The Pilsen uprising which flared in June 1953 was led by the workers of the famous Skoda plant and was the first revolutionary move of workers against Communist tyranny in the captive countries of Central and Eastern Europe.

The spark that ignited the explosion was produced by the government's currency reform, which robbed great numbers of people of their hard-earned savings. The real motivating force was the general disgust of the people with the Communist system of political oppression and economic exploitation. This was a time when the Communist party had held all governmental powers for five years, three months had elapsed since the death of Stalin, about half-a-year had gone by since the execution of Slansky, Clementis and other leading Communists, and when the party was still experiencing a severe internal crisis in the field of ideology and in practical politics.

On Monday, June 1, 1953, the workers of the Skoda plant arrived for their morning shift. An excited debate took place and the decision was made to go into the streets. The half-hearted opposition of some members of the Communist militia was easily overcome and the united mass of Skoda workers started a march through the streets where they were joined by workers from other plants and by the citizens.

What started as a workers' protest against currency reform was quickly transformed into a revolutionary uprising against the tyrannical regime and thus became an open fight for national freedom and human rights. The people took possession of the city hall, captured the local broadcasting station and trampled on the pictures of Stalin and Gottwald. They prominently displayed the American flag and swore allegiance to the political heritage of Masaryk at his statue. Their political demands were: "Down With the Communist Government;" "We Demand Free Elections;" "We Want Freedom and Bread."

Communist Party functionaries disappeared. The local police and the local military garrison refused to take action against the people, and the Communist militia was completely paralyzed by the sudden outburst of hostile feelings. By noon Pilsen was a city free from the Communist oppressors.

At the moment Pilsen was free but unfortunately also isolated. The people did not have sufficient contacts with other centers of anti-Communist resistance; they were separated from the countries of the free world by the curtain of barbed wire and by the heavily armed border guards. While the people of Pilsen were enchanted by the vision of freedom and jubilantly sang the national anthem, the local broadcasting station was urgently calling for help: "Liberated Pilsen calls for help . . ."

The call was in vain. The free world did not hear it nor did the Czechoslovak people in other parts of the country. No help came.

During the afternoon the Communist regime in Prague recovered from the shock and sent specially selected police corps and military units of the Prague garrison equipped with heavy tanks, armored vehicles, special weapons and machine guns. The Communist government of the so-called "people's democracy" met the workers' demand for freedom and bread with machine guns. The same "arguments" were used two weeks later in East Berlin and three years later against the Polish people in Poznan and against the freedom fighters of the Hungarian revolution.

THE UPRISING in Pilsen was drowned in blood. The tragic drama is not widely known in the free world because, as Seymour Freiden says in his book, The Forgotten People, "no Westerner could get into the city to see the mass manifestation of self-determination. . . ."

The freedom-loving people of Central and Eastern Europe will never reconcile themselves with the tyrannical regimes of Communist dictatorship and Soviet imperialism. They will never accept their present status as permanent. They aspire to regain their political freedoms and human dignities.

The 10th anniversary of the Pilsen uprising occurs at a time when a new wave of political tension and revolutionary agitation is manifesting itself in Czechoslovakia and the incidence of resistance actions is increasing.

Karol Bacilek, who 10 years ago as minister of state security personally directed the suppression of Pilsen workers, was recently demoted from party and government positions. Bruno Kohler, one of the most servile agents of Moscow, met with the same fate. The courageous criticisms of some writers and poets, student demonstrations and manifestations of dissatisfaction by the workers all clearly indicate that new beams of light are piercing the darkness of the Communist regime.

Morgan Says:

How Far Have We Really Come In Mind and Spirit from Greece?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

Tel Aviv—For the last three weeks my wife and I have been drinking, so to speak, from the fountainheads of western civilization in Greece, Sicily and Rome. It's a refreshing experience but a troubling one. For it poses the question how far have we come since the Greeks and the Romans? We know if we're honest that we have come, in matters of mind and spirit, hardly any distance at all.

Morgan

As the morning sun warms the majestic slopes of Mount Parnassus in Greece, you clamber up the steep hillsides of Delphi to the Temple of Apollo through fields of flaming poppies and melting yellow daisies. Bees hum through the breathtaking pageant of wildflowers and the forlorn braying of a bull mingles with the fragile tinkle of bells from the scrawny herds of goats grazing on the right.

Just below the main level of Apollo's lovely shrine, you pause and stare at a bulging rock where over a steaming fissure in the earth, the Oracle of Delphi tramped on her tripod and dispensed wisdom to the emissaries of ancient city-states. Some of her counsels were astonishingly shrewd and, inevitably, the tourist wonders whether the counsels were any less intelligent than those given or taken at the disarmament discussions in Geneva or the Common Market deliberations in Brussels.

On a soft Mediterranean evening on the eastern coast of Sicily at Syracuse, we stood on the edge of a garden perfumed with herbs and blossoms and regarded the tawny ruins of a huge Roman arena in the fading light. There gladiators fought and Christians were thrown to the lions 20 centuries ago.

But how much more savage in their way were they in truth than today's brutal spectacles in Birmingham, Ala., Jackson, Miss., or any other ghetto in America—north or south—where Negroes are demanding simply that they be recognized as human beings? A demand that is no more revolutionary than the U.S. Constitution, or Judeo-Christian doctrines.

My wife and I stood in the great and vastly beautiful square before St. Peter's in Rome and stared up, with other sad and reverent thousands, at a window on the top floor of the Papal apartments in the Vatican where a worldly peasant, the good Pope John, lay dying. I remembered an audience with this rare, sprightly little man during Pres. Eisenhower's Italian visit 3.5 years ago.

Peek-a-booing out from under his robes as he sat high on a throne, the Holy Father's feet fairly danced with the energy of his hopes as he enjoined us journalists to remember the importance of brotherhood and peace. Yet today the world is still livid with religious bigotry and narrow nationalistic political passions inflamed by demagogues.

In this age of staggering scientific advancement we have all the wherewithal to feed and clothe the world of men adequately for the first time since civilization began. Yet we seem incapable of solving even our pettiest problems. As H. G. Wells wrote a generation ago, "No common man nowadays is safe anywhere from impoverishment and want."

EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO I covered the liberation of Rome from the Axis forces. By comparison the incredible opulence proffered in the shop windows of the Eternal City today would seem to belie historian Wells' statement. But the fact is Italy at this moment is gripped by a crisis on the question of whether she can make freedom and democracy work responsibly.

"Somehow," Wells said, "after noting that systematic thinking is a late development in human experience, and that most of the world still lives by imagination and passion, somehow, world controls of political and economic life and of the general biology of the species have to be organized."

Here in Israel, representatives of our incipient world organization, the United Nations, investigated [an] incident in which Syrians fired on a tractor cultivating a field south of the Sea of Galilee.

We have, in short, a long way to go from the world of chaos to one of common sense. But again to quote Wells, "In the beauty of flower and sunset, in the happy and perfect movement of young animals, in the delight of ten thousand various landscapes we have some intimations of what life can do for us. And in some few works of graphic and pictorial art, in some great music, in a few noble buildings and happy gardens, we have an intimation of what the human will can do with material possibilities."

Washington Reports:

Land-Water Conservation Bill Urged on Congress by Udall

THE QUALITY of American life in the future will depend, more than most of us realize, upon how we treat our resources of air, water, forest and land, Sec. of the Interior Stewart L. Udall declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations.

Udall urged congressional approval of a Land & Water Conservation bill that would earmark funds to create parks and outdoor areas with water, fish and wildlife facilities. Sixty percent of the funds would be available to states for such purposes.

"In this great period of explosive growth in population, industry and mobility, America's outdoor resources have not been keeping pace for 10 or 15 years," he said.

"There is tremendous overcrowding. The most visited park in the U.S. is the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina. On the Fourth of July, Labor Day and a lot of weekends, cars are crowded bumper to bumper."

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE of seashore, forest and other lands would come from three sources, the Secretary explained:

- Users' fees with car stickers that would cost $3 or $4 and that would entitle families to enter any national park. Fees for many single parks are now many times as much. Fees of $1 a night also are proposed for a developed campground.
- The gasoline tax that boaters pay, which now goes into the highway fund.
- The sale of surplus federal property, proceeds from which now go into the general treasury.

Udall, speaking of available land, said that 93 percent of the shoreline between Cape Cod in Massachusetts and Cape Hatteras in North Carolina is now under private ownership. He said some of it should be privately owned, but with the great growth of metropolitan regions in that section, larger areas must be converted into state parks and national seashores.

Udall argued that action cannot be delayed and gave as an example the loss of the Indiana Dunes to commercial interests.

He pointed out that the first director of the National Park System 40 years ago surveyed the 40 miles "of some of the finest dunes and seashores in the nation along Lake Michigan, and said, 'This ought to be a national park'."

"Action was not taken, however, until two or three years ago by Sen. [Paul] Douglas (D-Ill.)," he added. "It was then found one of the steel companies had bought one of the last big tracts. They are in there tearing the dunes down right today."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SUPREME COURT JUSTICE William J. Brennan, Jr., recently had some advice for the states' rights champions who deplore what they call "unwanted intrusion" of federal courts into issues of "local" criminal justice.

If the states will reform their procedures so as to assure every defendant in a criminal case the full protection of constitutional guarantees of due process, the federal courts will not have to "intrude," he said.

This is the same principle Adlai Stevenson enunciated when he ran for the presidency 11 years ago: The federal government starts doing things in many areas because of "states' wrongs," because the states have failed to take action that is manifestly needed and therefore must be done on a federal level.

Justice Brennan was speaking to the Advisory Council of Judges, a group of 50 state and federal judges serving as an arm of the National Council on Crime & Delinquency.

The Supreme Court's rulings in recent years have made it clear, he suggested, that state convictions in criminal cases will not be allowed to stand if the convictions are based on coerced confessions, if a defendant's right to trial by a jury of his peers has been breached by racial restrictions on jury service, if his right to competent counsel and sound appellate procedures has been denied or ignored.

Justice Brennan indicated that if the states reformed their criminal law procedures so as to give accused persons the same full and fair chance of raising constitutional challenges that the federal government allows. then the states would not find themselves subject to defending their conduct in federal appeals.

They should adopt procedures that are simple, easily understood, easily available and free of technical traps. They should allow full court hearings on constitutional issues raised and a full record, a full decision on the issues rather than a summary judgment that discloses little or nothing of the reasoning by which the judgment is reached.

Lacking such reforms, Justice Brennan warned, prisoners who have been denied constitutional rights in state courts inevitablv will move into the federal courts for vindication of these rights. When the law has been clearly laid down, the obligation to follow it is incumbent upon state officials as much as any other citizens.

* * *

THE SUPREME COURT has been expressing the same principle in a series of recent decisions involving school desegregation and other racial issues.

Justice Arthur J. Goldberg on May 24 wrote for a unanimous court in outlawing a Memphis, Tenn., program of "gradual" desegregation of public parks, playgrounds and other recreational facilities.

"Any deprivation of constitutional rights calls for prompt rectification," he said. The rights of human beings under the Constitution are not "merely hopes to some future enjoyment of some formalistic promise," but "warrants for the here and now" in the absence of an "overwhelmingly compelling reason."

Again on June 3 Justice Tom C. Clark spoke for a unanimous court in outlawing a "token" desegregation plan under which Knoxville and Davidson County, Tenn., allowed pupils to "transfer" out of a geographically assigned school when their race is in a minority.

The court is "not unmindful of the deep-rooted problems involved," wrote Clark, but eight years have passed since school desegregation was ordered with "all deliberate speed." A transfer system based "solely on racial factors" leads to "perpetuation of segregation" and can no longer be tolerated, the court held.

On the same day, the court ruled by an 8-to-1 vote that Negro applicants for admission to "white" schools would no longer be forced to exhaust almost interminable local administrative procedures before appealing to the federal courts for enforcement of constitutional rights. The courts will act now, it declared.

The states can establish their vitality and competence by bringing their conduct toward their citizens into line with the Constitution, clearly enough. And if they will not or do not, then the tribunals are open where protection can be obtained.

RECREATION AREAS must be expanded and developed to meet the needs of the current and future population, Sec. of the Interior Stewart Udall declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. He called for passage of the U.S. Land & Water Conservation bill.

How to Buy:

False Scarcity of Sugar Means Heavy Profits for Speculators

By Sidney Margolius

THE WHOLESALE PRICE of sugar has been boosted 13 times in five months for a total increase of 54 percent, and retail prices have leaped 26 percent in just three weeks with more increases ahead. All the evidence is that there is no real shortage to justify the runaway price, that sugar is being stockpiled by refiners, wholesalers and speculators, and that this is a plain case of profiteering. The price is the highest since 1920. In recent weeks it has jumped as much as 4 cents a pound in one day.

Sugar is a nervous commodity that in the past, as in 1920 after World War I, often has been the subject of spectacular profiteering, with fortunes made and sometimes lost by traders and speculators who joined the profit scramble but sometimes stayed too long.

This time, the public, if properly informed, can nip the latest price raid quickly. It is important that the public itself act, especially since the U.S. Agriculture Dept. so far has taken no effective action.

The evidence that the price rise is actual profiteering is shown by the figures on supplies and use. The business papers report that deliveries to refineries and wholesalers have increased by about 1 billion pounds so far this year. This is an increase of about 14 percent. But only about 100 million pounds was required by the increased population. So 90 percent of that billion pounds has been stockpiled by industrial users and wholesalers. Refiners' representatives themselves have been telling retailers, not wholly truthfully, that the sugar-producing countries abroad are holding back supplies.

The false scarcity of sugar has resulted in a genuine abundance of profits for refiners, wholesalers and stock-market speculators. Current earnings statements of leading sugar corporations show their profits have jumped 57 to 70 percent over last year's earnings. Wall Street speculators have joined the money rush, with securities of sugar refineries rising 32 to 50 percent in seven weeks.

One alert friend of consumers in Congress, Rep. Charles A. Vanik (D-O.), has demanded that the Administration "stifle the profiteering" by suspending the duty on sugar and making it possible for consumers to buy sugar at lower world prices. Under the present quota system, Vanik points out, the price of sugar is pegged. It can't go down but can go up.

American families also have another simple way to stop the price raid. They can cut down on products which use sugar heavily.

Biggest single sugar user is soda pop. If the higher prices of such beverages now beginning to show up in stores influence families to turn to milk drinks and fruit juices this summer, the price hike will turn out to be a blessing in disguise.

A survey by this reporter ironically reveals that milk actually is the cheapest beverage, especially now in the flush season when the price has just been reduced. In many cities milk currently costs about three-fourths of 1 cent per ounce, and as little as one-half a cent in gallon jugs. Most of the famous-name carbonated beverages actually cost about 1 cent an ounce.

Even canned fruit drinks like the fruit punches and grape drinks widely sold in stores cost less than carbonated beverages. The fruit drinks usually are three-quarters to a penny an ounce.

THE IRONY IS that both milk and fruit drinks provide much more nutrition than the soda pops. If you read the list of ingredients on the pops, you see that typically they consist of "carbonated water, sugar, citric acid, flavoring and coloring."

In contrast, a cup of milk provides 8.5 grams of high-quality protein, and is also rich in calcium, vitamin A, the B vitamins and other nutrients. Fruit drinks also have much more nourishment than soda, vitamin C, significant amounts of vitamin A and other nutrients, and even some protein.

Milk drinks can be made more interesting for drinking in place of soda pop by various flavorings. The cost can be further reduced by making flavored drinks of half whole milk and half skim milk. Modern instant-dissolving nonfat dry milk is easy to mix. It makes nonfat milk at a cost of only 8-9 cents a quart, compared to the typical 30-32 cents a quart for soda pop.

Significantly, moderate-income families, which have been found to have diets seriously deficient in milk, often are big users of soda pop.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

ONLY A MASSIVE PROGRAM of federal aid can make equal educational opportunity a reality, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared at Senate hearings on the Administration's school aid program. At right is Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel. The AFL-CIO endorsed the goals of the President's omnibus school bill, but emphasized that much more money than the Administration is asking will be needed to carry them out.

Consumers Report Shows:

Housewives Need 'Truth-in-Packaging'

ONE OF THE FAVORITE arguments of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce in opposing "truth-in-packaging" legislation is that the American housewife is just too smart to need a law to protect her against fraudulent packaging.

This form of flattery should be convincing, but it isn't. Unfortunately, all the evidence gathered by Congress and consumers' groups is that it will be a long day before the housewife will be able to catch up with the gentlemen who merchandise their goods in our supermarkets.

In an analysis of testimony presented to Congress on the "truth-in-packaging" bill and based on its own experience, Consumers Report revealed the kind of marketing flimflam that has become increasingly evident in today's packaging. Here are some samples:

● Concealed price increases by decreasing the quantity of merchandise, whether liquid or dry, without decreasing the size of the package. This has been defended by some manufacturers on the grounds that the other fellow does it and they have to, too, if they want to remain competitive. Meanwhile, the consumer is paying the old price for less and doesn't know that he has been hit with a price rise.

● There is scarcely a housewife who hasn't been shocked to open a package of cereal or crackers and find it barely two-thirds full. Consumers Union reports that it has thousands of letters complaining about partially empty packages; fruit cans that contain less than the label calls for and just loaded with sugar water; 5.75-inch cans that contain 4-inch long asparagus tips; "pork and beans"where you could put the pork in your eye—the tricks are innumerable.

● Phony "cents-off" deals. This is a relatively new gimmick. In the old days a grocer presumably made his own decisions when he put things on sale. Today, the "sale" frequently starts with the manufacturer who conveniently prints "cents-off" labels. Cases have been found where some labels with the identical produce and identical size—two coffee can lids, for example, one marked "10 cents off" and the other "15 cents off," as an added come-on.

● The complicated system of ounces and fractional ounces that take a slide rule to determine which is the better buy is now worse than ever. Take this kind of conundrum: Which is the better buy? "One large tube 1-1/16 oz. plus 1 Family tube 5-11/16 oz. equals 6-3/4 oz. for 98 cents, or 2 Giant tubes 2-7/8 oz. each equals 5-3/4 oz. for 99 cents.

The Chamber of Commerce has protested that only unscrupulous manufacturers would do any of these things and that new laws aren't needed. Yet Consumers Report listed almost 50 companies about whose packaging practices it has received complaints. They represented the very cream of American companies whose names we see daily in the newspapers or on television.

"The spectacle of some of the country's largest advertisers of consumer goods caught in competitive pickpocket activities is not a pretty one," Consumers Reports said. "But it seems clear that the packagers cannot free themselves from this uneconomic and unethical practice without help from congressional action." (PAI).

From Soup to Nonsense:

Thar's Gold in Them Thar Seats And Gosh, What a Lotta Dross!

By Jane Goodsell

EVERY FAMILY ought to have a cash reserve to fall back on in case of emergency, and we do have. I'm not talking about a savings account or a coffee can full of loose change or a bankroll hidden under the mattress. I'm talking about the money that falls out of pockets and purses and slips underneath the back seat of our car.

If I need nickels for a parking meter or change for the paper boy, I know where to look. This gives me a nice feeling of financial security. Of course it's a bit awkward to run out to the car and move the back seat but, like smoking long butts when you're out of cigarettes, it's nice to have something to fall back on in a pinch.

Besides, it's rather exciting to lift up the back seat because we never know what hidden treasures lie in store for us.

Just to give you an idea, here's a list of our most recent finds:

A LIBRARY BOOK, which we had reported lost and paid $4.95 to replace.

Thirteen bobby pins.
Seven popsickle sticks.
One doll sock.
Five broken crayons.
One pair of manicure scissors, hopelessly rusted.
Two sticks of gum (unchewed).
Four wads of gum (chewed).
One scarf, wringing wet.
Four cough drops (three cherry and one licorice).
Two left-handed mittens, one blue and one red.
Four pocket combs.

ONE CROSSWORD puzzle book with half its pages missing.

A belt buckle.
A popped balloon.
One ballpoint pen that doesn't work.
Three pencil stubs.
A birthday card addressed to my aunt in Baltimore.
A chin strap to a blue bathing cap.
Three 1-cent stamps, stuck together.
Eight cigarette butts.

A HORNET'S NEST of cookie crumbs, paper clips, crayon crumbles, pencil points, crusts of bread, hair, rubber bands and unidentifiable et cetera.

One nickel, one dime and eight pennies.

Delegates Mourn Pope:

African Elected President Of ILO's 47th Conference

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization broke new ground twice when more than 100 delegates met here for the organization's 47th conference.

The conference for the first time in its history elected an African, Joseph M. Johnson, Nigerian Minister of Labor, as its president. Johnson told the conference his election by acclamation was meant to honor the "whole emerging continent of Africa."

In a second unprecedented action, representatives of governments, workers and employers from all over the world rose for a minute's silence in unprecedented tribute to the memory of Pope John XXIII. Alexander Parodi of France, chairman of the ILO Governing Body who was presiding, recalled the Pope's efforts to promote better understanding between peoples and the stress he had placed in his messages to the world on the ILO's role in the development of social justice.

Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate, was elected by his fellow worker delegates to serve as the conference's worker vice president.

Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver was elected chairman of the conference Steering Committee.

Both Parodi and Johnson stressed in their opening speeches the importance of the three-week session and its concentration on the reassessment to be made by the 108 nations in the ILO of the organization's role in a rapidly changing world. Delegates will address themselves to a report by ILO Director Gen. David A. Morse on "the program and structure of the ILO."

Parodi called for a discussion "wide in scope and serious in intent." Johnson said the decisions to be taken "will be vital to the continued effectiveness of this organization."

The keynote of the conference was struck by Morse in his report on Program and Structure of the ILO.

Delegates were to take a fresh look at the major labor and social problems to determine how the organization can best help meet them.

They were also to continue the ILO's traditional job of setting international standards to improve the working and living conditions of men and women the world over.

Following preliminary discussions at last year's session, the conference was expected to put the final touches to new regulations for banning the sale and use of inadequately protected machinery. These measures for safeguarding workers against being killed or maimed on the job will be forwarded to governments for incorporation in their national legislation.

Also before the conference for final disposal are new rules for protecting workers against arbitrary dismissals and layoffs. They are scheduled to be set out in a recommendation to governments, which under the ILO constitution are pledged to use them as a guide.

Hygiene in shops and offices and benefits to compensate for industrial accidents and occupational diseases also are being studied with a view to the adoption of final conclusions at next year's sessions.

The conference will elect for the first time 48 members to the Governing Body, or executive committee, following the ratification by governments of the decision taken last year to expand the membership from 40.

The expanded committee will consist of 24 government, 12 worker and 12 employer delegates in keeping with the organization's solidly implanted "tripartite" tradition.

Also before the conference is the draft of a budget of $16,081,496 for 1964. This sum does not include the cost of the technical assistance the organization provides newly-developing countries under programs financed by the United Nations.

At a two-day session before the conference's opening, the Governing Body adopted the statute for the Intl. Center for Advanced Technical & Vocational Training that the ILO is to establish in Turin, Italy. The statute stressed that the center must reflect the "tripartite" principle on which the ILO was founded.

108th Member-State Is Admitted to ILO

Geneva—Trinidad and Tobago, which was admitted to the United Nations last September, has become the 108th member-state of the Intl. Labor Organization.

Eric Williams, prime minister and minister of external affairs, declared his country's formal acceptance of the obligations of the ILO constitution in a letter to ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse dated May 18.

Further U. S. Labor Aid Pressed for Histadrut

Unity House, Pa.—The American Trade Union Council for Histadrut has urged the U.S. government "to guarantee the territorial integrity and independence of Israel and all other countries of the Middle East," and to withhold economic aid from nations threatening the peace.

The resolution, adopted at the concluding session of a four-day conference here, urged continued "encouragement and support" by American labor for Histadrut, Israel's labor federation.

Histadrut was praised for its "pioneering . . feats of economic construction and social advance in a vital area of the world" and for "the establishment of powerful links of brotherhood with the emerging nations of Asia and Africa."

The Israeli federation was described by Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning as "a jewel of democracy."

He praised Israel's integration of diverse groups within the country and emphasized that in the long run the test will be how Israel deals with its Arab minority. In the U.S., he said, the comparable test of "moral integrity" is the place of the Negro in American society.

Assistant Pres. Gus Tyler of the Ladies' Garment Workers noted parallels between the development of Israel and the U.S.

"We had our Mayflower and Israel has had its Exodus," he pointed out. "Both nations were built by pioneers holding a plow in one hand and a gun in the other. Both have welcomed large numbers of immigrants, which accounts for the pluralistic societies in which democracy is quite safe."

Benjamin F. McLaurin, an official of the Sleeping Car Porters, told the group that Egypt's Nasser "will fail to abolish Israel because his objectives are wrong and he does not come with clean hands."

Officers and staff members of a number of unions attended the conference and participated in discussion groups that included experts in fields related to Middle East problems.

The conference commended the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its recent meeting in St. Louis and declared "there is no room for complacency as long as German and other missile scientists are working to build up the deadly arsenals of Nasser's Egypt."

Meany Asks Expansion Of Auxiliaries

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, noting that "the wives of workers—and sometimes their daughters, sisters and mothers as well—have been stalwart allies" of the labor movement over the years, has called upon all affiliated unions to intensify the organization of women's auxiliaries in order to improve the "political and legislative climate" of the nation.

In a letter to the president of each AFL-CIO union, Meany urged a stepped-up program for auxiliaries and the creation of an auxiliary if none now exists. He further asked that all present auxiliary groups become affiliated with the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries, which, he said, "should properly serve as a focal point in its field, just as the AFL-CIO does for the movement as a whole."

"Even as all of us are devoting greater attention to organizing the unorganized workers, we should not neglect the tremendous resources available among 'unorganized' potential members of women's auxiliaries," he said.

Meany said the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries, under the direction of Mrs. Marcella Beatty, would be glad to assist any affiliated union in establishing or improving an auxiliaries program.

Union Counselors Hail 2 Members

Cleveland—William Lightner, director of the Union Counselors' Association here for 15 years, presided for the last time at the AFL-CIO group's annual banquet where awards for community service were given to Executive Sec. Sebastian Lupica of the city central body and Vice Pres. David J. Fitzmaurice of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

William McCrone, Auto Workers, was named to succeed Lightner, who has retired. Pres. George Kuharik, of Fitzmaurice's union, was re-elected by the counselors, who aid union members with out-of-plant problems.

PRINCIPAL SPEAKER at the convention of the Grain Millers in Chicago was AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (left), who is shown with Pres Roy O. Wellborn (center) and Sec.-Treas. H. A. Schneider of the international union.

Grain Millers Increase Per Capita by 50 Cents

Chicago—The Grain Millers have cleared the way for an expanded program by voting a 50-cent increase per member in monthly per capita income of the international union; calling for negotiation of multiplant, nationwide agreements with national companies; and setting up a new Canadian district headed by William Reader of London, Ont., as district vice president.

In convention sessions covering three days the 40,000-member union re-elected Pres. Roy O. Wellborn, Sec.-Treas. Harold A. Schneider and Executive Vice Presidents J. A. Leveridge and Peter Rybka. The delegates also:

- Urged all union members to increase efforts to organize the unorganized.
- Called for the negotiation of supplemental unemployment benefits in future contracts, and also for the negotiation of wages on a companywide basis for all plants covered by master agreements.

The convention voiced its strong support of companywide bargaining and denounced proposals to outlaw it. Delegates also raised the per capita tax to $2 a month, endorsed political action through COPE and voted to back the AFL-CIO legislative program, particularly hospital care for the aged through social security.

Delegates called on local COPE committees to set up registration and get-out-the-vote machinery and to keep trying to inform members and their families of the need to vote intelligently.

Southern Railroad Rates

A major resolution warned that the Southern Railroad has published lower freight rates which may cause a movement of grain milling facilities from the Great Plains area, where the AFGM has its greatest membership concentration, to new low-wage areas, and asked that ways and means be sought to combat possible loss of union membership.

Convention speakers included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers and Exec. Sec. Peter M. McGavin of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., and Commissioner John L. Holcombe of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

Rubber Workers Settle Last 'Big Five' Contract

New York—The last of the rubber industry's "Big Five" has reached agreement here with the Rubber Workers on contract improvements for 24,000 workers at 18 plants of the United States Rubber Co.

The new agreement, subject to ratification by locals in 15 cities, follows the pattern set in the first agreement, reached in April with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

One new feature was a signed memorandum stating that "it is the policy of the company that every employe is entitled at all times to fair and decent treatment." This grew out of union objections to management interpretation of discipline clauses in the old contract at some plants.

The new pact, which expires June 1, 1965, provides wage increases of 16 cents an hour in five tire plants and 13 cents in 13 non-tire plants.

It calls also for increases in the amount and duration of supplemental unemployment benefits, including company payment for short workweeks; a guarantee of SUB payments to injured workers to bring their payments to 80 percent of average earnings; and, for the first time in the contract, formation of a joint URW-U.S. Rubber study committee to discuss the effects of automation and other problems.

Company payment for the work of a union time-study man, and creation of a joint safety committee also are provided.

The contract covers workers in five tire plants in Detroit, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Eau Claire, Wis., and Chicopee Falls, Mass., and in 13 other plants in Chicago, Philadelphia, Providence and Woonsocket, R. I.; Passaic, N. J.; Naugatuck, Conn.; Painesville, O.; Santa Ana, Calif.; Mishawaka and Washington, Ind.

ICFTU Aide Returns To Post in Okinawa

Gerry Daniels, representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions on Okinawa, has returned to his post following consultations in Brussels and Washington.

House Vote to End Bracero Program

The House on May 29 defeated a bill to extend the program of importing farm workers from Mexico for two years beyond its scheduled expiration date of Dec. 31, 1963. The vote was 174-158. Democrats voted 121-80 against continuing the program; Republicans voted 78-53 for the extension.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote to end the program was a right vote (R), while a vote for extension was a wrong vote (W). Other symbols: A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; NV—not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large.

Here is the rollcall:

ALABAMA

AL Andrews (D) PW
AL Elliott (D) W
AL Grant (D) W
AL Huddleston (D) R
AL Jones (D) W
AL Rains (D) A
AL Roberts (D) A
AL Selden W

ALASKA

AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA

1. Rhodes (R) PW
2. Udall (D) W
3. Senner (D) W

ARKANSAS

1. Gathings (D) W
2. Mills (D) W
3. Trimble (D) W
4. Harris (D) W

CALIFORNIA

1. Clausen (R) W
2. Johnson (D) W
3. Moss (D) W
4. Leggett (D) W
5. Shelley (D) PR
6. Mailliard (R) W
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. Younger (R) W
12. Talcott (R) W
13. Teague (R) W
14. Baldwin (R) W
15. McFall (D) W
16. Sisk (D) W
18. Hagen (D) W
33. Sheppard (D) R
34. Hanna (D) PW
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Martin (R) W

Los Angeles County

17. King (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Vacancy
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Cameron (D) R
26. Roosevelt (D) R
27. Burkhalter (D) R
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown (D) A
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) PR
32. Hosmer (R) PW

COLORADO

1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) W

CONNECTICUT

AL Grabowski (D) R
1. Daddario (D) R
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) R
5. Monagan (D) R

DELAWARE

AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA

1. Sikes (D) W
2. Bennett (D) R
3. Pepper (D) R
4. Fascell (D) W
5. Herlong (D) W
6. Rogers (D) W
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) W
9. Fuqua (D) W
10. Gibbons (D) R
11. Gurney (R) W
12. Cramer (R) W

GEORGIA

1. Hagan (D) W
2. Pilcher (D) PW
3. Forrester (D) PW
4. Flynt (D) A
5. Weltner (D) R
6. Vinson (D) W
7. Davis (D) PW
8. Tuten (D) R
9. Landrum (D) A
10. Stephens (D) W

HAWAII

AL Gill (D) R
AL Matsunaga (D) R

IDAHO

1. White (D) R
2. Harding (D) W

ILLINOIS

12. McClory (R) A
14. Hoffman (R) PW
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) A
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) A
19. McLoskey (R) PR
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) A
22. Springer (R) W
23. Shipley (D) PR
24. Price (D) R

Chicago-Cook County

1. Dawson (D) A
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) A
6. O'Brien (D) R
7. Libonati (D) PR
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Finnegan (D) A
10. Collier (R) PR
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) R

INDIANA

1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) A
5. Roush (D) A
6. Roudebush (R) R
7. Bray (R) R
8. Denton (D) A
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) PW
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA

1. Schwengel (R) R
2. Bromwell (R) PR
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) R
5. Smith (D) R
6. Hoeven (R) W
7. Jensen (R) R

KANSAS

1. Dole (R) W
2. Avery (R) W
3. Ellsworth (R) PW
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY

1. Stubblefield (D) W
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Snyder (R) PR
4. Chelf (D) W
5. Siler (R) PR
6. Watts (D) W
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUISIANA

1. Hebert (D) R
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) W
4. Waggonner (D) A
5. Passman (D) PW
6. Morrison (D) A
7. Thompson (D) R
8. Long (D) W

MAINE

1. Tupper (R) PR
2. McIntire (R) PW

MARYLAND

AL Sickles (D) R
1. Morton (R) PW
2. Long (D) W
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) R
7. Friedel (D) W

MASSACHUSETTS

1. Conte (R) R
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) R
6. Bates (R) A
7. Macdonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormack (D) (Speaker) NV
10. Martin (R) A
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN

AL Staebler (D) W
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) PW
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. O'Hara (D) PW
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) A
12. Bennett (R) R
18. Broomfield (R) R

Metropolitan Detroit

1. Nedzi (D) PR
13. Diggs (D) A
14. Ryan (D) A
15. Dingell (D) A
16. Lesinski (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA

1. Quie (R) R
2. Nelsen (R) PW
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Olson (D) R
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) A

MISSISSIPPI

1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Williams (D) W
4. Winstead (D) A
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI

1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) W
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) A
5. Bolling (D) A
6. Hull (D) R
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) A
9. Cannon (D) R
10. Jones (D) A

MONTANA

1. Alsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) PW

NEBRASKA

1. Beermann (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) R
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA

AL Baring (D) R

NEW HAMPSHIRE

1. Wyman (R) PR
2. Cleveland (R) R

NEW JERSEY

1. Cahill (R) R
2. Glenn (R) R
3. Auchincloss (R) PR
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) W
6. Dwyer (R) PR
7. Widnall (R) W
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) A
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) R
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) A
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO

AL Montoya (D) A
AL Morris (D) W

NEW YORK

1. Pike (D) R
2. Grover (R) R
3. Derounian (R) R
4. Wydler (R) R
5. Becker (R) R
25. Barry (R) W
26. Reid (R) R
27. St. George (R) R
28. Wharton (R) A
29. O'Brien (D) PR
30. King (R) PW
31. Kilburn (R) PW
32. Pirnie (R) R
33. Robinson (R) R
34. Riehlman (R) PR
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) R
37. Ostertag (R) PR
38. Goodell (R) PW
39. Pillon (R) A
40. Miller (R) R
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City

6. Halpern (R) R
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Keogh (D) A
12. Kelly (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) R
17. Lindsay (R) R
18. Powell (D) A
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Healey (D) W
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Buckley (D) A
24. Fino (R) R

NORTH CAROLINA

1. Bonner (D) W
2. Fountain (D) W
3. Henderson (D) A
4. Cooley (D) W
5. Scott (D) A
6. Kornegav (D) W
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Jonas (R) W
9. Broyhill (R) W
10. Whitener (D) W
11. Taylor (D) W

NORTH DAKOTA

1. Nygaard (R) PW
2. Short (R) W

OHIO

AL Taft (R) R
1. Rich (R) R
2. Clancy (R) PR
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) R
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Abele (R) R
11. Bolton, Oliver (R) R
12. Devine (R) A
13. Mosher (R) R
14. Ayres (R) PW
15. Secrest (D) A
16. Bow (R) PR
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) PR
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton, Frances (R) W
23. Minshall (R) PW

OKLAHOMA

1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) A
3. Albert (D) W
4. Steed (D) W
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON

1. Norblad (R) W
2. Ullman (D) W
3. Green (D) R
4. Duncan (D) W

PENNSYLVANIA

6. Rhodes (D) R
7. Milliken (R) R
8. Curtin (R) R
9. Dague (R) W
10. McDade (R) R
11. Flood (D) A
12. Whalley (R) R
13. Schweiker (R) R
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Walter (D) PR
16. Kunkel (R) R
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) R
19. Goodling (R) PR
20. Holland (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) R
23. Gavin (R) W
24. Weaver (R) A
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R

Philadelphia

1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Toll (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND

1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA

1. Rivers (D) W
2. Watson (D) W
3. Dorn (D) W
4. Ashmore (D) PW
5. Hemphill (D) W
6. McMillan (D) W

SOUTH DAKOTA

1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE

1. Quillen (R) R
2. Baker (R) R
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) A
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) W
8. Everett (D) A
9. Davis (D) W

TEXAS

AL Pool (D) W
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) R
4. Roberts (D) A
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) W
7. Dowdy (D) A
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) W
10. Thornberry (D) W
11. Poage (D) A
12. Wright (D) W
13. Purcell (D) A
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) W
16. Foreman (R) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) W
19. Mahon (D) W
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W

UTAH

1. Burton (R) W
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT

AL Stafford (R) R

VIRGINIA

1. Downing (D) W
2. Hardy (D) W
3. Gary (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Tuck (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) W
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON

1. Pelly (R) R
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) PW
6. Tollefson (R) R
7. Stinson (R) R

WEST VIRGINIA

1. Moore (R) R
2. Staggers (D) R
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) PR

WISCONSIN

1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) A
7. Laird (R) PR
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) PR

WYOMING

AL Harrison (R) W

Warning on Revival:

Bracero Bill Defeat Hailed by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has hailed defeat by the House of a bill to continue for two years the importation of Mexican farm workers but warned that the growers who profited from the "bracero" program are still trying to get a one-year extension.

In a statement by its director of legislation, Andrew J. Biemiller, the federation promised to fight any effort to revive the bracero program.

Biemiller urged Congress to turn, instead, to legislation to "assure unemployed U.S. farm workers of jobs and to assure growers that competent labor will be available," and declared the AFL-CIO "will support such legislation."

"We sincerely hope that the vote of the House of Representatives marks the beginning of the end" of second-class citizenship for farm workers, Biemiller said, adding:

"We hope that it is a signal for the termination of the legislative discrimination against these workers who are the poorest of the poor in our nation."

The House voted 174 - 158 against the bill to extend the program by two years. Unless big growers succeed in their fight to revive it, the authority for it will die Dec. 31, 1963.

Labor for years has fought the system under which several hundred thousand Mexican workers were brought in to work on large farms in Texas, California and other states. The program, the AFL-CIO charged, has kept down wages and reduced job opportunities for U.S. farm workers, has benefited less than 1 percent of farmers, and has hurt small "family type" farmers.

Biemiller pointed out that labor and many church organizations "joined hands and fought the good fight" against extension of the program and hailed victory in the House as "an important step in improving the welfare of U.S. farm workers." He declared:

"The program . . . has been a terrible handicap to farm workers."

If it now dies, he added, "the pitifully low wages of U.S. farm workers in at least the West, South and Southwest will increase and additional jobs will become available."

Action by Congress on "the bills which have been introduced to recruit U.S. farm workers and bring them to the areas" of labor need, he said, is what is needed.

"This is the way to assure unemployed U.S. farm workers of jobs, and to assure growers that competent labor will be available," he said.

In a separate statement, Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters said that, in voting to end the bracero program, the House "has acted to wipe out a blot on our national conscience."

Noting that 250 Meat Cutters local union representatives had urged their congressmen to kill the braceros' operation, they added that labor, religious groups, consumer organizations and family farm representatives must now seek additional legislative remedies for farm workers.

"Farm workers are the most poverty-stricken, depressed and exploited group in the nation," they declared. "Much effort is needed to improve their abysmal living standards."

"WHAT MAKES A CITY?" was the theme of a course presented by the Labor Education Center of the University of Connecticut, with the cooperation of the Hartford Times and its staff, to help prepare trade unionists for service on community agencies and civic commissions. Co-sponsored by the Greater Hartford Labor Council and the Connecticut State Council of Machinists, the eight weekly meetings drew 35 participants. Shown leading one of the discussions are, left to right, standing: Associate Prof. John Glynn of the university, who is a vice president of the State AFL-CIO; Ralph Minard, Times redevelopment reporter; Don O. Noel, Jr., Times state agencies reporter.

Administration Backed On Conservation Fund

The AFL-CIO, representing "the largest single group of recreation seekers in the United States," has told Congress it "strongly supports" an Administration bill to establish a land and water conservation fund to help the states and the federal government expand outdoor recreation facilities.

A statement by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller to a House Interior subcommittee termed access to outdoor recreation "a national problem with broad social and economic implications."

The "baby boom" and a rapidly growing population are not the only contributing factors, Biemiller said.

Higher wages and longer vacations, coupled with improved transportation, have greatly increased the use of available outdoor facilities, he noted.

At the same time, he added, the growth of metropolitan areas has cut sharply into the open space and park lands available near big cities.

"A great deal of land must be acquired by public agencies to meet present and future public recreation needs," Biemiller emphasized.

Earlier, Interior Sec. Stewart L. Udall termed the bill "one of the major pieces of conservation legislation of the 1960s."

Unless additional land is acquired during the next 10 years "it will be too late—the lands will be committed to other uses or the cost will be out of reach," he told the subcommittee.

The Administration bill would build up a fund earmarked for outdoor recreation expansion from receipts from sale of surplus federal real estate, the existing federal taxes collected on fuel used for motor boats, and a uniform user fee for persons making use of facilities at developed federal recreational areas.

The AFL-CIO urged that user fee stickers be sold at low prices, coupled with an educational campaign urging voluntary purchase of stickers as a contribution to the cause of conservation. No fees, the federation emphasized, should be imposed on individuals who may have to cross federal lands for purposes other than recreation.

To start the program off, the bill would authorize $60 million a year in direct Treasury appropriations for eight years. After the 10th year of the program, any amounts collected in excess of actual needs would be used to repay the Treasury advance.

Proceeds from the fund would be used for both direct federal expenditures and grants to states.

Brotherhood Award Given Union Leader

New York—Jay Rubin, president of the New York Hotel Trades Council, received the National Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christians & Jews at a dinner bringing together 300 labor and management leaders in the hotel industry.

Proceeds of the $100 a plate affair, "Salute to Brotherhood," were turned over to the conference to aid its program of building good will and understanding among the nation's racial and religious groups.

The presentation to Rubin "for distinguished service in the field of human relations was made by Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., president of the New York City Central Labor Council.

Herman A. Gray, impartial arbitrator for the hotel industry, was toastmaster, and Van Arsdale and James A. McCarthy, executive vice president of the Hotel Association of New York City, were co-chairmen.

AFL-CIO Urges Restoration Of Labor, H-E-W Budget Cuts

The AFL-CIO has urged the Senate to restore cuts made by the House in appropriations for the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, the Labor Dept., and two related agencies.

The biggest single slash was nearly $82.6 million chopped from the President's request for funds for the network of state employment services.

Urging that the full amount be appropriated, the AFL-CIO declared the added money is needed to improve job placement services for "more than a million young men and women who enter the labor force for the first time" each year and to give "individualized assistance" to "the ever growing number of long-term unemployed displaced by automation and shifts of industry to new locations."

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in testimony delivered by Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, pointed out the House committee had conceded that a larger appropriation "could be used to advantage." It was forced to hold the amount down, it said, because of a ceiling on expenditures in the authorizing legislation.

That ceiling has since been lifted, the AFL-CIO said, urging the Senate to approve the full budget request of $432.6 million.

Biemiller took note of "a barrage of publicity and mail" by private fee-charging agencies against the employment service. These charges, he told the subcommittee, "will not stand the light of day."

In other areas, the AFL-CIO urged larger appropriations than the House voted for:

- Grants for water pollution control, where $10 million was cut from the $100 million request.
- Hospital and medical facilities construction, where the Hill-Burton Act appropriation is $48.3 million less than last year.
- Bureau of Labor Statistics funds to permit larger samplings and greater depth in gathering data on employment and unemployment.
- The National Labor Relations Board, where a $1 million cut from budget recommendations "will substantially slow up services."
- The Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, where restoration of $400,000 is needed to meet "increasing" requests for services.
- An Office of Education request for cooperative research funds, where $5.5 million was slashed.
- Food & Drug Administration funds for construction of new buildings and facilities.

Convention Upheld In Setting Dues Floor

Chicago—The U.S. Court of Appeals here has unanimously upheld the right of an international union convention to set minimum dues for affiliated locals.

The decision upheld a district court's dismissal of a suit brought by several members of Chicago Local 28 of the Office Employes. They had contended that under the Landrum-Griffin Act, union dues can be raised only through action by the local union. The OEIU, as do many international unions, specifies the minimum dues which its locals may charge. The union's 1962 convention raised this minimum from $2 a month to $3.

The appellate court decision noted that "traditionally international unions have exercised primary jurisdiction over affairs of their affiliated local unions, including the control of the local dues structure sufficient to insure the financial health of the union."

Pointing out that many international unions set minimum and maximum dues range, the court said that if Congress had intended "to strip international unions of their traditional power" over dues, the statute or at least the legislative history of its enactment would have so indicated.

Rejecting the argument that the law was intended to limit an international union's authority over the dues structure to setting the amount of the per capita tax, the court said:

"We should be reluctant to attribute to Congress either a lack of knowledge of the distinction between 'dues' and 'per capita taxes'."

Chapel to Honor William Green

Valley Forge, Pa.—The new national headquarters of the American Baptist Convention here will include a William Green Memorial Chapel in memory of the late AFL president whose first ambition was to become a Baptist minister.

The $500,000 chapel, designed by Architect Vincent Kling, was conceived and will be financed by the Baptists. Green was a member of the First Baptist Church in Coshocton, O., which his daughter still attends. The AFL-CIO Executive Council recently voted a token contribution of $5,000 to the project.

"The AFL-CIO is indeed happy to join with the American Baptists in this way to keep alive the memory of this man and his significant contribution to the welfare of our nation," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in submitting the organization's contribution.

John McCully Takes USIA Labor Post

John McCully, former public relations director for the Texas State AFL-CIO, has resigned as information director for the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to join the U.S. Information Agency.

Kennedy Message Awaited:

Congress Girds for Civil Rights Battle

By David L. Perlman

The first skirmishes in a major congressional battle over new civil rights legislation were taking place in the cloakrooms and caucus rooms of the Senate and House as Congress awaited a special message from Pres. Kennedy, expected June 11.

Events of recent weeks have propelled civil rights into one of the major issues of the session and a blueprint for legislative action has been taking shape at the White House in close consultation with Administration leaders in Congress. The President's message is scheduled to be quickly followed by an appearance of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy before the House Judiciary Committee, set for June 12.

The division within the Democratic Party between its northern liberal majority and its southern wing was matched by a sharply divided caucus of Senate Republicans. GOP liberals, who had sought the caucus, failed in a bid to commit their party to support a move to impose cloture to break an expected filibuster against civil rights legislation.

After an all-day battle behind closed doors, the GOP caucus agreed on a non-binding "consensus" that the party would support "further appropriate legislation."

After a series of trouncings on legislative issues, the House coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats put together a 227-174 majority to limit the President's power to reorganize the executive branch of the government.

A bill to extend the Reorganization Act an additional two years was amended to deny the President the right to create a new cabinet department under reorganization procedure—whereby a reorganization plan becomes effective unless either the House or Senate rejects it within 60 days.

Ike Used Procedure

Former Pres. Eisenhower used this procedure to set up the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in 1953. Pres. Kennedy last year sought to establish a Dept. of Urban Affairs through the same method and indicated he would name Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver as the first Negro member of the Cabinet. With southern Democrats joining Republicans, the plan was rejected by the House.

Democrats charged Republicans with playing politics on the issue, noting that the same grant of power had been given to Eisenhower on three occasions.

In other congressional developments:

- A House Judiciary subcommittee approved an Administration bill authorizing federal courts to set up a "public defender" system or otherwise arrange to pay competent attorneys to defend persons who can't afford to hire their own lawyer. The AFL-CIO strongly supported the proposal. Similar measures have been passed by the Senate on three occasions, but blocked in the House.
- The House Ways & Means Committee, taking time out from detailed consideration of tax cut legislation, approved by a 19-6 vote a one-year extension of the special federal corporation tax and a number of excise taxes first imposed during the Korean fighting and renewed annually since then.
- The House passed a $1.6 billion military construction authorization bill by voice vote, sending it to the Senate.

RCIA Sponsors Radio Program

The Retail Clerks have undertaken sponsorship each summer weekend of the National Broadcasting Co.'s omnibus radio program, Monitor.

"We're telling the story of RCIA on Monitor because it has won a special place in the homes, autos and play areas of the nation," said RCIA Pres. James A. Suffridge. "We are pleased to help bring this exciting program to the people of America, and we anticipate that our sponsorship will win a multitude of new friends for the RCIA."

The union, which has 400,000 members, will discuss its history, achievements and membership benefits from June 1 through Sept. 1, with daytime and evening programs and announcements.

Union Students Ready For Campus Sessions

Union leaders are moving in as students move out—and in the next three months some 20,000 of the former will receive training in worker education on college and university campuses from one end of the country to the other.

Another 6,000 to 8,000 men and women active in the affairs of their unions will go to classes to be held in summer camps, hotels and other facilities, and more than 1,000 paid union staff members ranging from economists to organizers will undergo schooling at the college level, according to AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin.

The figures, he added, are on the conservative side as smaller labor units, such as city central bodies, often fail to report their school plans.

Rogin also pointed out that labor education has undergone sweeping changes in the scant 30 years of its existence.

Until less than a decade ago, he recalled, the curriculum of a labor institute was limited to elementary subjects such as parliamentary procedure, public speaking, a bit of labor history and basic economics—subjects that are still the "bread and butter" courses at what might be called "primary" schools for newly-elected local union officers.

But now, he said—to an increasing degree—there are "secondary" and even "graduate" schools that deal at a more sophisticated level with long-range economic trends, the theory and practical impact of automation, and to use the findings of motivational research to organize the unorganized.

About 40 national or international unions and about 35 state central bodies conduct or participate directly in the sponsorship of summer labor education programs, Rogin noted.

Labor schools of one kind or another will be operating in at least 40 states during the summer, he said—and not until Labor Day will eager-to-learn union members turn the college campuses back to the undergraduates.

NORTHERN RHODESIAN LEADER Kenneth Kaunda met with AFL-CIO leaders on his recent trip to Washington at a luncheon to explain developments in the African country. From left are AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Kaunda, minister of local government and social welfare; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Harry C. Bates; Solomon Kalulu, national chairman of the United National Party of Northern Rhodesia, and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge.

Kennedy Increases Pressure In War on Job Discrimination

(Continued from Page 1)

to prevent discrimination in hiring "either directly in the rejection of presently available qualified Negro workers or indirectly by the exclusion of Negro applicants for apprenticeship training."

Legislation Drafted

The quickening and insistent pace of Negro demonstrations for full equality has prompted the Administration to draft a new set of legislative proposals in the area of civil rights. The White House announced that the President would shortly send a special civil rights message to Congress, possibly on June 11. (See story on this page.)

Meany's statement recalled that the trade union movement "has made progress" in the fight against discrimination, but "none of us can be or will be satisfied until discrimination is eliminated in its entirety.

"We are happy therefore to have the greater assistance of the federal government, which we have sought for years, in eliminating this blight from American life," he said.

Wirtz announced, shortly after the President's statement was issued, that the Labor Dept. would move promptly to implement it through a review of every federal construction project in the country and action to wipe out discrimination against qualified Negro job applicants wherever it is found.

Cooperation Sought

He foresaw full cooperation from contractors and unions, because "there is a new appreciation of this problem," but said there would be no hesitation on the government's part to cancel or deny contracts where cooperation is not forthcoming.

The President's order to bar discrimination in apprenticeship programs will have the effect of applying uniform enforcement to all such programs, many of which already are operating on a non-discriminatory basis. Only apprentices in federally-approved programs may be hired at apprentice rates by contractors doing work for the government.

The future executive order, which the President said he plans to issue soon, would extend the authority of the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to guard against job discrimination in construction of buildings and other facilities by state and local governments and private agencies where federal grants are used for part of the financing.

The committee, headed by Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, now is empowered to enforce non-discrimination in hiring by employers contracting directly with the federal government.

The President noted that non-discrimination provisions already are applied in many state and local public works projects benefiting from federal grants-in-aid, but "practices and enforcement have not been uniform."

His planned executive order would give the Johnson committee authority to enforce non-discrimination in employment on hospitals and schools, for example, where federal funds cover part of the construction costs.

Unemployment among American Negroes—and the resulting economic distress and unrest—pose serious problems in every part of the country," Kennedy's statement said. "These problems can be met in part by the measures I have recommended to advance the growth of the economy to provide more jobs for all—and in part by the above and other measures to end job discrimination in this country."

Later the same day, the President, the Vice President and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy met with a group of about 100 businessmen who reported on progress in voluntary efforts to desegregate public accommodations.

The group consisted largely of owners and managers of hotel chains, theaters, restaurants and stores with outlets in the South. One of the businessmen later reported that while the discussion was harmonious, the President had intimated that if the voluntary approach to desegregation proved too slow, he would insist on legislation.

Other major developments in civil rights matters concerned school desegregation problems:

- The Supreme Court struck down as unconstitutional pupil transfer plans in Knoxville and Davidson County, Tenn., which permitted white and Negro students to obtain automatic transfer from schools where their race was in the minority. The plans did not give the same transfer rights to pupils seeking to attend schools where the student body was predominantly of the other race. Justice Tom C. Clark, writing the opinion for the unanimous court, described such plans as "a one-way ticket to . . . continued segregation."
- Federal District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne issued an injunction barring Alabama Gov. George Wallace from carrying out his pledge to "stand in the schoolhouse door" to prevent the admission of three Negro students to the University of Alabama on June 10.

The judge's order specifically enjoined Wallace, his agents, employes, subordinates or successors from "preventing, blocking or interfering with, by physically imposing his person or that of any other person under his direction or control," the entry of the Negroes on Monday "or any day thereafter."

89-8-9

- A second Negro, 21-year-old Cleve McDowell, entered the University of Mississippi without interference from Gov. Ross H. Barnett or the incidents that accompanied the registration of James H. Meredith last September.

McDowell, a recent honor graduate of Jackson State College, was enrolled in the university law school under a federal court order.

About 300 Army troops and 20 deputy U.S. marshals are still guarding against incidents on the campus, the scene of shooting and rioting opposing Meredith's admission last fall.

Rep. Walter Dies; Headed House Unit

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D-Pa.), one of the most influential members of the House, died May 31 of leukemia at the age of 69.

His record was generally considered liberal and progressive although in recent years he was best known to the public as chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee and co-author of the controversial McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. He was also chairman of the House Democratic caucus and its patronage committee. He was first elected to Congress in 1932.

His successor as chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee is Rep. Edwin E. Willis, 58-year-old Louisiana Democrat.

High Court Upsets Utility Strike Ban

(See story Page 3)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 15, 1963 | No. 24

Meany Pledges President All-Out Aid in Rights Drive

Equal Pay Bill Signed Into Law

Pres. Kennedy has hailed enactment by Congress of legislation to end "the unconscionable practice" of paying women less than men for equal work, and called for further steps "to achieve full equality of economic opportunity."

The President signed the equal pay bill—with 18 pens—at a White House ceremony attended by representatives of labor, women's groups and others who have campaigned for the measure.

Noting that one out of three workers in the United States is a woman, Kennedy called for two additional measures designed especially to assist low-income working mothers:

- An $8 million appropriation this year to help states set up day-care centers for children.

"Nearly 500,000 children under 12 must take care of themselves while their mothers work. This, it seems to me, is a formula for disaster," the President said.

- A broadened tax deduction for working mothers to cover costs of providing care for their children during working hours. This should be given "a high priority," Kennedy declared.

Kennedy told the group that the new Equal Pay Act "adds to our laws another structure basic to democracy."

He compared the new "rights at the working place" to the rights women have won at the polling place.

The legislation does not become

(Continued on Page 11)

PEN USED TO SIGN historic equal pay for women bill is presented by Pres. Kennedy to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. Others shown at the signing ceremony are, left to right, Dorothy Height, president of the National Council of Negro Women; Mary Anderson, who was the first director of the Women's Bureau of the Labor Dept.; Rep. Carlton R. Sickles (D-Md.); Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson; Ethlyn Christensen of the YWCA national board; and Andrew J. Biemiller, legislative director of the AFL-CIO.

In Work Rules Dispute:

Unions, Rails Agree On Deadline Delay

Rail union and management negotiators have agreed to a request by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to postpone for at least five days a showdown in their work rules dispute, but there were no visible signs of progress towards a settlement.

The last procedures of the Railway Labor Act to avert a strike—the 30-day period following the report of a Presidential Emergency Board—expired at 12:01 a.m. on June 13. The railroads were then legally free to put into effect their job-slashing proposals unilaterally—and the unions to strike in protest.

Two days before this deadline was reached, Wirtz asked both sides to maintain existing conditions and keep talking, at least until June 18, "with the understanding that further requests for extensions may be made as circumstances justify."

Despite some optimism expressed by both sides after the emergency board's report last month, the deadlock over the use of firemen-helpers has continued. Assistant Sec. of Labor James Reynolds said later there were no visible signs of progress.

Rail management has contended that most of the jobs are unnecessary and should be abolished—at least over a period of time. The unions have said they are willing to

(Continued on Page 2)

AMA Hit for Role In Health Care Fight

A key Administration proponent of Pres. Kennedy's plan for old-age hospital insurance under the social security system has charged the American Medical Association with deliberately launching "a campaign of fear" to defeat the program.

Nevertheless, said Under Sec. Ivan A. Nestingen of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, "in my judgment the program will become law this year."

Nestingen, addressing a Democratic women's convention in Indianapolis, accused the AMA of following propaganda techniques that frequently "start with a completely false statement designed to frighten the people who are listening or reading."

"They know many people freeze up and oppose change when they are afraid," he said. "They hope by using fear they can scare enough people into

(Continued on Page 10)

Performers' Unions Press Bias Fight

Two AFL-CIO unions in the entertainment field have taken firm action to broaden and strengthen presently existing policies against discrimination in membership rights and in the employment of talent.

The two are the Television & Radio Artists, who hammered out a joint statement of policy with employers after a series of meetings with major elements of the broadcasting, advertising and recording industries; and the Variety Artists, whose convention unanimously adopted a resolution calling for strict civil rights measures governing all AGVA activities.

AFTRA Executive Sec. Donald F. Conaway described the joint statement of policy by the union and the broadcast industry as "a great milestone in labor - management relations in dealing with discrimination and employment practices."

Here are the AFTRA details:

- Discrimination shall not be practiced against any performer, or any applicant for employment as a performer, because of race, creed, color or national origin in admission to membership and in the exercise of all membership rights and

(Continued on Page 12)

5-Step Plan Urged by Kennedy

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has pledged Pres. Kennedy the "unstinting assistance" of the federation in "the prompt achievement of a full, enforceable civil rights program on every front."

"This is no time for half-measures," Meany declared in his message, read by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a White House meeting of some 300 labor leaders called by the President.

"We can no longer expect Negro Americans to be content with a little liberty. They are entitled to full liberty, full citizenship, full standing in the community, not next year but now."

The President urged on the labor group five steps to help speed civil rights progress in the nation. He asked organized labor to:

- Create a working committee to cooperate with the government in ending job discrimination, concentrating its activities in 30 or 40 major cities and in the months just ahead in this "summer of determined effort."
- Rally maximum support for the Administration's economic and social programs, especially income tax reduction, as a spur to expanded economic growth and more jobs for the entire work force.
- Intensify its voter registration

(Continued on Page 12)

Henning Demands End of Bias on Job

Race discrimination on federally-sponsored construction work must end "not some time in the distant future, but immediately," Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning told the Washington Building Congress.

The congress includes in its membership representatives of all elements in the Washington construction industry, including labor.

Henning, citing the "consistently" high unemployment rate among Negroes, singled out apprenticeship training for special emphasis. The fight for equal opportunity by Negroes is a problem that must be resolved, he said, because race bias "is immoral, unjust and economically wasteful."

CONFERENCE OF NEW JERSEY Labor Press Council at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N. J., found Gov. Richard J. Hughes (left) answering the questions of labor editors. Seated to the right are Pres. Charles Biagi and Vice Pres. Carl Weininger of the New Jersey Labor Press Council. Sessions were held at the university's Labor Education Center.

Insurance Agents Supported:

Circuit Court Backs NLRB Ruling on Unit

Alexandria, Va.—The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld the right of the National Labor Relations Board to conduct a representation election in a single-office unit of insurance agents.

The ruling, involving the Insurance Workers and the Quaker City Life Insurance Co. office here, was hailed by the union as a landmark decision which should help "unshackle" it from the effects of the so-called Metropolitan rule, in effect from 1944 to 1962, that only statewide offices are appropriate.

The rule was changed last year by an NLRB majority in the Quaker City case but that firm, and other major companies, have refused to accept it. The union called this refusal a "delaying tactic" to discourage organizing. Two other companies have filed petitions for review in U.S. appellate courts and three others are preparing to do so, according to Isaac Groner, union attorney.

By a 2-1 vote the Circuit Court ruled that:

- The NLRB acted within its powers in ruling that the employes in the Quaker City district office here constitute an appropriate bargaining unit.
- The NLRB has the right to put insurance agents and clerical workers in the same bargaining unit.
- In the Alexandria office, however, a clerical worker who had been included in the unit should be excluded because she performed the duties of a "confidential employe."

Majority Opinion

Judge J. Spencer Bell wrote the court decision, and Judge Clement F. Haynesworth, Jr., voted with him. Judge Herbert S. Boreman wrote in a dissenting opinion that the case "reeks with extent of organization."

A section of the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act provides that the labor board, in establishing bargaining units, shall not permit the "extent of union organization" to be a controlling factor. In this case the court majority found that the extent of organization was only one of the factors leading to the board's decision, not the controlling one. The dissenting judge took a contrary view.

The former rule requiring statewide units was reversed last year by a board majority, which directed an election among six agents and the clerical worker at the Quaker City office here. The union won, 7-0, but the company refused to bargain with the IWIU.

The board found Quaker City guilty of an unfair practice and ordered it to bargain. When it again refused, the NLRB asked the 4th Circuit Court to enforce its ruling.

The union has filed similar refusal to bargain charges against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., at Wilmington, Del.; Equitable Life Insurance Co. in Cleveland and Lorain, O.; Western & Southern Life at two offices near Pittsburgh, Pa.; Life Insurance Co. of Virginia at Petersburg, Va., and others.

Quaker City has 90 days to decide whether to carry its case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

IWIU Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen has said industry tactics in challenging NLRB rulings "will cause some of our election victories to evaporate" because 25 percent of union members in contested units will be gone by the time final decisions are reached.

The union has won 12 of 19 elections since the Quaker City ruling last year.

In a parallel case the board set aside an election the IWIU lost last October by a margin of 234-194 and ordered a new vote among Metropolitan Life agents at 17 Detroit offices.

The board adopted the recommendations of a hearing officer who found management "substantially interfered" with employes' free choice.

Work Rules Dispute Deadline Postponed

(Continued from Page 1)

consider elimination of firemen in some limited areas of work, but have maintained strongly that safety demands a "co-pilot" in addition to the engineer in the locomotive cab.

During more than three years of intermittent negotiations, including a year of study and attempted mediation by a special presidential commission in addition to the emergency board, little progress has been made in resolving this basic dispute.

Although there are many other areas of disagreement between the five rail operating unions and the carriers, all negotiations to date have stumbled over the basic manpower issue.

Wirtz has personally headed a team of top-ranking government mediators, including Chairman Leverett Edwards of the National Mediation Board and Assistant Sec. of Labor James J. Reynolds. They have met separately with both sides and in joint negotiations in Washington, D. C.

A meeting of presidents of major railroads to draft legislation requiring arbitration of the dispute if a strike crisis develops has been reported by the Wall Street Journal.

The unions have already rejected arbitration.

Bill Attacks Runaway Ship Tax Loophole

A bill to close the tax loophole used to build up profits by owners of "runaway" flag ships has been introduced in Congress by Rep. Thomas L. Ashley (D-O.).

The measure has the full support of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. It would require payment of income taxes on profits of foreign flag vessels if they are "substantially" owned by U.S. citizens or corporations.

Ashley emphasized that the bill would not only end tax favoritism for those who have, in effect, torn down the U.S. merchant marine, but would safeguard the jobs and working conditions of American seamen and protect American ship owners who continue to fly the U.S. flag.

"We have a responsibility to protect American seamen and American flag operators," he said, "from cut-throat competition from U.S.-owned vessels which pay substandard wages and escape payment of federal income taxes imposed on all other American citizens and business firms.

"It is unthinkable that we should permit the national security to be weakened, the country's finances to be jeopardized and the entire American shipping industry to be destroyed merely in order to perpetuate an artificial device through which runaway flag ship operators can escape the responsibility of paying their fair share of the burden."

Stonecutters Reelect Henson as President

Indianapolis—Members of the Stonecutters, voting in a nationwide referendum, have reelected Pres. Howard I. Henson by a margin of more than 3 to 1 over Jack Kendall of Bloomington, Ind.

The executive board, which met here to count referendum ballots, announced the vote, and said also that members elected a five-man executive board and reelected Vice Pres. John W. McRae of Bedford, Ind. Henson has served six years as president.

Member of IBEW Named to City Post

New York—John Feidner, a member of the examining board of Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, has been sworn in as a deputy commissioner of the city Dept. of Water Supply, Gas & Electricity.

Threats to Quit Michigan Followed by Contracts

Detroit—Two Michigan manufacturers who had threatened to move their operations from the state unless Auto Workers locals representing their employes agreed to their contract offers have reconsidered after accepting renewed agreements with the UAW.

Gibson Refrigerators of Greenville, Mich., which had declared it would move the plant to Mississippi unless its employes agreed to a pay cut of 29 cents an hour, has accepted a new contract with the UAW extending present wage and fringe benefits to Oct. 31, 1965. The agreement also guarantees the union at least six months notice of intent to move and increases severance pay in such a move from $30 per year of service to $45.

The C. M. Hall Lamp Co., a Detroit auto parts producer, agreed to 12 cents an hour in pay increases over two years to resolve a four-day strike by its 460 employes in UAW Local 304. The company, which returned to Detroit two years ago after moving to North Carolina in an unsuccessful attempt to cut production costs, had threatened to take much of its production out of the city again unless the UAW local agreed to its terms.

The Hall employes had made substantial wage concessions to the firm when it returned from its North Carolina venture.

The Gibson settlement followed a 1,294-0 vote among members of UAW Local 137 rejecting the company's demand that they take a pay cut in return for a guarantee to remain in Greenville for at least five years.

Public antagonism to the Gibson threat had so concerned the company that the settlement was announced in full-page newspaper advertisements signed by Gibson, Local 137 and the Greenville and Belding, Mich., Chambers of Commerce.

USWA Local Sues to Get Benefit Right

Pittsburgh — The Steelworkers have sued the Copperweld Steel Co. in U.S. District Court here to compel payment of $6.5 million in pension benefits for 900 laid-off workers.

The suit, filed by the USWA and its Local 171 here, asserts that pension, insurance, vacation and other benefits are due workers who lost their jobs when Copperweld bought the Superior Steel Co. plant in nearby Carnegie, Pa., and later closed it.

The union refused to accept a company plan calling for heavy layoffs and revision of work rules and the seniority system. Copperweld and a subsidiary company then closed the plant, and when the union sued to protect pension rights, management agreed to set up a trust fund covering those rights.

The latest lawsuit asserts that the trust fund, totaling $5.2 million, covers only the pension rights of workers who retired before the plant was closed. The new suit is to protect the rights of the other workers, the union said.

Jurisdictional Dispute Arbitrated by NLRB

The National Labor Relations Board, acting as arbiter in a jurisdictional dispute between two unions over ceiling construction work, has voted to follow the terms of a compromise settlement reached earlier by the Carpenters' and Lathers' international unions.

The dispute involved installation of acoustical ceilings of the backerboard type at the Bear Creek School near Denver, Colo., and the Colorado State Mental Complex at Fort Logan, Colo.

Two contractors hired members of Carpenters Local 55 to do the work. Members of Lathers Local 68 claimed the work and posted pickets at the jobsites.

Board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown concluded that the Lathers' claim was "supported by the rival Carpenters' international" in line with a statewide agreement negotiated by the two international unions to settle disputes in various parts of the country.

It provided that the work of installing the backerboard system shall be performed by lathers, whereas carpenters shall do the installing where the grid system is used. The majority said they relied on the previous settlement because the factors which usually can be weighed in jurisdictional disputes were not present—the employers did not have agreements with either union, and members of both have performed the work in the past.

Also, the board said its method of settling the dispute will encourage other unions to settle disputes "by agreement, a desirable policy." Separate dissents were written by Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom.

Parties Broaden Power of Arbiter

New York—The National Maritime Union and the American Merchant Marine Institute have extended the authority of the permanent arbitrator, Theodore W. Kheel, to resolve disputes under their collective bargaining agreement.

Henceforth, Kheel may intervene even where there is no actual work stoppage if either NMU Pres. Joseph Curran or AMMI Pres. Ralph E. Casey certifies the dispute as being of "extraordinary importance" or "having far-reaching implications."

The new agreement also provides for establishment of a labor-management disputes board to consider on a continuing basis all issues affecting relations between the union and its contract companies.

Missouri Ban on Utility Strikes Voided

Union Leader Hails High Court Decision

The U.S. Supreme Court has voided a Missouri law banning strikes in public utilities as in "direct conflict with federal legislation which guarantees the right to strike" against any employer engaged in interstate commerce.

In an unanimous opinion the court declared that Missouri "through the fiction of 'seizure' by the state has made a peaceful strike against a public utility unlawful."

Victory for America

John M. Elliott, president of the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach union, which has been challenging the constitutionality of the Missouri statute for almost 15 years, declared:

"This is not only a victory for the [union] and for all labor engaged in public utilities. It is not only a victory for the labor movement. As we view it, it is a victory for the public interest. For the use of state power to abridge the rights to peacefully promote the interests of working men marks the beginning of totalitarianism and is incompatible with the genius of our American democartic institutions."

Elliott's statement charged that Missouri public officials "played fast and loose" with the King-Thompson Act, "throwing the weight of the state on the side of the employer and making impossible that equality at the bargaining table which makes for successful collective bargaining negotiations."

Justice Potter Stewart, in the court's opinion reversing the Supreme Court of Missouri, which had upheld the validity of the act, spelled out the "fiction of seizure" on which the state based its case.

The record showed, said Justice Stewart, that "the state's involvement fell far short of creating a state-owned and operated utility whose labor relations are by definition excluded from coverage of the National Labor Relations Act."

"The employes of the company did not become employes of Missouri, Missouri did not pay their wages, and did not direct or supervise their duties. No property of the company was actually conveyed, transferred or otherwise turned over to the state," his opinion continued.

Operations Unchanged

The justice cited a statement by the chairman of the state mediation board that "so far as I know the company is operating now just as it was two weeks before the strike."

The challenge to the King-Thompson Act that resulted in the U. S. Supreme Court decision originated in November 1961 when Division 1287 of the Street, Electric Railway Motor Coach union in Kansas City, Mo., voted to strike after months of negotiations with Kansas City Transit, Inc., failed to produce an agreement.

On Nov. 13, 1961, the governor of Missouri ordered the transit company "seized" under the statute and put under "operation" by the state. The state also secured a permanent injunction against the strike, sending the workers back to their jobs.

The union appealed, arguing that the statue was in conflict with federal labor legislation and abridged a number of constitutional rights. The Missouri Supreme Court upheld the injunction.

The U.S. Supreme Court threw out the state's argument that the case is moot because after the union appealed from the Missouri Supreme Court decision the governor issued an executive order terminating the seizure. The court noted that the case was not moot, or decided, because the labor dispute remains unresolved.

Justice Stewart's decision affirmed also that there was no distinction between the Missouri statute and a Wisconsin law barring public utility strikes which the court had earlier found unconstitutional. The court's opinion said that "collective bargaining, with the right to strike at its core, is the essence of the federal scheme."

CWA Delegates Cheer Court Ruling

Kansas City, Mo.—The Supreme Court's decision invalidating Missouri's King-Thompson Act was handed down on the opening day of the Communications Workers convention here, and the president of the bus drivers' local involved in the case had the privilege of announcing the ruling to the delegates.

Loren Hargus, who heads the Greater Kansas City Central Labor Council as well as the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes' local, reported the high court's decision minutes after the convention opened and the delegates burst into a roar of applause.

The bus drivers have gone without a contract for two years while their appeal from a state court ruling was pending.

Bias Probe Study Asked By ILGWU

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers have called on Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) and the New York State legislature to investigate the manner in which the State Commission for Human Rights dealt with a discrimination charge against ILGWU Cutters Local 10.

The charge, filed with the commission Apr. 4, 1961, by Ernest Holmes, a Negro who claimed he had been denied membership because of his race, was withdrawn May 17, 1963, on the third day of a public hearing.

With 200 Negro and Spanish-speaking members of the local present, ILGWU Attorney Emil Schlesinger quickly established in his cross-examination that the reason Holmes was denied membership was that he lacked qualifications as a cutter and in fact had only three weeks of experience in the industry when he applied for membership.

"If it took the union attorney one day of cross-questioning to get Holmes to admit he is not yet a cutter and the commission lawyers to agree," the ILGWU asked in an editorial in the June 1 issue of its paper, Justice, "why couldn't the commission's investigating commissioner discover this fact—absolutely crucial to the case—in two years of probing?"

Charging that the whole affair had been a "two-year attempt to smear the ILGWU," the union urged specifically that the governor and legislature look into the conduct of Commission Chairman George H. Fowler and Investigating Commissioner Ruperto Ruiz in their handling of the case.

HARVARD STUDENTS wearing burlap trousers demonstrated recently in Harvard Square, Cambridge, Mass., in protest against the unfair labor practices of Henry I. Siegel, clothing manufacturer. The National Labor Relations Board has charged the company with interfering with, restraining and coercing employes in a Bruceton, Tenn., plant who want the Clothing Workers as their bargaining representative.

'Miscalled Right-to-Work Laws' Hit By Alf Landon as Burden to Labor

Wichita, Kas.—Former Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, Republican candidate for president in 1936, has denounced "miscalled right-to-work laws" as "bad legislation" which burdens labor in 20 states and has called for a better approach to the solution of labor-management problems.

In a speech to the Midwest States Machinists Conference here, Landon said the Kansas "work" provision banning union shop agreements has not attracted new industry to the state. He pointed out it has been blamed by Gov. John Anderson, Jr. (R), for contributing to the loss of 16,000 jobs in Kansas, and said it should be repealed.

Landon also called on the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy to "take our bewildering maze of federal regulations, right-to-work laws and court decisions" under intensive study and to produce an "informing, comprehensive, factual report" showing the best way, or alternative ways, for settlement of industrial disputes in the interests of all citizens to "forge a stronger connecting link in the interminable fight against communism's tyrannical dictators."

New problems, he said, "are not going to be solved by attempting to weaken labor organizations by laws such as the miscalled 'right-to-work' proposals." Equity in labor relations, he went on, can only be "delayed by such attempts to impose hobbles by law."

The way to "true industrial peace," Landon observed, is the way chosen by IAM and management in the aerospace industry, the Steelworkers with their Human Relations Committee and the Auto Workers with their study committees.

By and large, he continued, "union members and their leaders are responsible members of society" entitled to the same respect and protection other citizens receive.

He pointed out that the Wagner, Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin acts were regulatory, not punitive in nature.

Hits 'Punitive' Law

"But we have in the country today a philosophy which seeks to impose a compulsory open shop on labor," he continued. "It is punitive legislation — bad legislation — the so-called 'right-to-work' laws which now burden labor in some 20 states.

"That is legislation which hits at the right to contract. It . . . strikes at the basis of union security which is, in turn, the foundation of strong, dedicated, responsible labor leadership."

Landon said "work" laws such as that in Kansas "ban progress in good labor relations and industrial development and, in the long run, benefit no one."

Repeal of the Kansas law will not be easy because an amendment was "frozen" into the constitution by supporters whose predictions of industrial progress, Landon said, have not been borne out. The law is "more emotional than realistic," he added.

Last February the AFL-CIO Executive Council called for an intensified drive against "work" laws and Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act which, it declared, "invites states to compete in passing anti-union laws on the erroneous supposition that it attracts industry."

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.) has introduced a bill to repeal Sec. 14b, which permits states to prohibit unions and employers from negotiating union shop contracts.

First Rug Pact in South Negotiated by TWUA

New York—The first contract reached with an employer in the southern tufted rug and carpet industry was announced here by the Textile Workers Union of America.

Dixie Belle Mills, Calhoun, Ga., agreed to a three-year contract giving almost 650 workers their first guarantee of union benefits. Included are a wage increase of 5.5 percent, averaging 8 cents an hour; improved life, hospital and surgical insurance, and paid vacations and holidays. The pact provides also for wage reopenings in 1964 and 1965.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka, who headed the union negotiating team, called the agreement a "milestone" and said he hopes it will become a model for other textile industry employers of the South.

The industry pattern in the section has been to frustrate union organizing attempts, to stall representation elections as long as possible, to intimidate employes with threats of strikes and violence, to lay off union adherents and to threaten plant closings, unions have charged.

If these fail, a typical move has been to prolong contract negotiations until union supporters give up. The TWUA, encouraged by the Dixie Belle contract, will now seek to expand representation among 25,000 remaining unorganized tufted carpet workers in Georgia and nearby states.

The TWUA won a National Labor Relations Board election at Dixie Belle last November by a 376-188 vote. That broke the ice in the northwest Georgia area, and other NLRB elections have been asked at Foremost Processing Co. in Dalton, Forrest Mills in Calhoun, and Trend Mills in Plainville.

One feature of the campaign was a charge that Dixie Belle interferred with the right of its employes to make a free and fair election choice. Last month NLRB Trial Examiner Ivar H. Peterson, former board member, recommended that the company be ordered to cease threats to close the plant or other interference with organization and bargaining.

Guild Unit Honors Late Publisher

New York—The Newspaper Guild of New York paid tribute to Orvil E. Dryfoos, late publisher of the New York Times, as "an understanding and sympathetic employer."

The Guild local, whose membership includes more than 2,000 Times employes, said that Dryfoos, who died May 25 at the age of 50, would be remembered by newspapermen everywhere "as a publisher of vision."

LABOR'S COMMUNITY SERVICES are a natural outgrowth of its bargaining and legislative activities, Sec.-Treas. J. Bill Becker (center) of the Arkansas AFL-CIO told the Campaign Leaders National Conference at Dayton, O. Shown with him, from left, are Stan Wysor and Jack Stiegler, of United Appeal labor staffs in Dayton and Cincinnati, respectively, and Pres. Al Gellenbeck and Sec.-Treas. Conrad Grimes of the Dayton-Miami Valley AFL-CIO.

Musicians Vote Change In Financial Structure

By David L. Perlman

Miami Beach—Delegates representing more than a quarter-million professional musicians voted here to change their union's financial structure, tripling the per capita tax and eliminating a controversial assessment on the earnings of traveling bands.

Pres. Herman D. Kenin told the Musicians 66th annual convention that the union's traditional 10 percent surcharge on out-of-town earnings has been doomed by a recent federal appellate court ruling in New York.

He said that even if the Supreme Court should reverse the decision, the surcharge system should be abandoned because it has resulted in a minority of members paying in the biggest share of the union's revenues.

Debate Until 2 A. M.

On a rollcall vote, after a debate which lasted beyond 2 a. m., the 1,200 delegates approved a package proposal making these major changes:

- An increase in per capita payments from $2.10 a year to $6 a year.
- Biennial conventions instead of annual conventions, coupled with a reduction in the expense allowance which the international presently pays delegates.
- Higher payments to the international union on initiation fees set by locals.

The plan was supported by most of the large locals, with the exception of New York's Local 802, and by some smaller locals — even though many have depended on their share of the assessments paid by visiting bands to finance their operations.

Under the surcharge system, visiting band leaders were responsible to the union for the 10 percent fee, which was divided 4 percent to the international and 4 percent to the local, with 2 percent rebated to the band members. Symphony and concert performances were exempted from the fee.

The court decision upheld the claim of a group of band leaders that they were employers under the Taft-Hartley Act and therefore barred from making payments to the union.

Although the union's 15 percent tax on earnings from radio and television work was not affected by the court ruling, the convention voted to abolish this assessment as well.

Job Opportunities Increase

Job opportunities for musicians have increased 34 percent since the federal cabaret tax was cut in half —and without loss of revenue to the government—the convention was told.

Delegates heard this report from an independent research firm which compared employment of musicians in hundreds of cities during comparable periods before and after Congress, three years ago, dropped the tax on establishments furnishing live entertainment from 20 to 10 percent of customers' bills.

Kenin noted that the Treasury Dept. had estimated a 50 percent drop in revenue from the tax cut, but the actual decline was only 22.4 percent because of increased consumer spending in establishments subject to the levy. Even this drop, Kenin emphasized, was at least made up by additional income tax revenue resulting from increased earnings of hotels and clubs and their employes.

He warned, however, that job opportunities for musicians are being reduced by what he termed "repressive" government tax regulations on business entertainment expenses.

Kenin, who was unanimously reelected to his fifth term as president, reported that AFM membership rose by 4,546 during the past year to an all-time record of 255,949 members in 675 locals. This figure does not include some 26,000 members of more than one local and nearly 7,000 members on leave in the armed services.

In addition to Kenin, the delegates returned to office Sec. Stanley Ballard and Treas. George V. Clancy, both unopposed, and Vice Pres. William J. Harris of Dallas, who defeated Thomas P. Kenny of Sacramento, Calif.

W. F. Cleary Dies; Official in Chicago

Chicago—Sec.-Treas. William F. Cleary of the Chicago AFL-CIO died in Columbus Hospital here at the age of 67.

A member of Local 134, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, since 1921, he was elected secretary-treasurer of the former Chicago Federation of Labor in 1950 and retained the post after the merger in 1955.

A veteran of World War I who was active in the American Legion, he served as an IBEW organizer for nine years and was a member of the board of governors of Radio Station WCFL. He is survived by his widow, Ann; a daughter, Mrs. Jane Graham of St. Louis, and three grandchildren.

Office Union Urges More Youth Jobs

The Office Employes have asked all employers with whom the union has contracts to hire additional teenagers during the summer months and said the union would waive dues and initiation fees for temporary workers under 21.

In a letter to employers, OEIU Pres. Howard Coughlin said he realized that no one union or employer can solve the unemployment problem, but each can make some contribution to "cope with the ever-increasing rate of unemployment" among young people.

Coughlin said his union's manpower studies indicate that such unemployment will continue to grow as those who were "war babies" in the 1940s enter the labor market. One advantage of summer employment, Coughlin said, is that it may encourage young students to continue their education instead of dropping out of school permanently.

In his letter Coughlin urged employers and leaders of OEIU's 300 local unions to give jobs to more persons than they normally hire during the summer.

Strikebreaker Ban Enacted In New Haven

New Haven—The board of aldermen here has voted 24-3 approval of a labor-supported bill to bar the use of professional strikebreakers in New Haven.

The city became the first in Connecticut to adopt such an ordinance. It prohibits any individual or company from hiring or furnishing, to replace a striking worker, anyone who "customarily and repeatedly" works as a strikebreaker.

The maximum penalty is 60 days in jail and a $100 fine.

Voting for the ordinance were 19 Democrats and five Republicans. Three Republicans opposed the measure and three Democrats abstained from voting.

Alderman Morris Olmer (D), who called up the measure, declared its purpose was not only to cure "unhealthy situations" but also to avoid them before they occur.

The ordinance had strong support from the city labor council as well as the printing trades unions, which are conducting a nationwide drive for city and state "job protection laws."

'Trouble Ahead' Warning:

CWA Gets Report On Bell Parleys

By John M. Barry

Kansas City, Mo.—Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers warned of "trouble ahead" in current Bell System negotiations unless the lead-off Michigan Bell Telephone Co. "improves its offer" in talks scheduled to be resumed June 14.

"Two percent—or about 2 percent—will not bring an agreement," Beirne declared in a reference to the Michigan Bell proposal made before bargaining was recessed for the CWA's 25th anniversary convention.

Beirne told the convention that the company's offer to pay one-fourth of the costs of insurance covering 80 percent of hospital bills represented "a change in view" in that it was the first acknowledgement to CWA of any management responsibility for the health insurance of its employes.

Nevertheless, he said, the inadequacy of the company's offer on hospitalization insurance, coupled with its stand on wages and its failure to agree on improvements in pensions and vacations added up to a "grave situation."

Beirne called on the 2,500 delegates from 800 locals to apply the same dedication, unity and responsibility to the current bargaining effort that had built the CWA over its first quarter-century.

Beirne Reelected

The convention reelected Beirne president of CWA by a margin of more than 5-1 over a challenger, Wayne K. Hazen, president of the Jacksonville, Fla., local. The weighted vote was 226,373 to 39,939.

Also reelected were Sec.-Treas. W. A. Smallwood, Vice Presidents John L. Crull, Ray Hackney and James M. Massey, nine district directors and four national directors. Dist. 1 Dir. Mary Hanscom did not seek reelection and was succeeded by George Miller of Scotch Plains, N. J., former assistant director of the district.

In his wide-ranging keynote speech, the CWA president:

- Reviewed the growth of the union from its formation in 1938 as the loosely-knit National Federation of Telephone Workers, with 69,000 members, to the present "strong, effective and unified" CWA representing 360,000 communications workers in the United States and Canada.
- Hailed the progress in the past decade of the merged AFL-CIO, which he said "is getting better every day" and through which "the rule of reason has supplanted the law of the jungle" in solving jurisdictional disputes.
- Cited the AFL-CIO's pilot organizing project in the greater Los Angeles area, which is enlisting the staff and financial resources of a number of international unions in a cooperative drive, as a "symbol of the spirit of labor unity in 1963," and said it is beginning to show results.
- Voiced pride in CWA's "Operation Latin America," in which every district of the union has furnished such gifts to democratic trade unionists in Latin American countries as typewriters, mimeograph machines, salaries for staff members, funds for public relations programs, etc.—"the basic tools for fighting the insidious propaganda of the Castroites, the Soviet Communists, the Chinese Communists and all the other totalitarian groups."
- Praised Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz whom he had accompanied to the recent labor ministers' conference in Bogota, Colombia, for his role in the recognition by the conference that "labor unions operating at the grassroots level offer the best hope for making the Alliance for Progress an effective program."
- Hailed the "steadily increasing effectiveness" of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, formed jointly by the AFL-CIO and enlightened business groups to train promising and talented young labor leaders in Latin American countries.
- Lashed the National Association of Manufacturers for its drive to apply the anti-trust laws to labor unions and break them "into impotent bits."
- Condemned other enemies of labor who "seek not to promote good relationships, but who revel in setting race against race . . . or overturning our cherished political traditions . . . or crippling our federal government through obstructionist constitutional amendments . . . or passing 'right-to-work' laws to interfere with collective bargaining . . . or depriving our unions of their citizenship functions in the field of political action."
- Scoffed at the prospect of another attempted raid by the ousted Teamsters Union, which was crushed by a 3-1 vote last January when it sought to represent the CWA's Western Electric installation unit, and ridiculed leaflets being distributed outside the convention hall appealing to New York Bell plant workers to switch to the Teamsters.

In the secretary-treasurer's report, Smallwood said that the CWA's financial and organizing record for the past year was "a proud one" which had brought the union's total assets above the $12 million mark.

Before adjourning, the convention also was scheduled to hear addresses by Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Chairman Walter W. Heller of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, and to act on more than a score of resolutions and committee reports.

Quebec Starts Revision of Labor Code

Quebec, Que. — Labor Minister Rene Hamel has introduced in the legislature what he described as "part one" of a new provincial labor code.

The measure includes a provision requiring employers to check off union dues when asked to do so by their employes. Another article gives union organizers in lumber camps the right to work without interference and makes it mandatory for employers to advance the necessary funds to enable their workers to make their first union dues payments.

Strikes would be prohibited during the life of a contract and would be legal only upon secret vote of union members. The bill sets up a system of voluntary arbitration with findings given the force of law, and does away with the present conciliation boards, whose reports are not mandatory.

Minister of Natural Resources Rene Levesque is given credit in labor circles with inspiring proposed changes in the labor act. The issue came to the fore recently during a strike of 200 Solbec Copper Co. miners organized by the Steelworkers, who have been balked from establishing firm foothold in the mining country by the powerful Noranda interests' opposition.

Hundreds Benefit:

Unions Announce Scholarship Winners

Unions and their subsidiary bodies in all parts of the country are announcing the winners of scholarships that will see or help see hundreds of fortunate young men and women through their college careers.

Many of the scholarships are awarded without regard to any union membership in the families of the winners; others are restricted to the sons or daughters of union members.

Scholarships Worth $4,000

Steelworkers Dist. 31, with headquarters in Chicago, has awarded scholarships worth $4,000 each to Antonia Rygas, 18, Griffith, Ind., and Roberta M. Pollack, 19, Chicago. The awards are made annually to children of USWA members in the district on the basis of competitive examinations conducted by the American College Testing Program.

James A. Buschur, of Henry, O., was named winner of a $3,500 scholarship awarded by USWA Dist. 25, which covers 19 counties in southwestern Ohio and seven in northern Kentucky. The youth's father is a member of USWA Local 3210 and his mother is a member of the Rubber Workers in St. Marys, O. The scholarship is restricted to the children of USWA members in the district.

The Oregon AFL-CIO has awarded scholarships for the 17th year to top students in a competitive examination on labor and industrial problems and scholastic achievements.

The winners will receive $600 each. They are Martha Ewell, Portland; Mary Beth Mason, Forest Grove, and Brian O'Rourke, Oregon City. Runners-up awarded $200 each are Letitia Ann Burchfield, Eugene; John A. Carsley, Forest Grove, and James W. Kimball, The Dalles.

Two $500 John Fitzpatrick Memorial Scholarships sponsored by the Chicago AFL-CIO have been awarded for 1963 to Sharlene C. Rosen and Alan H. Fisher. The award, in its sixth year, honors the memory of the late president of the former Chicago Federation of Labor, who held the post from 1905 until his death in 1946. Children of members of all unions in the central body are eligible.

The Building Service Employes have announced the winners of nine scholarships awarded to children of members on a regional basis.

The winners, who will receive $2,000 each over a four-year period, are Ansgarius J. Aylward, Roxbury, Mass.; Susan Agnes Curtis, New York; John Joseph O'Neill, New York; Robert M. Stein, Philadelphia; Georgia Ann Canellos, Des Plaines, Ill.; David LeRoy Larson, Minneapolis; Wendy Carol O'Donnell, Chicago; Martha Etta Lewis, Pleasant Hill, Calif., and Rhoda Helen Moore, Everett, Wash. A 10th winner, from Canada, will be named in August.

Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union Local 1-S in New York has given $500 scholarships to three college freshmen for prize-winning essays on "The Contributions of Labor Unions to Human Relations in Our Society." The winners were William Draper, Tom Raffaele and Arthur Trotman.

Nine NMU Awards

Nine scholarships worth up to $2,500 a year each are presented by the National Maritime Union and good at any accredited college that does not discriminate in enrollment on racial or religious grounds.

The top award, the Joseph Curran Scholarship, went to Julian Cheng, 18, who was born in Linchow City, China, and has been in the United States less than seven years. His father, Chee Kung Cheng, has been an NMU member since 1957. The son ranked 4th among the 1,109 graduates of Brooklyn Technical High School and plans to study physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Other winners are Edme O. Richen, Brooklyn, who was born in Trinidad; Charles R. Miller, New York; Walter H. Braun, New York; Socorro Felix, New York, who was born in Puerto Rico; Ingrid Hepp, Rahway, N. J., a native of Germany; Judith Ann Ponte, Boston; Jacquelyne Elizabeth Person, Portsmouth, Va., and Elizabeth M. Edgar, Berkeley, Calif.

The Seafarers awarded scholarships worth a total of $6,000 each to a member and five children of members. Winners were William W. Williams, 35, of New Orleans, a Delta Line deckhand who plans to study engineering at Louisiana State University or Georgia Tech; Diana Ortega, Tampa, Fla.; Elaine Marie Evankovich, Struthers, O.; Lee Manuel Castro, Tampa; Patricia Ann Weaver, Mobile, Ala.; and Stella Irene Hopkins, Lowland, N. C.

Nathalie Reichwald, 16, of Bellingham, and Felix Vargas, 18, of Pasco, have been awarded the $500 Evan M. Weston scholarships inaugurated last year by the Washington State AFL-CIO in honor of E. M. Weston, president emeritus of the labor body. In making public the winners, State AFL-CIO Pres. Joe Davis said they topped a list of 70 entries.

Winners of the first annual Auto Workers Music Scholarships to the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., were announced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. They were David Gene Tubergen, Holland, Mich., and Cecelia Elizabeth Buchman, Bowling Green, O., both children of UAW members. The scholarships cover a general camp fee of $695.

3,000 Due At Schools, UAW Says

Detroit—The Auto Workers announced that a record-breaking total of 3,000 local union leaders have registered for attendance at 24 UAW summer schools this year.

The first school opened June 2 at Camp Rockmont, the last will begin Sept. 8 at the State University of New York in Alfred, N. Y.

UAW staff experts and university professors teach such bread-and-butter subjects as collective bargaining techniques and goals, union administration, union counseling, time study, and citizenship. Another major feature will be a UAW "core" program called "Frontiers for United Action."

Subjects include bargaining frontiers for 1964, automation and advancing technology, the need for full employment, deprivation and poverty, right wing "hate" groups and world affairs, according to UAW Education Dir. Caroll M. Hutton.

The schools are to meet on university campuses or at union education centers in Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Indiana, Connecticut, New Jersey, California and Oklahoma.

A REGIONAL COPE conference in Chicago, drawing representatives from many unions from the three-state area of Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, was typical of the 11 such conferences thus far held. Discussing COPE material are, left to right: Lancelot Jones, Packinghouse Workers Local 117, Indianapolis; Judy Pennington of Office Employes Local 1, Indianapolis; Martin Doss, Auto Workers Local 72, Wisconsin.

ACTING COPE DIR. Al Barkan hands the COPE conference package of literature to three members of the Auto Workers attending the rally.

SHIRLEY COLLINS of COPE Women's Activities Div., a member of the Rubber Workers in La Crosse, Wis., speaks from the floor; with her is Helen Butzman, Ladies' Garment Workers Local 379, La Crosse. Picture at right shows August F. Gamolaki, Machinists Dist. 10, Milwaukee, making a point.

6,000 Attend COPE Area Meets

Some 6,000 local and area union leaders have participated in the 15 Committee on Political Education area conferences held this spring, featuring analyses of the 1962 election returns and a projection of issues and programs for the 1964 elections.

The last parleys were held during the latter part of May and June—in the Upper Central States, the Northwest, California, the Mountain States. One conference in Florida will complete the program.

The two-day conferences have presented discussion leaders drawn from national and international unions; U.S. senators or union political experts as luncheon speakers, and provision for state and area sessions both before and after an election analysis by college or university election authorities.

Senators who participated included: Edmund E. Muskie (D-Me.); Stephen M. Young (D-O.); Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.); Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.); Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.); Clair Engle (D-Calif.); Gale McGee (D-Wyo.).

The conferences have also viewed showings of the purported documentary film, And Women Must Weep, circulated by the National Right to Work Committee and denounced by the National Labor Relations Board in decisions setting aside elections in which employers have used it. It has been followed by the Machinists' film, Anatomy of a Lie, exposing the "Weep" film's distortions.

Acting Dir. Al Barkan and other COPE officials participated in the conferences, which also drew on the resources of political directors of national and international AFL-CIO affiliates.

Teen-agers in Crisis

In September 1959 the AFL-CIO Executive Council in its report to the third convention said:

"The labor force is increasing at an accelerating rate. An additional 1.25 million new jobs each year will be needed in the years ahead to provide employment for those who will be entering the labor force. The increased birthrate since 1939 is beginning to have an impact on labor force growth."

NEARLY FOUR YEARS LATER the warnings and predictions have become the hard facts of the beginnings of an unemployment crisis.

The infant class of 1945 has reached the labor market. In succeeding years the high birth rates of the immediate post World War II years will bring more and more 18-year-olds into the labor market. This flood will crest to an utterly intolerable unemployment rate unless the economic growth rate expands sharply and new programs dealing specifically with youth employment are enacted.

As the nation moved into the Sixties there were glowing predictions of a great new era of prosperity, many of them based on the same population growth figures. Business economists and others waxed lyrical about the high rate of "family formation" that would result from the baby boom of the late 1940s and how the need for housing, appliances, clothing and all the rest would stimulate American business and industry to an almost perpetual well-being.

But before this land of promise can be reached there is first of all a need for income-providing jobs. This is the problem of the moment for the youngsters in the high school class of 1963.

★ ★ ★

THE LAST FEW YEARS have witnessed a sluggish rate of economic growth. Administration proposals have gone mostly unheeded in Congress and currently the tax-cut stimulant offered by the President is under continuing attack and moving slowly through the legislative mill.

The Administration's special programs designed to aid the burgeoning ranks of teen-agers failed of passage in the last Congress. This year the youth employment opportunities bill is bogged down in the House Rules Committee after receiving Senate approval and an okay from a House committee.

The continuing campaign to stem school drop-outs, on the clearly demonstrated formula that more education equals more income, the drive to enlarge and expand apprenticeship programs and eliminate discriminatory provisions, the drive to provide more job opportunities and meet the need for skilled workers—all of these are moving too slowly to meet the needs of the youngsters who will flood the labor market in the next few years.

The startling rise in the jobless rate to 5.9 percent for May, triggered almost entirely by an influx of teen-agers seeking jobs, means that the day of reckoning on youth employment has arrived. To delay further the programs to stimulate and expand economic growth and the programs geared to the needs of young job seekers is to deny to America's youngsters their last inheritance.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Gervase N. Love, Eugene A. Kelly, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, June 15, 1963 No. 24

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Is Anybody Home?'

Over-Representation:

Quirk in Constitution Increases Southerners' Political Strength

IT IS ONE OF THE IRONIES of American history that the abolition of slavery in the South actually increased the political power of the southern white man over the rest of the nation as a whole.

This came about by a quirk in the Constitution that gave the southern states—once peace and civil rights had been restored—greater proportional representation in Congress than they had had before.

Under Sec. 2 of Art. 1 of the Constitution, the slave-owning states were entitled to congressional representation based on the number of white persons plus three-fifths of all other persons, which meant slaves.

Yet, under the 14th Amendment, adopted in 1868, Negroes were counted fully as citizens. The result was that the former slave-owning states now got a two-fifths bonus on whatever number of Negroes lived within their borders when it came to the apportionment of representatives in Congress.

Abolition of the old three-fifths rule, of course, was logical once slavery had been abolished and Negro citizenship established. But the justice of the change was soon clouded when most southern states devised gimmicks from poll taxes to highly intricate literacy laws that effectively disenfranchised their Negro population.

In 1961, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission reported that of some 5,131,000 non-whites of voting age in the 12 southern states, only about one-fourth were registered to vote. Eight of these states had the poorest record: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

In all, there were 129 counties in 10 southern states with heavy Negro populations where less than 10 percent of adult Negroes were registered to vote and 23 counties where not a single Negro had managed to get on the voting lists.

Yet these same states went ahead claiming and getting their representation in Congress on the basis of a full count of the very citizens who were disenfranchised.

What is relatively little known is that when the 14th Amendment was adopted, Congress evidently had its suspicions of what would happen. In Sec. 2 of the amendment it provided:

"But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such state."

This, as has been noted, "enables the nation to inflict punishment upon the states for preventing citizens from voting."

THIS SECTION of the 14th Amendment has never been enforced, although it has been estimated that the South would lose up to 25 seats in Congress if it were.

In the light of widespread southern defiance of efforts to enforce the right of Negroes to vote, Sec. 2 of the 14th Amendment has suddenly assumed new importance.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is seeking a court test to enforce it. Sen. Patrick McNamara (D-Mich.) has introduced a bill to "implement" Sec. 2. He has done this yearly since 1957, but this is the first time that the bill has taken on unusual timeliness. In introducing it he said:

"For almost 100 years, Sec. 2 of the 14th Amendment has been simply a facade, with nothing behind it.

"This is particularly frustrating since that section deals with the very foundation of America's strength—the right of its citizens to vote.

"The right to vote might be considered a keystone of the civil rights structure.

"Once it is insured, and cannot be prevented arbitrarily or capriciously, the other building blocks of a truly free and equal America will fall into place much more swiftly."

It is unlikely that McNamara's bill will get very far in Congress. Nevertheless, if enough people hear about Sec. 2 and begin to realize its significance there may evolve a more honest distribution of congressional seats as between the South and the North.

Morgan Says:

Physical Frontiers Challenge In Rugged Parts of the Earth

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

JERUSALEM—As we aim a man toward the moon and probe restlessly the edges of the envelope of outer space, we sometimes forget we still have physical frontiers to conquer on the face of the earth. The raw boned, sun parched port of Eilat in Israel is a reminder of the rugged work still pending on the ground. As a somewhat incredibly functioning fact of life, it looms through the hot shifting political sandstorms of the Middle East as a kind of symbol for new nations, of which Israel is one.

Morgan

Eilat lies at the very top of the Gulf of Aqaba, the eastern finger of the Red Sea paralleling the finger which ends at Suez, with the mountains of Sinai rising in between. The town, whose atmosphere smacks a little of San Francisco in the gold rush days, is a precious prize of war.

After Israel established her independence in the war with the Arabs in 1948, Egypt retaliated not only by continuing to deny the Suez Canal to Israeli trade, but by a blockade of Eilat.

To free this port was one of the major objectives of the much-criticized Sinai campaign, which the Israelis, with the French and British, launched against Egypt's Nasser in 1956. The new state had to relinquish the Sinai Peninsula, across which her modern children of Israel had driven the Egyptian army reeling back to the canal. But Israel kept Eilat, and today a United Nations observer team 120 miles down the coast is a sentinel against any new possible attempts to cut off Israel's only direct water passage to East Africa, the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean.

I flew to Eilat in a vintage DC3 of Arkia, Israel's inland airline. Sixty-five minutes and 200 miles from Tel Aviv, after a lemonade served over Beersheba by a pretty stewardess—she was an immigrant from Egypt—after crossing the Negev Desert, so barren and bleak and canyon-gouged one wondered how Moses ever convinced his flock that this was the Promised Land, there lay the sparse settlement of Eilat on the pebbly beach of the Red Sea, whose waters are not red at all but range from green to stabbing cobalt. The red, some say, came from the rosy pillars of King Solomon's copper mines a few miles inland.

Eilat is an oven, but air-conditioned, mercifully, for the wind blows off the desert into the gulf and not the other way around. Summer temperatures reach 120 degrees in the shade, and there is precious little shade from the dusty green branches of the tamarisk tree or the flat-top acacia from which the Arc of the Covenant, the box for the Tablets of the 10 Commandments, was made.

But the heat is bearable because the atmosphere is bone dry. Arizona would envy it. Rainfall is less than one inch a year. However, some residents of Eilat drink two gallons of water a day to compensate for the swift evaporation of sweat. Water is pumped 26 miles from Yotvata, the springs that Moses found. All food except fish must be trucked in.

Six years ago there was nothing here but a few huts. Today Eilat has 8,000 people, including 2,000 children, a maternity hospital, a handsome granite cultural center donated by American labor unions and named for Philip Murray, the late great president of the former CIO.

ALREADY NEARLY ALL Israel's oil is brought to this port by tanker from the Persian Gulf instead of Venezuela, half way around the world, and piped over land 300 miles north to the refinery at Haifa. The copper mines are working 24 hours a day. Phosphate and other exports are loaded on freighters at Eilat. The government is widening the road to Beersheba and Eilat may eventually get a railway. Two chemical plants to make fresh water from the sea are being built, and a native Israeli named Yair Meroz has succeeded with hydroponics, the growing of vegetables in water without soil.

There are brave hopes for a tourist and health resort. A sunset over Sinai, painting the bare mountains off Jordan and Saudi Arabia beyond with tender pink, lavender and rich and shadowy purple, is spectacular, and a full moon spills black silver into the bay, whose waters are like cool velvet. The elegant Queen of Sheba Hotel has just opened.

There are problems. Beersheba's maitre d'hotel from Amsterdam lost his voice in the dry air. The Belgian chef at the Eilat Hotel rebels against kosher cooking. Despite inducements of high wages, guaranteed housing—one of the scarcest items in Israel—income tax exemptions and no luxury tax on refrigerators, Eilat's 36-year-old mayor, Josef Levy, a former export-import merchant from Cairo, has 300 jobs going begging.

But slowly a city is rising out of the dust. The pioneers of Eilat come from 25 different capitals, from Bucharest to Buenos Aires. On the beach I met a young mining machinist from Uruguay. His wife was from Peru. They were happy and hopeful here, he said. Mayor Levy is determined to make the miracle work. You look at what already has been done and you believe him.

Washington Reports:

Wirtz Sees Unions Closing Gap Between U.S. and Latin America

SEC. OF LABOR Willard Wirtz declared that bridges built between the free trade union movement of the United States and South and Central American free trade unions may be even stronger and more effective than relations built between governments.

Wirtz gave this opinion during an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations each week.

Alliance for Progress programs, operating through trade unions, Wirtz said, have the advantage of being on the people-to-people basis.

He reported on the recent conference of labor ministers and labor leaders of 20 North American, Central American and Latin American countries in Bogota, Colombia.

Their emphases, he said, were on low-cost housing, health programs and education, "things which go more directly and immediately to the needs of individual people."

"One of the most serious problems in South and Central America involves the availability of fresh, pure water," said Wirtz. "It is almost fantastic to realize that the mortality rate among children is as high as it is. In some countries, 40 percent of those who are born die before they reach the age of 5, usually because of the polluted water supply."

The secretary said there is a yearning for education.

"A GOOD MANY of the people there cannot read and they don't know about the Alliance for Progress except as it may come to them through their own meetings," he declared. "It is in this situation that unions are so important."

The success of the Alliance will be more likely and come sooner because of public knowledge and support spread through the unions, he said.

The American Institute for Free Labor Development, set up under the sponsorship of the U.S. government, business and the AFL-CIO, plays a great part, Wirtz said. It is a means of a more effective relationship between North and Latin America, he explained.

"It means sending ambassadors of freedom back to their Latin American countries," he said, who are able to carry on the program of progress themselves.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE U.S. SUPREME COURT will move in its next term to clarify the exact kind of state legislative and congressional districting that meets the guarantees of the Constitution for the equal protection of voters.

The court has accepted for argument a whole series of cases—eight in all—involving a wide variety of lower court decisions and decrees on the standards of fairness that must be applied. Some of these cases involve state legislatures, some congressional districts. Some of the lower court decrees are in direct conflict with each other.

The Supreme Court in its famous Tennessee decision last year did not lay down any directives on how a state should district its state legislature to meet the tests of constitutionality. It simply ruled that when citizens filed a lawsuit charging that the legislative districts discriminated against urban and suburban residents and gave disproportionate power to residents of sparsely settled areas, the federal courts had authority to hear the complaint.

There has been a tremendous flood of litigation as a result. Some state legislatures have redistricted themselves—and some of their new districting systems in turn have been attacked in court. A survey by Congressional Quarterly lists 27 states in which either state legislative or congressional districts have been challenged.

* * *

ONE OF THE BASIC ISSUES to be settled by the high court is whether a state can constitutionally set up a "federal" assembly system—with one house based on population, the other on geographical area. The Constitution establishes Congress itself on this system—the House elected from the states according to population, but with each state having two members of the Senate.

The Maryland Court of Appeals—highest of the state's courts—has ruled that this system is valid for a state legislature. But a three-judge federal court in Virginia ruled the other way, holding that nothing in the background of counties within a state was comparable to the theory of "sovereignty" that justified the constitutional system when the Union was formed from sovereign states claiming equal Senate representation.

Another basic issue is whether the Tennessee decision applies only to state elections or whether it will be made to apply to congressional districts.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1946 that the federal courts had power to outlaw congressional districts in Illinois with wide disparities in population, so that 250,000 in one district chose one member of the House and nearly 1 million in another district had only one. Having so ruled, the court then said it nevertheless chose not to exercise this power, at least at that time.

The court indicated in the Tennessee case last year that the time was ripe to move—but it has not said so expressly. A federal court in Georgia refused to interfere with the size and population of congressional districts, and the Supreme Court will now review that decision.

* * *

THE DEPT. OF JUSTICE has argued that the districts in state legislatures and in regard to state offices should follow as closely as possible the doctrine of equality in voting weight.

The AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 charged that "unequal representation" of voters in both state legislatures and congressional districts "deprived millions of their proper voice in government" and violated the "concept inherent in the Constitution—one man, one vote."

Since then the Supreme Court in a Georgia case has applied the Tennessee principle by striking down any "county unit" system under which urban residents were denied equality in elections for statewide office.

The court ruled that the political compromises by which the union was formed—the two senators from each state system—"implied nothing" for elections within the states.

The new cases to be heard next term will allow the further application of the doctrine—the extent to which it runs in all kinds of legislative districts, state and congressional. The decisions will have a vast impact upon the political institutions of the nation.

U.S. TRADE UNIONS can play one of the most important roles in the success of the Alliance for Progress in the Americas because they can operate on a people-to-people basis in housing, health and education, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Life Insurance on Borrowings Sometimes Is Too Expensive

By Sidney Margolius

NOWADAYS WHEN YOU BORROW money, or sometimes even when you buy a car or other goods on the installment plan, you are likely to be asked to buy life insurance in an amount equal to your debt. There is substantial evidence that in many cases you are pressed to buy the insurance even when it is supposed to be voluntary.

In fact, credit insurance has become the fastest-growing type of life insurance, although not necessarily by the public's choice. There are now 45 million such policies in force. You yourself may be covered by such policies because you have an outstanding debt, although you may not realize it or even be aware that you paid some lender or dealer an additional fee for this insurance.

If you borrow from a credit union, you automatically get credit insurance with no extra charge. Some commercial banks also provide it without extra cost, while others, often the banks charging lowest finance rates on the loan itself, may charge a reasonable 50 or 60 cents per $100 of debt for the accompanying life insurance.

But when the cost is much more than 60 cents per $100, you are really being charged a hidden extra fee for the loan in addition to the ostensible finance charge. In several states, investigations have revealed many instances of high charges—sometimes as much as $2 per $100. This writer estimates that the public may be paying somewhere in the neighborhood of $250 million a year in fees for this insurance, whether it is included in the cost of the loan or charged for separately. Possibly about one-third represents an overcharge, or about $85 million more than its worth.

One of the recent investigations was started by the public-minded Michigan state insurance commissioner, Sherwood Colburn. Lenders and installment dealers in that State may charge up to 75 cents per $100 of debt for life insurance. Colburn says the lenders make a profit of 60 to 70 percent on a fee of 75 cents. He wants to cut the fee to a maximum of 64 cents, and only 44 cents for large lenders.

In Missouri, State Rep. Monty Harlow found that insurance fees there range from 75 cents per $100 of debt, reported by the largest loan company, Household Finance Corp., to as much as $2 charged by some of the other small-loan offices. Harlow said the lenders usually make a commission of 50 percent of the insurance fees. Household Finance told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that 95 percent of its borrowers buy such life insurance.

ACTUALLY THERE IS no reason for credit life insurance to cost much. Most borrowers are relatively young families with low mortality rates. If the rate is moderate—60 cents or less—it is a reasonable buy. If not, you should go elsewhere for your loan. It is significant that the lenders who charge lowest rates for personal loans, such as the credit unions and commercial banks, also charge the least for credit insurance, or simply include it in the finance fee at no extra charge.

Credit unions pioneered in providing credit insurance, according to Louis J. Segadelli, managing director of the Michigan Credit Union League. But while credit insurance now has become a profit-maker for commercial lenders, the credit unions continue to provide it on a nonprofit basis, Segadelli reports.

CUNA Mutual Insurance Society, the life-insurance company of the national credit-union movement, and insurance organizations sponsored by state credit-union leagues pay back about 90 per cent of their receipts in claims or rebates to credit unions, Segadelli advises.

Credit union members also can buy additional life insurance to suit their own needs directly from CUNA Mutual and also from some of the individual state league companies. The Tennessee Credit Union League has developed a family group insurance plan, which the Michigan League now also offers. For example, in the Michigan plan, for 50 cents a week a member can buy a family policy providing $2,000 of term insurance on the member, $1,000 on the spouse and $1,000 on each child, no matter how many.

Thus, a family with two children can have $5,000 of insurance at a cost of just $26 a year. For larger families this kind of policy is an even rarer bargain since the price remains the same. Or a member who wants insurance only on himself can buy a $2,000 policy for 30 cents a week. This is an unusually low cost of $7.80 a year per $1,000 of insurance with the cost remaining the same to age 65.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

A GRANT OF $10,000 has been made by the Building Service Employes to the Research Foundation of the National Association for Mental Health. BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan is shown above presenting a check for $2,000, the first of five annual installments, to Mrs. Godfrey S. Rockefeller, a foundation trustee.

Survey Shows:

3.3 Million Women Members of Unions

ABOUT 3.3 MILLION women belonged to labor unions in 1960, according to the 1962 Handbook on Women Workers just published by the Women's Bureau.

They constituted about one out of every six union members and one out of every seven working women, and they belonged to 136 of the 184 unions participating in the survey, the handbook showed.

The bulk of them were in the needle trades, electrical goods manufacturing, service industries, communications, retail trade and textile mills, while relatively large numbers were reported in industry and transportation. In nine unions, women constituted at least 70 percent of the membership, while in 81 unions they numbered fewer than 20 percent.

The union with the most women was the Ladies' Garment Workers with 334,900 feminine members, followed by the Clothing workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Hotel & Restaurant Employes and Retail Clerks. At the other end of the scale were 47 unions with no women members—most of them in occupations not likely to employ women such as firemen, bricklayers, locomotive engineers and plasterers, the handbook noted.

Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, who also is director of the Women's Bureau, noted that more women than ever before—1.5 million—were going to college in 1961. They constituted 38 percent of all students, a steady rise from the 35 percent of 1956.

"As our society becomes more fully developed and complex," Mrs. Peterson said, "there is greater need for educated and trained citizens. I am very pleased that more and more women are preparing themselves for participation in all phases of American life."

The handbook, which is published biennially, contains a wide range of information relating to women's employment, occupations, age and marital status, earnings and income, and on state laws affecting them.

It reports that in April 1962 there were more than 24 million women workers—about 36 percent of the 66.5 million women of working age in the United States. The total labor force at the time was about 74 billion. The number of unemployed women actually looking for work was 1.4 million; the total unemployed numbered 3.9 million and the unemployment rate was 5.6 percent.

The handbook shows that the median age of all women workers is creeping upward and is now 41 years. Fully half of all women in the 45 to 52 years age group are employed.

About one-third of all married women with husbands present are working—nearly 13.5 million.

"New findings about the economic contribution of working wives to family income," the Women's Bureau noted, "show that they supply about 35 to 40 percent of their family's total income when they work full time and about 15 to 20 percent when they work part time."

The 24 million employed women registered in April 1962 reflects a steady increase since the turn of the century. In June 1900 only 5 million women were reported gainfully employed. In March 1940 the figure was slightly less than 14 million. The World War II peak, reached in July 1944, was 20.4 million.

The 1962 Handbook on Women Workers is Bulletin No. 285 of the Women's Bureau. It may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at 55 cents per copy.

From Soup to Nonsense:

A Party-Crasher, at Any Age, Should Always Be Tossed Out

By Jane Goodsell

IT WAS A NICE PARTY. An elegant party, really. The glasses were chilled, and the hors-d'oeuvres were hot and everybody was all dressed up. People were standing in little groups, holding animated but decorous conversations. The hostess looked relaxed and pretty in her plaid at-home gown.

And then he staggered in. He was very red in the face, and his hair was uncombed and his gait was so unsteady that he almost fell down the two steps leading to the living room.

The host frowned when she saw him, and the hostess had an "Oh dear!" look on her face.

He lurched across the room, grabbed somebody else's drink from the coffee table and took a large gulp, spilling some of it down his front. Then he popped a cheese canape into his mouth and stood there, chewing noisily while he cast an appraising glance around the room. Leering wolfishly, he stumbled off to seat himself on the sofa beside the prettiest lady present.

He whispered something to her—something lasvicious, no doubt, judging from the way he rolled his eyes—and the lady edged away nervously. He inched closer to her, and began stroking her knee.

BY THIS TIME everybody had stopped talking to watch him. Apparently feeling that it was up to him to keep the party going, he launched into a long, involved joke. It was impossible to follow because his speech was so slurred and, besides, he was so convulsed by his own humor that he kept slapping his leg and guffawing. Still, it was obvious from the way he ogled and smirked that it wasn't a joke you'd tell your grandmother.

The host and hostess were standing in a corner of the room, holding a whispered conversation. I was standing near them, and I overheard the hostess saying desperately, "Can't you do something?"

At that point, the object of concern popped two cocktail sausages into his mouth, and hauled off and hit one of the gentlemen guests in the stomach. Just like that! For no reason at all!

And then the host did something. Looking grimly determined, he grabbed the uninvited guest by the seat of his flannel sleepers and carried him, howling with outrage, upstairs to his crib.

Foes of Apartheid Join:

South Africa Shouted Down On ILO Conference Floor

Geneva—The 47th session of the Intl. Labor Organization was rocked by an unprecedented demonstration against the racial discrimination policies of the Union of South Africa which snarled—at least temporarily—a key debate on the future course and operations of the 108-nation agency.

Boos, catcalls and table-pounding marked a tumultuous hour-long plenary session at which deeply emotional delegates from other African nations successfully blocked an attempt by William F. Hamilton, South African employer delegate, to address the conference.

With vociferous support from Asian and some Latin American and Soviet-bloc countries, African delegates demanded that South Africa be blackballed from the ILO on moral grounds, irrespective of the absence of juridical grounds for such action.

"We don't want them here" and "throw them out" were some shouts raised amid threats from delegates of the protesting countries that they would walk out themselves if Hamilton were allowed to speak.

Worker delegates and many government employer delegates sympathised with the feelings of the protesting African nations while seeking to find some way to prevent the miring down of democratic procedures in the conference.

Jean Moeri, leader of the Swiss workers' group, urged Hamilton to "voluntarily renounce" his right to speak in the superior interest of the ILO, but the South African delegate stood on his rights to address the conference and the meeting adjourned with the issue unsettled.

Earlier George L-P Weaver, U.S. asistant secretary of labor, stressed at the conference the key role of free trade unions in promoting economic growth.

The head of the U.S. government delegation said that experience had shown that "to be successful, national development programs must include worker participation through democratic trade union organizations."

"We believe," he continued, "the ILO has a responsibility to convey this concept to its members, for it is vital to successful national growth—especially in the developing countries."

Weaver addressed the more than 1,000 government, worker and employer delegates and their advisers as the ILO's 47th session began a crucial review of the organization's program and structure.

While general debate was under way the conference was also getting down to work in committee.

In addition to serving as the conference's worker vice president, U.S. Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl is on the key steering committee.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany was named to the committee that reviews the manner in which governments respect the labor and social standards set out in the ILO's conventions.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers represents the U.S. labor delegation on the committee readying new rules on layoffs.

Another member of the U.S. delegation, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, is with the group dealing with programs to prohibit the sale and use of unsafe machinery.

C. J. Haggerty, president of the AFL-CIO Building Trades Dept., David Sullivan, president of the Building Service Employes; and Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO European economic representative, also drew committee assignments.

CONCERN OVER GROWING POWER of international companies was voiced by the Engineering & Electrical Workers Conference called by the Intl. Metalworkers Federation in London. Shown at one of the sessions are, from left, W. R. Beard and L. R. Kealey of Great Britain; Vice Pres. George L. Watkins; Intl. Affairs Dir. Ben Segal of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. Argeu Egidio dos Santos of the Sao Paulo (Brazil) Metalworkers Federation, and IUE Pres. James B. Carey.

Newspapers' Lockout In Detroit Held Illegal

A Detroit newspaper publishers' agreement to suspend publication if either paper was faced by a strike or union picket line has been ruled unlawful by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner.

The "breadth" of the suspension agreement made it violative of the National Labor Relations Act, Examiner Harold X. Summers found, because it affected not only craft unions which bargain on a citywide basis with the Detroit News and the Detroit Free Press but also the unaffiliated Teamsters, who bargain individually with each publisher.

The Teamsters struck the Free Press Apr. 11, 1962, and the News, though not struck, ceased publication Apr. 12. The latter paper notified various union employes on Apr. 16 not to report for work until further notice, and the shutdown continued until May 10.

Summers recommended that the NLRB direct payment of lost wages to News employes for the period Apr. 16-19 because the paper's shutdown during that period was a result of Teamster picketing of the Free Press and therefore an unfair labor practice. The Teamster picketing ended Apr. 20 but other unions posted pickets and the shutdown continued.

There was no violation of law, Summers held, when the Free Press suspended publication Feb. 15 and May 8 and 9 because of union work stoppages, nor during the News' suspension of Apr. 12-14 because no employe lost his pay. But he said:

"I reach a different result with respect to the News' suspension of Apr. 16-19. I find that suspension of publication by the News interfered with, restrained and coerced employes in the exercise of rights guaranteed them," and that in addition, the "loss of employment" during the second News suspension "constituted discrimination which discouraged union membership."

Governing Decision

The case hinged on the Supreme Court's Buffalo Linen decision, in which the high court ruled that an employer may lock out his employes as a defensive measure to protect the integrity of a multi-employer bargaining unit against "whipsawing" by unions—the striking of one employer out of a group.

Summers cited findings that a lockout is legal where hardship renders it economically unfeasible for an employer to maintain operations in the face of an imminent strike. Also the board ruled recently, in a case involving members of the Publishers' Association of New York City and newspaper unions, that advance agreement to suspend operations in defense against a series of unauthorized work stoppages is not illegal.

The examiner made a distinction in the Detroit case because the Teamsters bargained individually and not citywide.

His finding was made against the News, the Free Press, and the Detroit Newspaper Publishers Association. All will have to share the cost of paying lost pay if the examiner's recommendation is adopted by the board.

The NLRB will hold a hearing July 22 on unfair labor practice charges filed by the Detroit Newspaper Guild against the Detroit News growing out of the same shutdown. The Guild says its members were laid off while non-union workers stayed on the payroll.

South African Boycott Urged in UN by ICFTU

New York—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has asked the General Assembly of the United Nations to appeal to member-states to cut diplomatic and economic relations with South Africa "with a view to inducing the South African government to abandon its policies of repression and racial discrimination."

The request was sent by Irving Brown, ICFTU representative at the UN, to UN Sec.-Gen. U Thant for submission to the Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid and for inclusion on the agenda of the special session of the General Assembly next fall.

In summarizing the memorandum in a covering letter to Thant, Brown said the ICFTU also is urging that the UN "begin to examine the entire question of South Africa's racial and political policies from the standpoint of their being a threat to the peace of an entire continent."

"It is certainly no exaggeration," he continued, "to say that the very future, the potential growth of Africa, is at stake as the Republic of South Africa moves closer and closer to the status of a police state.

"We believe that the UN must undertake a definition of the apartheid policies of the Republic of South Africa encompassing human rights' violations and the entire question of averting a military holocaust which becomes, with each passing day, an inevitable reality."

The ICFTU in addition called on the UN "to examine its role as a humanitarian agency" in view of the number of South African refugees who have fled the country and those "who will certainly be compelled for reasons of self-preservation to flee."

"In short," Brown concluded, "we recommend that the General Assembly begin to look upon its role in the South African crisis as no different from the role which the UN accepted inter alia in the Congo and the Gaza strip."

He reiterated that it is incumbent upon the UN to act "before serious clashes erupt" into battles that "in turn can well explode into a continentwide war."

"We urge that the UN undertake at the earliest possible moment," he added, "to consider this one of the gravest crises which confronts the peace of the world."

Trade Union Solidarity Urged for World Gains

London—A call for worldwide labor solidarity to combat the practice by international companies of "pitting workers in one country against those in another" was voiced by the Engineering & Electrical Workers' Conference convened here by the Intl. Metalworkers Federation.

Free unions of metal workers in 23 industrial and developing nations were represented at the meeting, with successive sessions for the engineering and the electrical trades.

"Needs and production today are such that constant social progress, which enables sound development engineering and electrical manufacturing with full employment, must be the impetus for an economy of efficiency and dynamism, promoting advancement of peoples all over the world," the conferences said.

The conferences expressed concern with the "growing power" of international companies, with subsidiaries all over the world which through "economically and socially irresponsible policies are raising problems of international fair labor standards." They continued:

"To combat the social disruptions such shortsighted policies provoke, unions representing workers employed by these international companies must be united. By practical solidarity and a steady exchange of current information in the collective bargaining field, the unions must force the international companies to observe their social obligations in all countries—in particular by paying decent, fair wages wherever they operate."

Pres. James B. Carey of the U.S. Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, a vice president of the AFL-CIO and the IMF, praised the growth of what he called "internationalism" in the U.S. labor movement and declared that despite unemployment, American workers still support reciprocal trade.

He said that the firms which complain most of imports to the U.S. are themselves bringing in large quantities of goods and marketing them under their own brand names.

Ben Segal, IUE director of international affairs, said the General Electric Co. had pointed out to unions representing its employes, including the IUE, the existence of lower wage standards in Japan. The IUE investigated and found, he said, that GE was the largest stockholder in Toshiba, one of Japan's principal producers of electronic products.

Sir William Carron, president of Great Britain's Amalgamated Engineering Union and of the IMF Engineering Dept., who presided, said that not a single sewing machine is now being made in the U.S. because they had been "off-loaded" to England and other countries where wages are lower.

Lost Time Near Low For April

April work stoppages in the United States were at the lowest level for the month since the end of World War II in percentage of working time lost—10 one-hundredths of 1 percent.

Also, strike idleness was at the second lowest level for the month of April, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. Approximately 130,000 workers lost 1.05 million man-days of work because of strikes, lockouts or other stoppages.

April 1961 still holds the low record with 984,000 man-days of lost time, but the percentage was slightly higher—11 hundredths of 1 percent.

Between January and April there were 1,005 work stoppages this year involving 280,000 workers who lost 5.6 million man-days of time, or 14 one-hundredths of 1 percent of total time worked in all industries. The percentage was lower in five other years since the 1947-49 average was established, BLS said.

Factory Hirings Up In March and April

Factory hirings in March and April were at their highest level since last July, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

For April, the BLS said, the hiring rate rose from 35 to 37 per 1,000, in line with normal March-April changes. The factory layoff rate, at 15 per 1,000, was down slightly from March and continued to show better-than-seasonal improvement. The quit rate for the month edged upward from 12 to 13 per 1,000, a smaller than usual increase.

CITATION FOR WORK as a member of the Public Advisory Committee of the Area Redevelopment Administration was presented to AFL-CIO Assistant Research Dir. Frank Fernbach (center) by Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges at the group's quarterly meeting. ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., looks on at right.

House Opens Hearings On Workweek Issues

The first major congressional study of working hours since the standard 40-hour week was established by law more than 20 years ago has been launched by the House Select Subcommittee on Labor headed by Rep. Elmer Holland (R-Pa.).

"We want to find out if current circumstances permit or require another step forward in the reduction of hours of work," Holland said as the subcommittee opened a series of hearings on "Hours of Work and Their Impact on Employment."

"We think the time is ripe for a reassessment of this [40-hour] standard in the light of our current position, for a review of the lessons of experience and a careful weighing of the still largely divergent views regarding possible action."

Three bills have been introduced in the House calling for reduction of the statutory ceiling on the straight-time workweek under the Fair Labor Standards Act from the present 40 hours to 35 or 32.

In addition, the subcommittee will also study a proposal to retain the 40-hour ceiling, but increase overtime payments for work beyond that ceiling from the present time and one-half to double-time.

Last August, the AFL-CIO Executive Council launched a two-pronged drive for a shorter workweek as a means of spreading employment and pulling the nation up from "economic stagnation." The council called on affiliates to intensify their bargaining efforts to win a cut in working hours without reduction of wages.

At the same time, it urged amendment of the wage-hour law to reduce the standard workweek to 35 hours and require payment of double-time for work beyond that limit.

The persistent high level of unemployment that prompted the AFL-CIO action also is a prime concern of the Holland subcommittee.

"All avenues of employment possibilities must be explored," said Holland, citing the "staggering economic losses" to the nation from unused manpower represented by a rate of joblessness over 5.5 percent for the fifth straight year.

"We cannot afford to sit back and watch our unemployment rate snowball into an unpredictable size," he declared. "We hope to find a preventive for such a situation—rather than wait and be forced to seek a solution for a very serious problem that cannot help but develop if we refuse to look ahead."

Among the points made to the subcommittee in the testimony of the first witness, Commissioner Ewan Clague of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, were:

- There has been a continuing trend for more than a century toward reduced hours of work as part of the fruits of rising productivity, with the emphasis in recent years shifting toward longer paid vacations and more paid holidays.
- Since 1948, there has been a slow but persistent increase in the number of nonfarm employes working more than 48 hours a week, whether from economic necessity or choice or from professional desire.
- Part-time employment has grown by more than 50 percent in the post-war period, largely as the result of women and teenagers entering the labor force.

Generator Ordered for Hanford Plant

Hanford, Wash.—A four-year labor-supported effort to convert waste steam from the plutonium reactor being built here by the Atomic Energy Commission into electric power has moved an important step closer to fulfillment.

The Washington Public Power Supply System, in cooperation with 76 public and private utility systems in the Pacific Northwest, has placed an $18.2 million order with General Electric Co. for two 400,000 kilowatt steam turbine-generators. Completion is scheduled for late 1965.

A long congressional battle over the power-generating project began in 1958 when Congress authorized the Atomic Energy Commission to build a dual-purpose reactor, designed both to produce plutonium for weapons and to generate electricity.

The AFL-CIO and public power groups strongly supported the dual purpose program and in the second session of the 87th Congress joined in endorsing a compromise proposal to authorize the Washington Public Power Supply System to undertake the project.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

At Federal Level:

Kefauver, 22 Co-Sponsors Propose Consumer Agency

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), joined by 22 co-sponsors, has introduced a new bill to establish a separate government agency to represent the interests of consumers.

The Office of Consumers he proposes, Kefauver told the Senate, is intended "to be a burr in the hides of government officialdom, to get important consumer issues raised, and to aid in their settlement in such a fashion that consumer interests will be heard and taken account of."

Kefauver said that to enhance the chances of getting the bill enacted, he is not seeking as he has in past Congresses to consolidate in one department consumer-related programs now carried on by various government departments and agencies.

His proposed new agency would present the consumer viewpoint before government regulatory agencies and would act as a "public watchdog on industrial pricing developments of particular importance to consumers," he said.

During a day of Senate discussion largely devoted to consumer problems, a group of liberal senators took the floor to discuss and urge enactment of:

- A Truth-in-Lending bill, long sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), which would require a full disclosure of all finance charges on consumer installment purchases and loans in terms of a true annual interest rate.
- A Truth-in-Packaging bill, by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), which would ban descriptive and misleading packaging and labeling of food, household products and other supermarket items.
- A bill by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) to set up a Senate Select Committee on Consumers, comparable to the existing Small Business Committee.

All of these measures, carrying a long list of co-sponsors, have been strongly supported in the past by the AFL-CIO.

Douglas told the Senate that his bill "would not in any way control credit or regulate the terms of credit."

Its objective, he emphasized, "is merely to strip away the disguises which frequently hide or distort" its true price. This, he said, would enable consumers "to shop as wisely for credit as for other items in the family budget."

Committee investigations, Douglas said, have found interest rates on secondhand cars as high as 180 percent of the purchase price.

Hart described the discussion on consumer bills as "a historic day in the U.S. Senate." He added:

"It focuses attention on those consumer problems that are often not attention-getting, not headline material, not dramatic; yet must be solved if our economy is to move forward, if our free enterprise system is to function without distortion, if the moral tone of our society is to be preserved and our citizens are not to be victimized in the marketplace."

AMA Attacked for Role In Health Care Fight

(Continued from Page 1)

opposing the President's program so that it won't pass Congress."

Another aspect of the AMA "fear" propaganda, he continued, is an attempt "to cast doubt on the integrity of those who favor the President's program."

"It is doubtful," Nestingen said, "if a more intensive or better-financed campaign to defeat a presidential proposal has ever occurred in the history of the United States."

The Administration has asked Congress to enact an old-age hospital insurance plan that would be financed through social security contributions during an individual's working years and through general revenues during a transistional period for workers not currently covered by social security.

The program would provide benefits of up to 180 days of hospitalization, up to 180 days of nursing home care, 240 home health-care visits by visiting nurses and physical therapists, and hospital out-patient diagnostic services for nearly every person who is or reaches age 65.

Big barrier to quick enactment of the program, said Nestingen, is the House Ways & Means Committee, which must usually originate legislation affecting taxes, but where a majority of the 25 members is not yet committed to support of the measure. The committee is expected to hold hearings when it completes work on the Administration's tax-cut proposals.

If the health care bill gets past Ways & Means, the H-E-W official said, "we know we have the votes in the House and Senate."

Nestingen's comments followed similar remarks by Assistant H-E-W Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen before the annual forum of the National Conference on Social Welfare, held in Cleveland.

Opposition to the hospital insurance plan for the aged, Cohen said, "was not unexpected."

"The same organizations," he went on, "have opposed other suggested changes in the social security system — changes that have proven their worth in operation and strengthened the security of the individual and of society.

"And just as the opposition to improving social security has been overcome in the past, so will it be with the proposal to add hospital insurance for the aged. We are coming closer each day to the adoption of the program."

ILGWU Bids Public To Resort in Poconos

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers is again inviting the public to spend vacations at Unity House, its 1,000-acre summer resort in Pennsylvania's Pocono Mountains.

Information may be obtained by writing Saul Gold, manager, Unity House, 275 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N.Y.

THE SWIMMING POOL and other facilities of San Diego Local 229, Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen, are thrown open twice a month to handicapped youngsters of the community. Shown alongside the pool in the new union headquarters are, left to right: Sue Ann Howerton, Business Agent Carl Foote, Business Mgr. Max J. Osslo, Program Dir. Carmen Dixon of the San Diego County United Cerebral Palsy Foundation, and Fred Gilbert.

On 209-204 Rollcall:

House Coalition Kills Enlarged Area Aid

The House in a major upset defeated an Administration bill to enlarge and continue the area redevelopment program.

The rollcall was a cliff-hanging 209 to 204, representing a sharp reversal from the bipartisan coalition that authorized the program two years ago.

A similar bill has been reported favorably by the Senate Banking & Currency Committee. House defeat of the extension program does not kill the existing area redevelopment program but supporters said the operating agency, the Area Redevelopment Administration, would run out of money next winter unless new funds are provided.

In another major congressional action, the Senate passed a package of five bills to improve the situation of migrant farm workers and their families.

The bills, sponsored by Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.), would provide for the registration of crew leaders who recruit migrant agricultural workers and set up other protections.

They would authorize federal grants to the states to improve the educational opportunities of the children of migrants and to provide day-care service for both mothers and children. They would also offer assistance to farmers improving sanitation facilities available to migrants.

A 15-member advisory council on migratory labor would be established.

A similar set of bills was passed by the Senate in the 87th Congress and cleared by the House Labor Committee but was refused Rules Committee approval for a floor vote.

ARA Extension Provisions

The Administration bill on the area redevelopment program would have raised the ceiling on authorized funds from $389 million to $455 million and extended lending authority for two years.

The extension bill had strong backing from the AFL-CIO.

Federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the House Banking & Currency Committee that while the number of new jobs created by the ARA was not "spectacular," nobody had "ever expected at this point it would be."

The bill was designed to bring new economic opportunities to areas of persistent and chronic unemployment, he pointed out, and most of these areas "were a long time going down," so that it will require time to restore them to "good health."

Urging the committee to close one loophole discovered in operations of the act—a loophole through which loans went to some private firms not in compliance with Davis-Bacon prevailing wage rates—Schnitzler said that the backlog of aid requests was "highly encouraging" and that increased funds were needed.

On the House rollcall defeating the extension bill, 189 Democrats voted for the bill and 57 against. The Republicans split 15 for extension and 152 against.

This reflected a sharp shift from the 1961 vote to create the program. At that time 43 Republicans voted in favor and only 45 Democrats opposed it.

Speculation arose that the larger number of Democratic votes against the program might reflect southern resistance to Kennedy Administration proposals arising from agitation over the mounting civil rights crisis and the President's strong backing of a broader rights policy, backed by substantive legislation.

The sharp decrease in Republican support was attributed to an attack made by minority members of the Banking Committee on administration of the program.

California GOP Wins House Race

Los Angeles — The Republicans picked up a House seat from the Democrats as Mayor Del Clawson beat five Democratic candidates and two other Republicans in a special election to fill the vacancy created by the death of the late Rep. Clyde Doyle.

His unofficial total was 33,083 against 21,951 for Carley V. Porter, the closest Democrat. Republican National Committee Chairman William Miller noted that it was the second special election this year in California that the GOP had won in a district previously held by Democrats.

Membership of the House is now 257 Democrats, 178 Republicans.

Rehabilitation Called Essential for Injured

New Brunswick, N. J.—Physical rehabilitation is as important as adequate workmen's compensation to an injured worker if he is to be restored to a full and useful life, Mrs. Beatrice Holderman, director of the New Jersey Rehabilitation Commission, said at a Rutgers University seminar.

A NEW AFL-CIO pamphlet spelling out the federation's strong support for the foreign aid program and its opposition to recommendations of the Clay Committee is currently available. "Foreign Aid for Peace and Freedom" contains AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, his guideline memorandum and dissent from the Clay report and the Executive Council's statement on foreign aid. Single copies of the publication are available free from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. The publication is priced at 15 cents each up to 100 copies and $12 per hundred.

Equal Pay Rate Bill Is Signed by Kennedy

(Continued from Page 1)

effective until June 10, 1964, a year after signing. A clause enacted over labor's objections provides an additional year's exemption for any workers who are covered by an existing unexpired collective bargaining agreement.

The equal pay legislation is in the form of an amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act, and thus both the coverage and enforcement are the same as those of the wage-hour law. The Labor Dept. has estimated that some 8 million women out of more than 24 million in the labor force will thus be covered.

Reduction of the wages of male workers to "equalize" pay is specifically barred by the new law.

The key provision bars discrimination in pay on the basis of sex "for equal work on jobs the performance of which requires equal skill, effort and responsibility, and which are performed under similar working conditions."

The legislation makes it clear that pay differentials based on a seniority system, a merit system or incentive rates are permitted so long as the sex of the worker is not the basis for the differential.

3 Unionists To Advise on Social Security

Three men from labor ranks have been named by Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze as members of an Advisory Council on Social Security to make a comprehensive review of the social security system.

They are Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, Auto Workers, and Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

The 13-member council held its first meeting with Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball as chairman. A report of its findings with recommendations for improving the effectiveness and extending the coverage of the old age, survivors, and disability insurance program must be submitted by January 1965.

Celebrezze said the studies are of great importance because more than 18.5 million persons are now receiving social security benefits amounting to almost $15 billion a year and nearly 90 percent of all persons now reaching 65 are eligible for benefits.

Hoffa Pleads Innocent to New Charges

Nashville — Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa and 10 other persons pleaded innocent to federal charges of jury tampering here.

The charges involve alleged attempts to influence a jury that earlier had failed to reach a verdict in Hoffa's trial on charges of Taft-Hartley Act violation.

A week earlier Hoffa and seven others were indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of diverting for personal benefit more than $1 million in funds involved in loans from the Central States Teamsters Pension Fund.

Hoffa is one of eight Teamster trustees of the fund.

In other cases, Anthony Provenzano, a Teamsters vice president, was convicted in Newark, N. J., by a federal court on charges of extorting $17,100 from a trucking firm in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. In Philadelphia another international officer, Raymond Cohen, was convicted in a state court on charges of conspiracy to defraud Local 107, of which he is secretary-treasurer.

CIVIL DEFENSE preparation is "still far from adequate," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (right) said in urging $195 million in federal funds for fallout shelters. He testified before a House Armed Services subcommittee headed by Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D-La.), with whom he is discussing the legislation.

Preparation for U.S. Civil Defense Still Inadequate, Schnitzler Says

America's civil defense preparation is "still far from adequate," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler has warned in urging Congress to approve a civil defense bill authorizing $195 million in federal funds for fallout shelters.

Schnitzler said in testimony prepared for a House Armed Services subcommittee that labor "strongly supports" the Administration's proposed fallout shelter program which "can save more lives than would any other feasible protective measures against nuclear attack."

He also urged coordination of civil defense planning with measures to cope with natural disasters such as floods, hurricanes and tornadoes.

Such a broader definition of civil defense, Schnitzler said, "would help stimulate even greater participation by the American labor movement in civil defense and natural disaster relief activities."

The Administration bill, introduced by Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D-La.), chairman of the subcommittee, is a pared-down version of the five-year program the Administration unsuccessfully sought last year.

The current Administration bill would authorize $175 million for a new one-year program of "incentive payments" by the federal government to nonprofit institutions and to state and local governments to set up fallout shelter facilities.

The bill also calls for a $20 million program of construction of fallout shelters in all buildings owned or occupied by the federal government.

Urging approval of this program, Schnitzler told the subcommittee that "the federal government must show by its own leadership and by its own example that fallout shelters have a key role in our national civil defense program."

Labor's position, Schnitzler said, is that "civil defense is a matter of national defense and national security" and "not simply an individual problem or a family problem."

Urging an emphasis on group shelters, he declared:

"Civil defense fallout shelters can save more lives than would any other feasible protective measures against nuclear attack. Completion of the shelter program and the component elements necessary to make the civil defense shelter program effective require increased organizational planning and appropriations."

Meany Pledges 'Unstinting' Rights Aid

Urges Jobs for All To Speed Equality

(Continued from Page 1)

drive to assure that all minority groups will make their views count in the 1964 election.

- Encourage the advancement of Negro trade unionists to positions of leadership and responsibility in the labor movement.
- Take an active role in the formation of biracial committees and councils seeking to break down racial barriers in communities across the United States.

Joining the President in addressing the union representatives were Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy. A number of the labor officials took part in the discussion of employment discrimination problems.

Point Number 2 in the President's suggested program is aimed at the economic problem stressed in Meany's message, which observed that "equal opportunity has meaning only if there is full opportunity for all."

"It is an incontrovertible truth," Meany declared, "that the greatest single contribution that could now be made toward equal employment opportunities for Negroes is full employment opportunities for all Americans."

Meany praised the President's past executive action to eliminate racial discrimination in employment involving the federal government, and voiced strong support for the civil rights legislative program outlined by Kennedy in a televised speech to the nation two days earlier.

He noted, too, that the AFL-CIO itself has had "a considerable degree of success—though not nearly enough—in breaking down racial barriers within the labor movement."

"Yet," he continued, "the progress thus achieved will be empty of practical value if there are no jobs for those who are now entitled to seek them on an equal basis. A sign that reads 'No Help Wanted' gains nothing by applying it to all races instead of one."

The meeting called by the President brought together members of the AFL-CIO executive council, international union leaders, the heads of state central bodies, major local central bodies and building and metal trades councils,

Former Pres. Harry S. Truman, who was visiting the White House at the time, was introduced to the group and praised Kennedy's leadership of the nation since his 1960 election.

Church Leaders Invited

Earlier sessions called by the President on civil rights problems have involved businessmen, mayors and governors, and he has scheduled a meeting with religious leaders.

Meany, who is a member of the U.S. delegation to the Intl. Labor Organization now meeting in Geneva, expressed regret that international commitments prevented him from attending the White House meeting.

"There is no public issue of greater importance to America than equal rights and equal opportunities for all citizens," he said. "And there is no issue of greater concern to me personally."

He reiterated the AFL-CIO's "long-time insistence . . . that a federal equal employment opportunities law is essential," but stressed that here, too, "opportunity itself is the first requisite."

He noted that the Administration had won enactment of a number of job-creating programs and was pressing for others, and that labor itself has urged "additional measures which we feel are necessary to achieve full employment, and thus to give reality to the principle of equal employment opportunity."

A similar situation, Meany observed, exists in the area of housing, where the President has moved to require equal access to federally insured or financed housing projects.

"But for equal access to decent housing to take effect," the AFL-CIO president said, "there must be enough decent housing to go around.

'A Matter of Slums'

"Segregated housing is not just a matter of discrimination; it is also a matter of slums. Each feeds on the other, and both must be attacked. For in addition to all else, throughout the North, segregated housing is the major cause of de facto segregation in public schools."

Even so, specific civil rights legislation is "certainly" needed, Meany emphasized, giving firm endorsement to the legislative measures Kennedy announced he would propose to speed school desegregation, protect the right to vote, and assure all persons regardless of race the right to be served or accommodated at hotels, theaters, restaurants and other establishments seeking to do business with the public.

"Every one of these measures is essential," Meany said. "Every one of them can be passed by a Congress that is fully aware of what is truly a national crisis.

"Surely the Congress—and the country—should now have reached this degree of awareness."

Meany said the President, in his television address, had presented the case "with force and eloquence" and urged him to continue "to exert the powerful and nonpartisan leadership required to translate the needs I have cited into effective federal law."

In his speech to the nation, Kennedy had said that "the rising tide of discontent" among Negroes seeking full equality had confronted the nation with a "moral crisis, as a country and as a people."

Conscience Involved

He called on every American "regardless of where he lives" to pause and "examine his conscience" about incidents at Birmingham and elsewhere.

"It ought to be possible," the President went on, "for every American to enjoy the privileges of being an American without regard to his race or color."

He said his legislative message would ask Congress "to make a commitment it has not fully made in this century to the proposition that race has no place in American law or life."

He said the issue was neither sectional nor partisan, and not legal alone, but primarily a moral issue which "is as old as the Scriptures and is as clear as the American Constitution."

"We preach freedom around the world, and we mean it," the President observed. "And we cherish our freedom here at home. But are we to say to the world—and much more importantly to each other—that this is the land of the free, except for the Negroes; that we have no second-class citizens, except Negroes; that we have no class or caste system, no ghettoes, no master race, except with respect to Negroes?"

OUTSTANDING VOLUNTEER activity on behalf of united funds, community chests and community health and welfare councils won a National United Community Service award for AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (right), chairman of the Community Services Committee and president of the Communications Workers. Shown presenting it, at the recent annual meeting of the United Community Funds & Councils of America in Chicago is Irving R. Duffy, last year's award winner.

Protestants Challenged To New Rights Action

New York—The National Council of Churches, major Protestant central body, has called on its 31 member-denominations to join the drive for full civil rights by supporting and participating, if necessary, in political and consumer action and sit-in demonstrations.

The council invited Catholic and Jewish leaders to cooperate.

By unanimous vote the council's general board, at a meeting in Riverside Church here, set up a commission instructed to encourage "negotiations, demonstrations and direct action."

"Words and declarations are no longer useful in this struggle unless accompanied by sacrifice and commitment," the board said in a resolution. The Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake of the United Presbyterian Church added: "Demonstrations include being on the receiving end of a fire hose."

The board statement, termed the most forceful it has made, is advisory rather than mandatory.

The resolution cited council action in taking a clear position against racial discrimination and segregation in housing and education, and in support of equal employment opportunity, orderly nonviolent demonstrations, sit-in demonstrations and "freedom" rides. It added:

"We believe it is the responsibility of Christians to:

- "Understand the ways in which economic pressures are still being used to deprive persons of the right to train for and pursue their choice of livelihood and to prevent them from the exercise of their human and civil rights.
- "Refrain from any action that uses economic pressure or sanction to deprive persons of these rights because of race, creed or national origin.
- "Oppose such practices where they appear.
- "Seek ways to relieve or resolve tension in situations involving economic discrimination based on race; to support voluntary mutual agreements; to initiate and support legislation aimed at preventing private or public discrimination; to encourage candidates for public office who will support such legislation.
- "When other efforts fail, to support and participate in economic pressures where used in a responsible and disciplined manner to eliminate economic injustice and to end discrimination based on race, creed or national origin.
- "Urge all churches and their members to undertake 'repentantly, prayerfully and concretely' to fulfill these basic responsibilities toward all people and to 'put their own house in order' by integrating their institutions."

Repeal Urged Of 'Set-Aside' Contract Rule

The AFL-CIO has urged repeal of legislation which sets aside a portion of government construction work for small contractors, declaring that the "unique characteristics" of the construction industry make the provision unnecessary.

In a letter to members of the House Banking & Currency Committee, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller pointed out that 90 percent of all contractors in the United States are "small business" under existing definitions.

The special preference, he said, is thus unnecessary to enable them to secure "a fair share of government contracts."

A repeal bill by Rep. William S. Moorhead (D-Pa.) and a companion bill in the Senate by Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) would "restore normalcy to the building and construction industry in the vital areas of government construction," Biemiller said.

Jacob Pat Resigns From JLC Post

New York—Jacob Pat, long-time executive secretary of the Jewish Labor Committee, has resigned for reasons of health and will be succeeded by Benjamin Tabachinsky, who has been the committee's national campaign director.

Pat will remain close to the work of the organization with the title of secretary emeritus, JLC Chairman Adolph Held said.

6-15-63

2 Entertainment Unions Strengthen Bias Drive

(Continued from Page 1)

privileges; in the publicizing of, and in calling or requesting performers to appear for, auditions or interviews; in staging a production, or in any other dealings with performers.

- Casting notices shall be worded in such a way as not to discourage minority group members from inquiring, applying or auditioning.
- Representation by an agent or other representative shall not be a requirement for auditions or interviews for casting purposes.
- There shall be no discrimination in the keeping of files on performers, in the services of casting agents and performers' representatives, nor in selecting applicants or employing performers on the basis of ability.
- Steps shall be taken to see that minority group performers are cast in all types of roles so that the American scene "may be portrayed realistically."

Signers of the policy statement are AFTRA, the employers, producers, networks, stations, independent packagers, transcription firms, phonograph recording companies, agents, managers, impresarios and others. A joint committee will implement the policy.

Delegates to the 16th AGVA convention, meeting in New York, heard an announcement of the murder of NAACP Field Sec. Medgar W. Evers in Jackson, Miss., and unanimously approved payment of a $1,000 reward for information leading to apprehension of his killer.

They approved a resolution to:

- Aid, support and assist the President and the Attorney General of the United States in their efforts to eliminate segregation in hotels, night clubs and other places of entertainment.
- Advocate the elimination of segregation in any place of entertainment where it exists.
- Advocate that all franchised AGVA agents refuse to book AGVA members into any hotel, club or place of entertainment where a policy of segregation exists.

Union Pres. Joey Adams said the union will do all it can in "following the laws of the land" and in helping "make this a world of freedom." Entertainers can play a part by working in such a way that "all people will accept the principle of non-discrimination without feeling they are watching make-believe."

Congress Called to Act on Civil Rights

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 22, 1963 | No. 25

Long, Bitter Fight Seen In Senate

By Willard Shelton

A long and bitter civil rights struggle featured by a major southern Senate filibuster loomed in Congress following Pres. Kennedy's message asking sweeping rights legislation and urging that Congress "stay in session" until it had completed the job.

Action started almost simultaneously with delivery of the President's message as a House Labor subcommittee approved a bill to carry out the request for equal employment opportunity legislation. It would create a five-member federal employment commission with power to issue cease and desist orders in cases of job discrimination.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), had previously been considered in hearings. Chairman Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. (D-N.Y.), of the full Labor Committee said he woud lay aside other issues to speed consideration of civil rights proposals.

House and Senate Judiciary Committees will handle other sections of the Kennedy proposals, which are based on the 14th and 15th Amendments and the interstate commerce powers of Congress.

Already facing a long session involving tax reduction and revision, social security hospital care, aid to education and numerous other proposals, Congress was told by the President that enactment of a definitive civil rights program is "imperative—however long it may take and however troublesome it may be."

Battle lines had formed in advance as Southern Democrats, put on notice that the President would recommend federal legislation on equal accommodations in hotels, restaurants, stores, began preparing their filibuster, and estimates were freely made that two or three months might be required to break the blockade and pass legislation in the Senate.

The AFL-CIO has long since put itself on record as favoring the measures Kennedy proposed —including an equal employment opportunities law, a public accommodations law guaranteeing minority groups access to hotels, stores and restaurants, and stiff voting rights guarantees.

Pres. George Meany just six days earlier, when Kennedy called in 300 union officials for a White House conference, had pledged the President "unstinting assistance" from labor in "the prompt achievement of a full, enforceable civil

(Continued on Page 12)

Major Job Expansion Seen In New Steel Agreements

SENIOR CITIZENS from 40 states invited their lawmakers to pose with them on the steps of the Capitol and this picture resulted. The seniors attended the second annual convention of the National Council of Senior Citizens in Washington and lobbied for passage of legislation to provide hospital insurance through social security.

Kennedy Tells Seniors:

Health Care Passage Possible This Year

By Eugene A. Kelly

Senior citizens cheered like happy juniors on the last day of school when Pres. Kennedy told them, at a Washington convention attended by 1,600 delegates from 40 states, that a bill to provide hospital care for the aged through social security can be passed at this session of Congress.

They voted enthusiastically to launch a nationwide letter-writing campaign; paraded down Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol with a steam calliope and 5,000 multicolored balloons; posed for a picture on the Capitol steps with all the legislators they could inveigle outside; then scattered for home determined to win passage of their favored bill.

Forand Reelected

Before adjournment they reelected former Rep. Aime J. Forand, recovering at home from pneumonia, as president of the National Council of Senior Citizens; presented 10 Forand awards to seniors for outstanding service to the movement; and vowed to rouse the grassroots to the need for action now.

The President went to the convention hotel to tell delegates he is still convinced of the necessity for passing this "very vital piece of legislation" and was cheered lustily when he said:

"My prediction certainly is that, if the members of the Congress have an opportunity to vote

(Continued on Page 9)

African ILO Walkout Protests 'Apartheid'

Geneva—A conflict between two deeply-held principles of democracy—the right of free speech as governed by "the rule of law" and sharp rejection of all forms of race discrimination—has divided the Intl. Labor Organization's 47th conference here.

Thirty-two African nations, most of them newly independent of colonial bondage, have left the conference in protest against the continued presence of a delegation from South Africa, whose white supremacy policy has made that nation an international outcast.

Other democratic countries in the 108 member-nation ILO, while sharing fully the repugnance at South Africa's "apartheid" doctrine, have refused to abandon the tripartite UN agency.

When the conflict first boiled up, over the right of the South African employer delegate to speak at a general session, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a meeting of worker delegates that the South African had a right to the floor under the conference's rules. But when the speech began, Meany left the hall to express his personal dis-

(Continued on Page 12)

Kennedy, Meany to Fly To Berlin

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will meet Pres. Kennedy in Wiesbaden in the West German Republic and will fly with the President to Berlin on June 26 for a visit to the Berlin Wall and for speeches to a West German building trades union convention.

Kennedy will be winding up a visit to the West German Republic, where he is scheduled to confer with Chancellor Adenauer, Berlin's Mayor Willy Brandt and other officials. Meany will fly to Wiesbaden from Geneva, Switzerland, where he has been attending sessions of the Intl. Labor Organization as a member of the U.S. worker delegation.

The federation president will introduce Kennedy to the trade union convention in West Berlin and both the President and Meany will speak to the delegates from the convention platform.

Kennedy will also make a speech elsewhere in Berlin and both are rated as important. His speech to the union will be heard via loud speakers outside the convention chamber, Congress Hall.

From a platform at the Berlin Wall the President will be able to look over the obstructions into East Germany.

Union Gains 13-Week Vacations

Pittsburgh—The Steelworkers' 170-member Wage Policy Committee has approved basic changes in the union's contracts with the 11 "big steel" firms, including a job-creating provision for 13-week vacations every five years affecting about half the 400,000 employes of the companies.

The committee instructed USWA officers to call negotiating committees into session immediately for the purpose of incorporating the settlement terms into individual agreements.

The action followed a report from the joint union-industry Human Relations Committee, presented by USWA Pres. David J. McDonald, that the new plan "will create at least 15,000 new jobs" in the basic steel operations of the 11 big steel companies alone, and will mean many thousands of additional jobs if extended throughout the union's jurisdiction.

Terms of the new agreement were approved by the wage policy body — the key group in the USWA's collective bargaining system—after being worked out in intensive discussions by the smaller joint Human Relations Committee.

The 10-member HRC was set up by the union and industry following the 116-day steel strike in 1959 to provide a forum for year-round discussion of problems affecting both sides. It was given authority to seek mutually-satisfactory solutions to these problems for recommendation to the parties, but not to reach binding agreements on its own.

A clause permitting current con-

(Continued on Page 3)

Work Rules Talks Spurred By President

At Pres. Kennedy's request, deadlocked negotiators in the railroad work rules dispute have returned to the bargaining table to make "one last major effort" to settle their differences.

The President summoned rail union and management officials to the White House and warned them that "the whole future of free collective bargaining and of the effectiveness of the Railway Labor Act" is involved with the success or failure of their negotiations.

Kennedy set a July 10 deadline for an agreement and served notice that if the deadlock isn't broken by then "there will be no

(Continued on Page 3)

GIRL PICKET ON A HORSE gets horse laugh from horseless girl pickets in Jackson, Mich., where 300 workers walked 31 days to win a new contract from the I. M. Dach Underwear Co. The equestrienne is Striker Rena King on her horse Tony, who took regular turns alongside pickets until the walkout was won by Clothing Workers' Local 431.

Woodworkers, Carpenters File Lockout Charges Against 'Big Six'

Portland, Ore.—The first major strike in the U.S. lumber and wood products industry since 1954 has triggered illegal lockout charges by the Woodworkers and the Carpenters against West Coast employers known popularly as the "Big Six."

Some 4,000 employes of the U.S. Plywood Corp. and the St. Regis Paper Co. walked out of the woods, camps and shops June 5 when contract talks broke down. The next day four other firms laid off 16,000 non-striking employes and the unions filed unfair labor practice charges against the Big Six with the National Labor Relations Board.

Pickets have been posted at California, Oregon and Washington locations of the two struck firms but not at operations of the four companies where lockouts exist — the Weyerhaeuser Co., Crown Zellerbach Corp., Intl. Paper Co. and Ravonier, Inc.

Strike authorization had been voted by heavy majorities in IWA locals at Eugene, Mapleton, Reedsport, Willamina and Roseburg, Ore., and at Seattle, Tacoma and Olympia, Wash. The Lumber & Sawmill Workers, affiliated with the Carpenters, walked out after strike votes at Lebanon, Ore.; Redding, Calif., and Seattle, Tacoma, Kosmos and Morton, Wash.

A union leader said that in 1962 and other years, the unions recognized industry problems and did not press demands for a wage increase. He added:

"Last year we placed the industry on notice that the employers should be prepared to grant a substantial wage increase in 1963 or face a strike."

The strike has been forced, he continued, by the industry's refusal to grant a reasonable wage increase or recognize the loggers' "travel time" problem.

The Lumber & Sawmill Workers broke off talks with the employers' bargaining committee June 3, but delayed strike action. The IWA halted negotiations June 4 when a management spokesman stated the employers' position: "Our view of the economics of the industry differs from yours. Our position is unchanged. It will remain unchanged even if you take . . . action."

The spokesman, according to union sources, was Vice Pres. Lowry Wyatt of Weyerhaeuser.

The union charges of unfair practices were filed against the employers as members of a newly-formed association and as individual firms.

Pres. Harvey Nelson of IWA Regional Council No. 3, said his union offered to settle for:

- A 15-cent general increase this year, with pay differentials for skilled workers; another 7.5 cents next June 1, plus a 3.5 percent general raise a year later.
- Travel time pay for loggers based on this formula: Pay for all woods employes who ride crew buses for all hours in excess of 10, excluding lunch periods, between departure times to and from a central pickup point.
- Employer recognition of problems created by automation.

The employers not only rejected these proposals but demanded weakening contract clauses on hours, overtime and grievance procedure, according to the IWA.

The Lumber & Sawmill Workers have been asking for a 60-cent hourly wage package spread over three years.

The two unions have reported strong industry opposition to proposals they call "fair and reasonable." Bargaining sessions with another firm, the Simpson Timber Co., have been scheduled for June 25.

Talks on Job Security Asked by Oil Workers

Denver—The petroleum industry has been asked by the Oil Workers to join in setting up joint labor-management study committees on job stabilization so as "to consider means of preventing or retarding the layoff of oil workers while meeting industry demands for increased efficiency."

The program, advanced by OCAW Pres. O. A. Knight, was endorsed by a committee of 10 rank-and-file delegates from across the country meeting as the union's National Oil Bargaining Committee.

"What we propose to do," said Knight, "is to ask management to sit down with us in study sessions —not in negotiations, at this point —and explore new means of providing the maximum possible guarantee of job security for our people while at the same time providing for a maximum of efficiency and economy in operation of the industry's facilities."

"Exploratory contacts" with the oil companies, he said, would begin promptly. The union, he indicated, will seek advice and guidance in the program "from economists, labor-management relations experts and industrial planners not connected with either labor or management."

It is the union's hope, Knight said, that a joint approach to job stabilization "will remove a cause of friction which has caused many oil industry strikes in the past five years."

Management, he pointed out, has consistently demanded "increased flexibility" in the assignment of employes to various jobs and this has met with "resistance from union members who object to the breakdown of traditional work practices."

A key factor, he indicated, has been that the "widespread feelings of job insecurity" have occurred in a time of general "spreading unemployment."

The problem previously has been handled on a "piecemeal basis," he observed, and possibly both union and management have been taking the "wrong approach."

"Perhaps the solution lies in areas which neither side has yet thought of," he added.

'Union Headquarters' Visit Filmed by IAM

The Machinists have produced a full color moving picture titled "Union Headquarters," featuring a visit to the IAM headquarters in Washington by Ken Becker, Baltimore, Md., an IAM member, and his wife.

The 16 mm film, intended for showing to union or school groups, may be rented for $5 or purchased. It is 24 minutes in length.

Brown's Bid Accepted:

Peace Talks Urged For Newspapers

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Pres. Elmer Brown of the Typographical Union has endorsed the idea of a "summit" meeting among leaders of newspaper unions and management to explore ways of avoiding long and costly labor disputes such as the recent New York and Cleveland strikes.

Writing in the June issue of the Typographical Journal, the ITU's monthly magazine, Brown suggested that the agenda for such a conference be limited to newspaper production costs, automation in the publishing industry and collective bargaining.

He said the only "string" he would attach to the proposal is that it involve participants with "top responsibility" in the areas proposed for discussion.

The ITU president noted that suggestions for such a meeting have come from public officials (including Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz) and labor relations experts "who obviously are sincere and who have demonstrated that they are fair-minded," as well as from others who were "quick to attempt to place the blame" for the New York strike-lockout on the printers.

"Somewhere between the positions of the two groups must be the consensus of the general public and those who were most affected by the dispute," Brown said.

"The metropolitan newspaper blackout, which was largely management-inspired, was somewhat like the 'irresistible force meeting the immovable object.' Millions of people were affected, some profoundly. It is not trite to say that it shouldn't have happened, but it did. Nor is it merely wishful thinking to say that it shouldn't happen again.

All Costs Up

"It is well known that newspapers for many years have been faced with troublesome problems in the heavy increases in production costs. By the same token, newspaper production workers have had to cope with the ever-increasing cost of living."

Brown said that while the attitudes of management and labor would seem to be diametrically opposed, a serious study would show that they are not irreconcilable.

He said newspaper unions, particularly his own, could give publishers some good, "money-saving advice" on how to cut costs through efficient production and plant modernization without "downgrading" the wages and working conditions of their employes.

"And we are anxious to do just that if they will listen with open minds," he declared.

Following publication of Brown's "summit" proposal the American Newspaper Publishers Association, through its special committee on labor relations, announced it had invited Brown and Presidents Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen, William J. Hall of the Photo Engravers and James H. Sampson, Stereotypers, to meet with publishers "at the earliest mutually agreeable time."

Kerr Calls Meeting

Brown's office said he has not yet received the invitation, nor one from Pres. Clark Kerr of the University of California to a meeting announced for Sept. 17-19.

Kerr said he will invite 30 publishers, union presidents and arbitrators to discuss "possible solutions" to collective bargaining problems of the industry at off-the-record sessions in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Leather Goods Union Pledges Rights Battle

Atlantic City—Delegates to the 10th convention of the Leather Goods Workers heard AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler call on all Americans to join "a crusade to bridge the moral gap between America's democratic promise and the ugly practices in the area of civil rights."

With this appeal underscored by similar expressions from New Jersey's Gov. Richard J. Hughes and Sen. Harrison A. Williams, both Democrats, Leather Goods Workers Pres. Norman Zukowsky pledged full cooperation with the AFL-CIO in "this continuing battle which is the great moral issue of our time."

The 350 delegates representing nearly 40,000 workers in the leather goods, plastics and novelty industries—an alltime high in the union's history—rose in silent prayer for Medgar Evers, Negro civil rights leader in Jackson, Miss., who was assassinated.

In the economic field, the delegates authorized raising per capita dues from 22 to 25 cents a week to finance a broader organizing campaign and an effort for contract uniformity.

For the immediate future the union will seek minimum standards regarding hours, wages, job classifications and fringe benefits in all collective bargaining agreements. The ultimate objective is a single nationwide agreement in each industry with which the union bargains.

The convention also raised the minimum local dues from 50 cents to 85 cents a week to strengthen their financial structure.

In other actions the convention:

- Instructed the incoming 31-member executive board to take steps toward affiliation with the Leather & Shoe Workers Federation, international trade union secretariat associated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.
- Urged Congress to repeal the existing 10 percent excise tax on leather products.
- Approved the launching of a union label drive.
- Asked for clear definition of worker protections in the Trade Adjustment Act to safeguard union members who "are losing jobs" as a result of increased imports.
- Endorsed political action through the Committee on Political Education and the AFL-CIO's legislative program, particularly tax reduction and social security hospital care for the aged.

Training School Hails 'Outstanding' Unionist

Peoria, Ill.—Thomas C. Jackson was cited as "outstanding labor person of the year" when the Union Counselors Training School held graduation exercises for 62 union members after a 10-week course. Jackson, of Auto Workers' Local 974, has been active in the United Fund, Heart Association and Peoria Community Chest.

4.1 Million Still Unemployed:

Non-Farm Job Rise Goes into 4th Month

The job pickup in non-farm industries continued in May, registering a better-than-seasonal gain for the fourth straight month, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The detailed job report showed an increase of 350,000 on non-farm payrolls—"twice the normal April-May change"—to a total of 56.2 million. The key manufacturing sector rose by 80,000 to 16.8 million although there usually is little change at this time, the report said.

Earlier, the Labor Dept.'s summary job report—based on Census Bureau surveys—showed total unemployment sticking at 4.1 million in May, instead of declining, because of "an unusually sharp increase" in teen-age job-seekers.

The influx of teen-age jobhunters, up by 300,000 over April, pushed the national seasonally-adjusted jobless rate to 5.9 percent in May from April's 5.7 percent. The teen-age jobless rate rose to 18 percent from April's 16 percent.

The Labor Dept. said the over-the-month improvement in the non-farm job picture was centered in durable goods, with soft goods showing mostly small seasonal movements.

"In hard goods," the report said, "employment increased at a stronger-than-usual pace in the five metals and metal-using industry groups."

The report showed that the steel industry group, while increasing by 14,000 over the month to a total of 1,189,000, still remained 4,900 jobs below May 1962.

With the extra-seasonal gain of 80,000 jobs in manufacturing, there was a seasonally-expected boost of 160,000 jobs in contract construction to a total of 2.7 million and a gain of 78,000 in the service trades to a total of 8 million.

In wholesale and retail trade, the report said, the decline of 45,000 jobs to a total of 11.7 million was about half the decrease expected following the Easter season.

The factory workweek rose a little more than seasonally, increasing by half an hour to 40.4 hours. Part of this rise was attributed to the resumption of the usual workweek following the religious holidays in April. However, longer hours were spread throughout the 21 major industry groups.

The most significant movement, the report noted, was the one full hour boost in transportation equipment as auto production rose and continued at near record levels.

Average hourly earnings of factory production workers were reported steady at $2.45 while the big gain in the workweek pushed up average weekly earnings by $1.22 over April to $98.98. This weekly total was an all-time high and 2 percent above May a year ago.

Total employment rose by 1 million to 69.1 million in May, the report continued, some 850,000 above a year earlier.

The total labor force, which includes the armed services, increased seasonally by 1 million to 75.9 million in May, after five months of greater-than-seasonal gains, the report said. This put the labor force 1.1 million above May 1962.

Armour Plant Closes, 1,100 Jobs Wiped Out

Sioux City, Ia.—The closing of the Armour & Co. meat packing plant here has wiped out the jobs of 1,100 members of Packinghouse Workers Local 34. It was the 17th plant closed by the big packing chain in the past 10 years with the consequent elimination of 12,310 jobs.

The final membership meeting of Local 34 the night the plant closed heard a pledge from UPWA Field Rep. John Davidchik that the union "will still be here" to help displaced workers. He announced that the union stewards would work with the staff of the unemployment compensation office to take the claims of workers in the union hall this week.

Under an agreement negotiated by UPWA with Armour in 1959, the joint union-management automation committee will work in several ways to ease the impact of the plant closing.

Workers can elect to receive technological adjustment pay, transfer to another Armour plant where a vacancy exists, take severance pay, or retire.

They may also choose a retraining program to fit them for other employment. Retraining has been undertaken in other cities where Armour has closed plants with results generally described as "meager."

The Armour plant here, the city's largest employer, was built around the turn of the century and in recent years has suffered from neglected maintenance. Some new equipment had been installed in the dilapidated building to meet the challenge of modernization in the packing industry, but no general program of improvements was ever carried out.

When Armour announced its intention to close the plant last March, the Chamber of Commerce began a campaign to blame the union for driving it from the city. A move was also made to induce workers to yield "concessions" to the company.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, in a meeting with the mayor, civic leaders and chamber representatives, informed the group, however, that a high official of the Armour chain had advised him the Sioux City operation would be closed "even if the employes worked for nothing."

Helstein also reminded the civic and business leaders that the number of production workers in the meat packing industry nationally had shrunk from 191,300 in 1956 to 159,500 in 1962. In the same period, output per man hour went from 63.47 pounds of meat to 80 pounds, but the labor cost per pound advanced only from 3.43 cents in 1956 to 3.46 cents last year, Helstein reported.

UPWA is making a strong bid to have five projected Armour installations named as replacement plants for the Sioux City operation. The first one of these to open will be in West Point, Neb., about 50 miles distant.

All the new plants will be hog and cattle killing operations only. Carcasses will be shipped to points nearer to the point of retail sale under Armour's new production and merchandising program.

STEELWORKERS' LEADERS—Pres. David J. McDonald, center; Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, left, and Vice Pres. Howard R. Hague are shown just before the USWA executive board convened in Pittsburgh to hear reports of developments flowing from union discussions with steel industry spokesmen in the joint Human Relations Committee.

Steel Vacation Plan Aims at More Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

tracts to be reopened by either side at any time after last May 1 provided the background against which this year's HRC talks were pursued.

The new agreement extends the expiration dates of the contracts about a year to mid-1965 by requiring the parties to serve 120 days' notice, to be given not earlier than Jan. 1, 1965, of any plan to terminate.

No wage increase is provided, but company contributions to the vacation savings plan negotiated in 1960 are increased from the present 3 cents an hour to 12.5 cents an hour. This is expected to build the fund sufficiently to cover the new five-year plan for extended vacations, which will become effective next Jan. 1.

McDonald said the new plan would bring USWA members some 3 million additional weeks of paid vacation valued at more than $100 million. He said this would not only create new job opportunities and benefits for senior employes, but would also enhance the promotion prospects of junior workers.

A USWA spokesman outlined the plan as follows:

The top half of the employe seniority roster at each company will receive 13-week vacations every five years in addition to regular vacations in other years. They will also receive an added vacation credit of one week for each five years of service, which they may accumulate until retirement, but may not take until then.

The lower half of the seniority roster will continue to build up supplementary vacation credits as long as funds are available under the plan, and estimates are that it will yield enough to give them at least an additional one week for each two years of service.

It is expected that about 5 percent of the affected employes will become eligible for the extended vacations every three months. An employe who qualifies for the 13-week benefit and thereafter retires will receive an additional benefit of one week for each six months between the date the 13 weeks was earned and the date he retires.

Excess Reserves

If the vacation savings fund should build up to the point that is more than enough to underwrite the program, the excess reserves will be used, first, to advance workers in the lower seniority group into the top group to fill vacancies and take account of possible expansion of the work force.

If surplus funds are still available a "bonus" of an additional week's pay will be given under a rotation system starting at the top of the seniority roster and working down.

Other changes call for:

- Improved hospitalization insurance providing up to 365 days of hospital care per illness instead of the present 120-day limit.
- An increase of $10 a week in sickness and accident benefits, raising the average benefit to $67.50 a week.
- An increase of $500 in group life insurance coverage.
- Clear limitations on the contracting-out of production, maintenance or day-to-day repair work performed in the plant, and the establishment of local plant "watchdog" committees on the contracting-out problem.
- Spelling-out of limits under which supervisors may perform work within the jurisdiction of the bargaining unit.
- Company notification and discussion with the union of overtime scheduling in situations which might permit employes on layoff to be recalled.
- Continuation of the Human Relations Committee.

The parties also have worked out procedures for completing a new job classification manual by July 1. The manual, the compilation of which was agreed upon in 1962 negotiations, will apply to all jobs established or changed since last Jan. 1.

D. C. Center Offers Apprenticeship Aid

A new District of Columbia Apprenticeship Information Center has been opened to "help make apprenticeship information and opportunities available to all segments of the population."

Jointly coordinated by government, school and apprenticeship council officials, the center is designed to counsel youth on opportunities and to refer interested youngsters to employers and joint labor-management apprenticeship committees as applicants.

Said Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning: "There is no more important business than seeing to it that the nation's education and training programs are improved and expanded. It is particularly important that we eliminate once and for all the waste of human resources caused by racial discrimination."

City Health Post Goes to Unionist

Paterson, N. J.—This city's new health commissioner is Martin Ross, vice president-business agent of Hotel & Restaurant Workers' Local 158.

Work Rules Talks Set Up By Kennedy

(Continued from Page 1)

alternative to the enactment of new legislation which will protect the public against a loss of its rail transport."

"The effect of such legislation on free collective bargaining will be incalculable," he declared.

Both sides promptly agreed to the President's request for intensified negotiations during which the railroads will refrain from unilaterally imposing their controversial work rules proposals.

A chief stumbling block to a settlement of the three-and-a-half-year dispute has been the railroads' demand for abolition of the jobs of all locomotive firemen except those in passenger service.

Other major issues in dispute involve working conditions, pay rates and work jurisdiction affecting all operating crafts — the Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Conductors & Brakemen, Locomotive Engineers, and Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

The President reiterated his belief in free collective bargaining as "a keystone of private democracy," but emphasized that "it has to work."

Charging that there has been "no real bargaining" in the nearly three-and-a-half years of the dispute, Kennedy declared:

"This case has already dragged on much too long. There has been one postponement of the hour of showdown after another. Only the critical, crucial nature of the basic issues involved—especially the replacement of men by technology—justifies this at all."

Kennedy emphasized that new legislation would "necessarily" involve settling disputed issues through a third party and said:

"There is nothing which legislation can do which you are not free to do voluntarily, including the selection of your own special procedures if this is necessary to complete any part of your settlement.

"I urge you to act, as it is in your power to act, not only to settle this case but to preserve the freedom of private collective bargaining."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Assistant Sec. James Reynolds, and members of the National Mediation Board are actively participating in the negotiations.

Hospital Signs Union Shop Agreement

New York—Mount Sinai Hospital, which fought union recognition during a bitter 46-day strike in 1959, has signed a union shop contract providing wage increases and fringe benefits for 1,750 employes.

Local 1199 of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union said the agreement provides immediate wage increases of $4 to $8 weekly, additional increases of 5 percent in each of the next two years, and wage openers subject to arbitration in the final two years of the five-year contract.

Other improvements include 10 paid holidays, up to four weeks' vacation, sick leave cumulative up to 20 days, three days off with pay in case of death in an employe's immediate family or when the employe is married, and one day off with pay when a worker's wife gives birth.

Employes taking courses to improve their skills will be allowed up to $100 a semester for tuition.

Earlier, Local 1199 announced the signing of a first contract with St. John's Episcopal Hospital in Brooklyn, providing 30-cent hourly wage increases for 277 employes.

Youth Training Pilot Project To Help 2,500

The Labor Dept. will provide funds for a pilot project aimed at helping 2,500 out-of-work, out-of-school youth in Los Angeles prepare themselves for jobs.

The program, to be administered by the Youth Opportunities Board of Greater Los Angeles, will include testing, counseling and training of minority and disadvantaged youngsters between 16 and 22 who have little or no work experience.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the youngsters presently "face a bleak job future, but through this program we hope to create a promising outlook for each individual."

Special training courses will be given to about 1,200 youth to help them for potential jobs. The others will be tested and counseled for referral to existing work opportunities. Many will be given remedial instruction, the Labor Dept. said.

The Youth Opportunities Board, which will administer the half-million dollar program provided under the Manpower Development & Training Act, has been set up by a joint agreement between four public agencies, Los Angeles County and the State of California.

Wirtz termed it "a new approach to the solution of youth problems which could serve as an example throughout the country."

MUSICIANS PRES. Herman D. Kenin pins a convention badge on Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N. J.), left, sponsor of the union-backed bill to establish a federal Advisory Council on the Arts. While the convention was in session, Pres. Kennedy established such a council by executive order.

AFM Hails Kennedy On Council for Arts

Miami Beach—When delegates to the Musicians convention here heard the news that Pres. Kennedy had issued an executive order establishing an Advisory Council for the Arts, this is what happened—as reported by AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin in a telegram to Kennedy:

"They rose and cheered you, and instructed me to inform you promptly on behalf of the quarter of a million musicians they represent of their gratitude for this significant recognition of music and the performing arts.

"Over the years in which we have urged on Congress this enlightened approach to governmental recognition of its responsibilities to the cultural areas, we have been encouraged by the support we received at the executive end of Pennsylvania Ave.—and we musicians are grateful for it."

Earlier in the convention, the 1,200 delegates gave a demonstrative welcome to Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), who has sponsored legislation to set up such a council in the past two Congresses.

Thompson told the convention that a federal body is needed "to awaken, stimulate and encourage the reservoir of artistic feeling and spirit in this nation."

Union Praised

Praising the Musicians for their annual Congress of Strings summer scholarship program for talented young people, Thompson declared that "despite what you hear pouring from jukeboxes," the United States is not "a cultural desert."

But culture, he said, "should be nourished from the earliest years and this, I submit, should be a matter of national concern."

The council set up by presidential order will include government officials and private citizens representing various branches of creative art.

Delegates unanimously approved a resolution declaring civil rights to be "a special concern of free, democratic unionism" and writing into the Musicians' by-laws the anti-discrimination principles of the AFL-CIO Constitution.

Another resolution strongly urged the Federal Communications Commission to continue on-site hearings for renewal of radio and television broadcasting licenses. The resolution criticized the paucity of the use of live talent by broadcasters and heavy scheduling of old movies, network presentations and syndicated film packages.

Biennial Conventions

The AFM's convention will be held in Portland, Ore., and union spokesmen said contractual obligations bind the Musicians to a 1965 convention in Minneapolis. Unless changed by future convention action, that will be the union's last annual convention.

Delegates, as part of a package proposal revamping the AFM's financial structure, voted to shift to biennial conventions thereafter.

'Time Is Running Out' On Jobs, CWA Warns

Kansas City, Mo.—A strong statement on economic policy adopted by the Communications Workers' 25th anniversary convention here warned that "time is running out" on the public's tolerance of high unemployment levels in the United States and Canada.

The statement adopted by the 2,500 delegates from some 300 CWA locals called for the building of an economy "that is growing at a sufficient pace" to provide jobs for workers presently unemployed, for the increasing numbers being displaced by automation and for the millions of young people entering the labor force.

In a highlight of the convention, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther addressed the annual banquet and declared that "everything we have in the UAW, all of the financial and moral and organizational support we can muster, sits with you at Michigan Bell."

Negotiators for the CWA, headed by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, were scheduled shortly after the convention adjourned to resume bargaining with Michigan Bell, the lead-off company in the union's current round of contract renewal talks with the Bell system.

Earlier, the delegates had heard Walter W. Heller, chairman of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, describe how the President's proposed tax cut program would stimulate the economy. Heller put his examples in the immediate terms of the earnings and take-home pay of CWA members.

Tax Plan Backed

A convention resolution described the Kennedy tax plan as "a step in the right direction" but urged that the cut be concentrated in the lowest income brackets and take effect immediately, rather than be phased out over three years.

Another resolution offered the CWA's "wholehearted" support to the President in carrying out the civil rights program he had just set forth in his television speech to the nation.

A later motion by a Shreveport, La., delegate opposed the use of CWA dues to support any ethnic group in programs that would "tend to divide" the membership, or "hinder" organizing or COPE collections. It was defeated on a roll call by a weighted vote of 165,521 to 91,448, with 16,740 abstentions.

A resolution reaffirming the union's support for the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education drew attention to the fact that the CWA has for the 8th successive year met its full COPE quota of $34,225.

Acting COPE Dir. Al Barkan said CWA members should be especially proud of this year's record because it was achieved with the year only half gone. He gave special praise to the 161 CWA locals which have met or exceeded the goal of $1 contribution to COPE from every member.

Other resolutions adopted by the delegates supported, among other things, an intensified organizing effort, federal aid to education, social security hospital insurance for the aged, enactment of the youth employment opportunities bill, and expanded public works.

CWA Gets Thanks For 'Hi-Mom' Role

On behalf of the armed forces, Assistant Sec. of Defense Norman S. Paul has thanked the Communications Workers through Pres. Joseph A. Beirne for their role in the "Hi-Mom" program last Christmas.

The program, financed by the union and its members, enabled more than 1,000 service men and women to make telephone calls to their homes on last Christmas Day.

"Your 'Hi-Mom' program is a tangible demonstration of your organization's interest and concern with the sacrifices of our service personnel stationed overseas," Paul wrote.

Part of 'Revolutionary' Change:

African Unions Play Major Social Role

The trade union movement in Africa has a greater role to play than its counterpart in the United States because it is a vital part of the social, economic and political structures in each nation, according to Maida Springer of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs.

African unions, she asserted, are "part of the revolutionary social change in a country moving from dependency to an independent" status.

"The trade union movement," she added, "was a part of that articulate voice and support which in many instances made independence realizable."

Saw Kenya Institute

Mrs. Springer recently attended the opening of the Institute of Tailoring & Cutting in Kenya and before returning also visited the Congo, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Senegal and Nigeria.

Her views were aired on the public service program Labor News Conference, presented over the Mutual Broadcasting System's radio network.

African union leaders who have come to this country for training have been "stimulated and encouraged," she said, but so far as their work and the challenge to remove colonial dependency is concerned, they "never needed an outside impetus." One of the things we may have contributed, she went on, "is a better sense of organization—to their membership and to a whole social concept."

"When you remember the level of training and the limitations on education," Mrs. Springer said, "the trade union movement naturally was in the forefront of the struggle. Some of the leaders across Africa today—the prime ministers, the heads of departments of government—are former trade union leaders, some still holding very high posts."

Under questioning by Simeon Booker, Washington bureau chief of the Johnson Publications, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc., Mrs. Springer maintained there is "no flat answer" as to the rise of labor political parties.

"The politics and the developments are as diverse as in any other part of the world," she explained. "Certainly developments in Nigeria will be very different from developments in Tanganyika. By the same token, some of the developments in the Congo will be much different from those in some other areas."

What she does expect to see, she said, is "a lot of the leadership of the trade union movement moving on to government responsibility."

In discussing the Kenya tailoring institute, Mrs. Springer, a member of the Ladies' Garment Workers, said that nation has one of the most highly developed needle industries on the continent. Before the opening of the institute, which is training some 70 students, instruction was offered only in two government schools with a capacity of 22 trainees a year.

Women Admitted

"The union offers a service to its members and looks toward the future of the industry that will come and gives, for the first time, women an opportunity," she said. "The government schools I am talking about never admitted women."

As to the effect of the "Negro uprising" in this country on Africa, Mrs. Springer said:

"It certainly never compliments the United States. Every report of incidents in the U.S. not only excites but inflames the African community. The people who try to understand and respect what the U.S. has done as a former revolutionary country are hard put to answer."

N. J. Labor Supports Hughes on Bond Issue

Atlantic City—More than 3,000 delegates representing 1,500 local unions affiliated with the New Jersey State AFL-CIO gave full backing to Gov. Richard J. Hughes in his battle to finance a badly needed $750 million state construction program through a bond issue rather than a sales tax.

The convention, rejecting the 3 percent sales tax proposed by an advisory council named by Hughes, called upon voters to approve the bond issue in a referendum next November and prevent the imposition of the sales tax that would bear most heavily on low-income and middle-income families.

Hughes himself had previously rejected the advisory group's proposals and offered the bond issue as an alternative.

The convention, the first assembly of the State AFL-CIO since its merger convention two years ago, hailed the progress achieved in political education, civil rights, legislation, political education and community services.

Speakers included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, U.S. Senators Clifford P. Case (R) and Harrison A. Williams (D) and many union officials.

Murphy on Rights

The civil rights issue took on commanding significance when Pres. Vincent J. Murphy departed from the prepared text of his report to warn that "much of the South is aflame" and that there are "plentiful evidences of unrest and discrimination" in New Jersey and other northern states.

"I am wholly in agreement with the demand for an end to segregation, and the program of Pres. Kennedy should be supported by all of us," Murphy declared.

"It is the elimination of 'de facto' segregation that constitutes the most difficult problem," he observed, and "we will be compelled to handle each case on its merits until an overall solution is found."

He pointed out that building trades union officials and he had met with Hughes June 5 in a "most constructive" conference, and that a State Building Trades Council convention had voted to cooperate with any civil rights committee designated by the governor.

He also called on the State AFL-CIO civil rights committee to cooperate with its officers and the building trades "to demonstrate both to ourselves and to the public at large that the trade union movement is not only free of discrimination but in fact is one of the leaders in the fight."

Murphy sharply criticized the state highway commissioner, Dwight Palmer, for failing to push a roads-building program and called for his resignation.

First Scholarship Winners Graduate

RICHARD J. OLSON
With AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Schnitzler

CHRISTOPHER P. EHRET

DAVID J. KENNEDY

JOYCE E. ZARS

LARRY CLYDE HEADLEY

BRUCE H. KOLE

Original Scholarship Winners Getting Degrees This Month

The AFL-CIO's first class of merit scholarship winners graduates from college this month after having compiled an impressive record of academic honors and achievements.

When the federation in 1959 launched what has become an annual program of awarding four-year scholarships to promising high school graduates from all sections of the nation, it changed the lives of the five boys and a girl who were the first selected.

Larry Clyde Headley, who recently wrote the AFL-CIO that he never would have been able to attend West Virginia University without the help of the scholarship, graduated first in his class, has been elected to Phi Beta Kappa, and has been awarded a three-year graduate grant from the National Aeronautics & Space Agency to continue his education and carry on research in nuclear physics.

On the eve of his graduation, the president of the university wrote that the AFL-CIO "may be very proud" of Headley's accomplishments.

Headley, whose widowed mother died during his freshman year, worked during both high school and college while winning academic honors.

The five other 1959 scholarship winners also justified the promise they showed during their high school careers.

Bruce Henry Kole, Oak Park, Mich., whose father had been an active member of the Auto Workers before his death in 1958, is continuing at the Medical School of the University of Michigan.

He took his pre-medical training at Wayne University, where he made the dean's list and was a leader in student activities. Despite a heavy load of scientific courses, he found time to take a labor course and recently wrote the AFL-CIO:

'Work Together'

"When men can work together in a group in order to bring the improvement of man, there can be no higher good. The AFL-CIO is working towards this goal. And the scholarship, a product of this, makes me most grateful."

Joyce Ellen Zars, whose father is a chauffeur in Chicago, did so well at Massachusetts Institute of Technology that she received a $500 a year grant from the university in addition to her AFL-CIO scholarship. She is to be married this month and wrote:

"My husband and I are planning to work and travel for a year or two before resuming studies. We are considering applying to the Peace Corps . . ."

In addition to scientific and technical subjects, Miss Zars took a course in labor relations—and made an A.

"I wish again to thank the AFL-CIO and all its members for making this possible," she wrote.

Christopher Paul Ehret of Santa Paula, Calif., entered California Institute of Technology, but decided his chief academic interests were in the humanities. He switched to the University of Redlands and did so well that he has been awarded a graduate fellowship in history and African studies at Northeastern University. He plans to marry in August.

At Redlands he has been an editor of the student paper, a member of the baseball and tennis teams and, in the words of the president of the university, "a very outstanding student."

His studies included a course on labor problems and he wrote that he has "thoroughly enjoyed" reading the AFL-CIO magazine, the American Federationist, which is sent monthly to scholarship winners.

To Do Graduate Work

Richard John Olson, whose father is a member of the Railroad Telegraphers at Council Bluffs, Ia., is another June graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He has been awarded a teaching assistantship at Iowa State University in theoretical mathematics and electronics, and he will take his graduate work there.

He took a labor relations course at MIT and found it "so interesting" that he took a labor economics course the following year and went on to a senior year seminar in labor problems.

David James Kennedy, whose father is a 23-year member of Postal Clerks Local 4, Louisville, Ky., and whose late grandfather was a member of the same local for 40 years, is graduating from the University of Notre Dame, where he majored in physics.

His record won him a graduate assistantship at the University of Florida, where he will continue advanced studies in physics and astronomy.

He wrote that a course in American labor history "added a great deal to my own personal conviction concerning the labor movement" and to his awareness of the significances of the union label.

Expressing appreciation to the AFL-CIO, he said:

"My life has been changed by this scholarship."

President of Israel Histadrut Founder

The newly-elected president of Israel, Shmeour Zalman Shazar, was a participant in negotiations in 1919 under the sponsorship of the World Zionist Organization which resulted in the foundation of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

A one-time farm worker in Palestine, he joined the staff of Davar, Histadrut's daily newspaper, in 1925 and eventually became its editor, retaining the post until he became minister of education.

Shazar was the author of Israel's Declaration of Independence, a founding member of Mapai, the Labor Party, and wrote Mapai's 1943 manifesto calling world attention to the gas chamber slaughter of Jews by Hitler.

UPWA Pact Ends 6-Month Strike

Lubbock, Tex.—Strikes of 250 Packinghouse Workers against warehouses and a packing firm owned by Roy Furr, supermarket and cafeteria operator, have ended in a new agreement approved by striking members of UPWA Locals 783 and 788.

Dist. 5 Dir. George Thomas said the agreement provides for union recognition, six paid holidays, seniority, grievance procedure including arbitration, severance pay, sick leave, a retirement plan and a progression system based on length of service at these wage rates: produce warehouse, $1.40 to $1.73 an hour; order pullers, $1.625 to $1.84; checkers, $1.785 to $2; fork lift operators, $1.84 to $2.05; gang leaders, $2.25.

Warehouse workers struck Dec. 16 for an initial contract and Lubbock Packing workers Jan. 23.

RLCA Names Rev. Webber Field Director

Rev. Charles C. Webber, who retired recently as AFL-CIO religious relations representative, has been named a field director of the Religion & Labor Council of America.

Possessor of a long background of service in both the church and the labor movement, he has been an RLCA board member for several years and represents the Division of Christian Life & Work on the general board of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

Rev. Roy McCorkel and Jacob Clayman, RLCA co-chairmen for religion and labor, respectively, also announced the resignation of Dr. Kenneth Watson as executive director of the organization. Dr. Watson is returning to California to resume his work as a minister of the Southern California-Arizona Methodist Conference and will represent the RLCA on the West Coast as a volunteer field director.

The co-chairmen announced these additional appointments following a board meeting in Washington:

- John G. Ramsay, RLCA treasurer and former co-chairman for labor, and community relations representative for the Steelworkers, to serve as administrative representative of the board in the direction of field and staff.
- Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman, as chairman of a program committee to counsel with the program director, Matthew K. Clark.
- Al Herling, public relations director of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, as chairman of an editorial committee to work with Dr. Clair M. Cook.

Memo to Class of '63

THE THOUSANDS of young men and women who are receiving their college degrees or high school diplomas this month as the Class of '63 will be entering a new phase in their careers in a complex and challenging period.

It is a period in which man's ability to explore the unknown regions of space and his ingenuity in developing increasingly sophisticated technologies still fall short of feeding the world's hungry, of providing full employment in freedom and in controlling the weapons of self-destruction.

It is a time also for America when a long-smoldering social revolution for equal rights has begun to blaze across the land and all the wisdom of the older generations and the energy of the new will be needed to help it achieve its goal under peaceful conditions.

★ ★ ★

THE MEMBERS of the Class of '63 moving directly into the job market will find a new premium on skills and depth and duration of formal education. They will find that their classmates who chose the job route before graduation, especially from high school, are finding decent jobs hard to come by.

They will find also that the level of wages, the vacations with pay, the health, welfare and pension plans, the hours of work and the myriad of working conditions by and large carry a union label—the results of struggle and strife of earlier generations to build a better world.

The union card they will be proffered in many plants, shops and offices is the hallmark of dignity, of self-respect, of social justice in an industrial democracy.

★ ★ ★

ELSEWHERE in this issue of the News is a story of the college careers of the first six students to be awarded AFL-CIO scholarships and their hopes for the future. The pride in their accomplishments is outweighed, however, by the thought of how many thousands of young Americans, given the same financial opportunity, would turn in similar records, enriching their own lives and the nation's resources.

The need for federal aid to education from the kindergarten to the graduate school becomes daily more acute and yet legislation to create such a program languishes in Congress.

Organized labor has long been in the forefront of the fight for an educational system that will allow every American youngster to achieve to the extent of his abilities without reference to economic or social ability or position.

The world which greets the Class of '63 illustrates sharply the need for an educational system that can produce citizens who can cope with and dig out the answers to a world in change.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, June 22, 1963 No. 25

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Support 'Broad and Deep':

Most Americans Seen Backing Social Security Hospital Care

The following is excerpted from an address by Assistant Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen to the 15th annual institute of the American Association of Hospital Accountants in Chicago.

PRACTICALLY ALL the arguments put forth against the President's proposal [on hospital insurance for the aged] are duplicates of the arguments we heard in 1935 when the original Social Security Act was passed.

This is not strange, for the principles behind the original old-age insurance, the survivors and disability insurance added later, and the current proposal for hospital insurance are exactly the same.

In 1935, it was said that social security would lead to regimentation, to the literal dogtagging of American workers. Opponents said it was socialism, unworkable, that it would mean government interference with both the individual and business.

It is rather commonly agreed today, of course, that these fears were unfounded.

The old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system is now paying $1.2 billion a month in benefits to over 18 million people—people who are retired or disabled or who are widows or orphans. Credits for these benefits were derived from the covered earnings of millions of American workers during the last quarter century. Their contributions and those of their employers to the social security trust funds made possible its financing completely independent of the general funds of the government and without the imposition of any "means test" before payment could be made.

The principle of social security—the combination of contributions and credits based on earnings—is commonly equated with the great American virtues of thrift, self-reliance, and a recognition of the dignity and importance of the individual.

Federal social insurance has been in existence in this country for 28 years. It works, and it works well.

Moreover, it works well without interfering with the lives of the people it protects.

No one tells social security beneficiaries how to spend their money.

No one can keep them from receiving their benefits. The rights under the system are enforceable in the courts of the land.

That the system works no one can deny. The old-fashioned poorhouses have been closed. Our disabled need no longer live in poverty. Widows and children can continue to live with considerable economic independence.

This is because social insurance is designed not so much to help poor people but to help people keep from becoming poor.

In our social security system we have in operation a highly successful and widely accepted instrument for providing economic security and for preventing destitution and dependency. In social security we have at hand a valuable tool for accomplishing the purpose of enabling people to be self-reliant and to achieve personal independence. The system can be and should be used much more effectively for this purpose.

SOCIAL SECURITY is based on the concept that security for the individual should, to the extent possible, grow out of his own work. Whether a person is entitled to benefits and the amount of his benefits are related to a record of his earnings. Basing eligibility on a demonstration of work and providing variable benefits related to the level of a person's earnings fits in with the general system of economic incentives.

Furthermore, since benefits are paid regardless of income from savings, pensions, investments, and the like, the worker is encouraged to supplement the basic protection afforded by his social security benefits with whatever additional protection he is able to build. The system operates to prevent need and dependency, and it does this as a result of the work and contributions of the individual himself.

We believe the majority of the American people want a program of hospital insurance to be added to the cash benefits provisions of the social security system. Many national organizations have long supported the proposal, as have countless persons in various professional walks of life. And we believe there is wide support for the program in Congress. No less than 36 senators and 46 representatives sponsored this year's bill, while others have gone on record publicly in support of the plan.

It is true that certain organizations have been campaigning against the proposal. Their opposition, of course, was not unexpected, for much the same organizations have opposed other suggested changes in the social security system — changes that have proven their worth in operation and strengthened the security of the individual and of society.

I am confident this program will become law because it is morally right, financially sound, and administratively practical. I want to repeat what Pres. Kennedy has said:

"Health insurance for our senior citizens is the most important health proposal pending before the Congress. We urgently need this legislation—and we need it now."

Morgan Says:

Growing Political Crisis in Italy Blamed on Runaway Inflation

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

ROME—The Italians have never had it so good. They've got, on the surface, a real dolce vita, a sweet life, and it may finish them. Prosperity has hit this mad and wonderful country like a tidal wave, and many Italians are still wallowing in it, but dangerously refusing to face up to the fact that as the wave recedes, it is leaving them on a ruinous beach of inflation.

Morgan

This stark reality and the evasion of it are at the bottom of Italy's political crisis. No political leader to the right of the Communists has the courage so far to do what must be done—put some controlling brakes on the economy. And under the shrewd leadership of perhaps the most flexible and non-doctrinaire Marxist operating anywhere outside the Soviet Union, Palmiro Togliatti, the Communists are exploiting the situation with devastating effect.

Officially the cost of living in Italy has risen a stunning 18 percent in one year. Unofficially it is rocketing by 30 percent in two years. Italy used to be almost a bargain basement dream for tourists. Today a good quality shirt can cost $10. At Doney's, the status symbol sidewalk cafe on Via Veneto where people come to ogle and be ogled, I paid more for breakfast than one would pay in the Plaza Hotel in New York City.

Wages and fringe benefits for workers have indeed risen. This is part of the cause of the inflation. But prices have outrun these increases, and the working class, particularly civil servants and other government employes, are painfully feeling the pinch. Their lot, admittedly, has improved—but not enough to narrow the wide historic gap between them and the rich.

Ironically, Italy's economic crisis was intensified by a flight of millions of dollars of capital to Switzerland and elsewhere when the government asked for radical legislation to permit tax inspectors to examine bank accounts. The legislation failed and some of the capital is returning.

A different kind of migration is also complicating the situation, and fascinatingly enough television is partly to blame. In the historic coastal city of Agrigento in Sicily I found the lobby of my hotel crowded with Italians staring, not at the lovely Greek ruins of Agrigento across the valley, but at a TV set in the corner. The peasants in Sicily and the grindingly poor sections of southern Italy have managed to watch television, too. And they have discovered via the commercials that people in the industrial north of Italy have enough money apparently to buy such luxuries as refrigerators, cars, perfume, permanent waves and other finer things of life. So an exodus set in.

Now southern Italians are arriving in Genoa, Milan and Turin at the rate of 500 persons a day, lured by wages of 60,000 lire, $100 a month—innocent of the fact that inflation devours most of this in higher living costs.

But the Communists, in a masterful imitation of the ministrations of democratic party bosses of Boston and New York to European immigrants three or four generations ago, meet the trains in the north bringing migrants from the south—help them find lodgings, and promise them jobs if they join the party.

Neither the Christian Democrats—the dominant party—nor the Roman Catholic Church has any such organized welcome for the southerners. This is partly why the Christian Democrats lost and the Communists gained in the last election.

An heir of one of Italy's most distinguished and titled families, who is now an executive of an oil company, pays the Communists grudging tribute for their finesse.

"Togliatti is right," he says, "the working people are entitled to a larger share of comfort and security. But how to get the main elements of society to cooperate responsibly to achieve this is the problem."

"LIFE IN ITALY," an aristocratic but realistic government official told me, "has never been so free as during this miracle of economic recovery since the war. But now we must ask ourselves whether we have the self-discipline to make a democratic system work."

Another Italian with a long and distinguished career in public service believes the answer will be positive.

"If you write about Italy," he said, "don't conclude that we are so foolish as to head heedlessly for catastrophy. The economic crisis will get worse, but I think we will solve it. Social reforms are now a part of our baggage. Even the crusty old right wingers, with their palaces in Rome and elsewhere, know that—whether they admit it or not. And we're staunchly committed to the Atlantic Alliance."

On the train from Sicily to Rome the sleeping car attendant, a handsome young father of three children, who makes 70,000 lire—about $115 a month—told me, "Yes, life is better in Italy, but it is still hard for the workers, and we have a long way to go." And the question is whether the distance can be negotiated before the Communists can beguile the impatient masses into believing that their way is the better route to travel.

Washington Reports:

Truth-in-Packaging Bill Aimed At Confusion in Supermarket

THE TRUTH-IN-PACKAGING BILL is aimed at reducing the confusion of the housewife faced by conflicting claims in size, price and quality, and helping the honest producer survive the war on supermarket shelves, Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), sponsor of the legislation, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on nearly 700 radio stations.

"What the bill seeks to do is to provide for honest statement in the course of selling, just as laws governing the sales of securities require full, fair and honest disclosure," Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-N.Y.) said on the same program.

The Anti-Trust & Monopoly subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee has approved the measure.

Hart described the plight of the housewife who tries to decide between packages containing 13.75 and 14.5 ounces with a 3-cent price differential while the crowd behind her grumbles as she figures.

He said that once the bill is passed, the Federal Trade Commission and the Food & Drug Administration would set up standards.

"WHEN AFTER hearings there is found to be confusion or deception," Hart said, "proliferation of sizes would, where possible, be eliminated. We had testimony that there are some 60 package sizes of potato chips, for instance."

Fear of the effect of setting up a bureaucratic apparatus to administer the law was expressed by Lindsay. He thought it might encumber the individual more than help him and do the manufacturer and storekeeper more harm than good.

Hart answered that the retailer would not be involved and that the possible hazard of bureaucracy would, in his opinion, be worth chancing.

Under the proposed law, the face of each box would have to show the volume in legible type, with contrasting colors, no confusing adjectives, and no illustrations that falsely represent the contents. The FTC and FDA would be authorized to set up hearings where confusion or deception is found.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE PRESIDENT worked for weeks on the troubled question of civil rights legislation, weighing and balancing the conflicting advice that bears upon him, consulting many groups, confronting his conscience on his responsibilities in the moral crisis. In the end, he challenged Congress to rise to its own responsibilities in a message of great sweep and purpose.

Mr. Kennedy had been warned in advance by the public statements of Sen. Dirksen that he might face trouble if he recommended a public accommodations law. The Illinois Republican, the Senate minority leader, repeatedly suggested that he would prefer some kind of persuasive device to induce innkeepers, restaurant operators, the proprietors of swimming pools and movies and department stores to rise slowly to the sensed needs of the times.

Mr. Kennedy was told, also, that he should avoid stirring up unnecessary oposition in regard to enforceable anti-discrimination legislation in employment.

These counsels of reserve and avoidance, he rejected. He laid the whole problem bluntly before Congress—all the complexities he had been forced to consider, all the nuances and delicate shadings of the moral crisis of the country—and asked the legislators to act.

Sen. Russell of Georgia, who will lead the southern Democratic filibuster, denounced the anticipated public accommodations proposal.

* * *

NO ONE SHOULD SHRINK from the realization that the congressional struggle will be long and fiercely waged.

The House for many years has tended toward passage of civil rights bills—although often bills that somewhat cynical members feel reasonably sure are likely to be blocked in the Senate.

"The fight will take two to three months in the Senate alone—after a bill is reported by the House committee," is one estimate by a most experienced observer of the Senate.

The current session of Congress has generally been considered as likely to run through September and into October, perhaps, in dealing with tax legislation and other issues. The wags on Capitol Hill now are saying they can celebrate Christmas in Washington just as well as at home.

The trouble is there is nothing waggish about the issue. It is an immediate and imperative issue. It is most urgent.

The battle will be waged out in the open—for ours is an open society, wherein we parade our faults and failings as well as our strengths and virtues—for all the world to witness. The western Europeans, the Asians, the Africans, the Latin Americans and the Soviet bloc peoples will be participants as well as observers, for the world is no longer big and secret, and the tidal force of peoples striving for a place in the sun is universal.

* * *

WE COME TO THIS STRUGGLE because it is unavoidable. The Negro drive for recognition of his rights, for the essential right of self-respect and equal treatment in our great experiment in democratic self-government, has been contained and patient.

It has been non-violent under provocation, it has been fought through the channels of the courts, through peaceful parades and demonstrations.

It has largely moved on to civil disobedience—a bitter protest against segregation enforced by the power of the state and the habits of society. It has erupted in bitterness into street confrontation of mob against mob.

No seer can predict what will emerge from the congressional struggle—whether such a watering-down of the President's proposals that the end is frustration rather than achievement, whether a truly significant series of enactments that all of us can rejoice in.

The President, in any case, has set the stage with a challenge that is worthy of the issue. He has thrown the whole wide area open to the most compelling examination so that we are face to face, at last, with what can be done.

TRUTH-IN-PACKAGING legislation would protect the housewife and aid the honest manufacturer, Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), right, sponsor of the bill, declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-N.Y.) pointed out, on the same program, some of the current shopping difficulties.

How to Buy:

The Average American Worker Can't Afford the Average House

By Sidney Margolius

AFTER A DECADE of purported boom times and almost-full employment, the average American worker still can't afford the average American house. While wages have gone up, prices of houses have risen even faster, a survey by this department finds. Wages rose 38 percent in the past decade but construction costs jumped 50 percent.

The average industrial worker today earns about $5100 a year. The usual yardstick is that a family can pay about 2.5 times annual income for a house. Thus, the typical working family can afford a home that costs no more than $12,750.

But the average new house carries a price tag of $22,500. The average older house up for sale this year brought $17,300, the Federal Home Loan Bank reports. To buy the typical house offered for sale today, you really need an income of $7,000 to $9,000.

Prices of houses are especially high in the North Central and New England states. Costs are a little less in the West and South, except in southern Florida. There, prices have been running close to the highest in the country, and significantly, so have foreclosures.

Despite somewhat easier mortgages and lower interest rates, current price tags on houses have made down payments so high they virtually forbid many working families from buying houses. While some new tract houses can be bought with moderate FHA or VA down payments, buyers typically are required to put down 25 percent on new houses. With closing costs, that means the average down payment on a new house now is close to $6,000. On older houses you usually have to pay about 30 percent.

If you're home-hunting, there are three possible opportunities to reduce the cost.

One is the stabilized tags on existing houses, with even some reductions reported by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Most of the price-paring has been on houses built between 1940 and 1950, but some built after 1950 also have been marked down, except in the West. There they are still rising.

Another potential help, especially for recently-wed young couples and senior citizens, is the increasing supply of rental apartments. Almost half the cities surveyed by the real estate association now report ratios of over 5 percent, and somewhat more rent reductions are being reported than increases. Thus, while rents are still high, you at least have a chance to wring more concessions from landlords than you could a year ago.

How much rent can you afford? The usual rule of thumb is 25 percent of after-tax income.

THIRD AND MOST SUCCESSFUL effort to solve the present steep cost of housing is the middle-income and limited-income cooperative housing projects which have boomed in New York especially, and now are springing up on the West Coast, in the Midwest and other areas.

The big boon in this program is the special financing rate of 3.125 percent. Roger Wilcox, general manager of the FCH Co., which seeks to encourage housing co-ops, points out in Cooperative Housing Quarterly that the Park Town Cooperative in Cincinnati formerly had an average monthly charge of $91.30. But when it was refinanced under the NHA the average was reduced to $71.10.

Another helpful feature is the low down payments which can average as little as $120 per family. Already over 30 cooperatives have been started in various parts of the country under this program, Cooperative Housing Quarterly reports.

But this program has its limitations. The more usual non-profit housing cooperatives often require larger down payments but also can permit a wider range of incomes, and more freedom in where and how they can be built.

Unions have been the main backers of housing co-ops, and besides the large number they have sponsored in New York, recently have helped finance successful co-ops in San Francisco, Washington, in Milpitas near San Jose, Calif., and other towns. Co-ops and credit unions also have become active in sponsoring housing co-ops in Minneapolis, Detroit, New York, and other cities.

One of the most active efforts to provide housing for middle-income families is being made by the Association for Middle Income Housing in New York. In association with the Fund for Urban Improvement and the Middle Income Housing Corp., this group already has helped develop several large cooperatives in that city and in neighboring suburbs.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

FOR DEVOTION to the cause of crippled children, Legislative Dir. Joseph E. Brady (right) of the Brewery Workers received the award for outstanding service of the National Society for Crippled Children & Adults at a luncheon in Detroit. The presentation was made by Joseph J. Foss (left), former president of the society, and was accepted by Brady on behalf of the many unions which have aided the cause.

Standards Approved:

Group Health Body Pushes National Plan

DETROIT—The Group Health Association of America is backing a proposed national service agency through which prepaid group practice medical care could be provided for employes of national organizations wherever it is available.

More than 380 physicians and laymen representing group practice plans across the country, in annual meeting here, approved a set of "working standards" to apply to plans seeking to take part in such national account enrollment.

Louis L. Feldman of New York, reporting on behalf of a GHAA study committee, said "the immediate objective is to develop an effective arrangement for reciprocity and transferability of coverage for subscribers of qualified plans."

Because of the direct-service nature of the benefits they provide, most group practice plans are community-oriented. Under the proposed reciprocity system, however, it would be possible for a national organization to provide uniform group practice benefits for employes situated in various parts of the country.

The GHAA members also voted commendation to Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York and the state legislature for a new law barring discrimination in hospital appointments against physicians engaged in group practice. The delegates established a Medical Rights Fund to promote similar legislation in other states and to finance court action where group practice physicians are the objects of discrimination by hospitals and medical societies.

In his keynote address to the 13th annual Group Health Institute, held in conjunction with the GHAA meeting, Dr. Frederick D. Mott, president of the organization, said there has been "encouraging reports of growth" by many member plans during the year and declared that the "prepaid group health movement is on the threshold of far greater accomplishments."

A resolution adopted by the AFL-CIO at its last convention gave strong support to group practice medical plans as holding "the greatest promise for more reliable financial protection and for greater value for the medical care dollar."

At its February meeting, the federation's Executive Council urged unions to give primary consideration to prepaid comprehensive group practice plans in their bargaining for health care benefits.

In a banquet speech, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, who also heads Detroit's Community Health Association, one of the host organizations, condemned the American Medical Association's efforts to block the progress of cooperative health plans.

Reuther recalled that the AMA also had tried to block the establishment of Blue Cross plans in the early 30s. Now, he said, "the same people who fought Blue Cross act as though they had orginated the idea when we try to move forward to better things."

Mott, who is executive director of the Detroit plan, was re-elected president of GHAA, and Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyne of the Rip Van Winkle Clinic, Hudson, N. Y., was re-elected board chairman.

From Soup to Nonsense:

What Kind of Lovely Monster Makes a Baby Cry by Smiling?

By Jane Goodsell

HAVE YOU EVER FELT like the hunchback of Notre Dame, the creature from the Black Lagoon, the big bad wolf, Frankenstein's monster and Dracula all rolled into one?

No? Then you've never had a baby take one look at you and start screaming.

I have, and I haven't been the same since. Naturally, I tell myself that it didn't mean a thing, that it could have happened to anybody, that the baby was scared of me just because I was a stranger.

But this line of reasoning isn't very convincing. How could it be, when I'd been told in advance that the baby was the most friendly, gregarious infant that ever was?

As his grandmother put it, "He's not the least bit bashful. He just loves everybody!"

And when I walked into the room, there he was, sitting in his little jump chair. He was gurgling happily, his face wreathed in a radiant, toothless grin which he bestowed impartially on a roomful of people. Sure enough, he did love everybody.

THEN HE LOOKED AT ME. His smile froze. His eyes widened in terror. His face turned purple, and he let out a blood-curdling scream.

His mother, grandmother and aunt rushed to his side, murmuring soothing there-theres, and trying to assure him that I was a nice lady who wouldn't hurt him.

I stood there, trying to look like a nice lady. But I couldn't help stealing glances at my hands, half expecting them to turn into claws before my eyes.

The baby went right on screaming, and finally his grandmother picked him up and carried him out of the room, away from the unendurable sight of me.

So you can see why I'm so upset. I keep telling myself that the baby was just a rosy, dimpled, adorable little ignoramus whose emotional responses defy analysis. Still, there was something about that deep blue gaze of his that seemed to bore right through me. And the baby was clearly horrified by what he saw.

What did he see? I keep staring at myself in the mirror and wondering.

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

For Remainder of Year:

Scheduled List of Union Conventions

Here is a list of conventions for the remainder of 1963 for the AFL-CIO and its departments, national and international affiliates, and state central bodies:

Date	Organization	Place
June 24	Retail Clerks	Chicago, Ill.
July 8	Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen	St. Louis, Mo.
July 8	Washington State	Richland, Wash.
July 8-12	Newspaper Guild	Philadelphia, Pa.
July 15-19	Potters	Las Vegas, Nev.
July 15-20	Switchmen	Buffalo, N. Y.
Aug. 3-9	Typographical Union	Long Beach, Calif.
Aug. 4-8	Maryland-D. C.	Washington, D. C.
Aug. 12-14	Utah	Salt Lake City, Utah
Aug. 12-14	Virginia	Norfolk, Va.
Aug. 12-16	Brewery Workers	Cincinnati, O.
Aug. 19-23	Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 19-23	Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 19-23	Teachers	New York, N. Y.
Aug. 19-24	Photo Engravers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 26-29	Post Office Mail Handlers	Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 26-29	Texas	Houston, Tex.
Sept. 2-6	British Trades Union Congress	Brighton, England
Sept. 3	Railway Carmen	Kansas City, Mo.
Sept. 4-6	Connecticut	Hartford, Conn.
Sept. 9	Papermakers & Paperworkers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Sept. 9-11	Tennessee	Gatlinburg, Tenn.
Sept. 9-13	Barbers, Hairdressers & Cosmetologists	Indianapolis, Ind.
Sept. 9-13	Stereotypers & Electrotypers	Cincinnati, O.
Sept. 9-13	Street & Electric Railway	Minneapolis, Minn.
Sept. 16-18	Minnesota	Minneapolis, Minn.
Sept. 16-20	Allied Industrial Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Sept. 16-20	Oregon	Eugene, Ore.
Sept. 16-20	Woodworkers	Vancouver, B. C.
Sept. 17-19	Iowa	Cedar Rapids, Ia.
Sept. 23	Metal Polishers	Cincinnati, O.
Sept. 23-25	Nebraska	Hastings, Neb.
Sept. 26-28	Wyoming	Cheyenne, Wyo.
Sept. 27-28	Delaware	Wilmington, Del.
Sept. 29-Oct. 2	Brick & Clay Workers	Louisville, Ky.
Sept. 30-Oct. 4	Illinois	Chicago, Ill.
Sept. (No date set)	Nevada	Lake Tahoe, Nev.
Oct. 7	National Maritime Union	New York, N. Y.
Oct. 8-10	Air Line Dispatchers	St. Louis, Mo.
Oct. 14-16	Train Dispatchers	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. 14-18	Commercial Telegraphers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Oct. 15-18	Massachusetts	Springfield, Mass.
Oct. 16-18	Kentucky	Louisville, Ky.
Oct. 18-20	New Hampshire	Manchester, N. H.
Oct. 21-25	Roofers	New York, N. Y.
Oct. 23-25	New York	Kiamesha Lake, N. Y
Oct. 24-25	Kansas	Kansas City, Kan.
Oct. 24-26	Utility Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. 24-26	West Virginia	Charleston, W. Va.
Oct. or Nov. (No date set)	Florida	Coca Beach, Fla.
Nov. 4-7	Horse Shoers	Houston, N. H.
Nov. 6-8	Building & Construction Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 9-10	Food & Beverage Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 9-14	Labor Press Association	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 11	Metal Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 11-12	Union Label & Service Trades	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 11-13	Maritime Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 12-14	Flight Engineers	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 14	AFL-CIO	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 14-21	AFL-CIO Auxiliaries	New York, N. Y.

Foods Carry Union Label

The AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. has undertaken a campaign to help increase demand for Festal brand canned vegetables prepared by the Owatonna (Minn.) Packing Co. and carrying the union label of Packinghouse Workers Local 442.

Festal products are top quality and are now available in stores in North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Montana, Ilinois and Missouri, with the area of distribution expected to expand, the department said.

Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the label department urged members of AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries to make their support of Festal products part of their participation in the current National Union Label, Shop Card & Service Button Contest. Sample labels bearing a message from UPWA Local 442 and a letter from Pres. Charles Davis of the Iowa AFL-CIO are being distributed among the auxiliaries.

"AUNT BESSIE" GOTTLIEB of the Chicago Senior Citizens Association gets a congratulatory kiss from her nephew, Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.), at a rally on the Capitol steps. Mrs. Gottlieb, a delegate to the Senior Citizens convention in the capital, won an Aime J. Forand citation for her work with seniors. Mrs. Gottlieb's son, Bert, is an industrial engineer on the AFL-CIO staff.

Health Bill Can Pass, Senior Citizens Told on this . . . it will pass in the 88th Congress."

(Continued from Page 1)

A dozen other speakers spurred the hopes of the oldsters including Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson; Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy; Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze and Ivan Nestingen, his under secretary; Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.); House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.); House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D-Okla.).

Sen. Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) said he believed a task force from the National Committee on Health Care for the Aged can resolve differences between conflicting points of view on health care legislation and concluded: "I pledge to you every effort until we can stand around the President in the Oval Room and watch him sign the bill."

Warning by Cruikshank

A cautionary but encouraging note was sounded by Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, who warned of a "hard fight" with the "victory not assured" but predicted that "with enthusiasm and determination," the seniors could get a bill through Congress.

The problem, Cruikshank said, is not popular support but "convincing Congress." He said "scare" stories about the Social Security fund will not frighten off people who "raised their kids in three depressions and two world wars."

There is no need for fear, he said, that the social security system will be unable to pay the benefits provided by law.

In addition, Cruikshank said, "they need have no fear" that enactment of Kennedy's program for hospital insurance would jeopardize the stability of the fund since, in addition to all other reasons, the proposed bill "sets up a separate fund for payment" of hospital care benefits.

Other Safeguards

Other safeguards are provided in the Social Security Act, Cruikshank noted, to assure the continued solvency of the system. In addition, he said, Congress has provided for a periodic review of the financial condition of social security by a group of experts from outside the government.

Kennedy thanked the delegates for their "warm welcome" and added that he does not know "why Sen. Bayh or any of us who believe in this program have to come and make speeches about it" because "I do not know any problem or any remedy more obvious which now faces the Congress."

The average older couple has about $50 a week to live on, and the average older person living alone about $20 per week, Kennedy told his audience, and "there is no room in that budget for a serious illness. Yet one in six will require hospitalization every year" at an average cost of $900, he asserted.

The Administration program provides that a worker shall set aside during his working life an average of $13 a year—"not a burden for anyone employed"—that they may never be a burden on their children and never be a "charity case upon the national government because they will have earned their way. That is what we want."

"There isn't a country in western Europe that didn't do what we are now doing" 40 or 50 years ago, he said, adding "I think it is time the United States caught up."

The convention adopted resolutions approving the principle of legislation such as that in the Anderson-King Hospital Insurance Act of 1963, endorsing a National Service Corps, and asking better housing for the elderly, tax relief for homeowning senior citizens and increased benefits for retired workers and widows.

Price-Fixing Opposed

The convention voted to oppose "price fixing" embodied in so called "quality stabilization" bills favored by some manufacturers and merchants.

The convention reelected most officers and chose these new ones: Sec.-Treas. John W. Edelman, Textile Workers Union of America; Vice Pres. Clinton Byers, Longview, Wash.; and at-large board members, James McCusker of Bristol, Conn.; W. G. Doyle, Somerset, Ky.; I. H. Phares of Denver; Mrs. Gottlieb and Campbell.

$6,000 Bill Proves Convincing Clincher

Walter Cox and his wife Ruth were among 90 delegates to the Senior Citizens' convention who chartered two buses to travel from Kansas City, Mo.

Cox said he has a personal interest in hospital care legislation. Since he retired nine years ago as business representative of the Kansas City local of the Street & Electric Railway Employes, Cox has spent more than $6,000 for hospital and medical care.

Glass Union Team Visits British Plants

Philadelphia—Eight members of the Glass Bottle Blowers are touring British glass centers in the fourth exchange of American workers with their union colleagues in Great Britain.

Two women and six men in the U.S. team left Idlewild Airport, N. Y., for a 30-day visit to learn British production and methods and to build good will.

After a stop at Blackpool for the convention of the 700,000-member National Union of General & Municipal Workers, which includes glass workers, the Americans will visit glass centers in Glasgow, Newcastle, Liverpool, Doncaster, Yorkshire, Nottingham and London.

The exchange plan was conceived in 1948 by GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton, a member of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, and Sir Thomas Williamson, then president of the General & Municipal Workers. The exchange is not government sponsored, and each union pays the expenses of the visiting group. The fourth British team will come here next year.

The team includes J. Belton Warren of Washington, D. C., team leader; Lucille M. Johns of the Metro Glass Co. plant in Washington, Pa.; Louise Allman, Owens-Illinois Co., Huntington, W. Va.; Deward Pitts, Latchford Glass Co., Los Angeles; Robert Mellars, Owens-Corning Fiberglass Co., Newark, O.; George Phillips, Chattanooga, Tenn., Glass Co.; Robert Clark, Northwestern Glass Co., Seattle; and Anthony Pascarelle, Owens-Illinois Co., Bridgeton, N. J.

Rescue Group Marks 30th Anniversary

The "positive contributions" of refugees from tyranny to the United States and other free nations are being stressed as the Intl. Rescue Committee, which has long had the support of organized labor, celebrates its 30th anniversary.

Sponsors of the observance include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers, and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers. Heading the list of 66 noted Americans sponsoring the commemoration is former Pres. Truman.

The IRC was founded in 1933 to help refugees from the Nazis. It has grown into this country's principal non-sectarian voluntary agency assisting refugees from all shades of political despotism and has helped thousands of union members in their flights to freedom over the past three decades.

"Each refugee to whom we have granted asylum and compassionate help," said IRC Pres. William J. vanden Heuvel, "deserves the recognition of those who were fortunate enough never to experience tyranny.

"It is the IRC's conviction that the modern political refugee has served freedom fully—first, by his very escape from tyranny and, second, by his important material and spiritual contributions to the free nations which have taken him in."

The anniversary celebration was inaugurated by a 40-page commemorative booklet, "They Chose Freedom!" It describes the IRS's work in meeting the crises which produced the major flows of refugees during the last 30 years.

Area Redevelopment Blocked in House

The House on June 12 defeated a bill to authorize additional funds needed to continue and expand the area redevelopment program. The vote was 209-204. Democrats voted 189-57 to continue aid to depressed areas; Republicans voted 152-15 against the program.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for the bill was a right vote (R), while a vote against was a wrong vote (W). Other symbols: A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; NV—not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large.

Here is the rollcall:

ALABAMA
AL Andrews (D) W
AL Elliott (D) R
AL Grant (D) W
AL Huddleston (D) W
AL Jones (D) R
AL Rains (D) R
AL Roberts (D) R
AL Selden W

ALASKA
AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) R
3. Senner (D) R

ARKANSAS
1. Gathings (D) W
2. Mills (D) R
3. Trimble (D) R
4. Harris (D) R

CALIFORNIA
1. Clausen (R) W
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Leggett (D) R
5. Shelley (D) R
6. Mailliard (R) W
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. Younger (R) W
12. Talcott (R) W
13. Teague (R) W
14. Baldwin (R) W
15. McFall (D) R
16. Sisk (D) R
18. Hagen (D) R
33. Sheppard (D) R
34. Hanna (D) R
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Martin (R) W

Los Angeles County
17. King (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Vacancy
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Cameron (D) R
26. Roosevelt (D) R
27. Burkhalter (D) R
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown (D) R
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) R
32. Hosmer (R) W

COLORADO
1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) R

CONNECTICUT
AL Grabowski (D) R
1. Daddario (D) R
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) W
5. Monagan (D) R

DELAWARE
AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA
1. Sikes (D) R
2. Bennett (D) W
3. Pepper (D) R
4. Fascell (D) R
5. Herlong (D) W
6. Rogers (D) R
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) W
9. Fuqua (D) W
10. Gibbons (D) W
11. Gurney (R) W
12. Cramer (R) W

GEORGIA
1. Hagan (D) R
2. Pilcher (D) W
3. Forrester (D) A
4. Flynt (D) W
5. Weltner (D) R
6. Vinson (D) R
7. Davis (D) W
8. Tuten (D) W
9. Landrum (D) R
10. Stephens (D) R

HAWAII
AL Gill (D) R
AL Matsunaga (D) R

IDAHO
1. White (D) R
2. Harding (D) R

ILLINOIS
12. McClory (R) W
14. Hoffman (R) W
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) W
19. McLoskey (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) R
22. Springer (R) W
23. Shipley (D) PR
24. Price (D) R

Chicago-Cook County
1. Dawson (D) R
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. O'Brien (D) PR
7. Libonati (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Finnegan (D) R
10. Collier (R) PW
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) W

INDIANA
1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roush (D) R
6. Roudebush (R) W
7. Bray (R) R
8. Denton (D) R
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) W
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA
1. Schwengel (R) W
2. Bromwell (R) W
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Hoeven (R) W
7. Jensen (R) W

KANSAS
1. Dole (R) W
2. Avery (R) W
3. Ellsworth (R) W
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY
1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Snyder (R) W
4. Chelf (D) R
5. Siler (R) R
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUSIANA
1. Hebert (D) W
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) R
4. Waggonner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Morrison (D) R
7. Thompson (D) R
8. Long (D) R

MAINE
1. Tupper (R) R
2. McIntire (R) W

MARYLAND
AL Sickles (D) R
1. Morton (R) R
2. Long (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) W
7. Friedel (D) R

MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R) PW
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) W
6. Bates (R) W
7. Macdonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormick (D) (Speaker) NV
10. Martin (R) A
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN
AL Staebler (D) R
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) W
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. O'Hara (D) R
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) W
12. Bennett (R) R
18. Broomfield (R) W

Metropolitan Detroit
1. Nedzi (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Ryan (D) R
15. Dingell (D) R
16. Lesinski (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA
1. Quie (R) W
2. Nelsen (R) W
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Olson (D) R
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R

MISSISSIPPI
1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Williams (D) W
4. Winstead (D) W
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI
1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) W
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) W
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) R
9. Cannon (D) W
10. Jones (D) W

MONTANA
1. Olsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) W

NEBRASKA
1. Beermann (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) W
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA
AL Baring (D) A

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. Wyman (R) A
2. Cleveland (R) W

NEW JERSEY
1. Cahill (R) W
2. Glenn (R) R
3. Auchincloss (R) W
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) W
6. Dwyer (R) W
7. Widnall (R) W
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) W
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) PW
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) R
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO
AL Montoya (D) R
AL Morris (D) R

NEW YORK
1. Pike (D) W
2. Grover (R) W
3. Derounian (R) W
4. Wydler (R) W
5. Becker (R) W
25. Barry (R) W
26. Reid (R) W
27. St. George (R) W
28. Wharton (R) W
29. O'Brien (D) R
30. King (R) W
31. Kilburn (R) W
32. Pirnie (R) W
33. Robison (R) W
34. Riehlman (R) W
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) W
37. Ostertag (R) W
38. Goodell (R) W
39. Pillion (R) W
40. Miller (R) A
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City
6. Halpern (R) R
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Keogh (D) R
12. Kelly (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) PR
17. Lindsay (R) W
18. Powell (D) PR
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Healey (D) R
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Buckley (D) R
24. Fino (R) R

NORTH CAROLINA
1. Bonner (D) R
2. Fountain (D) W
3. Henderson (D) R
4. Cooley (D) W
5. Scott (D) A
6. Kornegay (D) W
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Jonas (R) W
9. Broyhill (R) W
10. Whitener (D) W
11. Taylor (D) R

NORTH DAKOTA
1. Nygaard (R) W
2. Short (R) W

OHIO
AL Taft (R) W
1. Rich (R) W
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) R
7. Brown (R) PW
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Abele (R) W
11. Bolton, Oliver (R) W
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) A
14. Ayres (R) A
15. Secrest (D) R
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton, Frances (R) W
23. Minshall (R) W

OKLAHOMA
1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) R
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) R
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON
1. Norblad (R) W
2. Ullman (D) R
3. Green (D) R
4. Duncan (D) R

PENNSYLVANIA
6. Rhodes (D) R
7. Milliken (R) W
8. Curtin (R) W
9. Dague (R) W
10. McDade (R) R
11. Flood (D) R
12. Whalley (R) R
13. Schweiker (R) W
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Vacancy
16. Kunkel (R) W
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) R
19. Goodling (R) W
20. Holland (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) R
23. Gavin (R) W
24. Weaver (R) W
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R

Philadelphia
1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Toll (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND
1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Rivers (D) A
2. Watson (D) W
3. Dorn (D) W
4. Ashmore (D) W
5. Hemphill (D) R
6. McMillan (D) W

SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R) W
2. Baker (R) R
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) R
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) W
8. Everett (D) R
9. Davis (D) PW

TEXAS
AL Pool (D) W
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) R
4. Roberts (D) W
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) R
7. Dowdy (D) W
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) R
10. Thornberry (D) R
11. Poage (D) W
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) W
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) W
16. Foreman (R) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) W
19. Mahon (D) W
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W

UTAH
1. Burton (R) W
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT
AL Stafford (R) W

VIRGINIA
1. Downing (D) W
2. Hardy (D) W
3. Gary (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Tuck (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) W
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON
1. Pelly (R) W
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) W
6. Tollefson (R) W
7. Stinson (R) W

WEST VIRGINIA
1. Moore (R) W
2. Staggers (D) R
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R

WISCONSIN
1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) W
7. Laird (R) W
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) PR

WYOMING
AL Harrison (R) W

Drive on in Senate:

Democrats Seeking To Revive Area Aid

By David L. Perlman

Senate Democratic leaders, with strong White House backing, have opened a drive to revive a House-killed bill to provide additional aid for communities burdened with heavy unemployment and prevent the area redevelopment program from petering out from lack of funds.

A companion bill to the measure the House defeated in an upset 209-204 vote has been tentatively scheduled for Senate action on June 25.

If it passes the Senate—as is expected—the Administration would then seek to have the House reverse its earlier action.

Pres. Kennedy set the stage for the new drive with a sharp statement declaring:

"This program must not be allowed to die—and it is my intention to give Congress another opportunity to support it."

The President termed the House vote "tragic" and said it "could not have come at a worse time." He added:

"Unemployment persists—our distressed areas need help—and scores of hard-hit communities in Pennsylvania, Michigan, West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, upstate New York, upstate Minnesota and southern Illinois were counting on an expansion of this program.

"The people of these and other affected states need more than speeches to help their depressed communities and jobless workers."

In a letter to all senators, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said labor believes the ARA program should be "strengthened and expanded" and urged passage of the bill without "crippling amendments."

He termed the program "a major step forward" in solving problems of depressed areas and opening up job opportunities.

The bill coming up in the Senate would add $455 million to the area redevelopment authorization passed by Congress two years ago, for a new ceiling of $835 million. Even if authorized, the money would still have to be appropriated by Congress.

Limit of Funds Reached

The Area Redevelopment Administration has already reached the limit of its authorized funds for grants to communities to construct public facilities designed to bring in new industry. By a year from now, ARA officials said, the limit will be reached on loans to business and industrial enterprises.

In other congressional developments:

- A Senate Labor subcommittee approved a bill by Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) to provide educational benefits for an estimated 5 million "cold war veterans" similar to the GI benefits provided Korean and World War II veterans.

The bill, strongly supported by the AFL-CIO, would provide payments of $110 a month to veterans with no dependents attending college, and up to $160 for veterans with dependents. Assistance would also be provided for vocational training and for purchase of homes and farm equipment. The measure has 38 co-sponsors.

- The House Ways & Means Committee continued its series of tentative votes on "tax reform" provisions in the Administration's tax cut bill, all subject to later reconsideration. The amount the committee can save by closing "loopholes" is expected to influence the nature of the tax cut it will recommend.

One tentative vote Administration forces are expected to seek to reverse was a 14-11 defeat of a proposal to repeal a 4 percent tax credit on dividend income. Repeal of the tax credit, urged by the AFL-CIO, would bring in an estimated $460 million in revenue.

- A House subcommittee headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) completed a study begun last year on administration of the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law by the Labor Dept.

Chief recommendation of the subcommittee majority was for establishment of a Davis-Bacon Appeals Board, appointed by the President, to provide "impartial review" of wage determinations made by the secretary of labor. Roosevelt introduced a bill to this effect. Republican members were sharply critical of the administration of the law, asserted it had forced up construction costs, and said there should be court review of wage determinations.

- By a seven-vote margin, the House turned down a Republican move to cut U.S. payments to the United Nations by one-fourth. Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) took the floor to oppose the GOP amendment which would have reduced the UN appropriation by $19.5 million—the amount owed to the U.S. for airlift expenditures in the Congo.

Chicago Central Body Names T. E. Faul

Chicago—The executive board of the Chicago AFL-CIO has elected Thomas E. Faul secretary-treasurer for a term expiring June 30, 1966. He succeeds William F. Cleary, who died June 8.

Faul said he will resign as business manager of Construction Lodge 126 of the Machinists. A member since 1937, he was elected business manager in 1952 and has served on the Chicago AFL-CIO board since 1958. He is 52.

WORKER-FATHER OF THE YEAR is Juan Muniz, Hoboken, N. J., a member of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 222 who directs special union projects to aid ILGWU members in North Jersey. He is shown with his wife, Zorada, and their children (from left) Patricia, 2 months; Evelyn, 7; Wilma, 3, and Isidro, 8. The award carries with it the National Father's Day Committee George Washington Medal.

Tax Cut, Job-Creating Legislation Pressed on Congress by AFL-CIO

Labor has urged Congress to "breathe some life" into the Employment Act of 1946 through a program of "job-creating legislation" including expanded public works and "the right kind" of tax cut.

"We know what it takes to create jobs and to achieve full employment," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told members of a Senate Employment & Manpower subcommittee. "What we lack is the will and the commitment."

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), has been conducting a wide-ranging study of manpower needs and unemployment.

Policy 'Local' in Type

Biemiller, accompanied by AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin and Economist Marvin Friedman, told the subcommittee that the nation's manpower policy is still "oriented around the local labor market" and geared to a comparatively stable economy "that has long since disappeared."

Part of the problem of existing training and retraining programs, he said, is that they were "born in a period of job scarcity."

Because training is geared to available or anticipated jobs, many jobless workers are being trained for occupations requiring less skill than the jobs they held before becoming unemployed, Biemiller said.

It has also resulted, he said, in the selection for training of the "cream of the crop" of the unemployed, providing little assistance to the "hard core" of jobless who are handicapped by inadequate education and, in many areas, by discriminatory employment policies.

"At the very least," Biemiller declared, "a measure to cope with adult illiteracy should be enacted into law; and an attack on functional illiteracy should become an integral part of our retraining activities.

"Even beyond this, however, we must be prepared to take action to aid the 'hard-core' who are not able to take additional training and who may continue as functional illiterates.

Permanent Public Works

"These people must still live and eat, and support families. Far better than to have them on welfare rolls would be programs to give them jobs—perhaps a special type of permanent public works. . . .

"If these unfortunate citizens cannot obtain jobs in private industry, the public employment service should be in a position to direct them to jobs provided by a program of permanent public works."

Before undertaking a training program to fill an employer's request for workers above the unskilled level, Biemiller said, the government should make sure that persons with the requisite skills are not already available and also that workers already on the employer's payroll are not being barred from advancement by discriminatory practices.

Noting that "non-white workers are heavily concentrated in the lowest labor grades," he said:

"Before training programs are undertaken in any community, the local employment office should first investigate the possibilities of upgrading the incumbent employes."

The public employment service must become "the center around which all of our manpower activities revolve," Biemiller said, adding:

"Its horizons must be broadened, not only in terms of placing a worker in a job in his immediate area, but it must also be able, willing and eager to advise the worker where he may find a still better opportunity if he is prepared to move."

Allowances Urged

To assist necessary labor mobility, he added, the government should adopt a broad policy of relocation allowances rather than rely exclusively on the slow process of trying to bring new jobs into areas of heavy unemployment.

Charging that "well organized" attacks on the U.S. Employment Service are designed "to leave the road clear for the private agencies to reap their profits on the misery and misfortune of people who need jobs," Biemiller said that the USES must develop into "a much more important instrument in the field of job placement than it is today."

One way to help bring this about, he suggested, would be to require employers to list with it all vacancies they list with private fee-charging agencies.

The nation, Biemiller asserted, is "too passive about an unemployment rate that hovers near 6 percent of the workforce—with more than 4 million people fully unemployed and an additional 2 million forced into part-time employment because the necessary jobs just do not exist."

A tax cut concentrated in the low and middle income groups, he said, "could provide the most effective stimulus" to more production and more jobs.

He called for improved unemployment compensation, education and training programs, relocation allowances and area redevelopment activities "not as separate, rigid bits and pieces, but as a well-integrated, overall program with sufficient flexibility to use whichever instrument best meets the needs of the workers involved."

Food Stamp Program Urged on National Basis

The AFL-CIO has endorsed as a "vital contribution to the national welfare" the proposed Food Stamp Act of 1963 which would establish on a nationwide basis the practice of issuing such stamps, redeemable for food, to low-income families.

A pilot program in some 40 areas has been under way for more than two years.

In a letter to House Agriculture Committee Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D-N.C.), Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation said:

"The AFL-CIO sees America's tremendous food abundance as a blessing and a challenge . . . We must intensify our efforts to eliminate hunger, malnutrition and poverty from the United States, and enactment of a nationwide food stamp program will be a solid step forward toward this goal."

He proposed that the policy statement in the bill "include an explicit statement that it is the intention of Congress that the food stamp program should be administered in a manner to protect and to enhance the self-reliance and the human dignity of food stamp recipients."

Experience with the pilot program has shown the need for greater flexibility in administration, the AFL-CIO spokesman said. This is provided in the pending bill, he noted, by giving the secretary of agriculture authority to issue the regulations he believes to be necessary for "effective and efficient administration" of the program.

Biemiller said changes made by the secretary under this provision should include weekly distribution of stamps, to facilitate family budgeting; more conveniently located distribution centers; greater incentive for stamp purchases, by giving at least $2 in stamps for every $1 spent from a recipient's food budget, rather than the present $1 for each 63 cents spent; and a higher income ceiling in determining eligibility.

He praised the bill for exempting food stamps from taxation as income, and for forbidding states or their political subdivisions from reducing welfare aid to stamp users.

Congress Called to Act on Civil Rights

Long, Hard Fight Seen To Break Filibuster

(Continued from Page 1)

rights program on every front."

"We can no longer expect Negro Americans to be content with a little liberty," Meany declared in a statement.

"They are entitled to full liberty, full citizenship, full standing in the community, not next year but now."

As the legislative groupings formed to handle the wide sweep of legislation Kennedy proposed, two figures stood as probable keys to results:

• Georgia's Democratic Sen. Richard B. Russell was named again as captain of the southern filibuster forces, as he has been in every filibuster for more than 15 years.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed

Russell announced opposition to the whole range of Kennedy recommendations but hit with heaviest emphasis at the public accomodations proposal. In a statement approved by 17 other southerners in advance, he declared that a law guaranteeing Negroes service in such public places as restaurants, hotels and tax-supported swimming pools would be "clearly destructive of the American system." It would invade private property rights, he said.

• Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, the Republican floor leader, is the senator who may control results of eventual moves to break the Russell-led filibuster by invoking cloture of debate.

A two-thirds vote is required to pass a Senate cloture resolution. With the southerners and a scattering of other Democrats sure to oppose the move, 40 to 45 Democrats are expected to favor it. This means that a minimum of 25 to 27 votes from the Senate's 33 Republicans will be needed. Observers are certain they can be obtained only if Dirksen exerts his full influence to produce them.

Kennedy prepared his message and draft legislation after extensive consultations with many groups including businessmen, labor officials, the clergy and leaders of both Republican and Democratic delegations in Congress.

When it came, it represented by far the most wide-ranging recommendations in the human rights field ever submitted by a Chief Executive.

There has been "reassuring response" to his moral appeal, Kennedy told Congress.

"Many doors long closed to Negroes have been opened," he said, and local biracial committees under both private and public sponsorship "have mushroomed."

Nevertheless, he declared, "the time has come for Congress to join with the executive and judicial branches in making it clear that race has no place in American life."

"The growing and understandable dissatisfaction of Negro citizens with the present pace of desegregation, and their increased determination to secure [rights] to which they are entitled have underscored what should already have been clear," Kennedy said—the "necessity of the Congress enacting this year" both his earlier proposals and additional ones.

Preferably as a single omnibus bill, he said, Congress should enact the Civil Rights Act of 1963, producing "the most responsible, reasonable and urgently needed solutions to this problem, solutions which should be acceptable to all reasonable men."

He spelled out his proposals in five broad areas:

• "In a society which is increasingly mobile, federal action is needed now to secure the right of all citizens to the full enjoyment of all facilities which are open to the general public," he said. In draft legislation accompanying the message such facilities were defined as hotels, motels, theaters, sports arenas, restaurants, retail shops, department stores and service places.

A person aggrieved by a violation may seek injunctive relief or seek the aid of the attorney general. However, complaints by the attorney general must be referred to a newly-created Community Relations Service before seeking federal court action.

• In addition to enacting earlier proposals for technical and financial aid to public school systems in the process of desegregation, Congress should authorize the attorney general to initiate court proceedings to speed the process.

"Discrimination in education is one basic cause of the other inequities and hardships inflicted upon our Negro citizens," the President said. "It is unfair and unrealistic" to force private citizens to bear the whole burden of initiating court cases and "the personal, physical and economic harassment which sometimes descends upon these who do institute them."

• There must be both "fair and full employment."

Fair employment should be pursued by anti-discrimination legislation, Kennedy said, "applicable to both employers and unions." The existing Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, created by executive order and headed by Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, should be given statutory basis and adequate financing.

An attack on job discrimination must be coupled with programs to create more jobs, the President told Congress. Joblessness is highest among minority groups with inadequate educational opportunities, his message emphasized. He renewed his plea for tax reduction, area redevelopment, an accelerated public work program, and additional funds for manpower training, the still-pending youth employment bill and pending measures to strengthen vocational education programs.

• A bi-racial federal community relations service should be established, Kennedy said, to back up local committees with aid and advice, to help resolve interracial disputes, and "to work quietly to improve relations" between groups. He expressed the hope that every city and community would create such a local service.

The proposed federal service would lack enforcement powers, the President said, "but dialogue and discussion are always better than violence," and the agency could enable "all concerned to sit down and reason together."

• There should be a simple, comprehensive section "making it clear that the federal government is not required . . . to furnish any kind of financial assistance . . . to any program or activity in which racial discrimination occurs," Kennedy recommended.

The provision should apply to aid by way of any "grant, loan, contract, guaranty, insurance or otherwise," he said. This would not compel the cutting off of programs of value to the victims of discrimination or allow the "punishing of an area" in all programs, but would allow administrators to move effectively with regard to specific discriminatory practices.

PRES. KENNEDY ADDRESSES some 300 union officials called to the White House June 13 on issues of civil rights. A measure from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who was attending an Intl. Labor Organization conference in Geneva, Switzerland, pledged "unstinting assistance" to the drive for "a full, enforceable civil rights program on every front." Meany's message was read to the President and the meeting by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, shown at extreme right.

Africans Walk Out of ILO Parley In Protest Against 'Apartheid' Policy

(Continued from Page 1)

taste for the views expressed, as did all of the worker delegates.

Later Meany stressed at a meeting of all worker delegates that the U.S. workers' delegation "unanimously condemns" South Africa's racial policies and does not believe it has a right to be in the ILO.

Meany declared, however:

"We cannot agree to the ILO's destruction. We believe in the ILO; we intend to continue to support it in its work on behalf of the workers of the entire world."

All UN members are eligible for affiliation with the ILO and South Africa has ignored a 1961 ILO resolution condemning its racial practices and requesting its delegates to withdraw from membership.

Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions issued a statement from Geneva reiterating the ICFTU's "unswerving opposition" to South Africa's "shameful and inhuman" race policies and calling for steps to bring about expulsion from the United Nations of countries which impose race discrimination.

Becu said the action of the African delegates to the ILO had "focused world attention" on the problem. But he urged the African nations "to join with us in safeguarding the ILO and to fully cooperate in fostering its strength in the fight for the achievement of peace, freedom, social justice and human dignity for all."

Among those leaving the conference was Nigeria's labor minister, Joseph M. Johnson, who had earlier been elected president of the conference. Erik Dreyer of Denmark was elected to preside over the balance of the session. Dreyer, who served as conference president in 1959, is a veteran of ILO activities and first represented his country as a delegate in 1924.

Appeal from Morse

ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse had sought to stem the walkout, appealing to African delegates to reconsider their decision.

"Alone among international organizations," Morse declared, the ILO "has been able to give substance to the principles enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights through a number of binding international conventions in the human rights field, dealing with freedom of association, abolition of forced labor and the elimination of discrimination in employment."

Warning that "you cannot engage the enemy when you retreat from the field of batle," Morse called for fighting discrimination "by methods which strengthen the foundations of world order."

U.S. Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl, who as conference vice president was obligated to take the chair when Johnson stepped down during debate over the South African delegate's right to speak, won respectful attention when he told the gathering:

"I am deeply, deeply committed to the elimination of racial discrimination in every form, wherever it may exist."

Faupl emphasized, however, that "the right of every accredited delegate to speak cannot be denied without destroying the fundamental principle of freedom of speech."

This principle, he said, "is the very foundation of democracy and the lifeblood of this organization."

Before overruling objections to giving the South African the floor, Faupl noted pointedly that "in the ILO there are no captive audiences."

Later the workers group gave Faupl an overwhelming vote of confidence. Meany and other speakers praised him for acting courageously in accordance with the ILO constitution and in the best interests of the organization.

Another eloquent appeal came from George L-P Weaver, U.S. assistant secretary of labor.

Weaver made it clear that the United States is "unalterably and irrevocably opposed" to South Africa's racial policies.

But, he added, "we Americans know both from experience and deep conviction that whenever freedom of speech is threatened in any forum, the usefulness of that forum is finished."

Before the walkout, African worker delegates joined in electing Jean Moeri of Switzerland, Kalmen Kaplansky of Canada and Faupl as regular worker delegates to the ILO Governing Body. The election was considered a victory for non-Communist workers, whose entire slate was elected.

High Court Gives Idle Aid To Adventist

The Supreme Court has ruled that a state cannot deny unemployment benefits because a claimant's religion forbids work on Saturday.

Reversing a South Carolina decision, the court held that Mrs. Adell H. Sherbert was entitled to jobless benefits after her employer —Spartan Mills—had fired her in 1959, when the company shifted to a six-day week. Mrs. Sherbert is a Seventh Day Adventist and observes Saturday as the Sabbath.

The State Employment Security Commission had ruled that her refusal to work on Saturday made her "unavailable" for a job in the area, since the principal employers were on a six-day workweek.

By a 7-2 vote, the Supreme Court held that the denial of benefits was an interference with the constitutional right of "free exercise" of religion and, in effect, put state pressure on her to give up her religious beliefs.

Weaver Bids World To View Bias Fight

Geneva—Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver invited delegates to the Intl. Labor Organization conference here to "observe" the problems of the United States and "evaluate our efforts to solve them."

"We do not hide our problems; they are there for everyone to see," said Weaver, who heads the U.S. delegation to the parley, in specific reference to the fight for full rights for Negro Americans.

"Ours is not a perfect society," he commented, "but we have the means and the determination to improve it constantly."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 29, 1963 | No. 26

West German Workers Hail Kennedy, Meany in Berlin

In Meany Letter:

Rights Units Urged On Central Bodies

All AFL-CIO central bodies have been urged by Federation Pres. George Meany to take an active part in forming bi-racial committees and to "join vigorously with such groups where they already exist."

In a letter to the more than 800 central bodies chartered by the AFL-CIO, Meany noted that Pres. Kennedy in a recent White House conference with union representatives urged labor to help speed up national progress on civil rights.

"I urge you," said Meany, "to act promptly on the President's request, which is wholly in keeping with existing policy established by the 1961 convention" of the federation.

Kennedy requested "no more than the convention itself proposed," the AFL-CIO head said, and central bodies which have not yet complied with convention resolutions "should now proceed without delay to set up a civil rights or human rights committee; take an inventory of discrimination problems within our own ranks and in the community; immediately formulate a program to deal with these problems" and proceed to implement it.

Assistance Offered

"If you desire advice, counsel or technical assistance in this area, please call on me at once," Meany said, and concluded: "Please keep me informed of your progress."

In a separate letter to state bodies, he asked for assistance to the local bodies and the creation or encouragement of bi-racial organizations at the state level.

Pointing out that in many states some areas of discrimination, such as employment, housing and public accomodations are covered by state law, he said:

"A thorough look at the extent to which such laws are being enforced would be a most appropriate activity for a state bi-racial group. Where no such laws exist, the need for better interracial communications is even more pressing."

In referring to the recent White House conference attended by union leaders, Meany reminded state and central body officials that Kennedy "urged the labor movement to take certain steps in order to speed up national progress on civil rights."

One of these steps, he said, "relates directly to the function of our local central bodies." He continued: "The President asked us to take an active part in the formation of bi-racial committees and councils within each community, and to join vigorously with such groups where they already exist. The purpose, of course, is to accelerate the destruction of racial barriers at the local level."

Community Support Stressed

The civil rights resolution adopted unanimously by the 1961 AFL-CIO convention says in part:

"We look to the civil rights committees of our central bodies to initiate community-wide civil rights inventories and to develop corrective programs in the light of their findings.

"It is our purpose not only to mobilize all resources of organized labor to eliminate all discrimination in its own ranks but also to enlist communitywide support of labor's drive against discrimination."

AGREEMENT on a new extended vacation plan and other contract revisions covering workers of the 11 basic steel companies is sealed with a handshake by Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, right, and R. Conrad Cooper, executive vice president of the U.S. Steel Corp. and leading spokesman for the industry in the joint Human Relations Committee which worked out the settlement terms. (See story Page 3)

Unions Key To Liberty, JFK Says

By Arnold Beichman

Berlin—Two thousand delegates to a West German union convention stood and cheered as Pres. Kennedy paid tribute to the modern role of free trade unions and declared that without a free labor movement there can be no democracy.

Accompanied by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Kennedy took the platform of the national convention of the Industrial Union of Building & Construction Workers and won an ovation as he said, bluntly:

"It is no accident that during the last 40 years the prime target of the Communist movement has been the destruction of the free trade union movement." He continued:

"Once the free trade union movement is destroyed, once it is harnessed to the chariot of the state, once meetings such as this become formalities, endorsing the purposes of the state, the trade union movement is destroyed, and so is democracy."

Full text of Pres. Kennedy's address to West German union convention in Berlin appears on Page 6.

Kennedy spoke, as Meany did before him, to a standing-room-only audience in the beautiful Congress Hall built with American funds only a few hundred yards from the Communist-constructed wall that splits this city and shuts the East German workers away from the West.

Meany preceded the President from Tegel Airport, where the White House plane landed for

(Continued on Page 12)

At Diamond Jubilee Convention:

RCIA Cites Growth, Sets New Targets

By Gervase N. Love

Chicago—The Retail Clerks, 400,000 strong, marked their diamond jubilee by getting ready for a new attack on an old record—19 consecutive years of growing membership.

The 1,000 delegates to the 19th convention of the AFL-CIO's fastest-growing union—it has doubled its size in the past decade and increased by 25 per cent since its previous convention four years ago—cheered when Pres. James A. Suffridge called on them "to blueprint new goals for the future."

He got another shout of agreement when he said:

"I would like to see each member of the RCIA undertake the easy quota of bringing in at least one new member during the coming year, thus doubling our membership by 1964. This is the message each delegate should take to the folks back home."

'A Broader Obligation'

Suffridge, an AFL-CIO vice president and Executive Council member, reminded the delegates that as leaders of their union, "we are all keenly aware of our responsibility to our own members.

"But let us always remember," he said, "that we have a broader obligation to bring the benefits of trade union membership to the millions of still unorganized workers in the retailing industry who need our help so badly. We cannot afford to rest until they get it."

He reminded them that organization is a "two-way street," with the members needing each other's help if the conditions of all are to be improved.

"The high standards we have built by long years of bitter struggle can never be considered secure," he pointed out, "so long as there

(Continued on Page 10)

Strict FEP Bill Needed, AFL-CIO Tells House

By John M. Barry

The AFL-CIO has called on the House Education & Labor Committee "to retain strong enforcement powers" in a pending equal employment opportunities bill to outlaw job discrimination based on race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry.

A full committee vote on the bill, introduced by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), has been delayed at least until July 11, reportedly by the efforts of Rep. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) to shift enforcement powers under the measure to the courts.

In telegrams to all committee members, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged them to hold fast to the proposed commission approach to enforcement, "including power to issue cease and desist orders and initiatory power of administrator."

"Any weakening of enforcement powers," Biemiller said, "would be a rejection of minority employment rights."

The commission arrangement outlined in the subcommittee draft would include a board and an independent administrator, not unlike

(Continued on Page 2)

Morse Calls on ILO To Isolate South Africa

Geneva—David A. Morse, director general of the Intl. Labor Organization, has proposed four "emergency" steps aimed at ostracizing South Africa within the 108-nation organization as an expression of repugnance against that country's policy of "apartheid," or complete racial separation.

Morse's proposals, prepared for submission to the ILO Governing Body at its meeting following the 47th ILO conference here, called for:

- Exclusion of South Africa from all meetings and day-to-day activities of the ILO, an agency of the United Nations, except the annual conference, which all member countries have a constitutional right to attend.
- Referral to the U.N. Security Council of proposals that South Africa be expelled from the U.N.
- Full cooperation of the ILO before other UN bodies and the Intl. Court of Justice in pending proceedings dealing with South African racial policies.
- Appointment of a three-man ILO commission to investigate racial discrimination and forced labor in South Africa, with authority to reach findings of fact and law and make recommendations.

This program, Morse said in

(Continued on Page 9)

THIS SCENE will be repeated in several thousand post offices as local-level agreements are negotiated to supplement national contracts between the Post Office Dept. and unions representing half-a-million employes. Here, Asa Phelps, president of the Fort Worth branch of the Letter Carriers, puts the union seal on the new contract. Left to right: Postmaster R. T. Cowan; City Councilman Willard Barr, who is also editor of the Fort Worth Labor News; Phelps, and Assistant Postmaster James E. Warren.

Strict FEP Bill Needed, AFL-CIO Tells House

(Continued from Page 1)

the National Labor Relations Board set-up. Griffin, coauthor of the Landrum-Griffin Act, has publicly advocated that the NLRB's authority in unfair practice cases be removed and given to the courts.

Senate Schedules Hearings

Senate hearings on equal employment opportunities legislation are scheduled to open July 1, with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz slated as the first witness before the Employment & Manpower subcommittee.

In his recent civil rights message to Congress, Pres. Kennedy without mentioning specific bills declared his renewed support for "pending" fair employment practices legislation applicable to both employers and unions, which he said would "help set a standard for all the nation and close existing gaps."

At House subcommittee hearings earlier this year, AFL-CIO Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris expressed the federation's strong support for an enforceable federal law banning job discrimination.

Meanwhile, the Administration's drive for enactment of other aspects of the President's omnibus civil rights program opened with hearings by the anti-trust subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee.

Robert Kennedy Testifies

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, the leadoff witness, recalled that the courts and the Executive Dept. had taken "significant and far-reaching" action to redress the legitimate grievances of Negroes denied full equality.

"Now it is clearly up to Congress to bring its strength to bear," he declared.

Under questioning, he said the Administration would be willing to accept a modified version of the bill exempting the smallest business enterprises from Title II, the section dealing with equal access to public accommodations which has provoked the sharpest opposition of southern Democrats and conservative Republicans.

The kind of small businesses which would be exempt became typified by references to a small resort-area rooming house owned by a mythical "Mrs. Murphy."

Wirtz, the second Administration witness, spoke out strongly in favor of two points in the civil rights package aimed at eliminating discrimination in hiring. One would provide a statutory base for the continuation of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and the other would give the President authority to deny federal funds in any project or program where job discrimination is practiced.

Major Strides Seen

Wirtz cited major strides by both employers and unions toward the elimination of discrimination, but said "much remains to be done."

He said the department is following up the situation "aggressively on a case-by-case basis" and is not accepting "soft or easy or traditional answers" from the contractors. There has been an "exaggerated" tendency on the part of employers, he said, to shift the blame to unions for discrimination in construction employment.

On the Senate side, southern forces won a preliminary skirmish in the rights battle, forcing a delay in Commerce Committee hearings on the Administration package. A Senate committee cannot meet while the Senate is in session if there is a single objection, and Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) announced that he would object.

Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) said he would now proceed with hearings starting July 1, with the Attorney General as the the first witness. If the Thurmond objection threatens further delay, Magnuson said the committee would "simply meet a little earlier."

"We have had 8 a. m. meetings before," he said.

Thurmond's action was an omen of things to come as southerners mustered their forces under Sec. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.) for an expected filibuster over the President's civil rights proposals.

Major Target

As in the House, the public accommodations section of the bill is the major target, and observers point out that the Administration must win 25 to 27 Republican votes to break a filibuster and get it through.

Only 9 of the 33 Republican Senators were among the 46 signers of the bill setting forth the public accommodations provisions, however, and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) has expressed firm opposition to anything more than a "voluntary" approach to the problem.

A civil rights bill sponsored jointly by Dirksen and Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) contains other aspects of the Administration's civil rights program, but not the public accommodations section.

On Jobs, Membership:

Anti-Bias Program Adopted By Building Trades Unions

The presidents of 18 national and international unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. have unanimously endorsed a four- point program designed to avoid racial discrimination in membership and job referrals.

The union leaders, in their statement, emphasized the view that "positive steps to create more jobs" for the entire work force are a prime need in assuring equal employment opportunities, but they added:

"We recognize the government's interest and its duty to correct economic injustice and we pledge our good faith to work toward the goal."

They set forth the following program:

- Local unions are urged to accept into membership any applicant who meets the required qualifications regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.
- Locals which have exclusive hiring hall arrangements are to list and refer job applicants in accordance with applicable law and the terms of their contracts, without identification as to race, creed, color or national origin and without discrimination.
- Locals which do not operate exclusive hiring halls, but which do have referral systems set forth in their contracts, are to refer qualified job applicants without discrimination.
- Locals are to accept and refer qualified applicants for apprenticeship without discrimination.

A Building Trades spokesman noted that the statement had been adopted as department policy and "the expectation is that it will be followed up by the national unions."

The subject of discrimination had been under consideration by the construction union presidents for some time, he reported, but their action "no doubt was accelerated" by discussions which occurred at the recent meeting of some 300 union officials with Pres. Kennedy.

The statement took specific note of "the daily dialogue in the press and by spokesmen of minority groups" on the subject of hiring practices in the construction industry, but suggested that some criticism indicated "a serious lack of knowledge of the facts."

"As a practical matter," the statement said, most journeymen building trades craftsmen have come up through apprenticeship training programs, and the selection of apprentices "is based on many factors, most of which are totally unrelated to any form of discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin."

The number of apprentices admitted to the trades each year is geared to available job opportunities, it went on, and when compared to the number of unemployed youth, has a relatively "minor" impact on overall joblessness.

While pledging their cooperation in efforts to wipe out discrimination, the union presidents stressed the need to preserve high standards of skill and craftsmanship and said, "we do not intend to delegate to outsiders the right to decide the qualifications for entrance into the industry and union membership."

The department estimated that the 18 unions together now have about 100,000 apprentices, against a total membership of about 3.5 million. Because membership records are not kept according to race it could give no estimate of the proportion of Negro members in the unions, but said it was higher in some unions than in others.

About 17 percent of the workers employed in the construction industry are Negroes, about the same as in all manufacturing.

The unions affiliated with the department, in addition to the Carpenters, are the Asbestos Workers, Boiler Makers, Bricklayers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Elevator Constructors, Operating Engineers, Granite Cutters, Iron Workers, Hod Carriers, Lathers, Marble & Tile Setters, Painters, Plasterers, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Roofers, Sheet Metal Workers and Stone Cutters.

President Broadens Federal Bias Ban

Pres. Kennedy has followed through on a pledge to extend the scope of his executive order barring discrimination on federal construction projects.

A new executive order, No. 11,114, requires contractors to sign non-discrimination clauses when engaged in any construction project financed in whole or in part by federal grants or federally insured funds.

The order defines "construction contracts" as "any contract for the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, extension, or repair of buildings, highways, or other improvements to real property."

Firm Must Rehire 14, Restore Lost Work

A sportswear manufacturer committed an unfair labor practice, the National Labor Relations Board ruled, when he closed a department where union supporters were in the majority and transferred the work to a less strongly-organized department.

A three-member NLRB panel concluded that the reasons given by the management of Ravena Sportswear for closing its finishing department at the Ravena, N. Y., plant were not the real reasons but that management was "motivated by anti-union animus" against the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Back Pay Ordered

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown directed the company and three allied firms, operating as a single employer, to:

- Reopen the finishing department operations at the Ravena plant under the same conditions as those existing before the shutdown on Feb. 14, 1962.
- Rehire 14 laid-off women employes and make them whole for all pay lost since the shutdown.
- Rescind any arrangement under which Oneonta Dress Co., Inc., of Oneonta, N. Y., a subcontractor, does finishing work previously done at Ravena Sportswear.

The board upheld Trial Examiner James V. Constantine's finding that the employer violated the law when he laid off finishing workers "in the middle of a workday and workweek" without giving the women employes any explanation or permitting them to finish their work.

Constantine reported these background events:

John St. George of New York City, president of Oneonta Dress Co. and treasurer of Sherwood Fashions, Inc., agreed to lease the closed plant of Cousant, Inc., women's blouse manufacturers in Ravena, after telling former employes he had a "complete non-union operation" and would not be interested in a union operation.

The Ravena firm was organized and Cousant employes, all of whom had been laid off on Sept. 13, 1961, were hired. The company opened a sewing department in January 1962 and a finishing department the next month as a subcontractor for St. George and one of his firms.

Employes began signing membership cards in the ILGWU, and later were told by management over the plant public address system that "instigators" of trouble would soon be "out of their jobs." After three days a supervisor said in the presence of witnesses: "I have seen the handwriting on the wall. They are 100 percent for the union. The hell with them—I am going to let them go."

Fourteen girls in the finishing department were laid off at noon on Feb. 14, 1962, and never recalled.

Management's reason for the shutdown was that the finishing work was poorly done, but the NLRB ruled that the "asserted reasons . . . were not their real reasons, but were seized upon" to conceal a discriminatory motivation.

Business Agent Cited For Trade Fair Aid

New York—A citation by the Labor Dept. has been given to Business Agent Emanuel David of Hotel & Restaurant Workers Local 1 for serving as interpreter at an international trade fair in his native Greece.

N. Y. Teachers Reject City's 'Final' Offer

New York—City teachers have voted, 13,707-1,201, to reject a "final" contract offer made June 7 by the Board of Education. Their union, the United Federation of Teachers, warned they will not work without a contract unless the board offer is "substantially improved."

The UFT represents 40,000 teaching employes. Union leaders, shunning the word "strike," are saying the schools will not open Sept. 9 if the stalemate continues.

School Board Pres. Max J. Rubin reported after a conference with Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) that if any further funds become available, they will go to "the educational needs of the children directly." The union called the statement "obviously provocative" and charged it meant teachers would get no raises, though the city budget now provides raises for every other class of public employe.

Rubin said the board approved the "no raise" policy with one dissent—that of member Morris Iushewitz, secretary of the AFL-CIO city central body.

The union has urged Wagner and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) to provide more money for the schools, and has suggested ways in which up to $100 million could be provided.

In Joint Action:

Seven Unions Strike Honolulu Papers

Honolulu — Seven newspaper unions struck Honolulu's two major dailies June 21 in an action which set several precedents in labor activity here. It was believed to be the first time anywhere that newspaper unions had bargained on a joint set of basic demands and with a unified voice. It also was Hawaii's first major newspaper strike.

Striking the Honolulu Advertiser and Honolulu Star-Bulletin, plus their jointly owned production facility, the Hawaii Newspaper Operators, were the Newspaper Guild, The Typographical Union, Pressmen, Photo Engravers, Machinists, and the unaffiliated Lithographers and Longshoremen, the latter of which represents circulation department employes.

About 600 employes were affected. The strike came after futile negotiations stretching back to February over terms of new collective bargaining agreements.

For the unions involved, basically, the dispute was over wage demands and a company counter demand that a two-day waiting period for sick leave, bargained out of most agreements in 1959, be reinstituted. The unions had refused to consider the waiting period demand although stating they were willing to write sick leave policing machinery into the contracts.

Wage Demands Cut

Also at issue were vacations, holidays, medical insurance and other matters. The unions originally demanded $10 weekly across-the-board pay increases. They later reduced this to $7. The companies, also bargaining jointly, stuck to an original offer of percentage increases with a maximum of $3.50 a week.

At the request of federal mediators the strike was postponed twice for 24 hours, each time in last-minute efforts to end the impasse in negotiations. The companies did not move from their position that sick leave waiting periods must be instituted or offer seriously to bargain on wages.

The unions finally set up a joint strike strategy committee composed of members of each union involved. The committee is headed by Tommy Lum, Hawaii Newspaper Guild administrative officer, with David Bray, local ITU president, as secretary.

Lum said in a statement: "It was apparent . . . after almost continuous negotiations that the employers were unwilling to seek a reasonable solution of our differences. The unions are ready and willing to resume bargaining at any time requested, either by the employers or the mediation service."

Federal mediators, however, were unable to bring the parties together until July 26, five days after the start of the walkout, which stopped publication of both papers and their commercial printing operations. The mediation talks were continuing as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

ELEVEN-YEAR-OLD Darrell Eugene Collins takes a man's place on the Kingsport Press picket line alongside L. V. ("Buck") Slaughter, pressman for 26 years at the Kingsport, Tenn., book plant. Darrell is the son of a bookbinder. Five unions, out since March 11 in a strike for decent wages and conditions, tightened belts as management balked conciliation efforts and police began enforcing a court order limiting the number of pickets and keeping other union observers 100 yards back.

Court Voids NLRB Ruling On Lockout

Denver—The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has refused to enforce a National Labor Relations Board decision that an employer unlawfully locked out food store workers in Carlsbad, N. M.

The court in a 2-1 vote ruled that specific evidence of unlawful intent was lacking and that the board misapplied the lockout rule upheld by the Supreme Court in a previous case—Buffalo Linen. The union will seek a review by the high court of the latest ruling.

The board ruled 13 months ago that four Carlsbad stores had violated the law by laying off their employes and hiring replacements during the lockout when Retail Clerks' Local 462 struck Food Jet, Inc., a fifth member of the multi-employer bargaining unit.

"Locking out employes in order to replace them with other workers," a board majority had said, "may hardly be viewed" as defensive action. Members Philip Ray Rodgers and John H. Fanning disagreed. They said the choice given the nonstruck employers by the majority decision—to ignore union "whipsaw" action or close them down completely—"renders largely illusory the right of lockout given them by the court" in the Buffalo Linen case.

The appeals court agreed with Rodgers and Fanning, saying that the "preservation of the multi-employer bargaining unit . . . is necessary to assure economic justice" which would be "largely destroyed" by leaving to the union the power to decide which employer could stay open. Chief Judge Alfred P. Murrah dissented.

City Employes Win $500,000 Back Pay

Woburn, Mass.—A five-year battle by members of Building Service Employes' Local 524 has won a back pay award of $500,000 for 105 employes of the city public works department.

The city's fight against paying the workers a 25-cent hourly pay increase, voted by the city council in 1958, collapsed when judges of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts ruled that four successive mayor's vetoes of council-approved pay raises were unlawful.

Raises averaging $40 a week were put into effect the following week. The city may have to float a special bond issue to finance the raises, and to pay pro rata shares to workers who quit and to the estates of those who have died in the meantime.

Woburn is a city of about 35,000 population 10 miles northwest of Boston. Members of BSEIU Local 524 kept up the long fight for their rights, and won with the aid of union Rep. Matthew L. McGrath, Jr., and James R. Freely, Jr., attorney for the local.

Action Held Lawful

The court decision upheld the arguments of the two BSEIU representatives that pay hikes voted by the council, and vetoed by Mayor William G. Shaughnessy and his successor, Mayor John F. Gilgun, Jr., were lawful and should take effect from the dates specified by council.

The court said in its decision that "such action as fixing salaries is the type of power frequently exercised by legislative bodies" and is not an executive action forbidden to the council. It said also:

"There is no merit in the city's contention" that the city council was barred by the city charter from adopting the pay hike ordinances and "it was the duty of the mayor, Shaughnessy, to include the salaries thus fixed in the 1959 budget."

When Shaughnessy vetoed the raises, union members worked to defeat him in the next election and in 1959 supported the winner, Gilgun. The next year the council voted another 25-cent increase to all public works employes, but Gilgun vetoed that too.

'Pressure' Resisted

The union decided to take the case to court in 1960. While the case was pending, two other wage increases were voted and vetoed, pending a decision in the case. City officials pressured the employes to drop the suit and one official threatened to contract-out their work if they did not give up the fight. They refused.

Present officers of the local include Pres. Louis Ames, Vice Pres. John Lacey, Sec.-Treas. William Meagher, Exec. Board Chairman Robert White and board member Leon Andrews.

Bargaining Teams Start Work on Steel Pacts

Pittsburgh—Bargaining teams for the Steelworkers have opened negotiations with representatives of the 11 "Big Steel" companies to translate terms of the basic steel settlement into contract language.

The union negotiators held their first meetings with the 11 managements after a briefing session with USWA Pres. David J. McDonald, who was the chief Steelworker spokesman on the joint union-industry Human Relations Committee which worked out the details of the settlement without a formal contract reopening.

Key feature of the agreement is a plan for 13-week vacations every five years for about 243,500 senior employes of the companies. McDonald estimates the plan will create "at least 25,000 more job opportunities" in the industry when it becomes fully effective.

As the individual steel negotiations opened, the USWA president announced that the union and the Aluminum Co. of America would begin "discussions" in New York the week of July 15 on their current contracts covering some 13,000 Alcoa workers.

He also said that four other major aluminum producers, employing in all about 18,400 USWA members, had been invited to begin separate talks with the union at about the same time. They are Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., Reynolds Metal Co., Olin Mathieson Corp. and Ormet, Inc.

The union's two-year contracts with the aluminum firms expire Aug. 1, 1964 and became reopenable last June 1. No formal reopening notices have been served, however.

McDonald's announcement made no mention of what the union's objectives would be in the aluminum talks or whether it would seek to extend the 13-week vacation plan.

He said simply that he hoped for "a speedy and amicable solution of our mutual problems."

In voting its "enthusiastic" endorsement of the HRC recommendations in steel, however, the union's 170-member Wage Policy Committee said that "steps should also be taken to achieve the same benefits, where appropriate, or equivalent improvements, at other companies within our jurisdiction whose contracts have similar reopening provisions."

McDonald earlier had given high praise to the new steel industry agreement as a demonstration of the "permanent worth" of the HRC approach in providing a forum where labor and management, without third-party interventions "can sit down without restraint or rancor and reach agreement."

End 'Boom-Bust' Cycle

"The idea," he said, "was to remove our problems from the critical pressures of contract deadline and at the same time to reduce or eliminate the 'boom and bust' cycle which such deadlines generated.

"We have accomplished that purpose and by so doing, I say hopefully, we are perhaps one step closer to realization of the end of industrial strife in the steel industry. It is significant to note that the new understanding promotes this objective by extending the duration of the contracts and again reducing the prospect of critical deadline dates."

Shipyard Lockout Hit In 3-2 NLRB Decision

An employer who refused a union offer to extend a contract 60 days under a no-strike pledge, and rejected union assurances that there would be no strike while negotiations continued, committed an unfair labor practice when he locked out his workers, the National Labor Relations Board has decided.

The board, splitting 3 to 2, ruled the American Ship Building Co. unlawfully laid off 46 employes at its South Chicago, Ill., yard on Aug. 11, 1961. It ordered lost pay, plus interest at 6 percent, from that date until Oct. 28, 1961, when a new agreement went into effect and the workers were recalled.

Trial Examiner Reversed

The board reversed the finding of Trial Examiner George J. Bott, who had held the employer had reasonable ground to fear a strike in spite of assurances by the Boiler Makers, Plumbers, Carpenters, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Painters, Firemen & Oilers, Operating Engineers and Pattern Makers, who had since 1952 been parties to one contract covering four American Shipyards.

Where there is a real strike threat, the majority pointed out, the board has in other cases held that an employer is privileged to lock out his employes. But it added:

"On the other hand, where the union has given assurances that no sudden strike would be called, or that in the event a strike were called, adequate safeguards would be taken to protect the employer's facilities and work commitments, a lockout is illegal; for in such a situation the lockout is deemed an offensive weapon intended to force abandonment of the union's contract demands and the acceptance of the employer's."

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and member Philip Ray Rodgers, dissenting, said they agreed with Bott that the shutdown was justified. The unions had struck in each of five previous negotiations and had been given strike authorization in the current case, they said. They cited a conclusion in a precedent case: "The pedestrian need not wait to be struck before leaping for the curb."

IAM Lodge Honors 4 Vocational Students

Mt. Vernon, N. Y.—Westchester Lodge 1709 of the Machinists has awarded $25 U.S. savings bonds to four vocational high school students in Westechester County in memory of James G. Healey, the lodge's first president.

Selected for outstanding work were Antonio Ferrante, Mt. Vernon High School; John Nicholson, New Rochelle High School; Kenneth Santos, White Plains High School, and Edward Kreuzer, Saunders Trades & Technical High School, Yonkers, N. Y.

Screen Actors Negotiate Ban On Job Bias

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild and the Association of Motion Picture Producers have agreed on a strong anti-discrimination clause in a new two-year contract currently being negotiated.

SAG Pres. George Chandler, at a membership meeting at the Hollywood Palladium, read the new clause as follows:

"The parties mutually reaffirm their policy of non-discrimination in the treatment of any actor because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"In accordance with this policy, the producer will make every effort to cast performers belonging to all groups in all types of roles having due regard for the requirements of suitability for the role, so that, for example, the American scene may be portrayed realistically.

"In accordance with the above policy, the Guild reaffirms its policy of non-discrimination with respect to admission to membership, and rights of membership.

"The cooperative committee shall also serve as a committee on fair employment practices to consider any complaints hereunder."

The SAG agreement was announced almost simultaneously with action by two other entertainment unions, the Television & Radio Artists and the Variety Artists, to broaden and strengthen existing policies against discrimination in membership rights and the employment of talent.

Shipping Firm Enjoined on Safety Issue

New York—Grace Lines, Inc., has been enjoined by a U.S. District Court judge from further violation of safety regulations issued under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act—the first such order since the regulations were issued in 1958.

The U.S. Dept. of Labor asked for the injunction through the Dept. of Justice following the death of one Grace Line employe and injury to another. The accident was caused, the department charged, because unsecured beams or pontoons were left in place next to sections through which cargo was being worked.

District Judge Dudley B. Bonzal noted in his ruling that, despite admission by Grace Lines of the violations and its agreement to cease and desist, the company later violated the same regulation on two occasions.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the decision was a significant one which "should help protect longshoremen" not only in New York but all other ports.

Wirtz's department announced recently that the longshore injury rate last year was 108.2 per million manhours worked and 34.9 in ship repair work.

Labor Dept. Post Filled by Woman

Mrs. Clara F. Schloss has been appointed an assistant administrator of the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions, the first woman to hold the position.

In her new post she is in charge of the Office of Research & Legislative Analysis and will prepare statistical data on the Equal Pay Act recently passed by Congress.

Mrs. Schloss formerly was a statistician in the Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics. She has been with the Wage-Hour & Public Contract Divisions since 1950 except for two years with the National Production Authority.

SEVENTEEN MEMBERS of eight federal employe unions received a week of training in collective bargaining presented at Ann Arbor by the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University and the Michigan State University School of Labor & Industrial Relations. Shown from left are (seated) Operations Dir. John A. McCart of the Government Employes Council and AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. Otto Pragan; (standing) Dir. Hy Kornbluh of the ILIR Division of Labor Education & Services, Assistant Prof. Bob Repas of the SLIR and Sec.-Treas. Orrin A. Burrows of the Government Employes Council, who also is director of government operations for the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. All but Burrows were faculty members.

Federal Unions Train Bargaining Teachers

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Seventeen representatives of eight federal employes' unions have shifted from studying to teaching after completing a week-long course designed to equip them for the task of training government workers in bargaining and grievance processing techniques.

The course was conducted by the University of Michigan's Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations, the Michigan State University School of Labor & Industrial Relations and Wayne State University as part of a five-point program developed by the Government Employes Council and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

The program grew out of Pres. Kennedy's executive order of January 1962, setting forth the right of federal employes to engage in collective bargaining, an order which has an impact on employe relations in the federal service not unlike the effect of the Wagner Act of 1935 on commercial labor-management relations.

With the cooperation of the AFL-CIO, the GEC worked out a crash program to impart negotiating skills to union representatives in thousands of bargaining units across the country (there are some 30,000 separate units in the Post Office Dept. alone).

The first need was to assemble teaching materials keyed to the executive order itself and to negotiating and grievance procedures.

School for Teachers

The second point was the organization of a school for the training of instructors, who in turn could train additional personnel. This developed into the Ann Arbor Institute.

Next on the agenda was the compilation of a directory of qualified instructors from the unions and university faculties, which is now being sent out to all federal employes' organizations.

A list of the regional offices of all government workers' unions also is being compiled for the use of the 22 universities with worker education centers in organizing additional training programs.

Fall Institute Planned

Finally, the GEC is planning a fall institute for the national officers of all government employes' unions for an informal discussion on the future course of collective bargaining and trade unionism in the federal service.

The Ann Arbor Institute brought together representatives of the three major segments of federal employment—blue collar, white collar and postal workers. Equipped with a specially prepared instruction manual, each participant did practice teaching in bargaining and grievance processing and on the rights spelled out in the President's executive order.

Several of the unions represented already have launched programs for the training of additional instructors. The organizations taking part included the Government Employes, Postal Clerks, Letter Carriers, Mail Handlers, Operating Engineers, Machinists, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Metal Trades Council of the Canal Zone.

Textile Chain Hit by NLRB Backpay Edict

Burlington Industries, Inc., has reinstated employe Charles Crouch to his job at the company's Vinton Weaving plant in Vinton, Va., with $1,995 in back pay, according to Regional Dir. Boyd E. Payton of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Crouch was fired for union activity last July 12 and two months ago Trial Examiner Charles A. Ricci of the National Labor Relations Board recommended that he be restored to his job and compensated for lost pay. Burlington complied with Ricci's recommendation, Payton said, after TWUA sought "a stiffer remedy" to prevent the nation's largest textile chain from "continuing its chain-wide policy of intimidating, coercing, discriminating against and discharging pro-union employes."

Among other remedies, the union has urged the NLRB to require Burlington to post a $10 million bond which would be forfeited if the firm fails to comply with board orders. TWUA also is seeking reinstatement of Robert Wright, a Vinton employe who was fired after testifying at a board hearing.

The company has a long record of resisting union organizing attempts and has been hit by several NLRB findings of unfair labor practices.

Dollar Drive Intensified:

COPE Cites Need In '64 Senate Races

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has called on all union members to join COPE's annual dollar drive and help the organization build financial support for liberal candidates in the crucial 1964 elections.

"Next year will be a showdown year for a large group of Senate liberals," Acting COPE Dir. Al Barkan said. "They will be targets for the heavy amunition of every right-wing crowd in the nation.

"One way union members can bolster chances for reelection of these men is to give a dollar to COPE. We know the forces of reaction will be plunging fortunes into the campaigns of ultra-conservatives in an effort to unseat as many liberals as they can.

"We can't match them dollar for dollar—we never could—but we must have enough to help liberal candidates conduct adequate campaigns. The blunt fact is, liberal candidates have nowhere else to turn for financial aid than the labor movement."

Among the senators up for reelection next year, Barkan listed 17—all Democrats—who, he said, have a composite voting record on the COPE scorecard of 447 "right" votes on key legislation and only 53 "wrong" votes.

They are Edmund Muskie (Me.), Gale McGee (Wyo.), Vance Hartke (Ind.), Phil Hart (Mich.), Stephen M. Young (O.), Eugene McCarthy (Minn.), Howard Cannon (Nev.), Harrison William (N. J.), Frank Moss (Utah), Robert Byrd (W. Va.), Thomas Dodd (Conn.), Clair Engle (Calif.), Quentin Burdick (N. D.), Ralph Yarborough (Tex.), William Proxmire (Wis.), Mike Mansfield (Mont.) and Albert Gore (Tenn.).

'More at Stake'

Urging union members to "contribute to your own welfare and future by contributing a dollar to COPE," Barkan declared that "there is more at stake than simply the winning and losing of a cluster of seats in the Senate."

He noted that in their Senate terms, the liberals up for reelection in 1964 have been building the seniority which is the "crucial key" to leadership and influence in committees that shape bills "and either boost or bury them."

"Presently, most committees flounder under the conservative leadership of Dixiecrats, who flash the red light to block good legislation," Barkan said. "If liberals can continue to accumulate seniority, they will eventually take over as chairmen of important committees, smoothing the path for progressive laws.

"It would be a tragedy for the trade union movement and the nation if we defaulted to the John Birchers, the other right-wingers and the big-wigs of industry and finance by being unable to help the men who help us in Congress."

Board Seeks to Delay Pullman Porters' Strike

The National Mediation Board has taken the first step under the Railway Labor Act to delay a strike set by the Sleeping Car Porters for July 1 against the Pullman Co. and three major railroads.

The board put the matter up to Pres. Kennedy by certifying the dispute as an emergency.

Should the President follow with appointment of an emergency board, this would impose a delay of 60 days on strike action by the union. The board would have 30 days to investigate the dispute and make recommendations, and the parties would be required to maintain the status quo for an additional 30 days.

The government acted following an announcement by BSCP Pres. A. Philip Randolph that protracted negotiations with the Pullman Co., the New York Central, Rock Island and Soo Line railroads had failed to produce an agreement on shorter working time, a pay increase and job protection provisions.

More than two dozen other railroads also would be involved through their use of Pullman Co. equipment.

Strike Date Set

Randolph's announcement said that union members employed by the carriers had been directed "to withdraw from service" starting at 6 a.m., July 1.

He said a mail referendum of the union's membership last year had approved strike action by "practically a hundred percent."

The Porters, who now work about 205 hours a month or 48 hours a week, are seeking a 173-hour month, which would give them the equivalent of a 40-hour week, and, Randolph has estimated, create a need for 700 to 1,000 additional jobs.

In addition, BSCP is asking for the same 10.28-cent hourly wage increase won by the non-operating rail unions last year.

The four rail companies have refused to put the pay increase into effect unless the union agrees to accept a "moratorium" on its proposals to reduce the work month.

Randolph has characterized the campaign for shorter working time as primarily a drive for job stabilization and protection, but also a matter of economic justice.

Drastic slashes in passenger operations, due to what Randolph calls a loss of "competitive vitality" among railroad management, have brought a 50 percent reduction in porters and attendant personnel over the past five years, reducing BSCP membership to about 10,000.

United Funds Honor Presented to Beirne

Chicago — AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the Community Services Committee, was one of three volunteer leaders to receive United Community Service Awards for outstanding activity on behalf of the country's 2,225 united funds, community chests and community health and welfare councils.

Beirne, president of the Communications Workers, was honored at a ceremony here at which medallions also were presented to Edgar B. Stern, Jr., president of the WDSU Broadcasting Corp., New Orleans, and Oliver G. Willits, former chairman of the board of the Campbell Soup Co., Camden, N. J.

Research Director Warns:

Unbalanced Economy Held Major Danger to Nation

An unbalanced economy, not an unbalanced budget, is the "prime difficulty" the country faces, the AFL-CIO's chief economist warned in calling for an extension of the Accelerated Public Works Act to attack unemployment.

Congress, the Administration and the public must recognize the dangers inherent in high-level joblessness, said Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger of the Dept. of Research. Latest official figures show that the unemployment rate for May stood at 5.9 percent of the civilian labor force.

"It is a growing danger," he declared, "because unemployment has continued to move up. . . . This situation cannot be frozen; it is not something that stands still."

In a network radio interview over the Mutual Broadcasting System, Goldfinger emphasized that even a substantial tax cut will not "create enough new jobs in the face of spreading automation and a rapidly growing labor force, with an increasing number of youngsters who are joining the labor force and looking for work."

The AFL-CIO is urging a $10 billion tax cut, concentrated in the low-income and middle-income brackets, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963. The proposed legislation is pending in the House Ways & Means Committee, with the probability that a tax-cutting bill cannot be sent to the House floor for action for several weeks.

"Even if we were to get" the kind of tax cut the federation has proposed, Goldfinger said, an increase of public works expenditures would be required.

"The big thing we need now is the creation of new job opportunities . . . we hope that Congress will act forthrightly in terms of a tax cut . . . and an increase in public works expenditures," he said.

Largely Committed

The $850 million appropriated under the Accelerated Public Works Act of 1962, he warned, has been largely committed to useful projects while a large backlog of requests for funds is unfilled.

"For every $1 million of government public works expenditures, 100 new jobs are created," he continued. The $2 billion the AFL-CIO has requested for extension of the public works program through 1964 would be matched, he pointed out, by $1 billion in funds from the states and localities.

An estimated 300,000 jobs would be created by a public works program of this size, he said, in the proportion of 40 percent in constructon on the site, 60 percent off the site "in manufacturing and distribution of construction materials of various types."

It would involve a substantial number of jobs for unskilled and semi-skilled workers, he declared, "and the real significant problem of unemployment is among these groups."

Goldfinger rejected the suggestion that accelerated public works programs "smack of make-work projects like the WPA of old."

"Public works programs provide projects of lasting worth to the communities," he said. "The improvement and repair of streets, of sewers, of public buildings, of school buildings and other kinds of public facilities, enrich the community; they improve our public services."

"They are good in and of themselves. They are needed."

3,700 Projects Approved

More than 3,700 projects, involving state and local matching funds, had been approved as of last January, he pointed out. "Our information is that there are over 6,200 projects that are awaiting approval" and would involve "something like $1.7 billion."

The program presently advocated, he observed, would run through 1964 and we should "take another look at it sometime later on in 1964."

"What I think we need are very substantial increases over the next 10 to 20 years in various kinds of public service activities," Goldfinger continued.

"We need a very substantial increase in housing because of the increase in our population and the growing number of young people who are now coming into marriageable age . . . We need public housing as part of this—public housing developments for low-income families.

"We also need the development of mass transit, of mass transportation systems in our cities. We need urban renewal and urban redevelopment. All of these things are part of what we sometimes call public works."

Goldfinger was interviewed on Labor News Conference, a public affairs program produced by the AFL-CIO for the Mutual network. He was questioned by William Eaton, labor affairs reporter for United Press Intl., and Alan Adams, Washington correspondent for McGraw-Hill Publications.

Msgr. Egan Joins UPWA Public Panel

Chicago—Msgr. John J. Egan has been named a member of the public advisory review board of the Packinghouse Workers. Msgr. Egan, director of the Chicago Archdiocesan Conservation Council, succeeds Msgr. John J. O'Grady of Washington, D. C. The review board scrutinizes union democratic procedures and ethical conduct complaints.

70 Volunteers to Teach 'Locked-Out' Negroes

New York—Forty public school teachers from New York and Philadelphia and 30 recent graduates of Queens College have volunteered to teach this summer in Prince Edward County, Va., where public schools have been closed since 1959, in resistance to a federal court desegregation order.

The "freedom school lift" was organized by the Teachers, by Queens College graduates, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. New York and Philadelphia locals of the union began rounding up volunteers, and the Rev. A. Francis Griffin of Farmville, Va., head of the Virginia state NAACP, is in charge of home housing.

AFT Vice Presidents Richard Parrish, Bronx teacher, and Frank Sullivan, Philadelphia schoolman, have been named by the union to coordinate the project.

"We have more volunteers than we can house," said Parrish. "Now we must raise an expense budget of about $10,000 for transportation and living expenses. No teacher will get any pay."

In four-week sessions starting July 15 and Aug. 11, teams of volunteers—one teacher, one graduate per class—plan to teach reading, arithmetic, social studies and possibly science to classes of 25 to 30 pupils in some six rural school centers.

The union reports that many of the 1,633 Negro children of school age in Prince Edward County have never been to any kind of school. Some children of "poor white" families also were "locked out" when schools closed. These, too, will be eligible for the proposed classes. Most white youngsters have been attending private schools paid for at county expense, the union has found.

NEW president of the New Mexico State AFL-CIO is Miss Billie Sponseller. She succeeds James A. Price, who resigned after being named by the executive board of the Roofers as an international vice president. Miss Sponseller is a member of the Communications Workers.

North Carolina Rejects 'States' Amendments

Raleigh, N. C.—The North Carolina legislature has rejected all three so-called "states' rights" amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

The only one of the proposed amendments to pass the House—to establish a Court of the Union which would supersede the U.S. Supreme Court on all matters dealing with federal-state relations—was defeated in the Senate, 28-12.

Earlier the House had rejected, 59-56, the proposed amendment forbidding the Supreme Court to interfere with state legislative apportionment. The third amendment, to enable state legislatures to initiate amendments to the federal constitution, was beaten when House Speaker Clifton Blue broke a 54-54 tie to kill the measure.

Gov. Terry Sanford (D) actively opposed all three proposed amendments, which are being pushed by a nationwide group of conservative state legislators. The AFL-CIO Executive Council has denounced the proposals as a threat to the American form of government.

THE GOAL OF COVERING all workers under workmen's compensation programs is still far from reached, as this chart shows. In only nine states are as many as 85 percent protected. (Source: Social Security Bulletin, Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.)

States' Record 'Tragic' On Injury Compensation

The "tragic record" of the states in providing workmen's compensation protection for on-the-job injuries and occupational illness demonstrates the need for federal benefit standards, according to an analysis in the June issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine.

The article, prepared by the Dept. of Research, is titled, "The Crisis in Workmen's Compensation."

A half-century ago, when most state workmen's compensation laws were adopted, the average weekly wage was about $13 and the average benefit about $10.

Today, the article points out, "the average state benefit is between $35 to $45 a week, the national average wage of a factory worker is about $97 a week" and only three states have maximum benefits for an injured worker with a wife and two children equal to two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage. As recently as 1940, the article notes, all but 10 states had benefit ceilings equal to at least two-thirds of the average state wage.

An employe of the federal government, covered under a compensation schedule set by Congress, can receive more for the loss of a thumb than the maximum paid by 31 states for the loss of an arm at the shoulder. Top payment for loss of a foot is $3,850 in Wyoming—and $23,000 in Hawaii.

In six states which finance workmen's compensation benefits through exclusive state funds, only 6.5 percent of premiums paid go towards the cost of administering the program. The average cost for private insurance in the other states is so much higher that if overhead expenses could be held down to 25 percent of the premium dollar, benefits could be increased by about one-fourth.

Few states cover all workers, supervise medical treatment or provide adequate rehabilitation services for injured workers.

The AFL-CIO analysis listed 11 recommended standards for "a good state workmen's compensation law." It noted that no state law presently meets all 11 standards and "one state does not meet any."

These are the recommendations:

- Compulsory coverage with no numerical exemptions.
- Benefits sufficient to maintain "a decent standard of living" for injured workers, with maximum benefits not less than two-thirds of state average wages.
- Reciprocity of benefits rights between jurisdictions.
- Full statutory coverage of all occupational diseases.
- Full compensation protection under second injury funds.
- Continued benefits during rehabilitation.
- Administration by a state agency rather than the courts.
- An exclusive state compensation fund.
- Benefits for the totally disabled for the entire period of disability.

Calling for a federal Workmen's Compensation Act or, "short of this," federal legislation fixing minimum standards for the states, the AFL-CIO analysis concluded:

"The states have not met their responsibilities. Unless there is action on the federal level, the nation's first social insurance is likely to remain last in terms of performance."

College Students Hail Labor Education Films

Redding, Calif.—The enthusiastic reaction to labor education films of students at Shasta College here has been conveyed to Executive Sec. Hartley Weingartner of the Five County Central Labor Council by Keneth G. Young of the institution's Social Science Dept., who added his own thanks and that of his colleagues.

In a letter to Weingartner, through whom the movies were made available, Young described them as "among the best audio-visual materials I have ever observed or used."

The films included Push Buttons & People, The Story of the NLRB, and The Grievance, which were taped for presentation to future classes, and Land of Promise.

Some student reactions:

"In my opinion these pictures of labor were worth a thousand words. The value and amount of material given could not have been given orally and as complete in the same amount of time."

". . . (The films) contained information every American should know about unions. It shows the history to the present day and all the problems the unions have conquered, but yet they leave you with the thought of what is left to do in the unions."

"The films showed . . . the value of the union to society. Unions have gained for the working man prestige and human interest."

". . . I have found out what really happened between employes and employers (and) how much (unions) have improved working conditions."

"(The film) . . . cleared up many questions for me."

The Moral Imperative

CONGRESS IS LAUNCHED on what must be rated one of its great debates in this century—the extent to which legislators elected to office from all over the nation will meet the challenge of equal rights.

Members of the House and Senate come from communities of the widest variety. Some have metropolitan backgrounds and constituencies, some come from middle-sized towns, some from rural areas. They face together a question of conscience as well as of legislative wisdom.

The late William Faulkner once said that Southerners may curse the day when the first Yankee slave trader brought the first shipload of African victims to these shores to be sold into bondage, but that nevertheless the issues of the 20th Century must be met.

It should be phrased differently. No matter what the exact circumstances, the particular accidents and economic urgencies that make up our history, the people of this land are confronted forever with moral imperatives regarding the natural rights of man.

Greed and avarice were among the motives that impelled some men across the ocean to the New World. But high among the motives for most ancestors of present-day Americans were the search for freedom, the search for justice, the yearning for a fair opportunity, the desire for a better shake in life. Some were forcibly brought, some came as indentured criminals, some as philosophers. But we are all in our common problem together.

It is no time for us to curse the Yankee slave trader or the one-time slave overseer. The Negro American is, very simply, an American. He is seeking his rights. In earlier generations it was the Irish, the Germans, the Jews fleeing the ghettos and the pogroms, the Italians. And all in their turn have helped build this unique republic into the turbulent, vital democracy of today.

THE EXPERIENCED legislators making up Congress will necessarily move through familiar processes in making the judgments. They are established as a coordinate branch of government and their practice of hearings and questions, decisions and reports, the final rollcalls on the floor of the House and Senate, will produce bitter differences of opinion.

It is not to be expected that members will lightly yield old habits of thought or ancient prerogatives.

Neither is it to be expected that they will function under any kind of pressure alone.

The street demonstrations of Negro Americans, the parades, the sitdowns, the walkouts, have meaning because they reveal the depth of feeling, the depth of determination in the drive for recognition and respect.

Mr. Kennedy pointed out in his message to Congress that the executive and judicial branches of the federal government have taken an initiative to clear the way for making the practices in American life match the promises. The executive and the judiciary cannot do it all alone.

There is a compelling need for Congress to do its share.

A society changes slowly, no doubt—but it must change. It must move with the times. And this is eternally true of the society this nation has painfully sought through generations, which proclaimed in its Declaration of Independence the rights of man, which has written into its organic instruments the doctrine that all men are entitled to the equal protection of the laws.

The 88th Congress has its chance to make its name in history.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, June 29, 1963 No. 26

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

The Irrepressible Tide

'I Feel at Home Here':

Democracy Needs Free Unions, Kennedy Tells Berlin Workers

Pres. Kennedy on his tour of Berlin, accompanied by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, spoke June 26 to the convention of the West Germany Industrial Union of Building & Construction Workers in Congress Hall. The text of his address follows:

I AM NOT a stranger to trade union meetings, and therefore, I feel most at home here today. I appreciate the invitation which was extended to me through George Meany to join you, and have an opportunity to talk to those of you whose work is essential in these very difficult and dangerous days.

Below is written a quotation in this building from Benjamin Franklin, which says, "God grant that not only the love of liberty, but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man, may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his foot anywhere on its surface and say 'This is my country.' "

West Berlin is my country.

Benjamin Franklin once said to Thomas Paine, the great American revolutionary, "Where freedom is, there is where I live." and Paine replied, "Where freedom is not, there is where I live, because no man or country can be really free unless all men and all countries are free."

It is no accident that during the last 40 years the prime target of the Communist movement has been the destruction of the free trade union movement. Once the free trade union movement is destroyed, once it is harnessed to the chariot of the state, once trade union leaders are nominated by the head of the state, once meetings such as this become formalities, endorsing the purposes of the state, the trade union movement is destroyed and so is democracy.

Therefore, what you do in this country to maintain freedom, the contributions that you make to improve the welfare of your people, the great sense of responsibility you feel not only towards your members, not only towards your country, not only towards other trade unions, in other countries, but your sense of responsibility for the whole movement of freedom, so long as that exists the world can look to the future with hope.

So I am glad and proud to come here today. In the United States in the last 30 years, all of the great efforts that were made at home and abroad—Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, Pres. Truman's effort through the Marshall Plan, NATO, Point IV, and all the rest, and the effort that Pres. Eisenhower made—all of these great international efforts, as well as great progressive national movements, had the strong endorsement of support of the AFL-CIO, led by Mr. George Meany, who has stood for freedom in the United States and around the globe.

Therefore, I urge you, gentlemen, in meeting your responsibilities to those who belong to your union, to also realize that your unions will not survive except in a world of freedom.

I urge you to hold out, as we are trying to do in the United States, in the AFL-CIO, a helping hand to those who seek to organize trade unions in Latin America, Africa, and Asia. This is how a free society remains free.

And, in addition, while freedom is an end in itself, it is also a means. I think that nothing has been more destructive to the myth that once existed that while communism meant a loss of personal liberty, it was a means of economic advancement. If there is any myth that has been destroyed in the last 10 years, it has been the concept that communism and economic welfare go hand in hand.

I BELIEVE our times have shown that freedom is the handmaiden of economic advancement, that through a system of freedom, through a system of progress, through a system of responsibilities within a free society, that is the best way that people can live, not only peacefully at night and in the daytime, but also can enjoy an increasingly high standard of living.

That is what we want freedom for—not only so we can exist ourselves and develop our own personalities, but so that our people can move ahead—the people in my country who are entitled to an equal opportunity, which we are now fighting to give them, the people in this country who desire not only to be free, but to make it possible for their children to live better than they lived.

And here in Western Europe and in the United States, where the trade union movement has played such an important role, I hope it will be an example to those who live to the south of us, who stand on the razor edge of moving into some kind of totalitarianism or developing a free, progressive society, where, through the trade union movements, the fruits of progress, the fruits of production, can be distributed fairly to the population—not by a leader, but by the people themselves.

America may be far away, but in accordance with what Benjamin Franklin said, this is where we want to be today.

When I leave tonight, I leave, but the United States stays.

Morgan Says:

Tiny Israel Hums and Throbs With Growth—and Headaches

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

A TRAVELER who visits Israel, as this correspondent has just done, needs to withdraw briefly and collect his thoughts. The pocket-sized republic hums and throbs with the furious noise of building. Whole cities rise fully planned and formed out of the desert.

Morgan

Israel reverberates too with the shrill, strenuous sounds of constant contention. This involves not only the perpetual pressure of hostility between Israel and the Arab states, but controversy among Jews themselves. Indeed, so incessant is the political in-fighting that former Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, the venerable, venerated and sometimes vitriolic patriarch of modern Israel, was obliged to pay political tribute repeatedly to religious extremist parties out of all proportion to their national strength in order to keep his coalition together.

The overriding question, of course, is the significance of Israel's position—its very being in the Middle East. Is it a stabilizing or a disruptive force?

Visually and statistically the record is staggering. The contrast between the dusty, lethargically productive Palestine I visited 17 years ago and the teeming growth of both agriculture and industry in Israel today has to be seen to be believed.

But there are danger signs. Inflation threatens. Some economists fear Israelis are not saving enough—are eating up prosperity by enjoying living standards that are rising too fast.

On top of this, the government is gravely concerned about threats to Israel's exports by what seems increasingly to be the high handed, high tariff protectionist policies of the European Common Market.

Around everything inevitably rises the forbidding wall of hatred and hostility between Israel and the Arab world, shutting off all contact except the contact by bombs or bullets fired in provocation or reprisal. And it is on this wall that important friction arises between Israel and Washington over the issue of American policy toward the Middle East.

Encouragingly there has been marked improvement in Israeli-U.S. relations in the last several years, especially these first years of the Kennedy regime. Each country is approaching the other with more realism and candor. Top government officials in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv believe Washington has a clearer understanding of Israel's defensive and defense problems and they are pleased with the program under which we are selling them Hawk ground-to-air missiles and training Israeli soldiers to shoot them.

But they think we are romantically blind and dangerously mistaken in our approach to the Arabs. In their insecurity and impatience there is obviously a lack of realism when they say in effect, "If we will just do so and so, Nasser will do such and such, or cease doing it in response." The application of foreign policy in this day and age of pressures within cold war pressures is just not that simple or predictable.

WHEN THE ISRAELIS charge that we are being beguiled by the catch phrase of Arab unity, and naive not to see through the demagoguery of Colonel Nasser's talk of Arab union, they do make a compelling argument. To the question of who is being a disruptive or stabilizing force in this historically tormented region, they simply answer, "look around and see who is causing the trouble."

Nasser intervened massively with troops to tip civil war in Yemen toward a questionable republican regime with few, if any more virtues than the reactionary royalists it supposedly overthrew. Nasser's agents have been implicated in last week's rioting in Iran.

They are still trying to unseat young King Hussein of Jordan, and the United Arab Republic, which Cairo reproclaimed in April, is falling out before it gets started, with both Syria and Iraq rebelling against domination by the Egyptian leader.

To ranking Israelis this spectacle is proof positive that Arab unity—at least on Nasser's terms—is an impossible joke that has already failed. Furthermore, they argue, even if Nasser were to achieve his dream of Arab unity it would be a bad thing for us, because the only commitment he can be depended upon to hold is his rabid pledge to destroy Israel.

High officials of the government insist that all we need to do is to let Baghdad, Amman, Damascus and the other Arab capitals know that they do not need to commit themselves to Pan-Arabism to win our attention or support.

The Israeli argument is obviously self serving and over simplified. But we should, I think, pay it more heed. Because with all its faults, Israel is the only dynamo of democracy operating in the Middle East today, and it needs to be kept running.

Washington Reports:

Food Stamp Bill Seen Helping Recipients, Grocers, Farmers

THE FOOD STAMP plan, proposed for every community that wishes it, is a way to provide families on public welfare support with a more appetizing balanced diet, and also aid agriculture and the small grocer, Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.), author of the bill, and Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.) agreed in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations.

Pilot plans have been in operation in three dozen areas, including the districts of Representatives Sullivan and Saylor. The plan enables welfare recipients, who otherwise get surplus foods such as dried milk, corn meal, flour and cheese, to buy food stamps to be used to purchase foods in grocery stores. With stamps they may buy any U.S. produced food.

"Under the food stamp plan," Mrs. Sullivan explained, "a family of three should spend, according to the regulations, something like $35 or $40 a month for food. They spend this money for stamps, getting a bonus that provides perhaps $60 in stamps."

Saylor said he was interested in the plan for his district "because I had seen what I believe is an insult to human dignity: the manner in which surplus food is handed out. People are required to stand in long queues in all kinds of weather. They have to suffer all kinds of unnecessary humiliation."

Saylor said that the food has to be stored and many persons lack the means of preserving it for a month.

Furthermore, after the first month, the same dried milk, corn meal, flour and cheese aren't very appetizing," he declared.

Banks in his area, open many hours a day five days a week, have food stamps for sale to certified recipients.

MRS. SULLIVAN SAID that many difficulties were worked out during the pilot period, and that the plan is now operating well in most areas.

"People are now able to buy meats, fresh fruits and vegetables they weren't able to get before," she explained.

She said the Dept. of Agriculture estimates that nationwide operation of the plan will cost about $360 million, but that this would be largely offset by reducing costs of storage and distribution of foods from warehouses, and by the gain in dignity of recipients and in small grocery business.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SEN. GOLDWATER OF ARIZONA is beginning to act, little by little, like a man who knows he is a presidential candidate.

He has his strength, by and large, in southern conservative businessmen ready to jump to the GOP and Old Guard conservative Republicans of the Mountain States and the Middle West. (Some of these Old Guard Republicans are remarkably youngish—Jean Tool of Colorado, Peter O'Donnell of Texas, the state chairmen whose candidates have scored election victories recently—but they are so militantly conservative that they barely endure the thought of a candidate to the left of Goldwater.)

Yet the other day on the West Coast, Goldwater acknowledged that he had "slightly" modified his position on civil rights—positions previously well established and clearly defined. "Slight" modifications in such issues by candidates have a way of becoming switches of about 140 if not 180 degrees as a campaign gets hotter.

The senator from Arizona is still opposed to what he considers any improper intrusion by the federal government to prohibit race discrimination by business establishments catering to the public need for food and housing. But he is no longer dead opposed to other federal actions to implement civil rights programs, no longer totally committed to "states' rights" action alone.

States' rights has been the senator's longtime devotion. He is against federalism that functions, even in minimum wages, to assert a national policy appealing to the majority of the people as correct and desirable. But "slight" modifications may seem increasingly essential as 1964 comes around.

* * *

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ISSUE is a problem for both parties, of course, when it is reduced to crass political terms.

A Republican, Mayor Del Clawson of Compton, Calif., was elected to fill a vacancy in the House from a district that had been considered "safely" Democratic.

The Republican Congressional Committee Newsletter said this was a "stunning upset" for the Kennedy Administration and "proof of a trend which could give the GOP a major sweep in 1964."

It was a "stunning upset," all right. The late Rep. Clyde Doyle beat a Republican in California's 23rd District last November by 83,000 to 46,000 votes. Clawson won with 33,000 against 22,000 for the leading Democratic candidate, State Assemblyman Carley V. Porter—a remarkable shift in just seven months.

It was a special election, free-wheeling and wide open, and five Democrats and three Republicans entered; there were no party primaries to select single nominees.

In such a special election the total vote always drops. The spectacular fact is that the Democratic vote fell by about 50,000 (counting all candidates) whereas the Republican vote (for all three) dipped only by 7,000 or 8,000.

It so happens that a great many Negro voters live in the 23rd District. It happens, also, that Porter had refused to support a civil rights housing bill in 1961 and another fair housing bill in 1963. Reports from well informed Los Angeles sources said there was an open campaign among Negro voters to "take a walk" in the special election. It turned into something approaching an organized boycott.

* * *

THE PERIL for the Republican Party as it considers Goldwater as a candidate is that the party may end up committed to the strategy openly advocated by some right-wingers, a strategy of trying to carry the electoral college by sweeping the southern, midwestern and Rocky Mountain states.

The arithmetic can be jiggled to show that such a scheme would produce a majority without the big industrial states, or at least without more than one or two. Some southern states are clearly moving toward a two-party system.

But conservatism wedded to perpetuation of segregation makes for a narrow appeal—a strategy that could most suddenly become unhinged. It would be an odd appeal, surely, for a party once the champion of Lincoln and emancipation.

FOOD STAMPS are a more dignified form of relief, provide more-rounded diets, and benefit the farmer and grocer, Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.), left, and Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.) declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Rising Costs of Medical Care Bring Health Insurance Crisis

By Sidney Margolius

(First of a two-part report on current health insurance problems and the new Over-65 plans.)

A CRISIS in health insurance has developed as the result of rising medical costs and the inability so far of unions and management to control these costs.

Not only do retired people find it difficult to buy adequate health insurance at prices they can afford, but even the group insurance of active workers has been diluted by rising costs, labor insurance experts report. In fact, the present system of indemnity insurance provided by many labor contracts itself has contributed to the leaping costs.

Indemnity insurance usually provides specific allowances, such as $15 a day towards hospital care, or $150 for an appendectomy or $3 for office visits. But as doctors and health services have raised their fees far beyond the allowances paid by the health plans, even insured families are being compelled to pay an increasingly large share of their medical bills out of pocket. Your "fringe dollar" has been buying less and less medical care.

Higher benefits have been negotiated in many health-insurance plans during the past four years in an attempt to catch up with actual costs. But even the new payment levels have not been able to overhaul the climbing costs of hospital and medical care. The whole pattern of set allowances is coming apart at the seams, says Jerome Pollack, director of the New York Labor-Management Council of Health & Welfare Plans.

Medical costs have climbed faster than other living expenses. Even since the 1957-1959 period, medical costs have risen 16 percent compared to an overall rise in the retail price index of 6 percent.

In fact, there is reason to believe the index may not fully reflect the actual jump in medical costs. For example, Irving Block, associate director of the New York Labor-Management Council, points out that the index doesn't give sufficient weight to the dramatic rise in hospital "ancillary services" like lab fees, drugs and dressings. These have risen even more than room charges, Block advises. Ancillary charges now usually total as much as the room charges and for a short, critical stay can be even higher.

On the West Coast especially, where indemnity plans have boomed and in turn have pushed up medical fees, an actual runaway inflation of costs has occurred.

Nor are high medical costs confined to the West Coast. Despite the South's low wages, some of the charges in cities like Atlanta are higher than in many northern and midwest cities.

The new crisis in medical costs actually is a crisis of affluence, Pollack believes. In the 1930's we had a crisis in medical care, too. That was at a time when there was virtually no health insurance. Today we are spending a solid $24 billion a year for medical care but have not learned how to manage it to get the most and best care.

NOW THAT the present indemnity insurance too is proving unsatisfactory, labor groups and managements are having to seek a new tack. Management has become concerned, too. When collective bargaining is over, the employer has to worry about how much care the fringe dollar he has agreed to will really buy.

The new tack taken by a group of 15 welfare plans in the New York area, and being explored by those in several cities, is to band together to seek ways to control local medical costs.

In cities like Rochester and Schenectady, N. Y., where there is one big employer, the employer sometimes is able to bring pressure on the doctors and hospitals to restrain costs. But in towns where there are many relatively small welfare plans, the only way to exert influence on costs is through a council such as the new New York group.

Union-management welfare plans in New Orleans are exploring a similar plan. In Cleveland, a study committee has been investigating ways to control local costs. In Los Angeles, health-plan consultants have organized themselves into a study group.

Pollack lists four frequent loopholes in insurance. These are useful to watch for, whether you buy insurance in a group or individually:

- Insurance is almost always confined to hospitalized illness. Sensible insurance would also cover diagnostic tests outside the hospital.
- Items of severe need like rehabilitation are not insured.
- Surgical payments are limited to indemnity fees much below actual charges.
- Drugs are not covered.

The "crisis of affluence," by pushing up medical costs, also has heightened the medical poverty of most under-insured groups,

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

A WREATH-LAYING ceremony at the memorial in Washington, D. C., to Samuel Gompers, first president of the former AFL, brought together these government representatives. Left to right, U.S. Ambassador to Jamaica William C. Doherty, Sr., former president of the Letter Carriers and former AFL-CIO vice president; Sir William Alexander Bustamante, prime minister of Jamaica and also president of the National Workers' Union of Jamaica; Deputy Assistant Sec. of Labor Harry Weiss and Donald Sangster, Jamaican deputy prime minister.

Self Prescription Hit:

If You Need Drugs, You Need a Doctor

This warning against self-prescription was issued by the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

DURING A RECENT wave of virus infections in the neighborhood, Mrs. S.' two-year-old came down with a bad cold. In her mind's eye Mrs. S. could see the robots of the TV commercials demonstrating the effectiveness of this or that. Hour after hour their names had been dinned into her ears. She remembered the easy promises of relief.

We can only guess that after long exposure to this sort of treatment her brain had been thoroughly laundered. She marched off like an automaton and forked out good household money for the "large economy size" of nose drops, cough medicine, the "best" aspirin, chest salve, and laxative. We happen to know that this was money that her family could ill afford to throw away.

Mrs. S is intelligent, and she does a fine job for her family ordinarily. But in this case she made a mistake. Before spending a single cent on any pill or potion she should have consulted her pediatrician. Chances are he would have wanted to see the youngster, and then he could decide what was best for him. Anyone sick enough to need medication—other than something like aspirin or baking soda—is sick enough to need a physician.

Mrs. S is just one out of millions who find it difficult to resist the hucksters. Millions of dollars are being spent without good reason today. Not only is this wasteful, but time lost in getting proper medical care may mean complications or make the disease more difficult to treat.

For example, even a "mild" laxative, if taken for what seems to be just a common stomach ache—but which is actually an unsuspected attack of appendicitis—may lead to the most tragic results.

Or take another ad favorite—one of the most wasteful and possibly dangerous forms of self-medication is the use of over-the-counter reducing remedies—"medicated" pills, capsules, liquids, wafers and even chewing gum. Although such products are often "guaranteed" to reduce weight quickly and easily, don't be taken in by the glowing promises. Leave it to your physician to decide if you need any medicine—along with a medically approved diet—to control your weight.

And then there are the vitamins and food supplements you're urged to take. These are some of the biggest money wasters going. If you have a well-balanced diet you won't need to take vitamin pills. It's important to remember that there is more to a well-balanced diet than vitamins, and improper diet won't be corrected by the wholesale consumption of vitamin pills. However, if they are needed, the doctor will prescribe them.

It is true that many advertisements of remedies aren't necessarily false or misleading. But it's almost impossible for the public to tell the true from the false. When you feel under the weather, "what do doctors recommend?" Call your family doctor early and save much time, money and painful frustration!

From Soup to Nonsense:

That Silver Lining Isn't Always What It's Cracked Up to Be

By Jane Goodsell

THE SILVER LINING: "Mommy, Mommy, guess what! I get to be in the Health Pageant! I'm going to play the part of The Blue Toothbrush! Isn't that just neat?"

The cloud: "Here's a note from Miss Thompson. It says that you're supposed to go to school tomorrow morning. They're going to teach the mothers how to make our costumes."

* * *

The silver lining: "The repairman came while you were out, and he fixed the washing machine. He said to tell you that it's in perfect condition now and works just like new."

The cloud: Here's the bill. It comes to $32.98."

* * *

The silver lining: "Your dress is lovely. That shade of green is so becoming. It brings out the color in your eyes."

The cloud: "Did you make it yourself?"

* * *

The silver lining: "I won! I won! Remember that puzzle contest I entered, the one with jumbled pictures of famous people? The first prize is $10,000, and I just got a letter telling me that my entry was 100 percent perfect!

The cloud: "Now I'm eligible to enter the tie-breaker phase of the contest, and I'm supposed to fill out this entry blank telling in 25 words or less why I like. . . ."

* * *

The silver lining: "The suggestions you made about the club's fund-rasing program are absolutely brilliant! We do need to update our methods and re-evaluate our goals, just as you said. It takes a keen, analytical mind like yours to go straight to the heart of the problem."

The cloud: "We're appointing a committee to study your ideas and, of course, you'll be chairman of it. Now you simply can't refuse."

* * *

The silver lining: "Well, you passed your physical with flying colors. All the lab tests are in, and everything is just fine."

The cloud: "Now you're all finished except for your barium x-rays. Why don't you make an appointment for early tomorrow morning?"

Racial Policy Denounced:

ILO Urged to Act Against South Africa

(Continued from Page 1)

his report, would "give expression to the moral sense" of the views expressed at the 47th ILO conference and also would "restore a proper basis for the renewed and intensified development" of the ILO's work benefiting the people of Africa.

He said that the subject of "apartheid" had so dominated this year's conference that it had been frustrated in its main objective—an overall review of the need to adapt ILO structure and programs to changing world needs.

U.S. Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl, addressing the final session of the conference, supported Morse's views, declaring:

"We must find constitutional methods for excluding from our ranks those who deliberately as a matter of policy flout the principles of human rights which the ILO espouses."

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), a member of the U.S. government delegation, told the conference that he would urge the United States to assume "leadership" in seeking South Africa's ostracism from the family of nations as long as it practices its "apartheid" policy of racial segregation.

37 Nations Withdraw

Thirty-seven African and Arab nations, many of them newly independent, staged a dramatic withdrawal from the conference in protest over the continued presence of the delegation from South Africa.

The conference was practically unanimous in condemning the racial separation which is South Africa's national policy. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and other members of worker delegations joined a mass exit from the conference hall when the South African employer delegate took the floor.

Unlike the African and Arab representatives, however, delegates from other democratic countries returned to carry out the work of the conference.

"We cannot agree to the ILO's destruction," Meany said at the time, declaring that American labor would continue to support the organization in its efforts on behalf of workers the world over.

South Africa has ignored a 1961 resolution condemning "apartheid" and calling on its delegation to withdraw from participation in the ILO. As a UN member-nation, however, it cannot be expelled without a complicated amendment to the ILO constitution.

Later, approving a minority report submitted by the worker representative on the credentials committee, the conference voted to oust the South African worker delegate —the only representative of the country whose credentials had been challenged.

U.S. Votes No

The U.S. government delegates —Assistant Labor Sec. George L-P Weaver and George P. Delaney, special assistant to the secretary of state — joined Faupl in voting against seating the South African. Later, Weaver commented that the vote showed how effective action could be taken against South Africans through due process without undermining the ILO itself.

The conference was able to conclude its three-week session and adopt its budget after beating back an attempt by the Communist bloc to force an adjournment because of the absence of the Africans.

The vote against adjournment was 176 to 37, with seven abstentions.

The delegates then voted—184 to 9, with eight abstentions—to adopt a budget of $16,388,799.

Faupl entered a vigorous protest against vetoes by Sergei A. Slipchenko of the Ukraine, in his capacity as government vice president of the conference, which prevented consideration of two resolutions designed to achieve quick consideration by the UN of moves to expel South Africa.

Accusing the Ukrainian delegate of adopting "dual standards" in his claim that the proposals were not urgent because the African nations already had withdrawn, Faupl asked:

"Has apartheid suddenly disappeared [from South Africa] since last week so that there is no longer any urgency?"

In his major address during the conference's general debate, Faupl declared that "discrimination must be wiped out whether its victims are Negroes in Alabama, Jews in Moscow, or Africans in the so-called Republic of South Africa."

"As long as racial persecution is the avowed policy of the government of South Africa," he continued, "that government has no place either in this organization or in the UN."

Union Role Stressed

In connection with the ILO's future work, Faupl warned that there must be no attempt to advance the "highly unsound and dangerous idea" that the ILO can replace trade unions in the field of workers' education. Instead, he said, "it should work with and through free and independent trade unions and with the maximum possible assistance from the international free trade union movement."

He also warned that even though it has Communist member states the ILO could never afford to ignore the existence of a "vast chasm between oppression and tyranny in the Communist world and freedom and human rights in the democratic countries."

The conference went on to complete new international standards to protect workers by banning the sale, hire and use of machinery without adequate safety equipment. Final action also was taken on measures to insure fair treatment of workers subjected to layoffs.

U.S. WORKER DELEGATION to the Intl. Labor Organization's 47th conference is shown during a recess in the Geneva deliberations. From the left are Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, U.S. Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., Pres. William J. Pachler of the Utility Workers, and Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO European economic representative.

138 Loggers Fined $200 in Mass Trial

Kapuskasing, Ont. — Fines of $200 each were levied on 138 bushworkers found guilty of unlawful assembly in the biggest mass trial in Canadian history. Charges against 99 others were dismissed after two sets of hearings in Kapuskasing and Timmins.

The charges originated in a strike by two locals of the Lumber & Sawmill Workers, a division of the Carpenters, against the Spruce Falls Power & Paper Co. and an associated firm, Kimberly-Clark Canada, Ltd., which held out against a 40-hour workweek after another major employer had granted it.

After the strike had been under way for a month it flared into a pitched battle near here when a group of independent farmer-settlers who had continued to stockpile pulpwood for shipment to the mill opened fire on the picketing union members, killing three and wounding nine.

Twenty farmer-settlers have been committed to stand trial for non-capital murder in Ontario Supreme Court this fall.

The strike, meantime, was ended by agreement to submit all issues to arbitration.

BOSTON AREA members of the Transport Workers presented a petition to Massachusetts members of Congress asking their aid in securing permanent certification of the New York-Florida route for Northeast Airlines. If certification is not made permanent, it said, about 2,000 employes would lose their jobs. Members of Congress include House Speaker John McCormack (D) and both U.S. Senators, Leverett Saltonstall (R) and Edward Kennedy (D).

Common Market Seen Helping U.S. Workers

The development of an integrated European economy through the Common Market will prove beneficial to workers in the United States and throughout the world, as well as to those in Europe, the AFL-CIO's European economic representative predicted in a network radio interview.

Bert Seidman, who had returned briefly from his Paris post for conferences in Washington was questioned on the AFL-CIO program, Labor News Conference, by Adalbert deSegonzac, North American correspondent for France Soir, and Alexander Campbell, Washington correspondent for The Economist of London. The program is carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Seidman expressed disappointment at France's decision to break off negotiations over proposals to expand the European Economic Community—the Common Market —to include Great Britain, and voiced the hope the talks would be resumed "in the not-too-distant future."

"It was, frankly, our hope that the Common Market would be expanded as quickly as possible to include not just the United Kingdom, but also the countries associated with Great Britain in the so-called Outer Seven, or the European Free Trade Association," he said.

Nevertheless, he observed, the opposition of France to the inclusion of Great Britain at this time did not mean the end of the EEC as some people had predicted.

"At least for the foreseeable future," he said, "the Common Market is here to stay, and our concern is what policies the Common Market is going to adopt in this new situation."

Seidman acknowledged that trade is not the only factor involved in the economic and social framework of Western Europe and rejected the suggestion that Great Britain and the United States currently view the EEC in terms of free trade alone, as opposed to the French concept of an integrated Europe.

"We in the American trade union movement are all in favor of the European community idea," he continued. "We think this is something that makes sense. We think that the development of the European economy, rather than a number of relatively small economies . . . would be beneficial for European workers and for us as well."

The AFL-CIO economist said that the Atlantic partnership proposed by Pres. Kennedy, while it remains to be worked out in detail, in essence recognizes the need "to develop a greater degree of economic cooperation between the democratic countries of Western Europe and the United States in our mutual interest and also to reinforce our political cooperation."

Whatever the nature of this "partnership" turns out to be, he went on, "it will not be an Atlantic Common Market in the sense of the European Common Market," but perhaps may develop into a reinforcement of an existing organization, the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development.

Commenting generally on the European economic scene, Seidman noted that workers there are enjoying full employment whereas joblessness in the United States has ranged from 5.5 to 6 percent for some time. This, he said, inevitably affects attitudes on both sides of the Atlantic.

State Jobs Still Political, Zander Says

Nearly half of the 1.5 million jobs in state government are "openly subject to the whims of political patronage" and are not covered by any civil service merit system, Pres. Arnold S. Zander of the State, County & Municipal Employes has charged.

Zander also said that in some states, despite the existence of merit systems, "subterfuges" are used to exert political influence.

He said a survey by the AFSCME research department showed 19 states, employing some 500,000 workers, have only "token" civil service coverage, affecting less than 20 percent of state employes.

"In some states employes are still forced to contribute a percentage of their salary to the political machine," Zander charged. "With each political change in administration, the training and experience of thousands of state employes goes out the window as the politically faithful of the new party take over."

FOUR OF THE members of the Congress who addressed the Retail Clerks' diamond jubilee convention in Chicago are shown on the platform with Pres. James A. Suffridge. Left to right: Suffridge, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.), Sen. Daniel K. Inouye (D-Hawaii), and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.). The convention also heard Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.).

Consumer Price Index Stays Level

Prices of medical care and transportation went up in May but the consumer price index stayed at 106.2, the same as in March and April—one point higher than a year ago, the Dept. of Labor reported.

Living costs held steady, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said, primarily because of lower prices for meat, poultry, eggs and dairy products.

The CPI over-all figure means that consumers paid $10.62 for goods and services which cost $10 in the base period—1957-1959.

BLS Deputy Commissioner Robert J. Myers said the index for food in May was 104.2, meaning that a market basket of food costing $10 in the base period now sells for $10.42.

As a result of a half-hour increase in the factory workweek, factory workers' net spendable earnings rose by $1 above April. At $87.04 for a worker with three dependents, $79.32 for the worker with no dependents, net take-home pay almost equaled the high record set last December.

Real spendable earnings — the buying power of the factory worker's spendable earnings in terms of 1957-1959 prices—were 50 cents higher for the worker with no dependents, 47 cents higher than in the previous May for the worker with three dependents.

Convention Sites Decided for 1964

The big political conventions of 1964 will be held six weeks apart and separated by the width of the continent, the Democratic and Republican National Committees have decided.

The GOP convention, scheduled to pick a ticket challenging the current Administration, will meet in San Francisco July 13, 1964, with prospects at present for a wideopen battle for selection of presidential and vice presidential nominees.

The Democratic convention, all but certain to renominate Pres. Kennedy and Vice Pres. Johnson by acclamation, will assemble in Atlantic City Aug. 24.

Convention Delegates Hear Kennedy on Film

Chicago—Support of the Retail Clerks for a program now before Congress which "I think can improve steadily the economy of this country, cut unemployment, increase opportunity for all," was besought by Pres. Kennedy in a filmed message to the union's 75th anniversary convention.

Kennedy and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, both in Europe at the time, led off a score of members of Congress who made brief speeches on sound movies for presentation to the delegates.

Both congratulated the RCIA on its diamond jubilee. Kennedy added that he was familiar with "the contribution it has made to the welfare of its members and all those who labor." Meany saluted its "notable" record and expressed confidence it will fulfill its destiny in "one of the major areas in which the labor movement must expand in order to remain an effective influence in American life."

"I hope you will recognize, as all of us must, the great challenges which still lie before us," the President said in asking support of his legislative program. "There is a good deal of unfinished business in this country. . .

"I hope all of us will recognize that we must labor for these same causes in our own lives. I commend this union for the fact that it has been open to all people, regardless of race, creed or color. This has been a fundamental belief of this union from its earliest days.

"I urge the members to work in their communities for the same principles—for opportunity for all, for a fair chance for all, regardless of the circumstances of their birth.

"I wish you 75 years more of active service and I can assure you that those of us who are in Washington will continue to work, and strive, and share, the same goals as the Retail Clerks."

Meany said the groundwork for meeting the challenge posed by the changing nature of the labor force was laid eight years ago, when the former AFL and the former CIO merged. Labor's prestige was at a low ebb, he recalled, and "we were on the defensive."

"Today our good name has been restored," he said. "We have a friend in the White House who speaks in positive terms about labor's vital role in American life rather than in a negative way about labor's shortcomings. Our political power is growing, and our economic progress has stepped up its pace. I am very confident as to the future of American labor."

Meany predicted that the RCIA, with its record of growth for 19 straight years, "will keep on growing, faster than ever."

"Perhaps the reason I say this," he added, "is that your union has an outlook as broad as your jurisdiction. You look far beyond the immediate problems of the department store or the supermarket, far beyond the day-to-day problems of collective bargaining.

"You seek to enrich the lives of your members outside their jobs. . . .

"Your union is properly devoted to a better life for retail workers—better wages, better working conditions, better health care, greater economic security. But you also realize that these objectives must be won in the larger context of the general welfare."

PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSION as a member of the National Civil Defense Advisory Council is presented to Pres. Victor Bussie (left) of the Louisiana AFL-CIO by Edward A. McDermott, director of the Office of Emergency Planning. Bussie will serve a three-year term.

At Diamond Jubilee Parley:

RCIA Hails Growth, Sets New Targets

(Continued from Page 1)

are large numbers of unorganized workers employed at lower standards than organized retail employes."

Resolutions marshalling the union's forces for continuation of its growth were still to be acted on by the convention.

The officers' reports showed that between the 1959 and 1963 conventions, the RCIA was involved in more than 2,000 National Labor Relations Board elections and card checks, and won more than 60 percent of them.

Sen. Daniel Inouye (D-Hawaii), one of an impressive array of speakers who paid tribute to the union for its three-quarters of a century of accomplishment, cited in his speech a Ford Foundation study which reported that by the end of the 1960s, "it well may be that the RCIA will be one of the two or three largest, and perhaps the most powerful, labor institution in the U.S."

In another convention speech, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler warned against extremism on both sides in attempts fully to integrate minorities into American life.

The labor movement has met such problems in the past, he recalled, when waves of immigrants unable to speak English poured into the ranks of American workers and were aided by their unions in their struggle for full citizenship.

"We can move into this area," he declared. "We have the resources, and there can be no excuse for not doing it."

He called on the RCIA to make a "total effort" to bequeath to the future further improvements in living standards such as those that came down to the present generation as a result of the efforts of pioneer unionists who fought for free public schools and the minimum wage law.

Suffridge called for "good citizenship" by union members and included support for such legislative goals as federal aid to education, hospitalization protection for the aged under social security, truth-in-lending and truth-in-packaging laws, and repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, and continuation of the union's traditional fight for equal opportunity for all.

"I'm proud to say," he added, "that when you attend a meeting of the RCIA in Atlanta or Savannah, or in any local in Texas or Tennessee, you will see totally integrated meetings."

Texas-Size Welcome

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson was given a rousing welcome when he strode into the hall to speak.

Texas-style hats and neckerchiefs appeared in profusion, even with the officers and executive board members on the platform. A band marched in and a parade quickly formed with sombrero-wearing delegates from all parts of the country cheering and waving signs.

Johnson, who was given a gold card and an honorary membership in the union, declared the nation cannot "submit to the doctrine that in these prosperous times and with this productive economy, the present level of unemployment is an 'acceptable' level."

"Responsible labor together with responsible business and responsible government," he declared, "must put aside prejudice, partisanship and pessimism to get on with the job of curing the ills and realizing the potentials of this great productive society of ours."

Appeals for support for Kennedy Administration programs were coupled with praise for the RCIA by Senators Paul H. Douglas (Ill.) and Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (Ill.), all Democrats.

'Coalition' Hit

Douglas warned that because of the "unholy alliance" of conservative Democrats and conservative Republicans that has run Congress "ever since the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938," it is "going to be very difficult for the President's program to come through" the present Congress.

Humphrey asked for backing for legislation to wipe out what he called "the deficits in education, the deficits that relate to our elderly and their needs, the deficits that relate to our youth, the deficits that exist in our employment and the deficits that exist in the fulfillment of the promise of the Emancipation Proclamation."

Pucinski urged a tripartite agreement between communications media, the retail merchants and the retail clerks to stimulate consumer demand "as the keystone to sustained prosperity and economic growth." The people have the money, he said, —but must be "sold" the things which they need and the sales in turn would boost the economy.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), who also complimented the RCIA for its growth and for its civil rights record, declared it "unconscionable that in our country some men and women work for less than $50 a week and that there are people in Congress, on both sides of the aisle, who think they should continue to do so."

Other speakers included Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress; Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers; Tudor Thomas, assistant secretary-treasurer of the British Clerical & Administrative Workers Union; Pres. Werner Ziemann of the German Bank Workers Union; Charles D. Gray, assistant to the secretary-general of the Intl. Federation of Commercial, Clerical & Technical Employes; and former Pres. Warren G. Desepte and former Sec.-Treas. V. A. Housewright of the RCIA.

International union elections in the RCIA are not held at conventions. Nominations and elections by referendum vote are scheduled for 1964.

At House Hearings:

Shorter Hours Viewed as Long-Term Trend in U. S.

Two government experts have told a House subcommittee that there has been a continuing long-term trend in the United States towards a reduction in the hours of work "without sacrificing" living standards. In addition, they said, there is evidence that the customary time-and-one-half "penalty pay" for overtime work has "lost some of its impact" as an incentive to spread employment.

Neither Ewan Clague, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, nor Clarence T. Lundquist, the Labor Dept.'s wage-hour administrator, passed judgment on proposals to reduce the statutory 40-hour workweek to create more jobs.

Fact-Finding Phase

Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.), chairman of a select House Labor subcommittee exploring whether "circumstances permit or require another step forward in the reduction of hours of work," said the first phase of the hearings was limited to gathering information from statisticians and economists.

Later this summer — after its hearings on the operation of the manpower training program — the subcommittee will hear from advocates and opponents of shorter hours.

Clague told the subcommittee that "historically, the U. S. has been able to attain ever increasing levels of output while at the same time reducing the time that the average worker must spend on the job."

This continued reduction in work time, Clague said, "has been an integral part of the country's advance in living standards."

Both Clague and Lundquist noted a continued widespread practice of overtime work and Lundquist cited a survey showing that in major industries some 28 percent of employes worked overtime, averaging eight hours a week. He noted that existing state unemployment insurance laws, with payroll taxes based on "experience ratings," and the cost of fringe benefits were among the factors inducing employers to schedule overtime work rather than hire new employes.

Economist Leon Keyserling, the nation's chief economic adviser during the Truman Administration, told the subcommittee that the "true level" of unemployment is currently 9.4 percent and will get worse unless there are "profound changes" in the economy.

He said employers generally could absorb the cost of cutting the basic workweek from 40 to 35 hours because in recent years worker productivity has increased faster than labor costs.

His own preference, Keyserling said, would be to increase the federal budget by some $20 million to bring about greater employment at a 40-hour week.

Other economists expressed reservations about an immediate reduction in the statutory workweek to 35 hours, but some suggested other steps which could be taken.

Alternatives Proposed

Swarthmore College Prof. Frank C. Pierson told the subcommittee that three alternatives worth considering are:

- To extend overtime pay provisions of the Wage-Hour Act to more firms in fields such as hotels, restaurants and retail and service trades.
- To step up the overtime penalty to double time after 44 hours in certain industries.
- To provide tax incentives for companies which initiate training programs.

He said the recent steel agreement providing for extended vacations "may prove to be a significant breakthrough" in reduction of hours by methods "tailored to fit" the needs of various industries.

Holland set the tone for the hearings with a statement declaring that "all avenues of employment possibilities must be explored" in view of five consecutive years of high-level unemployment and "predictions that the second decade of automation will be felt by white collar workers, possibly more rapidly than the first decade affected the blue collar workers."

CORRECTION

New York—The New York State AFL-CIO has set the date of its 1963 convention for Oct. 24-26 in Kiamesha Lake, N. Y. instead of Oct. 23-25, a tentative date previously reported.

Children Join Pickets In Hilton Hotel Strike

El Paso—Children of 50 of the lowest-paid workers in the Hilton Hotel chain have been taking a turn on a strike picket line here, in sizzling heat that reached 104 degrees on a recent day, to help their fathers and mothers appeal for public support.

Strikers with 165 dependents have been out since April 18 in what their union—Culinary Local 628 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes—calls a "crucial struggle for survival."

The best hope for victory, the El Paso Hilton Strike Committee said in an appeal for financial support, is an "aroused and informed public, and active support of our brother and sister union members in organized labor."

It said further: "Our strikers must survive; they must feed their 165 dependents and buy medicine for the sick. To carry on until we can win, we appeal for help."

13 Cents an Hour

Hotel doormen, elevator operators, bellmen, bus boys and other low-paid workers joined the union several months ago and walked out when management refused to take their wages out of the sweatshop category. They range from 13 cents an hour for a cleanup and shoeshine boy to $1.68 for maintenance carpenter. Many get no salaries, only tips.

In negotiations, Hilton management offered "raises" of 1 cent an hour for front doormen, waitresses and kitchen porters; 2 or 3 cents for other classes of workers and 4.75 cents for maids, based on a 10-hour day, 6 days a week. Tip workers were offered nothing. New employes would get $20 a month less than present workers, under the Hilton Hotel offer.

There are no other organized hotels or restaurants in the El Paso area and only a few in Texas. The union has contracts with 28 Hilton hotels in other states and believes the Hilton holdout here is due to pressure by the Texas Hotel & Restaurant Association.

Said the Strike Committee: "The scandalous wage scale in West Texas and the border of Mexico is a prize the hotel association hopes to retain. Wages and conditions cry for remedy and justice."

The union has called on members of a veterans' group, the 1st Cavalry Div. Association, to stay away from the organization convention, scheduled for the struck hotel in August, and has urged the association to change hotels.

Corporation Presidents Do Well by Themselves

The time-honored theory that "to them that hath shall be given" received more corroboration in 1962 than in any other recent year, according to a sampling of proxy statements on corporation presidents' wages filed with the Securities & Exchange Commission.

The sampling was made by Business Week, a McGraw-Hill publication, and showed that more than half the companies surveyed raised the rates of their top executives during the year—more than a quarter of the pay boosts exceeding 20 percent. Only 11 percent of the employers cut their presidents' salaries while about one-third registered no significant change.

Presidents whose salaries went up during the year, according to Business Week, included Lawrence Litchfield, Jr., of the Aluminum Co. of America, whose take jumped from $145,000 in 1961 to $175,000, plus $35,000 in "additional compensation" compared to $25,000 in 1961; James R. Kerr of Avco, who went from $155,417 to $205,000, with no extra either year; and William S. Vaughan of the Eastern Kodak Co., from $175,000 to $200,000 plus stock valued at $15,048 compared to stock worth $13,300 in 1961.

Losers included Logan T. Johnson of Armco Steel, who dropped to $225,038 from $257,537; Samuel Bronfman of Distillers Corp.-Seagrams, who went to $337,250 from $351,500; and Jefferson W. Keener of B. F. Goodrich, whose gross sagged to $165,000 from $175,000.

Unchanged or virtually the same was the compensation of Leslie B. Worthington of U.S. Steel, $275,000; Howard J. Morgens of Procter & Gamble, $285,000, plus $42,823 in 1962 and $43,558 in 1961; and Edmund P. Martin of Bethlehem, who dropped to $255,663 plus $3,394 from $257,012 plus $4,279.

ONE OF NATION'S 10 most wanted criminals was captured by the FBI with the help of a tip from a barber who recognized the fugitive through a picture and description in his union's magazine. Barbers Pres. William C. Birthright, right, receives the thanks of Calvin B. Howard, special agent in charge of the Indianapolis FBI office, for his union's role in the capture. FBI Dir. J. Edgar Hoover also sent a letter of appreciation.

Relation of University To Unions Analyzed

Santa Rosa, Calif.—The role of the university in American society, with special reference to its relationship with the trade union movement, was examined at a seminar in the Marine Cooks & Stewards Training School here presented by the Alameda County AFL-CIO in cooperation with the Institute of Industrial Relations of the University of California.

Brendan Sexton, director of the Auto Workers Leadership Studies Center, told the 36 participants that universities should help workers to lead more fulfilling lives, study the impact of automation, help workers adjust to it, and provide educational background for informed political decisions.

He recalled organized labor's role in winning free public education and its active support for the Morrill Act, which provided for land grant colleges that originally were instructed "to educate the industrial classes."

"Yet today," he said, "their weight is heavily conservative."

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the Fund for the Republic, urged a return to the idea of a university as "a center for independent thought." Universities, churches and the mass communications media are failing to provide the criticism which, he said, every democratic community requires, "certainly if it is to improve and probably if it is to survive."

Ben B. Seligman, education and research director for the Retail Clerks, criticized industrial relations professors for "ethical neutralism" and refusing to take moral positions on issues involving unions.

If the university is "truly devoted" to the preservation of a free society, it has an obligation to extend its services to include labor education, said Don Vial, California AFL-CIO research and education director. Most universities tend to downgrade labor, he claimed, with the result that the alliance in which unions and intellectuals worked together for common ideals in the 1930s now seems to have "fallen by the wayside."

Chancellor Edward W. Strong of the University of California at Berkeley described California's master plan for higher education.

Executive Sec. Robert S. Ash, of the host labor council, presided at the sessions.

Unions from 3 Nations Study Job Displacement

Ditchley, Eng.—Unions seeking to protect members against technological discharge would try to "make it as expensive as possible for management to displace employes," under a course discussed at the Anglo-American Trade Union Conference held here under the auspices of the Ditchley Foundation.

Representatives of unions in England, the United States and Canada who attended the meeting considered union policy relating to job displacement and to fringe benefits.

The background for the discussion was the need on one hand for full employment policies in all three countries, and on the other for social provision and aids to mobility in the face of rapid technological and economic change.

The panel on job displacement was chaired by Pres. Arnold Zander of the State, County & Municipal Employes in the U.S. It considered the prevention or minimization of layoffs, advance warning and terms of notice of discharge, seniority in discharges, severance, training and retraining programs, and government aids to worker mobility.

Another panel reported general agreement on the desirability of expanding the scope and widening the concept of fringe benefits not only to improve standards for workers, but to advance toward general social objectives.

"Transfer of the rights of workers to fringe benefits when they change employment should be a prime objective of the trade unions not only as a just protection to the worker," the panel said, "but also because fringe benefits, if they are not transferable, can be a deterrent to necessary mobility of the labor force."

Attending from the U.S. in addition to Zander were Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Machinists Intl. Rep. Rudy Faupl; Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO European economic representative; William O. Kuhl, research and education director of the Boilermakers; Pres. Peter Ottley of Building Service Employes Local 144; Ben Segal, IUE director of education and international affairs.

Executive Vice Pres. Joe Morris and Acting Research Dir. Russell Bell represented the Canadian Labor Congress.

German Labor Hails Kennedy, Meany

President Cheered At Union Convention

(Continued from Page 1)

Kennedy's last stop in his tour of West Germany. The federation president brought the German workers the greetings of the workers of America as well as a challenge to Premier Khrushchev of the Soviet Union.

Meany went from an Intl. Labor Organization conference in Geneva to join Kennedy at the U.S. Air Force Base at Wiesbaden and flew with the President to Berlin. After the Berlin tour the federation president also flew with Kennedy to Dublin, Ireland, where the President met with Pres. Eamon de Valera and visited the scenes of his ancestors' homes prior to his journey to Italy.

Pointing out that the West German Republic since the war has paid "generous restitution to the victims of Nazism, wherever they might be," Meany called upon Khrushchev to pay restitution to "the inmates of Stalin's prisons and concentration camps."

Extending American labor's "heartful greetings" to the "exploited and oppressed workers" of East Germany, and "particularly its building trades workers who 10 years ago sparked that glorious revolt of the German people," against the foreign oppressor, Meany also discussed the Negro fight for civil liberties in the United States.

"Our government's policy of upholding the Constitution and guaranteeing the Negro his full democratic rights has the unanimous support of the American labor movement," he declared.

'Passing Phase'

The racial situation is a "passing phase in our country's history," he told the West German trade unionists.

"It is the American counterpart of what you call 'the unconquered past,'" he added. For you, it is Nazism, for us it is slavery.

"We are now experiencing the birth pains of a new society in which there will be true economic, educational, political and trade union equality of opportunity for all Americans regardless of race, color, creed or national origin."

Reminding his audience that federal troops were called out "for the sole purpose of guaranteeing the right of a single Negro individual to attend a state university," he noted "two significant contrasts with the totalitarian countries."

"Racial discrimination in the United States is in defiance of the law of the land. On the other side of the Iron Curtain—where they never tire of boasting of their racial equality—we find anti-Semitism, abuse of African students or mistreatment of minority groups in compliance with, and not in defiance of, the government policy."

Meany chose Berlin for his proposal of Soviet restitution to the victims of Stalinism, he said, because "Berlin is the most appropriate city in the world."

Many of the onetime inmates of Stalin's prisons, he observed, "are now living outside the Soviet Union" and "have not yet recovered and probably never will recover from the inhuman treatment to which they were subjected."

"Therefore," he said, "I propose that Khrushchev demonstrate in deed that he was serious when he denounced Stalin's bestial crimes. Let him do something concrete and positive to alleviate the plight of these millions of survivors of Stalin's slave labor camps. Let him follow the path blazoned by democratic Germany's restitution laws. Let the Soviet government pay compensation to the Polish, Jewish, Baltic, Russian, Ukrainian and other victims of the Stalin Terror."

Brought Over Wall

Pres. Kennedy was visibly moved on the platform in Congress Hall as he was presented a small bouquet of white and red chrysanthemums which Pres. Georg Leber of the Construction Workers said had been "brought over the Wall during the night from workers of East Germany."

In the presence of West German Chancellor Adenauer and Berlin's Mayor Willy Brandt, Kennedy departed from his prepared text to speak with eloquence about the relationships of free trade unionism to the democratic cause.

"I am not a stranger to trade union meetings," he told the German workers. "I feel most at home here today."

In the last 30 years in the United States, he declared, "all the great international efforts as well as great progressive national movements, had the strong endorsement and support of the AFL-CIO, led by George Meany, who has stood for freedom in the United States and around the globe."

Meany introduced the President, prior to Kennedy's speech, to Leber, to Pres. Ludwig Rosenberg of the German Federation of Labor and to Pres. Walter Sickert of the Berlin section of the federation.

Kennedy responded:

"I urge you, gentlemen, in meeting your responsibiilties to those who belong to your union, to also realize that your unions will not survive except in a world of freedom.

"I urge you to hold out, as we are trying to do in the United States, in the AFL-CIO, a helping hand to those who seek to organize trade unions in Latin America, Africa and Asia. This is how a free society remains free."

Kennedy's visit to Congress Hall was the first of several stops in a tour of Berlin that became a triumph as crowds estimated by the police at 1.3 million—more than half the city's residents—turned out along the parade lines to cheer, toss confetti and applaud as the President stood in an open limousine waving and grinning to the crowds.

He visited entry points in the Communist wall and spoke at Berlin's free university and City Hall, where in the plaza a quarter of a million Berliners, many of whom had waited since early morning, took up a rhythmic chant: "Ken-ne-dy, Ken-ne-dy."

It was unequalled for a foreign head of state, said Berlin officials, in the post-war years.

RCIA Benefit Coverage Extended in California

Oakland, Calif.—A reciprocal arrangement worked out by the trustees of the Northern California Retail Clerks-Employers Welfare Funds and the Valley Clerks Health & Welfare Fund will permit RCIA members transferring from one jurisdiction to the other to maintain continuous coverage.

A member shifting from the area of one plan to that of the other merely notifies the office of the plan under which he has been covered. The administrator will notify the office of the plan into which he is moving, and protection will be picked up on the first day of the calendar month following the transfer.

JOB-CREATING LEGISLATION, including expanded public works and the right kind of tax cut, was urged by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller at Senate hearing on manpower needs and unemployment. From left are: AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, Biemiller, Assistant Social Security Dir. Raymond Munts, and Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin. Biemiller urged Congress to "breathe some life" into the Employment Act of 1946.

Depressed Area Expansion Bill Revived by 65-30 Vote in Senate

The Senate, by an impressive 65-30 vote, has breathed new life into House-rejected legislation to strengthen the area redevelopment program.

The fate of the bill, which authorizes an additional $455 million in loans and grants to bring new jobs into areas of chronic heavy unemployment, still depends on whether the House reverses its earlier vote against expanding the program.

No action is expected in the House until Administration leaders are able to count the votes needed to pass the Senate bill. The unexpected 209-204 defeat for the program two weeks earlier marked a resurgence of the conservative coalition in the House.

The Senate vote gave a lift to the Administration, however, as a majority of southerners supported the program and 12 liberal and moderate Republicans broke away from the GOP leadership to vote for the bill. The 30 opposition votes came from 21 Republicans, eight southern Democrats and one conservative northern Democrat—Ohio's Sen. Frank K. Lausche.

The difference in temper between the House and Senate on the area redevelopment program is pointed up in a comparison with the 1961 votes authorizing the program—the first major Kennedy proposal to move through Congress.

In 1961, the 251-167 House vote for the program broke down this way: Democrats voted 208-42 for the bill; Republicans opposed it 125-43.

GOP Support Drops

On the 1963 rollcall, a falling off of southern Democratic support dropped the party's vote to 189-57 for the bill. But the decisive factor was a hardening of Republican opposition. Only 15 Republicans supported the expansion bill, while 152 opposed it.

In the Senate, there also was a lessening of Republican support compared with 1961, but the dropoff was not so sharp and it was balanced by an increase in southern Democratic support.

The 1961 rollcall showed 48 Democrats and 15 Republicans for the program; 11 Democrats and 16 Republicans opposed.

This shifted in the latest vote to 53 Democrats and 12 Republicans for, with 9 Democrats and 21 Republicans opposed. Four absent Democrats, not counted in the rollcall, were announced as for the bill.

With civil rights hearings taking the spotlight, Congress worked on its legislative backlog to clear the way for an unofficial recess during the Fourth of July week, when only token sessions will be held.

$47 Billion for Defense

After two days of discussion but little controversy, the House passed a bill appropriating more than $47 billion for the nation's defense during the coming fiscal year. The measure had been cut 3.5 percent by the Appropriations Committee, but it was the second highest peacetime defense bill in the nation's history. Last year's appropriation—$48.35 billion—was the highest.

Final passage was 410-1, with Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.) casting the lone negative vote because "we haven't got the money."

Somewhat sharper proportionate cuts appeared to be in the making for the $5.7 billion budget request of the National Aeronautics & Space Administration.

The House Science & Astronautics Committee voted to slash 12.7 percent from the space sciences funds, and lesser amounts from other phases of the program. The effect, if the cuts are upheld, is expected to be a slowing of the timetable for America's efforts to reach the moon with manned spacecraft.

Canadian Labor College Opens, Set for 3 Years

Montreal, Que.—The Canadian Labor College is "reasonably assured" of financial support and students for the next three years, Education Dir. Max Swerdlow of the Canadian Labor Congress announced at the formal opening here.

Swerdlow, moving spirit in organization of the institution, was given an ovation when he rose to speak. CLC Pres. Claude Jodoin, one of the speakers, paid warm tribute to his role, saying he "never doubted the possibility" of its establishment.

"His perseverance, more than that of any other single individual, has brought this dream to reality," Jodoin added.

The 87 students who make up the first class of the college, which is conducted jointly by the University of Montreal and McGill University, were promised "the toughest seven weeks of their lives" by Prof. H. D. Woods of McGill, co-principal with Prof. Gilles Beausoleil of the University of Montreal.

He added that the college "may give some answers to the ferment" in Canada, maintaining that it serves as a bridge between two central labor bodies, between labor and the universities, between labor and management, and between French and English.

Swerdlow told the 200 labor, business, government and education leaders who attended the opening that financing of the three-year first phase of the college is expected to cost $240,000. As the college opened about half that sum was on hand. Some 300 locals have made contributions ranging from $10 to $1,000, Swerdlow said, and the Saskatchewan and Alberta provincial governments gave $9,000 each.

He stressed the work of the CLC, the Confederation of National Trade Unions and the two universities in developing the project and announced that the outstanding student at the initial session will be given a six-week travel scholarship to England and France covering all expenses and lost time.

Enrollment for the first term nearly doubled the anticipated figures of 30 English-speaking and 15 French-speaking students. Included are two Malayan students studying under the Colombo Plan.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII — Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year — Saturday, July 6, 1963 — No. 27

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

Congress Backlog Mounts at Midyear

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY greets Pres. Kennedy outside Congress Hall in West Berlin, where Kennedy followed Meany in addressing a convention of the Industrial Union of Building & Construction Workers. Also greeting the U.S. President are West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt (left) and West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer.

Rights, Jobs Still Head Key Issues

By David L. Perlman

A massive backlog of legislation, including the bulk of Pres. Kennedy's program, awaits the 88th Congress as it returns after a week-long Independence Day respite.

Civil rights legislation, which alone is expected to extend the session well into the fall, is one of many controversial issues crowding for priority.

The House Ways & Means Committee, which has made only tentative decisions on a tax cut and tax reform bill, has still to hammer out the final shape of the legislation which Kennedy has said is urgently needed to stimulate a still-lagging economy.

Also on the agenda is the annual foreign aid battle—first over the amount of new spending to be authorized, then over the actual money to be appropriated. Preliminary skirmishes in committee indicate that opponents are out to make deep cuts.

House and Senate committees are still wrestling with federal aid to education bills. College aid and expanded vocational education bills have received committee approval in the House, but have not been scheduled for floor action. The one education measure which has made measurable progress this session is an aid to medical education bill which the House has passed and the Senate is expected to adopt.

An earlier Administrative priority bill—youth employment opportunities—passed the Senate safely

(Continued on Page 8)

Distributed by 'Work' Group:

'Law & Order' Film Upsets NLRB Vote

By Eugene A. Kelly

Another film distributed by the National Right-to-Work Committee has been found "grossly misleading" and an election which followed its showing has been set aside because the employer's anti-union campaign "completely polluted the free atmosphere" required for a fair election.

"A Question of Law & Order" is the name of the film which led the NLRB to order a new election "when circumstances permit a free choice" at the Murfreesboro, Tenn., plant of the Ideal Baking Co. of Tennessee.

The board's 3-2 ruling was the second of the kind involving "A Question of Law & Order" but another film, "And Women Must Weep," previously had led the board to set aside four other elections where it found that employes' freedom of choice was made impossible by the dramatic impact of a phony "documentary" film depicting alleged union violence.

Three members of the board upheld findings by Trial Examiner Frederick U. Reel that the bakery's "entire pre-election campaign was intimidatory in nature" and was intended to "interfere with, restrain and coerce" its workers in the exercise of their legal rights.

The examiner, after concluding that "inflammatory appeals to fear and not to reason have no place in these elections," said the showing of "A Question of Law & Order" on the eve of an election lost by the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers was grossly misleading because it "implied that violence was a normal byproduct of unionization." He added:

"In my judgment the film . . . taints the atmosphere of the election far more than such a film as 'And Women Must Weep' because the latter movie was done from a script with professional actors, deals with a single episode, and portrays 'good' unionists as well as 'bad.'

"In this case the film purports to reflect a universal situation and

(Continued on Page 3)

Carpenters Stiffen Anti-Bias Program

The Carpenters' executive board has ordered all locals to comply with the recently-adopted policy of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. barring racial discrimination in union membership, apprentice selection and job referrals.

The board also directed Pres. M. A. Hutcheson "to take whatever steps may be necessary to bring about promptly the elimination of racially separated local unions, if it is found that any such local unions exist."

The directives appeared in a statement of policy adopted at a special session of the 15-member board, called by Hutcheson, which gave unanimous and full endorsement to the anti-discrimination program set forth by the presidents of the 18 national and international unions in the Building Trades Dept.

The Carpenters' board called on locals of the 750,000-member union to comply with the four points outlined in the presidents' statement as follows:

- Qualified applicants are to be accepted into membership regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.
- Locals with exclusive hiring hall arrangements are to list and refer job applicants according to applicable law and the terms of their contracts, without discrimination and without identification as to race, creed, color or national origin.
- Locals which have other types of job referral systems set forth in their contracts are to refer qualified applicants without discrimination.
- Locals are to accept and refer qualified applicants for apprenticeship wtihout discrimination.

The board's statement observed that the Carpenters have a long history of opposition to discrimination and recalled that the founders of the union had written into its constitution this principle, which still stands:

"We recognize that the interests of all classes of labor are identical regardless of occupation, nationality, religion or color, for a wrong done to one is a wrong done to all."

The board said that discrimination by one citizen against another has no place in the labor movement, "has never been countenanced" and "will not be tolerated in our brotherhood."

A Carpenters' spokesman said that "in effect, we are telling the local unions that they must conform to the union's national policy."

With reference to racially sepa-

(Continued on Page 2)

Easier in Small Country:

Swedes Explain How They Lick Job Issue

Spokesmen for Sweden's employers, workers and government described to Congress how their country has licked its unemployment problem—and made it sound almost simple.

A Senate subcommittee on employment and manpower, joined for the occasion by members of a counterpart subcommittee in the House, heard and questioned:

- Sweden's Under Sec. of Labor Ernst Michanek, who was accompanied by Olof Peterson of the Ministry for Social Affairs.
- Pres. Arne Geijer of the Confederation of Swedish Trade Unions.
- Berthil Kugelberg, head of the Confederation of Swedish Employers.

They had been invited to testify, Chairman Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) of the Senate subcommittee explained, because Sweden has "the most successful policy of any country in the world in dealing with utilization of manpower and problems of unemployment."

Clark noted—and the Swedish spokesmen readily agreed—that Sweden is a small country with a stable, homogenous population and that its manpower problem is less complex than that of the United States. But he suggested the United States might well take a lesson from Sweden in the use of public measures to avoid a boom-bust cycle.

The senators and congressmen closely questioned the Swedish government representatives on the working of the carefully-tuned mechanism for encouraging business expansion during an economic downturn, applying anti-inflation measures to curb a runaway boom, and matching workers and training to jobs within the context of a free society.

While Sweden's good labor-management relationship has been well-described in articles and books, the committee members obviously relished the first-hand experience of hearing union and management spokesmen speak of the "mutual respect" which exists at the bargaining table and the employer representative declare that his group "ap-

(Continued on Page 8)

ILO to Consult United Nations About Expulsion of South Africa

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization has put South Africa on notice that it risks expulsion from the body because of its apartheid policy of racial segregation.

The 108-nation ILO's Governing Body took the following steps at a two-day session here:

- Banned South Africa from all ILO meetings at which attendance is by invitation only.
- Named a nine-member delegation to put the case for South Africa's expulsion to United Nations Sec. Gen. U Thant.
- Started action to amend the constitution to deprive South Africa of ILO membership.

George L-P Weaver, U.S. assistant secretary of labor and U.S. government delegate to the ILO, voted against the proposal to ban the South Africans from "invitation only" affairs, voted for the consultation between an ILO delegation and U Thant, and abstained from voting on the proposed ILO constitutional amendment.

The total vote on sending a delegate to the UN was 42 to 0 with three abstentions. It was 39 to 0 with five abstentions on the issue of amending the ILO constitution and 39 to 5 with 2 abstentions on the matter of barring South Africa from "invitation only" affairs.

Worker and employer delegates joined forces to push through the measures.

The decisions were a consequence of South Africa's refusal to heed a resolution of the 1961 ILO conference calling on it to abandon its apartheid policy or withdraw from the organization.

They came immediately after the stormy conference that saw 37 African and Arab countries boycott most of the session because of the presence of a South African delegation.

Only on the question of amending the ILO constitution did workers and employers split.

Employers asked that the amend-

(Continued on Page 7)

Southern Must Rehire Its Firemen

U.S. Chief Justice Earl Warren has denied a plea by the Southern Railway to stay a federal court order requiring it to restore firemen or helpers to its diesel locomotives.

Warren's rejection of the appeal left in effect an order by U.S. District Judge Leonard P. Walsh of Washington that Southern "must maintain" working conditions that existed prior to 1959, the year the carrier began eliminating the jobs.

Judge Walsh said that the railroad must "make available sufficient firemen" to fulfill the terms of its diesel agreement with the Firemen & Enginemen, which specifies that "a fireman or helper from the firemen's ranks be employed on all locomotives."

Meanwhile, the Southern was hit by new court actions filed by

(Continued on Page 3)

Bills to the amount of $1.80 for stationery for the use of the convention were presented and ordered paid.

Resolutions in reference to boycotting the New York Tribune, the commission of John Jarrett as Labor Commissioner and a Declaration of Principles from Brother Griffin, Englewood, Ill., were read and referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

On a question of privilege, Brother Dey referred to an insult which had been offered to one of our delegates, Brother Rames, of Charleston, S. C. Upon request of President McGinley, Brother Shields stated the circumstances. And the following resolution was thereupon offered by Brother Dey.

WHEREAS—Several of our delegates in company with Brother Rames of Charleston, S. C., last evening entered a coffee house in this city, at 77 West Sixth street, known as the "Peoples' Restaurant," and were told by the head waiter that he could not serve Brother Rames on account of color, therefore be it

Resolved—That in this indignity offered to Brother Rames, one of our delegates, we recognize a gross and ignorant insult to our body worthy of the severest rebuke at our hands, and we call upon the citizens and working people of this city to do all in their power to withdraw all patronage from the "People's Restaurant," and hold it up to public execration.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS of the fourth annual convention of the Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners in 1884, held in Cincinnati, shows that the issue of human rights and race discrimination commanded the attention of unions even then, only 19 years after the Civil War. L. E. Rames, a Negro delegate from Charleston, S. C., was denied service in a Cincinnati restaurant. The convention voted to condemn the restaurant for the "indignity" and "insult." The delegates elected Rames fourth vice president of the union.

Anti-Bias Race Policies Stiffened by Carpenters

(Continued from Page 1)

rated locals, the statement said that "any such unions as may exist" have been kept segregated at the insistence of their own members who come from minority groups and not as a matter of Carpenters' policy.

"We have decided," the statement continued, "that to be consistent our brotherhood cannot maintain segregation at the request of the same minority groups who are justifiably anxious to wipe out all segregation."

The board declared that under no circumstances would it permit the imposition of "quotas" on the number of Negroes.

"We consider quotas totally undemocratic and out of line with sound trade union practice," it said. "Union membership must depend upon meeting the established qualifications and jobs must be assigned on a first-come, first-served basis. To do otherwise would be to create new discriminations."

Bias Picture 'Distorted'

The statement said that the American public had been given "a badly distorted picture" of the true conditions within the construction industry and that discrimination is the exception, rather the rule.

"Certainly, it is not typical of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America," the board declared.

It said the labor movement had joined the fight for integration "long, long ago" and had made great strides in organizing Negro workers, raising their wage income and "assuring them a degree of equality and dignity on the job they never would have attained without unions."

It noted, too, that the labor movement had acted "of its own volition" to reduce discrimination on the job and in union membership as well as other areas of society.

"We did this because we believed in it," the statement said. "We still believe in it."

The board warned that "even a substantial increase" in the number of Negro apprentices in the skilled trades would not bring a cure for the present unemployment problem.

"Still," it said, "we believe that a great deal of good can be achieved toward the objective of providing equal opportunity of employment in the construction industry, as well as other industries. Even greater good can be accomplished if employers will increase the number of apprentice openings far beyond the present number."

Union Members Scarce On Welfare Boards

New York—Union members, who make up 16 percent of the adult population and contribute one-third of the funds that keep voluntary health and welfare agencies going, account for only 1 percent of their executive boards, an AFL-CIO Community Service Activities survey has revealed.

The reasons given for the scarcity of union members in the agencies' policy-making bodies are many, but they boil down to one prime factor —they aren't invited to serve.

The survey was conducted in the Newark, N.J., area, where the proportion of union members is higher than the national average. Identical possible reasons for the paucity were presented for checking to union officials, agency executives and agency board members. Only half of the executives returned the questionnaire and their replies were kept in a separate category.

Four principal reasons for the scant union representation were listed by the board members. They were:

- Agencies want to choose their own members rather than permit a central labor body to designate one or more.
- Labor members who do serve seem to have little interest in agency programs.
- Labor members cannot attend daytime meetings.
- Labor members sometimes fail to understand the importance of union representation on agency boards.

The replies of union members to the survey showed a sharp difference of opinion.

Only 8 percent of the union officials queried had ever been asked to serve on the executive board of a health or welfare agency, the survey showed.

More than 65 percent felt it was "very important" for labor to be represented on the boards, and 50 percent said they would be willing to serve.

Aid Program Lists 54,000 For Training

The federal government has approved training programs for nearly 54,000 persons on 1,450 separate projects since funds became available last August under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze, who administer the act, gave this summary as of June 20:

Institutional training projects for 48,902 trainees have been approved in 49 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Allowances and training costs total $62.5 million.

On-the-job projects have been approved for 1,772 trainees, and an additional 3,200 persons will be given training on special demonstration projects designed to help the long-time unemployed, school dropouts and others.

More Youths Needed

The secretaries said that if the act is to realize the full potential envisioned by Pres. Kennedy, it must be amended to include more youth and to provide more funds for literacy training. They added:

"Basic education and training is necessary to assure all citizens equal opportunity in the labor market."

The act can accomplish this, they said, not only by training "those who are experienced and literate members of the labor force but also by providing pre-training courses" for those who cannot qualify for available training courses, and for young workers who lack experience.

Office Employes Back Rights Bills

Las Vegas, Nev.—Support for Pres. Kennedy's proposed civil rights legislation was voted by the executive board of the Office Employes at a meeting here.

The board, which reiterated the union's anti-discrimination policy, urged all locals in the U.S. "to give us effective assistance to translate full liberty, full citizenship and full standing in the community into effective and enforceable federal law."

Passage of the Anderson-King bill to give health protection to retired workers under social security was urged by the board, which also called on employers to give summer jobs to teen-agers, commended enactment of the Equal Pay Act, and endorsed the Kennedy Administration's tax program.

'Work' Rider Beaten:

Vermont Enacts Enforceable FEP

Montpelier, Vt.—Vermont became the 24th state to adopt an enforceable fair employment practices law as Gov. Philip H. Hoff (D) signed a labor-sponsored bill which bars job pay discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, age or national origin. An attempt in the House to attach a so-called "right-to-work" amendment was soundly defeated.

The bill makes it illegal for any employer, employment agency or labor organization to practice discrimination in "any matter directly or indirectly related to employment or labor organization membership opportunities."

Employers, employment agencies and unions are prohibited from inquiring into the race, religion or place of birth of applicants, employment agencies are specifically barred from refusing to list or refer for employment members of minority groups, and unions are forbidden to discriminate on these grounds "against any individual or to limit, segregate or qualify its membership."

The effort to ban union shop agreements was beaten 178-46 in the House, with both Republicans and Democrats taking the floor to oppose the amendment. One GOP legislator warned that "right-to-work" legislation would discourage desirable industry from moving to Vermont and termed the proposed ban on the union shop "more obnoxious to industry than to labor."

The vote revealed a steady decline in "right-to-work" strength in the legislature. Two years ago, a similar effort to amend a fair employment bill was beaten 147-67. At that time the main FEP bill was also defeated. Four years ago, the Vermont House defeated a "work" bill by a considerably narrower margin, 136-93.

After defeat of the "work" amendment, the House adopted the fair employment measure 118-96. The Senate had passed it earlier and concurred with the House addition of a ban on wage discrimination because of sex or age.

Vermont Legislature Third to Ban 'Work'

The Vermont legislature is the third this year to reject a so-called "right-to-work" proposal.

In April, the Maine legislature crushed a bill to ban union shop agreements, 111-32 in the House and 28-3 in the Senate. Earlier the New Mexico House voted 36-27 against a bill to send a "right-to-work" proposal to referendum and then refused to reconsider its action when the Senate passed a similar bill.

"Work" forces scored a victory in Wyoming, which banned union shops in February, shortly after conservative Republicans took over the legislature.

Hotels, Union Push Jobs For Minority Workers

New York—Labor and management in New York's hotel industry have formed a joint committee aimed at assuring Negroes and Puerto Ricans the "fullest opportunity to obtain jobs, to hold them and to advance in them."

A statement issued by the Hotel Association of New York City, Inc., the employer group, and the New York Hotel Trades Council, AFL-CIO, recalled that their collective bargaining agreement had contained a non-discrimination clause for 25 years.

During that period, it continued, the industry's employment of workers from minority groups had increased steadily so that today they comprise from 35 to 40 percent of all hotel employes in the city.

"The issue is not only the opportunity to get a job in any category, but to be able to advance as far as one's potential will allow," it said. "This, realistically, is what equality of opportunity means. It is to be recognized that minority-group employes shall have equal opportunity to acquire the skills necessary for advancement."

The committee said it planned to make a survey of minority groups in the hotel industry and to adopt measures to achieve its goals. It said that in approching the problem it would be guided by the following principles:

- "The opportunity to be hired and the opportunity to be promoted are equally fundamental.
- "Equal opportunities are to be provided to all employes, regardless of race, creed or color, to qualify them for advancement.
- "First consideration in filling better jobs should be given to those presently employed in the hotels."

Members of the committee representing labor are Pres. Jay Rubin, Sec. James L. O'Hara and Vice Pres. Walter Gorray of the Hotel Trades Council; Sec.-Treas. James Marley, Vice Pres. Randolph Hagan and Gen. Organizer Betty Bentz of Local 6, Hotel & Club Employes; Pres. Peter Ottley and Gen. Organizer Thomas Madden of Local 144, Hotel & Allied Employes; Sec.-Treas. Ben J. Cohan of Local 153, Office Employes.

Management representatives are Pres. Daniel C. Hickey and Executive Vice Pres. James A. McCarthy of the Hotel Association; Pres. Harry M. Anholt, Realty Hotels; Vice Pres. Harold P. Bock, Sheraton East Hotel; Pres. Alfred B. Merrick, Roger Smith Hotels Corp.; Executive Vice Pres. William B. Rasor, Knott Hotels Corp.; Pres. Preston R. Tisch, Loew's Hotels; Vice Pres. Frank G. Wangeman, Hilton Hotels Corp.

M. F. McElligott Dies in Chicago

Chicago—Maurice F. McElligott, 64, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State AFL-CIO, died July 1 at the Little Company of Mary Hospital here.

A member of the Clothing Workers since 1919, he had been business manager of ACWA Local 271 since 1925.

In a message of condolence to Mrs. McElligott, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said her husband would be deeply missed by the labor movement "which he served so well for many years."

Survivors, besides his wife Margaret, include a stepdaughter, Mrs. Janice Wetzel, and two brothers, William J. and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Francis J. McElligott.

Unions Win 1, Lose 1:

Free Speech 'Abuse' Defined by NLRB

Union charges of employer abuse of the "free speech" section of the Taft-Hartley Act have been upheld by the National Labor Relations Board in one case, rejected in another.

Upheld by a three-man panel was a charge by the Textile Workers Union of America that the Collins & Aikman Corp., carpeting manufacturers in Dalton, Ga., restrained and coerced employes by:

- Circulating threats and warnings.
- Promising to reward employes for withdrawing from the union, for signing petitions repudiating the union, and for defeating the union in a labor board election.

NLRB Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown found also that management had made implied threats of plant closing if the TWUA won the election when it distributed a letter and a copy of a newspaper ad listing 19 plants that had closed after the union won bargaining rights.

Member Boyd Leedom dissented on the latter point, saying the company documents were factually accurate and did not imply any threat of plant shutdown.

In the other case, unfair labor practice charges brought by the Boot & Shoe Workers against the Texas Boot Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lebanon, Tenn., were dismissed by another panel.

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, Member Philip Ray Rodgers and Leedom decided that a speech read by company Pres. Harry Vise did not contain a threat of reprisal. Vise promised that if Boot & Shoe won the election and called a strike, "we will continue to operate and hire new workers."

Trial Examiner James T. Barker had concluded that Vise's remarks constituted threats of economic loss in violation of the law but the board did not agree. It said the remarks, when considered in context, did not contain a threat of reprisal and did not "exceed the bounds of free speech."

In the TWUA case, the union lost an election when a majority of the 78 Collins & Aikman voters cast ballots for no union. The campaign was marked, Trial Examiner Sidney Sherman said, by a "barrage of literature" by both sides.

Sherman said the firm broke the law by two actions—a letter implying loss of work if the union won an election, and a copy of a newspaper ad headed "Here's What CLOSING ONE MILL Does for a County." The ad cited a loss of 1,686 jobs and $1.35 million in payrolls when Peerless Woolen Mills closed its plant at Rossville, Ga., and a gain of 860 jobs and $1.2 million in payrolls in unorganized Whitfield County, home of Collins & Aikman.

(A year ago the board ordered the owners of the Peerless Woolen mill to give $150,000 in back pay to 1,700 workers who were stranded when Burlington Industries, Inc., closed the plant following an election won by the Allied Industrial Workers.)

Distribution of the ad by Collins & Aikman on the eve of the election, and the contents and format, were "calculated to confirm the impression" in the company's previous letter that a union victory at the polls would lead to the closing of the Dalton plant, the examiner said.

The board referred to its regional director a decision on whether a new election should be ordered.

ON THE PICKET LINE is Alejadra Acevedo, 7, whose mother is on strike at El Paso, Tex., Hilton Hotel since Apr. 18. Mrs. Acevedo and other Hotel & Restaurant Employes say they cannot live on wages of $2.50 a day. The other photo shows father-son pickets at Enamel Products Co., Cleveland, O., starting seventh month of strike-lockout. At left, Robert Papp, 5, and his father, James Papp, with James Gullo, 4, and Joseph Gullo of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers' Local 7-139. Both locals have asked for general labor support to win contract disputes.

New Court Suit Fights Michigan Gerrymander

Detroit—Michigan AFL-CIO leaders have asked a three-judge federal court to nullify the legislative apportionment formula of the state's new constitution, which gives extra representation to sparsely-settled rural areas.

An earlier suit, brought by State AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle, is pending before the U.S. Supreme Court. This case may no longer be applicable because the gerrymandered Senate districts complained about will be changed if and when the new constitution goes into effect in 1964.

Scholle and four other Michigan union officials contend in the new suit that malapportionment is continued by the new constitution, that the districting formula is "irrational, arbitrary and capricious" and that it violates the equal protection and due process provisions of the 14th Amendment.

The suit, filed by State AFL-CIO Attorney Theodore Sachs, asks the court to order an at-large election of all members of the legislature unless a substitute apportionment formula is adopted which meets federal constitutional standards.

Michigan's new constitution sets up a weighted formula for Senate districts supposedly based on 80 percent population and 20 percent area. In practice, the suit charges, this could result in as much as an 8-1 difference in population between Senate districts.

Although the House is supposedly apportioned by population, the districts could differ as much as 2-1 in population, the suit alleges.

While filing the new action, Scholle also asked the Supreme Court to uphold the earlier suit since the contested legislative apportionment is still in effect and the apportionment commission established under the new constitution is directed to retain existing districts "to the extent possible" under the revised formula.

ILGWU Requests Aid on Judy Bond

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers have urged all unions and women's auxiliaries to place Judy Bond blouses on their unfair lists and to publicize that fact until the "runaway" manufacturer returns to the bargaining table and agrees to contract terms.

Picketing continues at Judy Bond facilities here and in Los Angeles and Atlanta. More than 3 million leaflets explaining the "don't buy" campaign have been distributed and the campaign has been assigned to the ILGWU's union label department.

The union struck Judy Bond 18 months ago when the firm locked out its New York operations and moved to the South. Since then the union-industry arbitrator has awarded damages of $108,762 to the ILGWU; state courts have upheld the award, and a National Labor Relations Board examiner has recommended that the firm be required to reinstate 12 illegally fired workers with back pay, plus interest at 6 percent.

Second 'Work' Film Upsets NLRB Vote

(Continued from Page 1)

has the impact of a documentary."

In addition, a supervisor's statement that management would "certainly hate to see anything like that happen here" had far more impact on the employes and their wives than the "Weep" film, the examiner observed.

Reel, although recommending that the election be set aside because of the film, concluded that the company did not commit an unfair labor practice showing the movie. Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald Brown reversed his conclusion as to the law. They said management's conduct both violated the law and exceeded "the bounds of permissible campaign propaganda."

Such conduct "generated an atmosphere of physical violence, trouble, and economic loss which completely polluted the free atmosphere" indispensable to a valid election, the majority said.

Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom wrote a dissent on the ground that company campaign statements and propaganda were protected activity under the law.

Men's Clothing Shops Closed For Vacations

New York—About 125,000 Clothing Workers are taking their annual paid vacations as most shops in the men's and boys' clothing industry followed tradition by closing down during the first two weeks of July.

With July 4 a paid holiday under the ACWA contract, the union members will receive an additional day's pay. The new contract provides for a third week of paid vacation starting in 1964.

Other segments of the ACWA's 400,000 members—employed in cotton garment, shirt, sportswear, outerwear, pants, gloves and neckwear industries and in laundry, cleaning and dyeing plants—also receive two weeks of paid vacation, usually scheduled in July and August.

USWA Aide Named to Ontario Labor Board

Toronto, Ont.—Legislative Dir. Dwight M. Storey of the Steelworkers has been named a member of the Ontario Labor Relations Board. He and D. Allan Page, personnel director for the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., will constitute a new panel which was appointed because of a heavy backlog of work.

Southern Ordered To Rehire Firemen

(Continued from Page 1)

rail unions following its abrupt termination of some 800 jobs on the Central of Georgia immediately after acquiring control of Central stock from the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co.

Many of the affected employes received only a few minutes notice that their jobs had been abolished.

The non-operating rail unions immediately sought a temporary injunction from Atlanta federal court to maintain the status quo on Central job rosters prior to Southern's takeover. While the court declined to grant the injunction, it held that the union's charges could be tried on their merits.

At Macon, Ga., the U.S. District Court said a suit by the Switchmen, charging breaches of both the Railway Labor Act and the union's contract, should be heard at Atlanta along with the pending suit of the non-operating unions.

Hearings Scheduled

The federal court at Macon also scheduled hearings for July 3 on suits for separate injunctions brought by the Locomotive Engineers and the Firemen & Enginemen.

The court cases emphasize provisions of the law which bar carriers from changing rates of pay, rules or working conditions contained in agreements without "at least 30 days' written notice."

In Washington, the Railway Labor Executives' Association announced it had authorized its counsel to seek an injunction against the Interstate Commerce Commission order approving the acquisition of the Georgia Central by the Southern. The RLEA charged that the commission had failed to comply with the mandate of the Interstate Commerce Act providing protection for employes adversely affected by such transactions.

In the diesel firemen's case, the BLFE said it was considering further court action including a possible request for contempt findings against Southern because of the manner in which it moved to carry out Judge Walsh's order.

The order called on the carrier to rehire firemen on furlough or employ new ones so as to restore the status quo before the violations began. The union charged that Southern's compliance consisted of hiring men without experience "right off the streets," a procedure which it said flouted the railroad's own "operations book" and did not conform to pre-1959 procedures.

Judge's Order Stands

Judge Walsh's order stands until the dispute over interpretation of the diesel agreement is settled by the National Railroad Adjustment Board or in accordance with the RLA.

The Southern is not a party to the national work rules dispute.

Negotiations to resolve the main rules fight continued in Washington under a request from Pres. Kennedy that the parties make "one last major effort" for a settlement of the three-and-a-half-year dispute by July 10.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced that he was entering the talks personally to try to move the bargaining "off dead center."

In another rail labor development, a nationwide strike by the Sleeping Car Porters was averted when the union postponed its walkout, set for July 1, until the President had an opportunity to appoint an emergency board.

The Porters, who now work about 205 hours a month, are seeking a 173-hour month, which would amount to 40 hours a week, plus the "pattern" 10.28-cent hourly wage increase and a job stabilization program. They have been unable to reach an agreement in protracted bargaining with the New York Central, Soo Line and Rock Island railroads and the Pullman Co.

Youth Labor Club Formed in Texas

Odessa, Tex.—The Odessa AFL-CIO has helped form the Permian Basin Youth Education & Information Club—first labor youth club in Texas, Pres. D. L. Willis of the central body said at the first club meeting.

First officers are headed by Pres. Mike Dunn of Midland, Tex. In a welcoming speech, Willis said the club's objective is to help members "meet the needs of the times" when they leave school, particularly job needs.

Boy Scout Troop Sponsorship Urged

Local unions and their members have been urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to sponsor Boy Scout troops.

In a new pamphlet, Community Service Through Scouting, recently released by the AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, Meany says:

"Teamwork between the AFL-CIO and the Boy Scout movement has one purpose—to provide more boys with the opportunity for self-development, good companionship and the constructive use of leisure time."

A Question, Indeed

THE PROPAGANDA OUTFIT calling itself the National Right to Work Committee persistently claims that it is not against "voluntary" unionism, that it does not oppose collective bargaining as such or labor organization as such, and that its motives like the driven snow are pure and undefiled—a mere principled opposition to the union shop and "compulsory" membership.

Yet in its widely advertised film library the committee lists "And Women Must Weep," a fake movie of a Princeton, Ind., strike pretending to present "a minister's wife" relating her "personal account of a true story." The National Labor Relations Board has set aside election after election in which an anti-union employer has exhibited that movie to his employes as part of a campaign to prevent union victories in supervised secret-ballot labor board cases.

Now another "Work" Committee film has been exposed as "grossly misleading" by implying "that violence [is] a normal by-product of unionization." This one, "A Question of Law & Order," said a trial examiner, "taints the atmosphere" for a labor election "far more" than even the "Weep" film.

A three-member labor board majority upheld the trial examiner and went farther. It ruled that the employer's conduct in exhibiting the film, and his accompanying conduct in urging his workers to vote against union membership, was "intimidatory," was intended to "interfere with, restrain and coerce" the employes and was an unfair labor practice.

Even if it were not illegal conduct, the board ruled, the election would have to be set aside because the employer's anti-union campaign "generated an atmosphere of fear of physical violence, trouble and economic loss which completely polluted the free atmosphere . . . indispensable to a valid election."

The National Right to Work Committee rents out or sells prints of its propaganda movies—the "Weep" fake and the "Law & Order" number—and anti-union employers show them to captive audiences of workers. Maybe the Federal Trade Commission ought to require the "Work" propagandists to attach to every print a clear warning in big legible letters: A Showing of This Film to Your Employes May Be Held an UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE and A VIOLATION OF LAW.

The President in Berlin

THERE WAS a symbolism in Mr. Kennedy's appearance at the Berlin convention of a West German trade union. Introduced to German labor officials by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, the President of the United States paid tribute to the role of organized free workers in the preservation of freedom for all men. It was a recognition that the cold war is waged on many fronts—not least of all on the front in which western workers seek to maintain the system in which unions thrive as instruments for the betterment of mankind.

Not as instruments of the state, Mr. Kennedy pointed out, not under the supervision of officials chosen by the state, but as free associations of workers with their own processes of democracy and their own determination to preserve these processes.

The President's words were spoken to the workers of free Germany. The message is one for free men everywhere.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, July 6, 1963 No. 27

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'We Hold These Truths to Be Self-Evident . . .'

Rights Revolt Not Limited to U.S.:

Victims of Extreme Race Policies In Worldwide Fight for Dignity

THE CIVIL RIGHTS revolution which is sweeping the United States is not a peculiarly American development but is international in scope.

This was sharply illustrated at the recent Intl. Labor Organization session at Geneva when some 37 Afro-Asian countries walked out in protest against the extremist racial policies of the Republic of South Africa.

The deep feeling of bitterness toward South Africa, which was formerly a member of the British Commonwealth but proclaimed itself independent in 1961, came as no real surprise to those who have followed developments in the emerging African nations and the harsh, uncompromising racism in the little nation at the Southern tip of the continent.

Those who have visited South Africa tell us that even the white supremacy practiced in Mississippi cannot touch the brutal apartheid policies of the government of Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd.

Apartheid means apart—separation of the races. It is the approach by which 3 million whites, now largely dominated by the Dutch element in the nation rather than by the English, hope to continue their domination and deny elementary human rights to 13 million non-whites.

In addition, Verwoerd is in the process of transferring some 11 million non-whites to separate all-black areas. Here, the government claims, the people will be able to develop their civilization with promised aid to economic growth, education, etc.

In actual practice, even many supporters of the government admit these people would be condemned to a meager, illiterate existence, deprived of the rights and privileges of the white citizens. One liberal, anti-Communist weekly, Contact, called this policy an "independence swindle" and said that "black gaolers would replace white gaolers."

In major cities such as Johannesburg or Capetown non-whites are restricted from entering certain white areas without passes from the special police. Robert Conley, writing in The New York Times recently, reported:

"One out of every 236 persons in South Africa, by official admission, is in jail. The number of persons being held on political and criminal charges is 67,636, according to the government's latest count. Most of them are Africans."

Thousands more are under "house arrest" from 12 to 24 hours a day up to five years. Those under 24 hours house arrest may receive no visitors except a doctor or minister of religion.

Anyone—white or non-white—who takes exception to the extremist policies is subject to jail or "house arrest." Particularly harsh treatment is meted out to those aiding the outlawed African National Congress and the Pan-African Congress, and engaging in "sabotage" or so-called "Communist activities."

The Economist of Johannesburg noted not long ago that ". . . the stage has now been reached where criticism of the powers that be is . . . equated with communism . . . With the aid of the state radio, the government is going to inordinate lengths to prove that seemingly harmless and innocent bodies and individuals are doing the Communists' dirty work and must be fought and outlawed. . . ."

SEVERAL YEARS AGO the spotlight was focused on South Africa with unusual brightness when the former head of the African National Congress, Dr. Albert J. Luthuli, won the Nobel Peace Prize. Today his writings are banned from public print or recognition.

In Norway, Luthuli spoke of the South African policies which he opposed:

"Here the cult of race superiority and of white supremacy is worshipped like God. The ghost of slavery lingers on to this day in the form of forced labor that goes on in what are called 'prison farms.' "

What has been going on in South Africa has been too much for the world to take. On Nov. 28, 1961, the United Nations General Assembly condemned the country's racial policies as "reprehensible and repugnant to human dignity." The vote was 97 to 2, with two abstensions.

On Nov. 6, 1962, the General Assembly, by a two-thirds vote, broke a 17-year precedent and voted sanctions against South Africa. It called for these steps:

- Break off diplomatic relations with South Africa.
- Close their harbors and airports to South African ships and planes.
- Prevent their ships from entering South African ports.
- Boycott South African imports.
- Refrain from exporting goods, including arms and ammunition, to South Africa.

The resolution branded apartheid as a danger to international peace and security. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Postwar Generation About Set To Take Leadership of Europe

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

ONE OF THE MOST significant developments in Europe in this summer of 1963 is expressed by the adage that the old order changeth. The old order, of course, always changeth. But what is coming forward in the old world is new blood. The postwar generation is almost ready and already eager to take over. This represents an important new watershed in thinking and in human experience. The Adenauers, the de Gaulles and the Macmillans are not only leaders thrust forward by a war that the younger generation only dimly remembers—if at all—but they are mandating from another century.

Morgan

At 45, John F. Kennedy is of the wartime generation itself. A combat veteran, he stands between the old and the young, but his accent is definitely on youth. This is an important distinction and there is every reason to believe that the President has grasped its importance. He seems to be aiming over the heads of the old leaders, not only at the peoples of Europe, but especially at Europe's youth. And there is some inconclusive but fascinating evidence that the latter consciously or unconsciously are identifying with him.

A Washington colleague, a correspondent from one of the leading newspapers in Germany, was talking to some students in his old high school in Cologne. They told him they were making a special point to see Pres. Kennedy in his motorcade.

"But why," my friend asked, "did they go to all that trouble when they could simply sit at home and watch the whole performance on television in comfort?" "Because," they replied, "it is very important for us to see this young American leader in person."

There is, of course, danger in generalization. However, one got the feeling in watching the large crowds welcoming the President in Bonn, Cologne and Frankfurt that the predominantly youthful majority of these throngs had something special on their minds. If they remembered the bombings and the chaos of World War II and its aftermath it was largely a vague, unconscious memory.

One of Germany's postwar problems has been a brooding, unarticulated guilt for the monstrous nightmare of the Hitler era bordering on the psychotic. But my German correspondent friend, himself a tender recruit at the end of the war, was astonished to find in talking to the current graduates of his Cologne school that they had rejected guilt.

AN EVENT took place in Bonn which almost got lost in the shuffle of larger affairs. It was the official inauguration of a German peace corps, labeled officially and unromantically the German Development Service. But Kennedy made it a point to attend the ceremonies.

"Dante," he told the young Germans who have volunteered for overseas assistance duty, "Dante once said that the hottest places in Hell are reserved for those who in a period of moral crisis maintain their neutrality. This is a moral crisis. I am confident that the German youth, and I hope the older citizens of this country, will find their greatest reward not here pursuing merely their private pursuits, but in some far-off country, sowing seeds of friendship and help which will bring a rich harvest later for us all."

The German corps, which had more volunteers than places even before it was inaugurated, stems in part from a relatively unheralded gathering of representatives of 43 countries in Puerto Rico last October. Here under the aegis of Sargent Shriver, head of the U.S. Peace Corps, was started an international corps secretariat to encourage and coordinate Peace Corps movements in other countries. The secretary-general of the nebulous body, former White House aide Richard M. Goodwin, addressed the German recruits in Bonn.

"Why," he asked, "has the American Peace Corps been such a success? Because it touches on the profoundest motives of world youth, giving them a chance to prove that idealism and high aspirations are not inconsistent with the most practical and rigorous of programs. That there is no basic inconsistency between high ideals and realistic possibilities. No barrier between the world's work and the world's hope."

It would be dangerously easy, of course, to exaggerate the importance and the influence of even such purposeful movements of youth. Indeed, many of today's younger generation seem numbed by life—without focus except for security and pleasure. But it would be arrogantly foolish as well to ignore the great positive forces pulsing to be unleashed

The President is pumping for a multi-lateral nuclear force as an added shield in the defense of Europe. With proper imagination and purpose, the younger generation could become a multi-lateral force themselves, more powerful than nuclear warheads.

Washington Reports:

AID Director Says Programs Have Succeeded in Many Areas

DAVID BELL, administrator of the Agency for Intl. Development, suggested that critics of the South Vietnamese government of Ngo Dinh Diem ask themselves, "What is the alternative?"

He gave this advice as he was interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on nearly 700 radio stations.

"There's no doubt whatever that the present government of Vietnam, headed by Diem, is a dedicated anti-Communist government," said Bell. "There also is no doubt that he is managing affairs within his country in ways that certainly are subject to question."

The AID director said, however, that Diem has been working in the right direction. He reported that when he visited Vietnam earlier this year, village elections were being held where the head man had previously been appointed. Bell also pointed out the difficulties in changing a government during a civil war.

The AID program is being carried forward along the lines suggested by Pres. Kennedy in his inaugural address, he asserted.

"We are seeking to help other countries to help themselves," said Bell. "We do not believe it is in our interest or theirs to perpetuate a situation in which they are dependent on our aid."

He said that AID has been successful not only in countries like Japan and in western Europe, but that it is doing well enough that it can soon be discontinued in Greece, Taiwan, Israel, Mexico and elsewhere. He noted that Japan, West Germany and some other countries that were aided in the past were now contributing to underdeveloped countries with their own foreign aid. This is not as large as it might be, he suggested, and he proposed that the interest rates and loan terms they require be revised downward.

BELL SAID that he could understand the temptations in Congress to reduce the amount spent for foreign aid, but he didn't think budget cuts were justified.

If foreign aid "serves its purpose and prevents conditions developing which might lead to international conflicts," he said, "it would seem to most of us that this is a small insurance premium to pay."

"We are very proud of the extent to which we have had the direct advice of experienced labor specialists," Bell said, "and in many parts of the world, we have trade unionists helping train labor leaders so as to develop better policies, better laws and better conditions in those countries."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A YEARNING HAS BEEN EXPRESSED among various groups for the rise of a "southern Vandenberg"—a senior and respected spokesman for the South who would do for the Dixie wing of the Democratic Party what the late senator from Michigan did for the GOP in regard to isolationism.

Vandenberg had been an isolationist himself but he reached a conscientious conclusion that the world moves, that the needs of the times change, that the hard-and-fast isolationist line must be discarded as a GOP tenet. He offered Pres. Roosevelt, across the lines of party, both help and constructive suggestions in the building of the network of agreements through which the World Bank, the Intl. Monetary Fund, the United Nations were created.

Vandenberg did this at considerable cost to himself. He was derided and written down as traitorous by isolationist extremists who raged at their loss of total control.

Indeed, in 1948 when Vandenberg might well have been a logical choice for the Republican presidential nomination, slanderous stories were circulated to keep him out of the running as a possible compromise between the late Sen. Taft and Gov. Dewey. But he effectively reconstructed the party policy so that Republicans were able to establish their bona fides as contestants for the responsibility of leading the country's foreign policy.

The need of southern Democrats for a spokesman of a new day is substantial. There are senators of great reputation, of recognized integrity and standing, who must yearn to break the fetters that chain them to a political tradition on race relations no longer valid, not in the South itself. The issue as always is whether one of them will take the lead in doing it.

* * *

WRITING IN LOOK MAGAZINE, Harry Ashmore bluntly says that the South for the last decade has acted in "bad faith" in regard to civil rights.

A onetime editor of the Arkansas Gazette, the southern-born Ashmore points out that since the original Supreme Court decision in the school desegregation cases, "southern legislatures, city councils and school boards have been largely engaged in the enactment of laws that were calculated exercises in bad faith."

"Lawyers of standing," he continued, "have grown rich manipulating legal technicalities in briefs that could succeed only if they were endorsed by an exchange of sly winks between judges and counsel."

There is a "moral corruption" in this process, he contends, that cannot be confined to the civil rights issue, and he sees "signs of spreading rot at every level of government." And he sees the South itself being compelled to recognize that the "price" of maintaining segregation is "intolerable."

The evidence is clear that the white community of the South will accept the law of the land except where stirred up by scallywags and demagogues. It has been proved in every state including the Gulf States that are said to be the most resistant. The election returns indicate that moderate and sensible policies do not doom a public official to overwhelming repudiation for doing his duty.

* * *

THE SOUTH, like the rest of the country, is undergoing a most rapid change of mood and conviction. It is no tragedy, in any case, for a public leader of stature to lose out in a political career for taking the lead in what he conscientiously believes to be the right and moral thing to do.

The pending struggle in Congress over the insistent demand of the American Negro for human rights, for a place of recognized respect, for plain acknowledgment of his dignity as a man, creates the most delicate problem for politicians.

Both parties will be needed to put the legislation through. There will be credit and honor enough for all who conscientiously help get it through.

There seems no prospect at the moment of a "southern Vandenberg." But he would be most useful—to the country and to the South.

FOREIGN AID expenditures "are a small insurance premium to pay" to prevent conditions from developing which may lead to conflict, David E. Bell, administrator of the Agency for Intl. Development, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Harry Flannery, radio coordinator for the federation, is the interviewer.

POLITICAL CONVENTION-TYPE parade welcomed Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson (right foreground) to the diamond jubilee convention of the Retail Clerks in Chicago—complete with signs and marching around the hall and on the stage. Johnson, a main speaker, is shown being greeted by RCIA Pres. James A. Suffridge.

Rightist Assault on Constitution Condemned by Retail Clerks

By Gervase N. Love

Chicago—Proposed changes in the U.S. Constitution promoted by right-wing extremists were sharply attacked by the 1,000 delegates to the diamond jubilee convention of the Retail Clerks here.

The convention warned of a "dangerous attempt" to alter the nation's basic constitutional structure as it voted to oppose moves to permit state legislatures to amend the Constitution without recourse to Congress or to a national convention, and to create a so-called "Court of the Union" composed of the chief justices of state supreme courts, which would have the power to overrule U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

The resolution urged local unions to inform their members of these "dangerous proposals" and to urge their respective state legislatures "to defeat them when proposed or to have them recalled if already recommended."

The resolution was one of a series acted on during the week-long quadrennial convention. Among other actions the delegates:

- Called for "constructive and far-seeing efforts" to meet the impact of technological change and urged the RCIA executive board to continue discussions with management on strengthening job security.
- Urged Congress to repeal Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act "so as forever to remove the blight of 'right-to-work' laws from our economic society"; to pass the Anderson-King bill giving health protection to retirees under social security; to pass the Kennedy Administration's tax programs, to permit retirement under social security with full benefits at age 62, and to approve federal aid to education.
- Asked local unions and district councils to work in state legislatures for Sunday closing laws and for equal-pay-for-women legislation.
- Created a new constitutional office of president emeritus.
- Adopted improvements in the pension plan covering officers, staff members and employes.

The convention received an oil portrait of RCIA Pres. James A. Suffridge, authorized for the international union by its executive board.

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), who had spoken at two previous RCIA conventions, took sharp issue with those who advocate coverage of unions by the anti-trust laws.

"The anti-trust laws were not made to apply to a man's labor," he said. "A man's labor, his activity and work, is not a commodity in commerce. That has always been the history and the attitude we have taken.

"If you simply applied the anti-trust laws to labor, two people could not get together in a concert of action for the purpose of trying to get better working conditions or better wages."

Kefauver also explained and asked support for bills setting up a federal consumer council, truth-in-lending proposals and truth-in-packaging measures.

Rep. Kenneth J. Gray (D-Ill.) warned that the labor movement "is in greater danger from special interest groups today than at any time I have served in Congress in five terms."

He particularly warned that "there will be lights burning bright in the Capitol tonight to try to find ways of turning back the clock for labor" by putting it under anti-trust laws.

In addition he asked that all union members write their congressmen and senators when a bill on which they have views is being considered in Congress.

Water Pollution Control Given Strong Backing

The federal government should expand and strengthen its program to control water pollution, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared in a letter to a Senate Public Works subcommittee.

Biemiller endorsed a bill introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.), with 17 co-sponsors, which would:

- Establish a separate agency within the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare to administer the water pollution control program, which is now under the U.S. Public Health Service (an H-E-W bureau with many other responsibilities).

The change, Biemiller said, would reflect the shift in emphasis from pollution control as primarily a health problem to the broader issue of "assuring adequate supplies of clean water for all human uses in the years to come."

- Double the existing $100 million annual authorization for federal pollution control grants. In addition to the program of grants to help finance construction of waste treatment plants, an additional $100 million a year would be made available for replacement of outmoded combination storm and sewage drains which permit untreated waste to enter waterways.
- Raise the ceiling on the amount a single city or water authority may receive under the existing grant-in-aid program.

The Muskie bill would also give the federal government broader power to step in and halt the pollution of waterways when localities refuse to act.

"Vigorous, coordinated, adequate federal enforcement powers are essential to prevent water pollution," Biemiller declared.

Pollution, he added, "is a national problem of the utmost seriousness and requires a vigorous national effort now and in the future to protect our national well being."

Rehearing Sought In Appeals Court

A motion for a rehearing will be filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in relation to the court's refusal to reverse the contempt of Congress conviction of Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson of the Carpenters.

The appellate court acknowledged that the indictment of Hutcheson contained the same "vice" which the Supreme Court saw in 1962 in setting aside the convictions of six other persons involved in alleged contempt cases. The "vice" was that the indictments failed specifically to state the subject under inquiry by the congressional committee making investigations.

The appellate court ruled, however, that this issue had not been raised in trial court and that Hutcheson was "victim of the time-honored rule" that it therefore was not available to him on appeal.

Extremists Push Drive:

Amendments Draw Support in 16 States

The "states' rights" drive to rewrite the U.S. Constitution—denounced by the AFL-CIO Executive Council as an "attack on the American form of government"—has, within the past few months, won the support of 16 state legislatures and made headway in several others.

Fourteen legislatures have joined in proposing an amendment which would strip federal courts of jurisdiction over legislative apportionment. The effect, the AFL-CIO has warned, would be to "perpetuate rural minority control" of the states.

Eleven states have proposed a constitutional amendment which would enable states to bypass congressional consideration in adopting future amendments to the Constitution. Yale Law Prof. Charles L. Black, Jr., has estimated that this would allow legislators representing only 15 percent of the nation's population to rewrite the Constitution.

Only four states—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida and Wyoming—have thus far endorsed the third of the trio of extremist proposed amendments, to establish a 50-judge Court of the Union to supersede the Supreme Court in matters involving federal-state relations.

There is some evidence that the alarms sounded about the amendments—from responsible conservative as well as liberal forces—have slowed the "states' rights" drive.

In Ohio, the Republican legislature sidetracked the proposals after leading newspapers had denounced them—although one GOP senator told newsmen he had received phone calls from "high Republican Party officials" urging him to support the amendments.

The North Carolina legislature, at the urging of Gov. Terry Sanford (D) recently voted down all three proposals. The one amendment which passed the lower house, to establish a Court of the Union, was killed in the Senate, 28-12.

All three proposed amendments are in the form of joint resolutions petitioning Congress to call a convention for the purpose of proposing the specified amendment to the Constitution.

Unused Alternative

This is the never-used alternative provided in the Constitution to the requirement that proposed amendments be initiated by a two-thirds vote of each house of Congress and then ratified by three-fourths of the states.

With most legislatures adjourned there is no danger that the goal of 34 states necessary to compel the calling of a constitutional convention will be reached this year—or even that the number will be closely approached.

But part of the strategy of the sponsors has been to push the drive primarily in the northern states, counting on a late flurry of support from the traditionally "states' rights" southern states to achieve the two-thirds necessary to require Congress to call a constitutional convention for the first time since 1787.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), in a recent speech to the Senate, charged that segregationist groups are seeking "to make this country a confederacy instead of a nation."

Douglas Sees 'Danger'

"I personally believe that there is a greater danger that these amendments will finally be adopted than many of the commentators seem to believe," Douglas said.

"The movement has been conducted quietly and the sponsors have obviously been keeping in the background legislatures in several states which are strongly segregationist or dominated by the gross overrepresentation of rural areas.

"Both of these interests feel themselves threatened and aggrieved by the decisions of the Supreme Court. We are therefore likely to see next year a large number of states which will rush to approve these [proposals]. This may well create a bandwagon psychology which will sweep other states into the fold. These proposals are indeed time bombs under the American constitutional system."

In contrast to some earlier schemes of the radical right—such as the proposal to abolish or limit the income tax—the three proposed amendments came out of the Assembly of the States, which is associated with the normally non-political Council of State Governments.

With this backing, for example, the apportionment amendment sailed unanimously and almost unnoticed through the New Jersey Senate. Only recently has there developed an outspoken opposition determined to block approval in the House.

The Illinois legislature—in "the land of Lincoln"—narrowly approved the resolution to change the method of amending the Constitution even though Negro legislators in both parties voted against it, aware of its segregationist overtones.

Constitution Silent

There is no guidance in the Constitution or in precedent for the composition of a new constitutional convention—including the key question of whether representation would be based on population or by states. Nor is there any clear guide as to the time limit for states to petition Congress to call a convention.

While most states do not require the signature of the governor on joint resolutions, Nebraska—which has a one-house legislature—requires the governor to approve all measures adopted. Gov. Frank B. Morrison (D) vetoed the proposal to allow states to amend the Constitution and the apportionment measure, although there is a question as to whether the actions are subject to veto.

Another disputed legislative action is Utah's approval of the apportionment amendment in a form different from that used by the other states.

Other than these two states, the list of approvals is as follows:

To change the method of amending Constitution: Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Wyoming.

To bar federal courts from acting on apportionment: Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Washington, Wyoming.

Factory Hirings At 9-Month High

The Dept. of Labor has reported that factory hirings in April, after adjustment for seasonal variations, were at their highest level since July 1962—37 per 1,000.

The factory layoff rate dropped from 16 per 1,000 in March to 15 in April for what was called a better-than-seasonal improvement.

The quit rate, according to the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, showed a smaller than usual increase—from 12 to 13 per 1,000 for April.

ACWA Project Demonstrates:

Disabled and Ill Workers Rescued from Scrap Heap

New York—Workers disabled by chronic illness or off-the-job accidents can be saved from the industrial scrap heap, the Clothing Workers are demonstrating at their Sidney Hillman Health Center here.

More than 140 handicapped workers have been given a new lease on their working lives in a pioneering research program launched two years ago with a $60,000 grant from the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. Since then the grant has been renewed, the health center has donated an equal amount in personnel and services, and substantial aid has been given by the New York Heart Association and the state's Vocational Rehabilitation Administration, working with the union and five of its employers.

When the research phase of the program ends next year, its sponsors believe they will have shown how a union health center can aid workers and employers to make better use of their resources, and help those who require retraining to prolong their working lives.

After two years of the experiment, Dir. Hyman J. Weiner reported that more than 470 union members have been interviewed about their job needs, and direct aid, including retraining, has been given 140 ACWA members or their spouses.

Here is the way Dr. Morris Brand, medical director of the Hillman center, and Dr. Bruce Grynbaum, project medical coordinator, have summed up their work and that of the staff:

Focus Broadened

"Labor has been traditionally attentive to the needs of the worker injured on the job, and now turns its attention equally to union members and their families who have become disabled through chronic illness or non-industrial accidents.

"Our project is coming to grips with this problem, and promises to write a new chapter in the history of labor's concern for the welfare of workers."

Several forms of rehabilitation care and services have resulted, the union has reported, in the return of skilled workers to their jobs, and have made it possible for others to remain at work through job changes or modifications.

Project staff workers, in cooperation with the union and the manufacturers, have set up an on-the-job training program to retrain disabled workers in skills on a level with their reduced physical capabilities, and also for the training of disabled workers from outside the industry when additional workers are needed.

Under this pioneering program the state Vocational Rehabilitation Administration pays the salaries, set by the union and the employers, of disabled persons training on the job.

Success Story Cited

As an example of its success, the project staff cited the case of a pants presser, 37, who lost his job after 15 years of work when his employer went out of business. The health center had sent questionnaires to 11,872 of the N. Y. Joint Board's 26,000 working and retired members, and turned up the case of the pants presser, among others. A study showed that, because of a varicose vein condition, he could not stand at work more than half the time the job required.

Discovering that he had the capacity to do bookkeeping work, the staff helped him enroll in a bookkeeping class sponsored by the state retraining division and, the union said, his future is "already brighter than his past."

The project got under way when sponsors concluded that though labor played a vital role in developing health and welfare services and in improving workmen's compensation programs, little direct participation by labor had been evident before 1961 in the field of rehabilitation.

Labor and rehabilitation representatives first discussed the problem in 1959 at an Atlantic City meeting called by the National Institutes on Rehabilitation & Health Services. One proposal dealt with the need to influence labor health programs through a demonstration approach, and as a result, the Hillman Health Center agreed to serve as a bellwether for the 60 union-sponsored health programs in America.

The primary objectives, according to its director, were:

- To develop guidelines in rehabilitation for health centers sponsored by consumer groups and labor.
- To develop an industrywide approach to rehabilitation based on management-labor cooperation.

These goals are close to realization, Weiner said in his report. The next step will be to extend them to other union health centers.

DISABLED BY BACK INJURY, worker James Roach uses sewing machine in New York clothing shop with instruction from foreman Salvatore Ingallinera, right. Roach is one of a number of handicapped workers in on-the-job retraining program of the Sidney Hillman Health Center, the Clothing Workers, the State Vocational Rehabilitation Administration and employers—in this case, the Pilgrim Clothes Shop.

PLANS FOR ON-THE-JOB training program in New York clothing shop, a rehabilitation project of the Hillman Health Center, are worked out by (from left) John Sommer, project industrial coordinator; Harry Kauff, Clothing Workers' Local 178 business agent; Milton Finkelman, New York State Div. of Vocational Rehabilitation, and Plant Mgr. Wallace Dorman of the Pilgrim Clothes Shop, one of five participating companies.

ILO to Seek UN Aid On South Africa Status

(Continued from Page 1)

ment be written so as to permit the expulsion of any state found to be "persistently, deliberately and flagrantly" violating ILO principles.

Kalmen Kaplansky of the Canadian Labor Congress said that workers saw "a good deal of logic" in the employers' position.

He added, however, that the time was not ripe to attempt to go beyond the South African issue. South Africa, he said, is a special case since it is the only member state that "does not deny its violations" of ILO principles.

Jean Moeri, veteran Swiss leader of the Workers Group, said in a pointed allusion to the Communist countries that there were regimes that regard human and trade union rights as a "doormat on which to wipe their shoes."

Nevertheless, he continued, the immediate issue is apartheid. Any attempt to use this issue to open the way for other exclusions from the ILO could be "the doom of this organization," the Swiss said.

The employer proposal to widen the projected constitutional amendment was overwhelmingly defeated. The measures adopted were approved without a dissenting vote except in the case of the virtual ban on South Africa's attendance at ILO meetings, which four governments voted against.

All African members showed up for the Governing Body session, the first since its expanded membership of 24 governments and 12 worker and 12 employer members was set by the ILO conference.

African Members Attend

Emilio Calderon Puig, Mexican government delegate, was elected Governing Body chairman for a year. He and two vice chairmen, Moeri, for the workers, and Pierre Walline of France, for the employers, will head the delegation that is to accompany ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse to confer with U Thant.

The expulsion of South Africa from the UN could solve the ILO constitutional problem without the need of an amendment, since the ILO is a UN agency. At present there is no ILO constitutional provision for ousting a member state.

By its action the Governing Body gave effect to a plan that Morse had drafted. The plan sought to satisfy the desire expressed by most delegates at the recent ILO conference to see legal action against South Africa set in motion and strong moral disapproval of the apartheid policy expressed.

Social Security Vote Won 3-1 by AFGE

Baltimore—The Government Employes have won exclusive bargaining rights for some 8,600 Social Security Administration employes here in one of the biggest white-collar representation elections ever held at a single establishment.

Employes at the agency's headquarters voted for union representation by a nearly 3-1 margin, 3,899 to 1,346.

AFGE Lodge 1923 prepared for the balloting with an intensive campaign, including desk-to-desk distribution of organizing literature and personal contacts with nonmembers. The result was a vote for the union which was more than double its pre-election membership.

In separate balloting, 144 professional employes voted to be included in the overall AFGE bargaining unit. Certification for this group has been held up pending a ruling on whether the professional staff had been given sufficient advance notice of the election. The decision, however, will not affect the vote of the non-professional employes.

The secret ballot election marked the fifth big victory in a row for the AFGE among SSA employes.

In recent months, AFGE locals won bargaining rights at the New York Social Security Payment Center by a 950-196 vote; at Kansas City, 651-240; at the Chicago office, 911-125, and in Philadelphia by a 797-262 vote.

An executive order by Pres. Kennedy in January 1962 made it possible for the first time for unions of federal employes to obtain official recognition and negotiate contracts.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Union 'Breakthrough' Seen at Hand in South

New York—The chance is at hand for an organizing and collective bargaining "breakthrough" in the South and "all America has a stake" in the success of the effort, the Textile Workers Union of America has declared.

The South "has resources and potential which match those of the rest of the nation" yet "remains at the bottom of the economic ladder," the TWUA said in a new pamphlet now being distributed in the southern states.

The "missing ingredient" is collective bargaining, said TWUA Pres. William Pollock in a foreword.

Unionism always "evokes more emotion than reason" when mentioned in the South, Pollock observed.

Yet the people of the entire nation "are being held back by the drag which substandard conditions [in the south] impose upon the forward thrust of our economy and our society," he continued.

"We are convinced" that the opportunity for meeting the challenge is at hand, the pamphlet declares. It adds:

"The barriers to meaningful civil rights are being lifted. Redistricting and an end to the county-unit voting system are extending the voting franchise. The political complexion is beginning to change and the South is finally on the threshhold of a two-party system.

"If it is properly molded, it can provide a vehicle for progress and break the stranglehold which reaction exercises. We believe labor must help to speed up this process. . . ."

The "drag" of the South is established in statistics, the pamphlet notes.

- Southern factory workers average 60 cents an hour less than those in the rest of the nation, and "with fringe benefits added the disparity is even greater."
- Annual per capita income is $471 less in the South. "If this gap were closed, the economy of the South would be enriched by $46 billion a year and, with it, the economy of the rest of the nation," the booklet notes.
- Illiteracy is 75 percent higher in the South than the U.S. average; only 35.3 percent of its adults have completed high school compared with a U.S. average of 41.4 percent.
- Total civilian employment is rising at a slower rate than in the country nationally.
- In the past decade, 1.3 million more people migrated out of the South than moved in.

This damages the southern merchant, professional man and the worker, the pamphlet declares.

The hope is expressed that "from now on, union organizations will be welcomed instead of obstructed."

After Midyear Recess:

House, Senate Face Legislative Logjam

(Continued from Page 1)

and won House committee approval, but has been sidelined in the House Rules Committee. A similar chain of events marked action on mass transit legislation.

Kennedy recently reiterated his belief that hospital care for the aged under social security could be passed—if it could be brought to the floor for a vote. It is understood that hearings on the hospital care bill will be held by the House Ways & Means Committee following action on the tax bill, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said.

Despite the big backlog, Congress has not been idle during the first six months of a traditionally slow-paced first session. Among the significant actions were:

- Enactment of an equal pay for women law, climaxing a labor-supported drive which began back in 1945.
- Defeat on the House floor of a labor-opposed bill to extend the Mexican farm labor program.
- A rare reversal by the House of its Appropriations Committee and restoration of $450 million in public works funds largely to complete the accelerated public works program authorized by the 87th Congress. Later in this session, a drive is expected for a further extension of public works.

A closely-divided House, with shifting coalition alignments gave the Administration an initial victory in maintaining an enlarged Rules Committee and provided the votes needed to raise the debt limit.

The same House, however, recently defeated an Administration bill to expand and pump new funds into the area redevelopment program. The Senate revived the measure but House leaders are waiting until they can count the votes before bringing it up a second time.

GOP leaders, who had threatened to wield a heavy ax on appropriations after the President submitted a deliberately unbalanced budget, have had to be content with comparatively mild cuts made by the House Appropriations Committee. The battle of the budget turned out to be mostly a skirmish with words.

Mental Health Bill Moves

Among the new Kennedy programs carrying a price tag which appears to be moving through Congress is a 10-year, $848.5 million mental health program which passed the Senate 72-1. A somewhat harder fight is expected over the President's proposal for a National Service Corps—a domestic version of the Peace Corps.

A big question mark hovering over Congress after the Fourth of July week interlude is the extent to which bitter-end opponents of civil rights legislation will seek to block action on the remainder of the Kennedy program.

The session's initial skirmish over civil rights—an unsuccessful attempt to change the Senate rules to make it easier to close debate and break a filibuster—found the President taking the traditional stand that the executive can not interfere with internal Senate procedures.

In the forthcoming battle over specific civil rights legislation, however, the President has told Congress it is "imperative" to enact his program at this session "however long it may take and however troublesome it may be."

STEELWORKERS from southern Ohio and northern Kentucky converged on the campus of Miami University, Oxford, O., as the USWA opened its 18th annual series of educational institutes for members and staff. Gene Hagburg, right, of Ohio State University's Labor Education & Research Service, is shown instructing a first-year class in union administration at the week-long institute, which drew more than 100 members of USWA locals in Dist. 25. Sessions for other USWA districts are scheduled at 20 colleges and universities.

Rollcall Vote in Senate On Depressed Area Aid

The Senate on June 26 voted 65-30 to authorize additional funds to continue and expand redevelopment aid to areas of persistent, heavy unemployment. The AFL-CIO strongly supported the bill. Following is the rollcall:

FOR DEPRESSED AREA AID

DEMOCRATS 53

Bartlett (Alaska)	Hayden (Ariz.)	Morse (Ore.)
Bayh (Ind.)	Hill (Ala.)	Moss (Utah)
Bible (Nev.)	Holland (Fla.)	Muskie (Maine)
Brewster (Md.)	Humphrey (Minn.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Burdick (N. D.)	Inouye (Hawaii)	Neuberger (Ore.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Pastore (R. I.)
Cannon (Nev.)	Jordan (N. C.)	Pell (R. I.)
Clark (Pa.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Dodd (Conn.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Randolph (W. Va.)
Douglas (Ill.)	Long (La.)	Ribicoff (Conn.)
Edmondson (Okla.)	Magnuson (Wash.)	Smathers (Fla.)
Engle (Calif.)	Mansfield (Mont.)	Sparkman (Ala.)
Ervin (N. C.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Symington (Mo.)
Fulbright (Ark.)	McGovern (S. D.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Gore (Tenn.)	McIntyre (N. H.)	Williams (N. J.)
Gruening (Alaska)	McNamara (Mich.)	Yarborough (Tex.)
Hart (Mich.)	Metcalf (Mont.)	Young (Ohio)
Hartke (Ind.)	Monroney (Okla.)

REPUBLICANS 12

Aiken (Vt.)	Fong (Hawaii)	Prouty (Vt.)
Beall (Md.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Scott (Pa.)
Case (N. J.)	Keating (N. Y.)	Smith (Maine)
Cooper (Ky.)	Morton (Ky.)	Young (N. D.)

AGAINST DEPRESSED AREA AID

DEMOCRATS 9

Byrd (Va.)	Lausche (Ohio)	Russell (Ga.)
Eastland (Miss.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Ellender (La.)	Robertson (Va.)	Thurmond (S. C.)

REPUBLICANS 21

Allott (Colo.)	Dominick (Colo.)	Miller (Iowa)
Bennett (Utah)	Goldwater (Ariz.)	Mundt (S. D.)
Boggs (Del.)	Hickenlooper (Iowa)	Pearson (Kan.)
Carlson (Kan.)	Hruska (Neb.)	Saltonstall (Mass.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Jordan (Idaho)	Simpson (Wyo.)
Curtis (Neb.)	Kuchel (Calif.)	Tower (Tex.)
Dirksen (Ill.)	Mechem (N. M.)	Williams (Del.)

Board Orders Jobs and Pay For Strikers

A firm whose unfair labor practices caused its workers to strike has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to rehire them, give them back pay plus interest, and discharge strikebreakers if necessary to make room for them.

Found guilty of unfair practices, and also of breaking an agreement to respect the rights of union members, was the Radiator Specialty Co. of Charlotte, N.C.

The board upheld charges by the Rubber Workers that the firm, which makes auto products and rubber specialties, had refused to bargain with the union, threatened to discharge workers, threatened to close the plant, and promised benefits to get employes to refrain from union activities.

The URW won a representation election in 1961, and later held 37 meetings with management in trying without success to get a first contract. The workers struck May 15, 1962, and last Jan. 9 their union offered to call off the strike. The firm refused to rehire any of the strikers, the board found.

Board Members Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown ruled that the walkout was an unfair labor practice strike and said those who engaged in it are entitled to immediate and full reinstatement without prejudice to seniority or other rights, and lost pay from the date they asked reinstatement to the date when reinstatement is offered or accomplished.

Charges originally filed by the union were dropped in April 1962 when management signed a settlement agreement. The firm claimed it had lived up to the agreement by posting it on bulletin boards but the union said violations continued and the NLRB regional director vacated the agreement.

Workers and Farmers Seen Moving Closer

Port Elgin, Ont. — Industrial workers and farmers are being pushed into a closer relationship by changing economic events, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress told a conference of farm and trade union representatives at the Auto Workers Educational Center here.

The cost of machinery and equipment has put individual ownership of a farm out of the reach of more and more people, he noted. Thus the status of an increasing number of farmers has changed, he continued, and they are being placed in a position where they have much in common with industrial workers.

18th Series of Institutes Opened by Steelworkers

Steelworkers have begun to move out of the shops and into the classrooms of colleges and universities across the continent as the union opened its 18th annual series of institutes for members and staff.

Commenting on the 1963 institute theme—"The Invisible America: Poverty Amidst Affluence"—USWA Education Dir. Emery F. Bacon pointed out that the nation's unmet needs are largely concentrated among two-fifths of the population—77 million people—who still live in poverty and deprivation.

"They need better education, health services, housing, vastly liberalized social security, further improvements in minimum wage standards and release from the burden of unemployment," Bacon said.

Institute leaders said the 1963 theme is being developed through discussion, lectures and workshops at 20 colleges and universities. The series opened with the District 25 institute at Miami University, Oxford, O., and will wind up in January with sessions for District 1 members at Goddard College, Plainfield, Vt.

Typical of the courses available to USWA members are those offered at the District 25 institute: Union goals and philosophy, human relations, community relations, legislative education, labor history, grievance handling, union administration, public speaking, American government, conducting a meeting, labor economics and collective bargaining.

7-6-63

Swedes Tell Congress How They Handle Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

preciates" dealing with "a strong labor organization."

"I have never heard any American manufacturer talk like that," House Subcommittee Chairman Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.) declared.

Geijer, who is also president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, told the hearing that Swedish unions, because of their strength, must "take a great deal of responsibility for the general development of their country."

He emphasized that "there are no political splits" in Sweden over the national policy of full employment. While automation "is not a great problem yet," he said, Swedish labor believes that problems which may arise will be solved, as other problems have been, by "cooperation of government, management and labor."

Michanek told the committees that Sweden considers full employment to be "a human right," including jobs for persons with physical handicaps and a free choice in the field of employment.

He described his country's investment tax credit system which encourages business to set aside part of its profits in boom years to be used tax-free for expansion purposes during economic downturns.

Michanek told of Sweden's fiscal policy of stepping up government expenditures in slack periods—and the byproducts of more schools, housing and railroad facilities.

He explained the operations of the national employment service, administered by a board which includes labor and management members, and its network of regional offices keeping close tabs on future as well as present employment needs and training and retraining workers to fill these jobs.

Training and relocation allowances, he said, have encouraged labor mobility to match changing manpower needs and "for almost 20 years Sweden had had under 2 percent unemployment."

Despite this high degree of manpower planning, the government "does not interfere" in collective bargaining, Michanek said.

The employer representative concurred, emphasizing that 90 percent of Swedish industry "is in the hands of private enterprise."

Employers have their political disagreements with the government, he said, but not in the area of promoting full employment as a national policy.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 13, 1963 | No. 28

Rail Showdown Postponed, Fact-Finding Panel Named

FACT-FINDING PANEL named by Pres. Kennedy to investigate the rail work rules dispute holds its first meeting. Shown, left to right, are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, and Pres. Stuart T. Saunders of the Norfolk & Western Railway. Other members are George M. Harrison, chief executive of the Railway Clerks, and Inland Steel Board Chairman Joseph L. Block. (Story Column 5.)

4.8 Million Jobless:

June Unemployment Registers 5.7% Rate

By Robert B. Cooney

The influx of teenagers into the labor force dominated the job picture in June, with the nation's jobless rate holding high at 5.7 percent, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The summary job report for June showed the number of unemployed rose by 800,000 over May to a total of 4.8 million, some 400,000 higher than a year ago.

"All of the rise over the month and over the year," said the Labor Dept. report, "was accounted for by teenage jobseekers who numbered 1.9 million in June."

The key seasonally adjusted jobless rate, at 5.7 percent in June, was the same as in April before the teenage influx began, the report noted. The June rate declined from May's 5.9 percent, when the late census survey week counted the summertime inflow of teenage jobseekers earlier than usual.

Above Year Ago

The teenage jobless rate dropped back to 16 percent between May and June, about equal to the April level but "well above" the 12.4 percent a year earlier the report added.

The June jobless rate of 5.7 percent compares to 5.5 percent of June 1962 and a postwar June low of 2.6 percent in 1953. It means 57 of every 1,000 persons in the workforce were actively seeking work and could not find it; for teenagers, their rate meant 160 of every 1,000 in the unsuccessful pursuit of jobs.

The seasonally adjusted jobless rates for adult men, at 4.4 percent, and for women, at 5.4 percent, were unchanged from May. The jobless rate for married men, the breadwinner workers, declined to 3.1 percent in June from May's 3.4 percent and was down significantly from the 3.6 percent of a year ago.

On the employment side, the

(Continued on Page 2)

Canada Jobless Dip Less than Normal

Ottawa, Ont.—Unemployment in Canada declined by 116,000 between mid-April and mid-May to 346,000, or 10,000 above May 1962, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

A year ago the drop in jobless during the month was 149,000, but there was no attempt to explain why the decline this year was less than normal. The rate of unemployment was 5.2 percent of the labor force compared with 5.1 percent last year and 7 percent in May 1961.

Weak Substitute Rejected:

House Labor Unit Clears FEP Bill

The House Labor Committee has approved an Equal Employment Opportunities bill—a key provision of Pres. Kennedy's civil rights program—and sent it to the House Rules Committee where it faces strong opposition from the GOP-Dixiecrat coalition.

The voice vote approval by the Labor Committee came after it reversed an earlier decision and strengthened the enforcement provisions of the bill. The vote on strengthening enforcement was 17-13, with 12 Republicans and one Democrat comprising the opposition.

The House committee action came as hearings and debate over Pres. Kennedy's civil rights program proceeded in Congress with the Senate Commerce Committee continuing hearings on the public accommodations proposal of the Administration's program.

The President in his Civil Rights Message called for equal employment opportunity legislation, but endorsed the bill approved by the Labor Committee rather than submit a new measure as part of his civil rights legislative program.

The committee, at the last session of Congress, approved a weaker fair employment practices measure but it died in the Rules Committee. The GOP-Dixiecrat coalition is expected to attempt to block action again.

The House Committee acted finally on a measure, introduced by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and approved by a subcommittee, to create a five-member commission with power to issue cease and desist orders in case of job discrimination. The equal employment opportunities measure would outlaw job discrimination based on race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry.

Two weeks ago the full committee began consideration of the measure and tentatively adopted a proposal by Rep. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.), co-author of the Landrum-Griffin Act, that would have placed primary enforcement through the federal district courts. The 17-to-13 vote reversed this action and the original subcommittee approach to

(Continued on Page 8)

Liaison Established With Congo Unions

New York—Nicolas Dankerlin, a district chairman for Building Service Employes' Local 32B here, has resigned his post to serve in the Congo as a liaison man between the American and Congolese labor movements, AFL-CIO Intl. Affairs Dir. Michael Ross announced.

Last year Dankerlin went to the Congo on an AFL-CIO assignment. Active in civic affairs for many years, Dankerlin has held office in Local 32B since 1935.

Meany Hits Proposed Aid Slashes

By John M. Barry

The AFL-CIO's opposition to drastic cuts in the U.S. foreign aid program was firmly restated by Federation Pres. George Meany in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In fact, Meany suggested, recent developments in Latin America indicate the need for greater U.S. assistance through the Alliance for Progress program in the coming year, rather than less.

"In the final analysis," the AFL-CIO president declared, "our measuring rod must be what contribution the foreign aid program can make to our national objectives."

His views were in sharp contrast with those of Gen. Lucius D. Clay, who appeared before the Foreign Relations unit earlier in the day as chairman of a presidential advisory group which had

(Continued on Page 7)

Report Due President By July 22

By David L. Perlman

At Pres. Kennedy's request, rail management and labor edged back from the brink of a nationwide railroad shutdown to permit one final tripartite fact-finding effort. The President said that after a report he would ask Congress for legislation "designed to dispose of the issues in this particular case."

Chief negotiators for both sides, called into the President's office in the latest of a series of White House moves to avert a strike, gave prompt assent to this Kennedy proposal:

- Six members of the President's Labor-Management Advisory Committee will "undertake immediately, in full consultation with the parties, a comprehensive review and report" of the facts, issues and the positions of the parties.
- The report will be sent to Congress on July 22, the President saying he would also transmit "appropriate legislative recommendations."
- There will be no change in the work rules and no strike before July 29 "to permit appropriate consideration" of the President's legislative proposals.
- The Administration will not make any further request for a postponement of action by either side.

Kennedy named to the six-member fact-finding group AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; George M. Harrison, chief executive of the Railway Clerks and an AFL-CIO vice president; Joseph Block,

(Continued on page 6)

Kennedy Picks Meany For Medal of Freedom

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is one of 31 world figures chosen by Pres. Kennedy to receive the Presidential Medal of Freedom for high achievement and contributions to the enrichment of American life.

The blue, white and gold medals, which may be awarded only by the President himself, will be presented at White House ceremonies in September.

Only 24 other persons have received the medal since it was first established in 1945 as an award for meritorious contributions to the nation during wartime. Last February, Kennedy broadened the scope of the award to provide recognition of persons "who contribute significantly to the quality of American life."

In announcing the names of the 31 recipients, the President said that their "varied and distinguished careers . . . amply demonstrate freedom's rich resource of men and women endowed with creative capacity and dedicated to the highest standards of humane achievement. It is such as they, and those who march with them, whose talent enlarges the public vision of the dignity with which life can be graced and the fullness with which it can be lived."

The commentary accompanying Meany's name on the list took note of his membership on the War Labor Board during World War II, his service as a delegate to the General Assembly of the United Nations, his postwar role in strengthening demo-

(Continued on Page 7)

PARASOLS AND SANDALS, this photo suggests, are standard equipment among the 800 members of seven Honolulu unions united in a strike against the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser. Both papers were closed by the walkout, called after five months of joint negotiations by the Newspaper Guild, Typographical Union, Pressmen, Photo Engravers, Machinists, and the unaffiliated Lithographers and Longshoremen, the last of which represents circulation employes.

'Substantial' Jobless Areas Drop:

Detroit Jobless Below 6% For First Time in Six Years

Five major job centers were removed from the list of those suffering substantial unemployment in June, the Labor Dept. has reported, with joblessness in Detroit falling below 6 percent for the first time in six years.

Thirty-nine of the nation's 150 major job areas were classified as having "substantial unemployment"—6 percent or more jobless—compared to 43 in May.

The June total was the lowest since 37 areas were so classified in July 1960, when the nation began moving into the last recession. The June aggregate of 39 compares to 51 areas of substantial unemployment a year ago.

In addition to Detroit, the four areas reclassified into the moderate unemployment or 3 to 5.9 percent category were Birmingham, Ala., Terre Haute, Ind., Steubenville-Weirton, Ohio-W. Va., and Youngstown-Warren, Ohio.

One new major area, New Britain, Conn., was placed on the substantial unemployment list as it suffered "a steady downturn in electrical equipment, machinery and fabricated metals," the report said.

The Labor Dept. also reclassified 10 other areas, all in the direction indicating lower unemployment.

Improvement in Pittsburgh

Three were in the substantial unemployment listing. Pittsburgh improved from the 9 to 12 percent grouping to the 6 to 8.9 percent classification as a job pickup was reported in the steel industry and also in fabricated metals and stone-clay-glass products.

Altoona and Johnstown, Pa., shifted from the 12 percent or more jobless grouping to the 9 to 12 percent grouping. Recalls in Altoona railroad car shops and job gains in the metals, machinery and railroad equipment industries in Johnstown were responsible.

The number of major areas with relatively low unemployment —1.5 to 2.9 percent jobless— rose sharply from 9 in May to 16 in June as workers found jobs in a variety of industries. The seven areas moving into this category were Wilmington, Del., Rochester, N. Y., Greensboro-High Point, N. C., Columbus and Dayton, O., and Norfolk-Portsmouth and Roanoke, Va.

The report noted a total of 111 of the 150 major areas are now classified as having low or moderate unemployment—below 6 percent—compared to 99 in June a year ago.

The Labor Dept. also reported the removal of six smaller areas from the substantial unemployment list, reducing this total to 174 in June from 179 in May. A new smaller area, Moses Lake, Wash., was added to this list in June because its local work force increased sufficiently for it to qualify. The six removed due to improved job conditions were Albertville and Gadsden, Ala., Danville, Ill., Thibodaux, La., Olean - Salamanca, N. Y. and Bristol-Kingsport, Tenn.

The total of 174 very small areas with 6 percent or more jobless compared to 198 in June a year ago and to 116 in June-July 1960, when reports were bimonthly.

The Labor Dept. said there are now 17 major areas, 102 smaller areas and 469 "very small areas" classified as experiencing "substantial and persistent unemployment." This special list applies a duration as well as level of unemployment test.

Areas on this list have been recommended to the Commerce Dept. for classification as "redevelopment areas" under the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961, the report said.

5.7% Jobless in June As Labor Force Rises

(Continued from Page 1)

milestone of 70 million was achieved for the first time, with jobholders totaling 70.3 million. But, the report noted, the 1.3 million increase over May was about in line with the usual May-June movement; on a seasonally-adjusted basis, total employment was no higher than in March.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz observed the milestone with the comment that it was reached exactly 15 years to the month after the nation hit the 60 million jobs total in June 1948. In other words, Wirtz said, the nation has created 10 million jobs in 15 years.

But, he warned, "the record is not good enough" when it is also recognized that unemployment is 1.5 million higher today than 15 years ago. And, he added, the labor force's rate of growth will be 50 percent greater in this decade than it was in the 1950s.

"Pres. Kennedy's two-pronged program to solve this problem must be carried forward," Wirtz declared, adding:

Legislation Called For

"Legislation must be enacted to spur economic growth in the United States and measures to conserve our human resources—through improved education, manpower planning, training and retraining and the elimination of racial discrimination —must be intensified.

"There is no question that our nation can solve its employment problems. All it takes is commitment and decision on the part of the American people."

The June report said that changes in total non-farm employment since March have been "only seasonal, following a sharp increase earlier in the year."

Non-farm employment in June was 64.4 million, a rise of 500,000 over the month and 1.1 million above a year ago. Farm employment showed its usual May-June rise of 800,000 to a total of 6.0 million but was down by 300,000 over the year in continuing its longterm decline.

Counted among the non-farm employed were some 2.6 million persons working part-time for economic reasons, up by a more-than-usual 500,000 over the month but about the same as a year ago.

The total labor force—which includes the armed services—reached 77.9 million in June, up by about 2 million over the month or a little less than seasonal. The labor force continued 1 million above a year earlier.

New Pact Scores Gains In Insurance

A 15-week strike of Monumental Life Insurance Co. agents in Missouri and Ohio has ended in a new agreement negotiated with the aid of George A. Rollins, new president of the Insurance Workers.

Rollins visited strike picket lines in St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., and Columbus, O., after his election at the IWIU convention May 23. Later he assisted Vice Pres. Robert L. Ponsi and agents representing the 250 strikers at negotiations in the Washington office of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Rollins said the settlement was "fair and honorable." It provides a $3 floor in Monumental's premium growth compensation plan, an improved hospitalization plan, and better wage benefits.

Union and management agreed that all strikers, including four who were suspended and two who were fired after the strike started Mar. 18, will be reinstated to their former posts.

The union has expressed thanks to all who aided the strikers. It announced also that Metropolitan Life agents in Detroit picked IWIU as their bargaining agent, 223-200, in a second election ordered because of management interference in the previous election; and that Home Life Insurance Co. agents in Delaware and Pennsylvania have voted to ratify a new five-year agreement offering improved retirement, vacation, and group insurance benefits, according to Rollins.

Court Backs Bargaining On 'Contracting Out'

By Eugene A. Kelly

The right of a union to bargain collectively with an employer about any proposed "contracting out" of work has been upheld in a U.S. Court of Appeals.

The District of Columbia appellate court ruled, in a 3-0 vote, that the National Labor Relations Board was correct in reversing rulings of board members who served during the Eisenhower Administration.

The case involved the Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. and Steelworkers' Local 1304, Emeryville, Calif. After 22 years of contract relations, management decided to abolish the jobs of 73 maintenance workers and let their work out to an independent contractor.

Four days before the end of the contract term, the firm handed the union copies of a letter saying:

"For some time we have been seriously considering the question of letting out our Emeryville maintenance work to an independent contractor, and have now reached a definite decision to do so effective Aug. 1, 1959.

"In these circumstances, we are sure you will realize that negotiation of a new contract would be pointless. However, if you have any questions, we will be glad to discuss them with you."

At another last-minute meeting management again refused to negotiate with the union, the judges wrote in their decision, and employes of a subcontractor replaced 73 company workers the next day.

Local 1304 filed charges of refusal to bargain. The NLRB regional director issued a complaint but the board, with Guy Leedom as chairman, dismissed it by a 4-1 vote on an examiner's recommendation. The board's general counsel and the union then asked reconsideration. The reconstituted board headed by Frank W. McCulloch reversed the decision, 3 to 2, ordered Fibreboard to cease and desist its refusal to bargain, and to reinstate the fired workers with lost pay.

Said the Court of Appeals in its decision granting enforcement of the board order:

"It has been so often pointed out that the obligation to bargain is not an obligation to agree. The basic concepts underlying the Labor Management Relations Act call for utilization of joint efforts at the bargaining table as a substitute for labor strife.

"The purpose of imposing legal duties upon employers to meet and bargain with the representatives of employes is to create a structure of industrial self-government . . . by guaranteeing employe participation in decisions relating to wages, hours, terms and conditions of employment," the judges wrote. Congress determined that this would create "an environment conducive to industrial harmony and eliminate costly industrial strife," they said.

In answer to the employer's claim that unilateral action was justified because of economic necessity, the court said it was not necessary to find an anti-union animus on the employer's part but only that the firm's action prevented the union from proposing some method for saving the jobs of the workers.

Westinghouse Contract Goals Listed by IBEW

A shorter workweek and other job-saving measures top the objectives of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in upcoming bargaining for more than 12,800 members at 61 plants of the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

"We are going to have to shorten our workweek from 40 hours to 35 and obtain other security measures if we are to successfully combat the ill effects of automation," said a spokesman for the national negotiating committee of the IBEW's Westinghouse Employes Council.

The committee met recently at the union's Washington headquarters to complete work on contract proposals. It is seeking early negotiations in an effort to achieve agreement before current contracts expire—in most cases Oct. 31.

The union announced that similar proposals will be made in 1963 talks with General Electric affecting IBEW members at 36 locations throughout the country.

Besides the 35-hour workweek, major objectives in the Westinghouse bargaining include a two-year contract with a midterm wage reopener, an adequate across-the-board wage increase with adjustment of area inequities, reestablishment of the cost-of-living formula, double time for Saturday work and triple time on Sunday, supplemental unemployment benefits, guaranteed annual sick leave and security plans.

Also, a full union shop where applicable and agency shop provisions elsewhere, relocation benefits in event of plant shutdown, retraining and cushioning against job downgrading in case of technological change, protections against contracting out or transfer of work from the bargaining unit, modification of the present layoff income benefit plan, and improvements in vacations, holidays, hospitalization insurance, pensions and severance pay.

The union also is urging the establishment of a joint IBEW-Westinghouse Council of Industrial Relations.

H. L. Lacayo to Head Aerospace Local

Los Angeles—Auto Workers Local 887, serving some 26,000 employes of North American Aviation's California plants, elected Henry L. Lacayo as president in the largest turnout in history.

Lacayo has been secretary of the local and editor of its weekly paper, the Propellor. As vice president the members chose Mrs. Vesta Calhoun, first Negro to hold a major office in the local.

Wages Up 20 Cents for 17,000:

CWA Hails New Pact At Michigan Bell

Detroit—A pattern-setting agreement between the Communications Workers and the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. has been hailed by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne as "the single most substantial collective bargaining victory" in the 25-year history of the union.

The new 38-month contract, which provides improvements valued at 20 cents an hour over its first 14 months, covers some 17,000 Michigan Bell employes. CWA talks with 14 other Bell System affiliates had been on a standby basis pending the agreement with the Michigan firm, which the union had designated as the pattern-setter for its 1963 round of bargaining.

'Floor' for Other Pacts

Beirne said the settlement would serve as a "floor" for negotiations with other Bell subsidiaries to renew contracts expiring this year and next.

Major improvements are:

- Wage increases averaging 13.-33 cents an hour during the first 14 months, with provision for reopenings on wages at the end of that period and again 12 months later.
- Additional increases ranging from $3 to $5 a week for CWA members in 13 communities reclassified into higher wage zones, and up to $2.50 a week for those in the lowest-rated wage area, which was moved up half way to the next classification.
- Higher pension benefits, achieved by cutting deductions from company payments from the present 50 percent of social security benefits to 33.3 percent. An optional pension for survivors also is introduced into the plan, and employes henceforth may retire at age 65 with as few as 15 years of service.
- Reduction in employe payments for group life insurance to 40 cents per $1,000 of coverage, down from 50 cents.
- Payment by the company of 25 percent of the cost of basic medical insurance now and an additional 25 percent in 1965 at the time of the second reopening on wages.
- An increase in the maximum coverage under the company-paid "major medical" insurance plan to $20,000 for employes and $5,000 for retirees, up from $15,000 and $2,500.
- Death benefits equal to a year's working wages for the surviving families of all retirees.
- A third week of vacation after 10 years of service instead of the present 15, effective next Jan. 1.

Benefits of $7 Million

Beirne said that in Michigan alone the agreement "will pour upwards of $7 million in buying power, health care and retirement security" into the hands of employes and pensioners. He described the settlement as the product of "collective bargaining at its best."

"We won these gains by patient and painstaking negotiations," he said. "We approached our collective bargaining responsibilities without boasting or threats about the use of our strike weapon."

The Michigan Bell contract takes effect July 14, provided CWA members vote ratification and local issues are worked out. It replaces a three-year pact that expired last June 11, but which was extended on a day-to-day basis. The parties had been negotiating for a renewal since Apr. 22 except for a three-week break at the time of the CWA convention.

MEMBERS OF NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE of Local 1199, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, including veterans of the 46-day strike for union recognition in 1959, look on as Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York concludes its first agreement with the union. Seated, signing the contract, are Local 1199 Vice Pres. Bill Taylor, left, and Norman Metzger, hospital personnel director.

NLRB Files Contempt Action Against Kohler

The U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D. C., has been asked by the National Labor Relations Board to order the Kohler Co. to reinstate 44 employes the firm has refused to rehire since the end of a six-year strike of the Auto Workers.

The board filed a civil contempt proceeding accusing the Sheboygan, Wis., plumbing ware maker of failing to comply with a 1962 court decree enforcing an NLRB order that Kohler reinstate employes who had been on strike between 1954 and 1960.

UAW sources consider the action a test case which would, if the board's position is upheld, result in the reinstatement of some 800 workers with back pay totaling more than $3 million.

Back Pay Asked

In its petition, the board asked for reinstatement of the 44 and payment of lost wages. The affected group includes several categories of former Kohler workers—strikers who retired during the long dispute; strikers who were obliged to obtain a release from Kohler before getting jobs elsewhere; strikers who were, the NLRB said, offered only 32 hours a week while strikebreakers were continued at full time; and those who had declined to return to work until Kohler agreed to recognize the UAW and bargain with it.

The labor board has as yet taken no action involving 77 strike leaders the firm has refused to take back. None of the 77 is involved in the latest court action.

Management and the union reached agreement on a new contract last year after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review labor board and circuit court decisions holding Kohler guilty of unfair labor practices and ordering reinstatement with back pay for many of the strikers.

Four years of hearings had preceded the NLRB findings on Sept. 1, 1960 on charges and countercharges involving a strike that started in April 1954.

The board ruled that the strike had been converted from an economic strike to an unfair practice strike in June 1954 when the firm granted a wage increase to strikebreakers that was superior to the "take-it-or-leave-it" offer it had made to the union.

The NLRB held that all strikers were entitled to reinstatement except 77 it believed to have engaged in "misconduct." The D.C. Court of Appeals upheld the basic NLRB decision but ordered the board to reconsider its findings on the 77 in the light of previous management provocations.

Management's comment on the civil contempt proceding was that it will "vigorously oppose" the petition. One of the issues, Vice Pres. Lyman C. Conger was quoted as saying, is whether the labor board "has the power to prescribe a regular workweek of 40 hours or more."

Screen Extras Contest Heard By Arbitrator

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Extras Guild has begun an arbitration hearing before Nathan Cayton, retired chief judge of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, to resolve a number of disputes which arose in the union's annual election.

Judge Cayton was selected as impartial referee in the dispute from a list of five persons suggested by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

In the SEG election, the incumbent administration headed by Pres. Jeffrey Sayre retained control of the union's governing body, but an independent slate headed by Tony Regan led the balloting for five out of the six offices, including the presidency.

The Sayre slate has charged that the Regan group distributed misleading handbills and accepted financial support from non-members despite prohibitions in SEG bylaws. Another charge involves 89 ballots the Sayre group says were mislaid by the accounting firm retained to tabulate the vote. These ballots have not yet been counted and, it is asserted, could change some apparent election results.

The Regan group has charged that the official notice of the election was faulty and that the votes of branches in San Francisco and Hawaii should not be counted.

Arbitrations Uphold Loggers in Ontario

Toronto—The cause of a Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union in last winter's tragedy-marred loggers' strike in northern Ontario has been vindicated by decisions of two arbitration boards.

The death of three striking loggers, killed under gunfire, led to government intervention and settlement of the strike under an agreement to arbitrate all issues in dispute.

The arbitration decisions affect 500 loggers at Kimberly-Clark Canada Ltd. at Long Lac and 900 men at Spruce Falls Power & Paper Co. at Kapuskasing.

The arbitration board at Kimberly-Clark upheld the union's position that a wage-increase pattern set in the industry was applicable to all mills.

Kimberly-Clark had refused to grant wage increases and other improvements won by the union at Abitibi Power & Paper Co. on the claim that as a pulp operation its problems were different from those of a newsprint mill.

7-Day Operation Limited

At Kapuskasing, where Spruce Falls insisted on a seven-day operation including Sunday in the work schedule, the arbitration board limited the seven-day operating period to eight weeks during the winter haul. It also placed so many restrictions on the company, including premium and penalty pay, that it is regarded as doubtful the firm will introduce the seven-day operation even for the limited period.

As a result of the clash in which the three strikers were killed, 20 "homesteading" woodcutters, who compete on a part-time basis with the full-time logging employes, are being held for trial on charges of non-capital murder.

The Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union has paid $27,600 in fines for 130 strikers who were convicted on charges of unlawful assembly arising out of the incident. The union is a division of the Carpenters.

An investigation into all aspects of the strike is being undertaken by Ontario Labor Minister Leslie Rowntree, with hearings set for July 30-31.

The arbitration decision at Kimberly-Clark includes wage increases of 6 cents an hour dating back to Sept. 1, 1962, and the introduction of a 40-hour week effective Sept. 1, 1963.

In permitting a limited seven-day operation at Spruce Falls, the arbitration board chairman, Judge C. E. Bennett, noted that there were peculiar circumstances at Spruce Falls that led the board to permit a deviation from the general pattern. The company had argued that because of the muskeg conditions—the heavy swamps—all its hauling had to be done during the frozen winter season.

Tulio Mior, president of Local 2693 at Port Arthur, said the arbitration board award at Kimberly-Clark represented a major vindication of the union's position by upholding the policy and practice since 1946 under which the "pattern" settlement in the industry is applied to all companies.

AFL-CIO Suit Blocks Indiana Sales Tax

Indianapolis—An Indiana circuit court has upheld a suit by the State AFL-CIO that a discriminatory sales tax enacted by the legislature violates the state constitution.

The tax, which had been scheduled to go into effect July 1, was attacked in a suit brought by Indiana AFL-CIO Pres. Dallas Sells and the state federation's Committee on Political Education.

It would have applied a 2 percent retail sales tax—with sales of farm equipment and commodities used by farmers exempt—and would have given the governor discretion to set the minimum price subject to taxation anywhere from 15 to 75 cents.

The ruling by Marion County Circuit Court Judge John Niblack, which is being appealed by Gov. Matthew Welsh (D) to the Indiana Supreme Court, held that the sales tax:

- Unconstitutionally delegated legislative authority to the executive branch by making it the responsibility of the governor to set the amount at which the tax starts and permits him to issue exemption certificates which "would establish government by fiat and favoritism."
- Violated the state constitution's requirement that laws enacted be written in plain and simple language. The judge said that despite studies in law, three sessions in the state senate and 22 years on the bench, he found himself "unable to fathom the meaning of the act."

Noting that the sales tax was adopted "in the dying moments" of a special session of the legislature, the judge commented:

"Conceived in confusion and drawn in desperation and haste, it is no wonder it went awry."

In a unique byproduct to the dispute, State Atty. Gen. Edwin K. Steers declared that he could not "in conscience" defend the constitutionality of the tax, and outside counsel was retained by the governor to defend the validity of the tax law.

Building Service Union Moves to Washington

The Building Service Employes have moved their union headquarters from New York and Chicago to the new Farragut Bldg., 900 17th St. N.W., Washington 6, D. C. The telephone number is 296-5940.

The new BSEIU headquarters include the offices of Pres. David Sullivan, Sec.-Treas. George E. Fairchild, and these departments: accounting and general office, organizing, public employes, research and education. A decision will be made soon on retaining branch offices in New York City and Chicago, the union said.

Cold Facts

NO BETTER CASE can be found for the Anderson-King bill—Pres. Kennedy's plan to provide hospital insurance for the aged under the social security system—than the cold, hard statistics outlined in the recent report of the President's Council on the Aging.

The report presented this health and medical care profile of the nearly 18 million Americans 65 or older:

- More than 12 million of them have at least one chronic ailment, such as high blood pressure, arthritis, diabetes, heart disease or mental disorder.
- More than half of those with a chronic ailment have some limitation on their activities.
- About 1.25 million elderly people are invalids who, though not in institutions, cannot get along without help from others.
- The average older person is twice as likely to have a home accident as the average adult, and three times as likely to have a fatal accident.
- The average older person is incapacitated five weeks of the year by illness or injury and spends two of these weeks in bed.
- One out of every six older persons will be hospitalized during the year for an average stay of two weeks—twice as long as for the average younger person.
- For this one in six, the hospital bill will be twice as large as for the average younger person. Not including doctors' bills and other expenses, it will average $525.

The nation's elderly need a system of basic hospitalization insurance that would require no premium payments from their meager retirement incomes, but would finance the cost through prepayment during their working years. This system would be provided in the Anderson-King bill, utilizing the mechanism of social security.

Magic Without the Glow

IN THE 15 YEARS between June 1948 and June 1963 the nation created 10 million jobs, moving from the once scoffed-at 60 million job figure to the magical number of 70 million.

During the same period unemployment increased by 1.5 million.

As the Washington Post noted in an editorial on the latest government report, "were it not for the fact that 5.7 percent of the labor force is unemployed, this accomplishment [70 million jobs] would be a source of unalloyed satisfaction."

The parallel rise in employment and unemployment—a pattern that has dominated the job situation for the past few years—is reflected particularly in the figures for the 12-month period June 1962 to June 1963.

During those 12 months 1.2 million workers entered the labor force, but the total number of jobs increased by only 800,000.

The gross national product—the total value of all goods and services—has been on the increase during the year and economists expect it to approach closely or break the $600 billion figure by year's end.

This continuing rise in the GNP, in production and productivity, has not, however, been translated into more jobs.

In these circumstances there is an overriding necessity for action—first and foremost on a $10 billion tax reduction measure concentrated among low and middle-income taxpayers.

Seventy million employed Americans is a wonderful situation. It is something less than wonderful when 4.8 million other Americans willing and able to work cannot find jobs.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, July 13, 1963 No. 28

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

To Meet Modern Conditions:

British Trades Union Congress Moves to Encourage Mergers

The following article has been prepared by the editorial staff of Labor, the magazine of the British Trades Union Congress.

THE 180 UNIONS affiliated to the Trades Union Congress—from the Transport & General Workers with some 1.3 million members to the London Jewish Bakers with 48—have been asked to let the TUC have any comments and suggestions that will help it in an inquiry now being made into the possibility of reorganizing Britain's trade union structure to make it better fitted to meet modern industrial conditions.

The TUC general council, which is conducting the inquiry, knows that it cannot impose any new pattern of organization upon trade unions—or enforce amalgamation, even where there is a clear identity of interest between any two unions.

In the past most amalgamations have been achieved after a long process of negotiation initiated by unions themselves with the TUC benevolently watching and waiting for its assistance to be called upon in the later stages. The likelihood now is that the TUC will take the initiative.

THESE MOVES are the first public outcome of decisions taken last September at the annual conference of the TUC when resolutions were carried calling for reports by the general council on the modernizing of trade union structure, on ways in which fringe benefits could be extended and on what changes might be required in union policy and negotiating machinery to achieve greater economic progress.

The difficulties of the reformers are rooted in the complexity of the form that British trade unionism has taken during two centuries of growth and the multiplicity and variety of present-day unions. Almost everybody agrees that if they were being planned on fresh ground the unions would be constructed to a different pattern.

ORIGINALLY all the unions were craft-based: their members were the aristocrats of labor, with a high degree of skill acquired in a lengthy apprenticeship and developed by experience. When mergers took place they were between unions of kindred craftsmen. Some exclusively craft unions still exist, but others (for instance, the 1 million strong Amalgamated Engineering Union) have modified their qualifications for membership so as to admit the semi-skilled and the women workers.

Industrial unions, which ignore dividing lines between crafts and aim to enroll all workers of all categories in any one industry, are a later development. No union has fully succeeded in achieving this aim.

A major role is played by the two general unions which began among the so-called unskilled workers in the late 19th century. The Transport & General Workers' Union was originally a dockers' organization, but under the leadership of Ernest Bevin (who was to become minister of labor in the wartime coalition and foreign secretary in the first postwar government) fused in 1922 with more than a dozen unions of busmen, lorry drivers and others; and its enormous membership includes today technicians, supervisors, clerks, factory workers and many other grades in some 50 industries.

An almost equally broad territory is covered by the National Union of General & Municipal Workers, whose membership has spread outward from the gas industry and the public authorities' services. Together, these two unions account for a quarter of the total TUC affiliated membership.

Then, into the picture in the past 50 years have come the "white-collar" workers' unions (particularly strong in the public service, both national and local, and in the publicly-owned industries). Some of them, like the journalists, could be classified as craft unions: others, like the bank employes and the post office workers, have the characteristics of industrial unions.

MUCH OF THE OVERLAPPING and, indeed, conflict which this complicated pattern produces has been reduced by the operation of federations of unions for such industries as printing, building and engineering, by the continuing process of amalgamation and by the work of the TUC in resolving inter-union disputes. These developments are evidence that unions are not averse to change, but it has to be conceded that so far the changes have been piecemeal and unplanned.

What can be expected from now on is that the TUC itself will seek to identify the needs as they emerge in discussions with groups of unions and to prompt the changes that seem to be worthwhile.

One move by the government would help. Union mergers are governed by laws dating back to 1917 and 1876, when unions were much smaller than they are now. Before two unions can amalgamate each must record—in a ballot—a two-thirds majority in favour. These requirements, the TUC general council thinks, are too restrictive. They have suggested to the minister of labor that a simple majority of those who vote is sufficient.

Morgan Says:

Goals of U.S. in Europe Confused By Plans, Systems, Techniques

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

TAXPAYERS MUST BE pardoned if they can't figure out what the U. S. government is trying to do in Europe. Confusion and cross purposes, too, are not non-existent on high levels of the Administration and it is no wonder then that the bewilderment seeps down.

There have been so many plans and systems and techniques bandied about that even an IBM machine, let alone the human mind, boggles at the task of sorting them out.

Morgan

Still, there are some basic points of departure which, if we start with them, may help us pick our way through the labyrinth. First comes the defense of the West, the foundation platform of which is the 15-nation force of NATO. Then comes the problem, common through history, of keeping such an alliance alive in peacetime. Enormously complicating this factor is the inevitable fact that the United States, as the leader of the alliance because of its perfectly awesome military power and resources, is the target of suspicion and jealousy. As if all this weren't tangled enough, there is the vital and nagging question of whose finger is on the nuclear trigger.

To us Americans this seems quite simple. "Don't worry," we tell our worried friends, "it has to be our finger on the trigger because we are furnishing the weapons." But our allies fidget and wonder, as we would if the situation were reversed. "How do we know," they say, "that you will pull the trigger to defend us if it means destroying American cities? How do we know you won't pull the trigger merely to defend yourselves and get us destroyed in the exchange?"

This is where Gen. de Gaulle has fished in the turgid waters of doubt. "We indeed cannot be sure of these things," he says imperiously from the small pinnacle of French grandeur he has rebuilt. "America is not of Europe but France is and so France with her separate nuclear 'force de frappe' will be the keystone of western Europe's defense." As Germans and others are quick to point out, the French president does not bother to explain, while he says the Americans can't be trusted not to act in their own interests, how his allies can trust his word.

WE HAVE TRIED to cut this gordian knot of apprehension and doubt by inventing the device known as MLF, the multilateral force. Roughly the idea is to put Polaris missiles on converted merchant vessels manned with crews of as many allied nations as want to "buy into" the project. This concept emerged originally as an effort to give the Germans a sense of participation in nuclear defense of the West without giving them nuclear weapons separately.

But the emphasis has changed. It is clear that the Adenauer government does not want Germany to have nuclear weapons but neither this regime nor the Erhard administration that is to succeed it is pleased to be told by anybody that the "Germans can't have nuclear weapons." So the main thrust of the MLF idea now is not aimed at this ambivalent German problem but to operate as a device which the NATO allies can use as a meaningful exercise in achieving closer and broader integration of cooperation throughout the alliance.

That brings us up to date. The Germans like this idea though they argue that all NATO allies now must be brought in on the planning and disposition of NATO nuclear defenses. If this is done, one German spokesman told me, the complications of how the mixed MLF force is constituted, the basic but future operational issue of whose finger is on the nuclear trigger, these things will be regarded for what they really are—technicalities, the handling and solution of which will fall into line as the alliance moves back into closer unity and concert.

The trouble is that MLF will cost something—we won't pay the freight alone—and furthermore the British are in such a sorry tizzy over the Profumo scandal that they can't put their minds on their work. There are other reasons too why they are cool if not cold to the MLF idea. This has restrained our hand because it would not be wise for us and the Germans to go it alone. So, while de Gaulle continues to work on his independent "force de frappe," we are trying to figure out a new approach that will surround him with functioning unity and bring France back into the NATO fold.

This approach may well be an economic one—a closer coordination of the monetary systems, trade and more sharing of defense costs within the alliance. Meanwhile, we don't want to give up the MLF idea entirely because there is some hope that we may be able to use it as a bargaining point with the Russians in the next go-around on a test ban treaty.

Washington Reports:

Humphrey, Case Predict Action By Congress on Hospital Care

HOSPITAL CARE for the aged will be acted upon by this Congress, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program carried on almost 700 radio stations.

"The idea has by no means been given up," declared Humphrey. "We have just had other things to do, such as the recent development on civil rights, which has the highest priority. In the House, the Ways & Means Committee has been involved in working out tax legislation. Health care for the aged under social security has been delayed, but it will be acted upon."

"I hope very much that we will get action in the House this year," said Case. "We are going to have a long session. The House will be sitting on its hands, I'm afraid, while we in the Senate have to endure a filibuster on civil rights."

The New Jersey senator declared that everyone agrees "that costs [of hospital care especially] have risen so sharply that we have to do something about it for our older citizens." He asserted that not only can the savings of some retired persons be wiped out by catastrophic illness, "but this means, in many cases, that people don't dare go into the hospital when they should."

"It seems to me," said Humphrey, "that our senior citizens are entitled, in this day and age, to a program of insurance [as health care under social security] which will provide them with modern, up-to-date hospital and nursing home and visiting nurses' care.

"This is the American way, the prudent way. It doesn't depend upon somebody's kind heart, somebody's sense of goodness. It depends upon a one-fourth of 1 percent payroll tax for the employer and the employe."

CASE ADDED that it is "the dignified way," not a system such as provided by the Kerr-Mills legislation, which depends upon a person's being "medically indigent."

"I am not against the benefits that Kerr-Mills provides for charity patients," he added. "I am sorry some states have been so slow taking advantage of it. But it doesn't do the job that medicare should do."

Humphrey said that although the legislation is not being considered by a House or Senate committee at this time, people "ought to be knocking on the door of every congressman and senator. Not only the old people but the young, too, for this is a program for America, a program of fair and needed treatment for our citizens."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

DEAN RUSK, the Secretary of State, made a most remarkable appearance before the Senate Commerce Committee to testify in support of the Administration's public accommodations bill. There is a direct impact upon the effectiveness of our foreign policy, he told the senators, when a diplomat or other visitor from an Asian or African country is denied service in a restaurant, is denied a room in a hotel, although the restaurant and hotel hold themselves available as catering to the public.

Soviet propagandists seek to "enhance their influence among the non-white peoples and to alienate them from us," he said, and they "clearly regard racial discrimination in the United States as one of their most valuable assets."

Rusk is a soft-spoken, temperate man, given to understatement and logical presentation rather than appeals to emotion. But he was stirred when Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina began an interrogation implying that by "testifying in this nature" the Secretary was "lending at least tacit support to and approval of this Communist line."

"Why of course not, Senator," said Rusk. "I am here as Secretary of State of the United States to advise the committee of my views as to the relationship between these [civil rights] problems here at home and our foreign policy."

* * *

THURMOND IS A DEMOCRAT and a former governor of South Carolina. Rusk is a Democrat and a Georgian whose speech has never lost the slight attractive slur of his southern boyhood. And he spoke gently of a common experience many have shared, he indicated—the experience of "early association with children of another race, in terms of friendship and cordiality," which later became a "more isolated situation on both sides." Tensions then develop, but "later many of us have had the experience of again finding . . . colleagues of members of another race."

"And these tensions therefore dissolve under the common interests and the common associations that come through engaging in the same sort of work," the Secretary remarked.

If it is clear that there is a great national policy to establish and that irrelevant matters "should not stand in the way of a citizen's exercise of his rights," he continued, still with gentleness, "it will be discovered that nothing particularly happens when people, all citizens, enjoy similar rights and privileges."

Thurmond persisted. What did the Secretary think about the "demonstrations" that have been held—the sit-ins, picketing, marches? Did Rusk "favor" them?

At this moment Rusk was on a delicate political ground. Sen. Russell of Georgia has accused the Administration of stirring up civil disobedience—despite the fact that both the President and Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy have plainly urged a pause in demonstrations and the President said his hope in civil rights legislation was to get the issues off the streets and into the appropriate legislative and judicial forums.

But he met the issue boldly.

"Well, Senator, there are various types of demonstrations," he said. "I would not wish to make a blanket statement about all those I have known about.

"But I would say this, sir: If I were denied what our Negro citizens are denied, I would demonstrate."

* * *

SEN. PASTORE of Rhode Island interjected a question of his own, addressed to Thurmond.

"Do you believe in the Boston Tea Party?"

Rusk answered: "That had a very wholesome effect on the situation."

Rusk ended on a renewed note of persuasion to Thurmond:

"I am not pessimistic, Senator, about changes in individual attitudes on questions of this sort."

The Declaration of Independence said, he had pointed out, "All men are created equal and are endowed with certain unalienable rights," not "all men except those who are not white."

"I would think that one of the things that can change personal opinions would be an affirmation of the great primordial doctrine of our constitutional system."

HOSPITAL CARE INSURANCE for the aged is needed this year, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), left, and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) declared in interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

FREEDOM TO ACT without government restraints was urged by Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen in his keynote speech at the brotherhood's 38th convention in Chicago. Shown with him, seated, is Sec.-Treas. R. R. Bryant.

Automation Changes Seen Facing Press

Philadelphia—"Social innovation to match the technological innovation" taking place in American industry was called for by John Diebold, noted authority on automation, in an address at the Newspaper Guild's 30th annual convention here.

Diebold declared that the advent of machines that are taking over an increasing number of human functions poses "a very serious human problem."

"Your whole industry is going to change in a few years," he told 200 delegates at an automation forum held in conjunction with the ANG convention.

Diebold, a newspaper consultant who is credited with coining the term "automation" and developing several of its uses, envisioned the early development of such processes as the transmission of newspapers via home television sets adapted to receive pages sent electronically and print them out of the receiver.

Metropolitan newspapers, he said, will soon be able to transmit pages to suburban plants in a similar fashion, enabling them to print in several localities simultaneously. And electrostatic printing, he declared, will enable newspapers to make changes in pages while an edition is being printed by altering the electronic image from which the print is taken.

Computers that can scan and correct copy may well replace copy editors, Diebold told the newspapermen. He said publishers should look to such developments "not as a way of cutting costs" but as a means of doing "quite new things." "Brand new tools" can forge new roles for journalism, he asserted, urging publishers to apply them imaginatively.

Methods by which other unions have cushioned the impact of automation on jobs were discussed by Irving Beller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research following Diebold's talk. Representatives of several Guild locals reviewed the ways in which they have met the growing problem.

Strike Financing Aired

Strike financing and the issues of biennial conventions shared the spotlight with automation as the parley opened. The Guild's executive board has urged the convention to support a "study in depth" of the automation problem.

The board has also recommended an increase in the schedule of international assessments to meet future strike emergencies and has urged that a special committee be named to study possible revision of strike benefit policies. The proposal would increase the ceiling on assessments from $3 to $6 a month.

At a preconvention meeting, the board voted to seek convention authorization of another committee to study a proposed change from annual to biennial conventions. The resolution was presented by executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson and Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., but was opposed by Pres. Arthur Rosenstock. It was adopted by an 8-7 vote of the board and was expected to meet opposition on the convention floor.

Opposed by President

Rosenstock criticized the biennial convention proposal in his opening address and also opposed any increase in the Guild's assessments schedule. He said the increase would come too soon after the hardships suffered by members in last winter's prolonged New York and Cleveland newspaper strikes.

Both Farson and Perlik urged the convention to approve the increased assessment schedule as a measure to strengthen the union's defense fund in future strikes.

Farson was critical of proposals for voluntary arbitration that have been advanced as a "new approach" to newspaper collective bargaining.

"How can you have free collective bargaining without an occasional strike?" he asked. "And how can you have a free democratic society without free collective bargaining?"

Farson said the Guild is willing to meet with representatives of the publishers and other news industry unions to seek "fruitful and meaningful ways of solving some of our collective bargaining problems." But he emphasized that "we do not believe arbitration—compulsory or otherwise—is an adequate substitute for bargaining."

IUE Local Wins $200 Minimum

Buffalo, N.Y.—A Buffalo firm, the Edwards Optical Co., has agreed to a $200 weekly minimum for optometrists in a contract with Optical Workers Local 408, a unit of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. It is the second such contract here.

The new minimum will be reached at the end of the two-year agreement by means of periodic wage raises from the present $175 minimum. Pay hikes in other job classifications range from $12 for receptionists and clerks to $15 for shopmen and licensed dispensers.

A new pension and severance pay plan was negotiated with other gains that included three more holidays —Yom Kippur, Good Friday, and half-days on Christmas Eve and Electon Day.

Constitution Revised:

Rail Firemen Return Gilbert, Back Stand in Rules Crisis

By Gervase N. Love

St. Louis—The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, meeting in their 38th convention here, revised the union's constitution to eliminate membership restrictions and meet the requirements of affiliation with the AFL-CIO.

In place of a clause limiting membership in the brotherhood to whites, the convention voted to substitute a requirement that applicants "be of good character, sober and industrious, not less than 16 years of age, and be able to read and write the English language and understand our constitution."

The action followed an appeal from BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert to remove the restrictive clause, as recommended by the constitution committee and the general policy committee, and "preserve the dignity of the brotherhood in its association with other units of the American labor movement."

Meeting at a time of bargaining crisis, the more than 900 delegates to the convention reelected Gilbert by acclamation in a display of support for leadership action in the long work rules dispute with the railroads.

Renamed with him was A. M. Lampley, vice president and national legislative representative, who is the voice in Washington of the 78,000 members.

Election of the two took place on the opening day of the convention and was timed to permit Gilbert's departure for Washington at Pres. Kennedy's call. The early action was a sharp break with traditional practices in election timing.

The delegation acted a few hours after the BLF&E leader, in a keynote speech frequently interrupted by applause and climaxing in a standing ovation, called on the federal government to "turn us loose and the work rules dispute could be settled in less than 24 hours."

Gilbert made clear his belief that if the members of the five unions locked in the stalemate with the railroads were left free to strike, management could no longer resort to its "smug assumption" that the walkout would not be permitted and the rails then could be forced to negotiate a settlement.

"Once the railroads know that their employes do indeed have the power and right to exercise 'self-help' [which the Supreme Court upheld in its decision of Mar. 4], we can expect to find an attitude of eagerness at the bargaining table. Turn us loose, and a four-year dispute might be settled in four hours."

Reviews Dispute

Much of Gilbert's address was devoted to a review of the work rules dispute, which dates back to 1959. He outlined the principles on which he said a settlement was possible and brought the delegates to their feet with cheers and applause when he emphasized that "work customarily done by helpers (firemen) on diesel locomotives will be done by helpers (firemen) taken from the seniority ranks of helpers (firemen)."

He asked the delegates for speedy action on his program and got it almost immediately on one point and part of another.

The convention unanimously adopted his proposal that overtures be made to unite the BLF&E with the Locomotive Engineers by adopting a resolution empowering the general policy committee to "undertake and finalize" such an "arrangement."

The resolution also was made applicable to the other three train service organizations—Conductors & Brakemen, Trainmen and Switchmen—"if it is deemed a prudent thing to do."

The Locomotive Engineers rejected unification at their convention last year but left the door open to renewed overtures.

The partial acceptance came in the election. In his request to the convention, Gilbert had asked that it accept a constitution committee recommendation cutting the number of vice presidents from 14 to 10 and increasing the alternate vice presidents from 5 to 12, to permit greater flexibility of operation, and to hold all elections quickly so as to comply with Landrum-Griffin Act requirements.

He also proposed discontinuance of the monthly slick-paper Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen's Magazine, publication of which dates back to 1876, and expansion of the Enginemen's Press, four-page tabloid published every two weeks since its authorization by the last convention. Gilbert also proposed to make greater use of the available service of the railroad brotherhood's weekly newspaper, Labor.

Another proposal in Gilbert's program to modernize the brotherhood was a second constitutional revision which would permit no more than three "geographically oriented" local lodges with less than 300 members each to consolidate for the purpose of sending one delegate to each convention.

Rail Showdown Put Off, Fact-Finders Appointed

(Continued from Page 1)

chairman of Inland Steel Corp.; Stuart T. Saunders, president of the Norfolk & Western Railway; Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz; and Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges.

Wirtz and Hodges will be chairman and vice chairman, respectively, the same positions they currently hold on the parent Labor-Management Advisory Committee.

As the fact-finding panel began its assignment, Wirtz told newsmen that the committee's function is to investigate the dispute, not to mediate it. But he and Meany pointed out that this does not bar committee members from mediating on their own if the opportunity develops. Both declared that an agreement between the unions and management would be the best solution to the dispute.

Spokesmen for the five operating unions—the Trainmen, Firemen & Enginemen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen—said they agreed to the fact-finding procedure with the understanding that union counter-proposals for improvements and modernization in working conditions will be considered as well as the railroads' demands for rules changes which the unions have contended would eliminate necessary jobs and impair the safety of train crews.

Earlier the unions had turned down proposals by Wirtz and Kennedy involving binding arbitration of the dispute.

On July 9, less than two days before the management-written work rules were scheduled to be put into effect, Kennedy suggested that Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg arbitrate the dispute.

Management agreed, but the unions the next morning reported to the President that they could not consent "to a procedure which we believe could pave the avenue to future compulsory arbitration by custom or practice."

They emphasized to the President that they had "deep respect for the integrity and ability" of Goldberg, but added:

"We hope that you can suggest some other method than the one procedure we cannot accept as a matter of deepest principle."

That was at 10 a. m. on July 10, 14 hours before the strike deadline.

The President asked both parties to stand by for a later call to the White House. He then moved swiftly into conferences with key aides and congressional leaders. At 4 p. m., union and management negotiators were called into Kennedy's office. Fifteen minutes later, the President went before television cameras to announce the agreement and to assure the nation "there will be no strike this evening."

Five days before the original July 11 deadline, the rail unions had made a formal offer—scantly reported by the press and never acknowledged by the railroads—that would have greatly limited the scope of a shutdown.

The unions offered to furnish crews to operate passenger and commuter trains and to donate the wages received to charity. They suggested that the railroads also donate ticket revenues to charity, but did not make it a condition for the union action. The thorniest of the rules disputes involves freight service, since the railroads have conceded the need for firemen-helpers on passenger trains.

In addition, the unions agreed "to move any train which the President certifies is necessary to transport troops, military supplies and equipment, or food for the public welfare to prevent public distress."

Unions Are Hopeful

At a news conference following the White House agreement, leaders of the operating unions emphasized that it is the railroads which are the "moving party" in the dispute by insisting on making unilateral changes in "rules which have been in existence for 50 years."

Pres. Charles Luna of the Trainmen said the five unions involved were "glad we could accept the President's proposal and hope it will be helpful in settling the dispute."

He emphasized the unions' contention that, during the more than four years since the railroads launched a massive propaganda offensive accusing their employes of "featherbedding," there has never been any meaningful collective bargaining by management.

Referring to the fact-finding procedure, Luna said the unions anticipated they have a forum that will listen to "our side of the story" and "we will have our day in court."

Lautman Elected To ACWA Board

New York—Harry Lautman, manager of the Clothing Workers' Montreal Joint Board, has been elected to the ACWA general executive board to fill a vacancy created by the death of Abraham Miller. Lautman, 51, worked in the clothing industry in New York and for the union in Philadelphia

Grave Abuses Seen:

'Pirating' Ban Urged On Industrial Bonds

An intergovernmental advisory group has called for a ban on the use of industrial development bonds to "pirate" industries away from other communities and recommended strict safeguards to curb other abuses.

Unless the states do a better job of regulating these bonds, the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations warned, Congress may have "to stop the abuse by federal legislation."

Hundreds of cities and counties, many in the South, have issued tax-exempt bonds to finance new plants for lease at low cost to companies which move into the area—including firms which are "running away" from union organization or higher tax rates elsewhere. The bonds are often coupled with other "inducements," including low wage rates.

The 26-member commission, which includes federal, state and local officials, legislators, members of Congress and public representatives, also went on record in opposition to three so-called "states rights" proposed amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

State legislatures were urged by the commission to reject proposals:

- To remove from federal court jurisdiction any cases involving apportionment of state legislatures.
- To establish a "Court of the Union" which could overrule the U.S. Supreme Court on matters dealing with federal-state relations.
- To enable states to amend the federal constitution without any consideration of the proposed amendment by Congress or a constitutional convention.

The industrial bond report termed "particularly offensive" the use of development bonds to finance plants for fiscally strong national firms which "have access to adequate financing through conventional channels."

The "abuse," the commission said, "is especially glaring when the firm itself acquires the tax exempt bonds issued to finance the plant it occupies, thus becoming also the beneficiary of tax exempt income."

To end this "special abuse of federal tax exemption," the commission urged Congress to amend tax laws so that firms which buy the tax exempt bonds cannot deduct as a business cost the rents paid for the use of industrial plants built with these bonds."

Thirty-four states have industrial development bond programs and local governments have issued some $500 million of industrial bonds, the commission noted. The report termed it "absolutely essential" for safeguards to be set up "to insure that government resources used for these purposes bear a reasonable relationship to the public purpose served and that the governmental power employed is not diverted for private advantage."

Acknowledging the "unlikelihood" that the issuance of industrial bonds can be completely eliminated, the commission said states should require all bond issues to be approved by a supervising agency; limit authority to issue bonds to counties and municipalities and deny such authority to special districts; give priority to communities with surplus labor; and flatly ban all industrial "pirating."

The commission further suggested that development bond financing be confined to rural areas, substituting second mortgage loans or state guarantees of conventional loans to assist industries in established urban areas.

Discrimination Ban Ordered in Indiana

Indianapolis — All Indiana businesses serving the public will be covered under a broad public accommodations order issued by Gov. Matthew Welsh (D).

The governor directed that all places of public accommodation supervised or licensed by state agencies provide "equal opportunity and access, regardless of race."

Some 150,000 retail establishments, which are required to receive certification under state tax regulations, are presumably included in the order.

PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM, which Pres. Kennedy will present to 31 leaders in various fields, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, at White House ceremonies in September.

Medal of Freedom Awarded to Meany

(Continued from Page 1)

cratic trade unionism abroad through support of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and his current service as a member of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor Management Policy and of the President's Committee on Youth Employment.

"In his rise from labor leader to labor statesman," the commentary said, "Mr. Meany has been dedicated to preserving labor's integrity and honesty of purpose, in addition to pursuing the interests of the wage-earning citizen. He has been highly effective in promoting labor unity by resolving jurisdictional disputes and inter-union competition for members. His efforts culminated in the uniting of AFL and CIO in 1955, when he became the first president of the fused organization. His career reveals his ever-expanding vision of the constructive role that can be played by organized labor."

Among others named for the Presidential medals are Marian Anderson, the concert singer; Ralph J. Bunche, UN under secretary for special political affairs; Pablo Casals, the noted cellist and conductor; Herbert H. Lehman, former governor of New York and U.S. senator; Felix Frankfurter, retired associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court; Jean Monnet, the French statesman who inspired the European unity movement; Gov. Luis Munoz-Marin of Puerto Rico, and George W. Taylor, arbitrator and professor of industrial relations at the University of Pennsylvania; Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn, educator whose son Kenneth is an AFL-CIO legislative representative.

Unions Win 3 Elections In Upsets

Representation elections have been won by AFL-CIO unions at three plants where previous defeats were turned into victories, the federation's Dept. of Organization has reported.

Two of the successful elections were won by the Auto Workers over Teamsters Local 73, a statewide industrial local in Ohio. The third was a victory for the Carpenters at the Storkline Corp. plant in Jackson, Miss., where two previous elections had been set aside because of illegal conduct by management, including the showing of two anti-union films distributed by the National Right-to-Work Committee.

The Storkline workers, in the election June 27, voted 870 for the Carpenters, 500 for no union, with about 100 challenged votes. The challenged votes were those of office workers, and even if all cast no-union votes, the outcome of the election would not be changed.

Carpenters' organizers devoted some three years of attention to the Storkline plant with the assistance of the AFL-CIO regional staff headed by E. H. Williams and including Robert Starnes, assistant regional director; Willie Hines, William Dorsey and Joe Mullins.

In the other two elections, workers at the Molded Fibre Glass Body Co. in Ashtabula, O., voted as follows: UAW 334, no union 211, Teamsters 103, challenged 6; at the Holan Mfg. Co. in Cleveland, O., the vote was the UAW 186, no union 86, Teamsters 10.

Organizing efforts at the Ashtabula plants, which manufacture bodies for Chevrolet Division's Corvette, and glass fiber boats, have been carried on for most of the past 10 years. Last year the UAW lost an election but won a new vote because of management interference. A second election also was lost, and in the third, Teamster Local 73 moved in to contest with the UAW.

Organizing efforts were conducted by the staff of UAW Regional Dir. Patrick J. O'Malley and AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Jesse Gallagher, along with Organizers C. C. Smith and Frank Deutsch.

The Holan plant makes truck bodies. The UAW lost a close election there last year and renewed their activities this year. The union forces were headed by O'Malley, Gallagher and Deutsch.

'Scare' Film Used

Union organizers from many areas have reported that employers have used the "scare" films—"And Women Must Weep" and "A Question of Law & Order"—to defeat union efforts. The two films were shown to Storkline employes as part of a management campaign summed up by the NLRB as follows in a decision leading to the third election in two years:

"These appeals to the employes' fear of economic and physical harm, if the union won the election, were intensified by the several showings of the motion pictures." The board added that although the last film showing took place a week before the election, "its effect was not neutralized by the passage" of time because "it was intended to, and did, in a most dramatic way, drive home the employer's general propaganda theme" of danger to employes and their families from unions.

New BSEIU Members Given Union Booklet

Chicago—New members of the Building Service Employes are being given a copy of Your Union, a new booklet explaining the death gratuity system and other union services.

Meany Warns Against Foreign Aid Cutbacks

(Continued from Page 1)

recommended major cutbacks in the aid program.

Meany, as a member of the advisory committee, had filed a strong dissent to the recommendations of the Clay majority, declaring that "the need for foreign aid has not diminished. . . . No decisive victory has yet been won in the battle between liberty and slavery."

Clay had advised the Senate committee that Pres. Kennedy's request for $4.5 billion in aid funds could be trimmed by $500 million without endangering the program, and that $300 million of this could be cut from the Alliance for Progress appropriations.

Meany's appeal for expanded use of U.S. funds in helping the Latin American countries to develop their economies drew support from Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.).

An avowed opponent of many parts of the President's aid program, Morse nevertheless said he "completely agreed" with Meany that if the nations of Central and South America put into effect the principles set forth at the Punta del Este and Bogota conferences, and thus establish "fertile ground" for the growth of democracy, the United States should be ready to contribute "more seed" in aid funds.

Meany filed with the Senate group a copy of an AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs pamphlet, Foreign Aid for Peace and Freedom, which carries the text of his dissent from the Clay committee report; Guidelines for a Program, also given the Clay group; and his testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Meany said he was not suggesting an increase in funds "for every specific item" in the President's aid bill, and he agreed that efforts should be made "to eliminate waste where there is waste."

But he attacked what he called the "dollar-and-cents business approach" of the Clay committee majority and its failure to give proper attention to the role of free institutions such as trade unions in the development of free societies in other nations.

He was prepared to accept reductions in aid "when they are indicated by specific situations," but could not accept the idea of "a flat cut of so much per year," Meany declared.

He pointed out that the great bulk of U.S. aid to other countries is in the form of military assistance vital to our own national security, and that "this is the only thing that keeps the Communists from stepping across the line and taking over" in many parts of the world, especially Berlin.

He also criticized the Clay committee report for its failure to reflect the "willingness of the American people" to support the foreign aid program, as evidenced by the "tens of millions" of dollars they contribute annually through private organizations, such as CARE, to relieve suffering overseas.

He expressed strong disagreement with the suggestion in the Clay report that no new aid programs be established unless a termination date is set, and asked whether the U.S. could have set a terminal date in 1947 on its support of West Berlin.

"The time the Communists are willing to wait to take over the world is infinity," he declared.

Meany particularly stressed the need for technical assistance to the developing countries "to teach people to do things for themselves." That, he said, is what the trade union movement is trying to do in the American Institute for Free Trade Union Development.

He urged that U.S. aid be channeled not only through governments, but through private enterprise projects, such as the housing cooperatives being developed by organized labor in many nations.

He agreed with Morse that European countries that were helped onto their feet by the Marshall Plan, "and which now have booming economies," have a "moral obligation" and "an obligation as NATO allies" to pay their share of defenses in nations like Greece and Turkey.

But the persuasion, he suggested, should be done through the State Dept. and in a way that does not endanger the NATO alliance.

In response to expressions of concern by Sen. Frank Carlson (R-Kan.) over the drive of some new African nations toward what they call "socialism," Meany said he was not disturbed by the use of the term, noting that the extent of public ownership had parallels in many European countries.

"I am concerned, however, over totalitarianism," he declared, citing the effort of the Soviet Union at the recent ILO conference to exploit the Africans' stand against South African "apartheid."

"No nation on earth has exactly the same form of government as we have," he continued. He pointed out that the American two-party system did not develop for some years after the American revolution.

"I don't know what kind of governments will evolve in Africa," he said, "but I am not concerned, provided that they are the kind where the people rule, where the people govern themselves."

Weak Substitute Dropped:

House Unit Clears Job Rights Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

the commission form was put back into the measure.

The proposed equal employment opportunity commission would be similar to the National Labor Relations Board in that its powers and functions would be divided. It would have an administrator to investigate and prosecute cases and a board to judge the cases and issue cease and desist orders which would be enforceable in the federal courts of appeal.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a letter to the full committee before the reversal vote, assailed the Griffin proposals on the ground that the procedure would be an invitation "to a violator to delay an affirmative action until his case reaches the federal district court, if ever." The lack of "initiatory power in the [Griffin-proposed] commission insures relatively ineffective administration of the act," he warned.

Biemiller stressed that "those most in need of equal employment opportunity are those least likely to be able to afford counsel, and probably most subject to the economic, social and political pressures which might deter the filing of complaints."

Rusk Testifies

In the Senate Commerce Committee hearings, Sec. of State Dean Rusk was questioned sharply by Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.) after Rusk gave strong backing to the Administration's proposal to prohibit discrimination in public accommodations such as restaurants, hotels and motels and department stores.

Asked by Thurmond whether he "approved" civil rights "demonstrations," the Secretary of State said he didn't want to give "blanket endorsement" but added:

"If I were denied what our Negro citizens are denied, I would demonstrate."

Rusk was given warm applause by the audience in the crowded committee room after his answers and Thurmond demanded that the chairman maintain order.

The audience was "packed," the South Carolina senator said, with "civil righters and left-wingers" who were trying to get Congress to pass "unconstitutional" legislation.

Southern governors were scheduled to appear before the Commerce Committee as the group, headed by Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), continued hearings.

Southern senators also stepped up the pace of their floor attacks on the Administration's proposed rights legislation, with Sen. John Stennis (D-Miss.) charging that the President's recommendations constituted a reach for unsurpassed and unchecked "power."

Kentucky Ratifies Ban on Poll Tax

Frankfort, Ky.—A special session of the Kentucky legislature has ratified the proposed constitutional amendment banning poll taxes in federal elections.

Kentucky's action brings to 36 the number of ratifications and increases the likelihood that the required 38 states will approve the amendment before the 1964 elections.

REPRESENTATIVES of the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries and the Women's Activities Div. of COPE met with staff members of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights and Dept. of Intl. Affairs before going to the White House to hear Pres. Kennedy ask the support of the nation's women's organizations for his civil rights program. Seated at the head of the table is Executive Dir. Marcella S. Beatty of the National Auxiliaries and, to the right, Auxiliaries Vice Pres. Thelma Cullen and Pres. Beatrice Weiland. Standing are Dir. Boris Shishkin and Walter G. Davis of the Dept. of Civil Rights; Maida Springer, Dept. of Intl. Affairs, and Donald Slaiman, Dept. of Civil Rights.

'Let Us Move Together,' Meany Urges NAACP

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a message to the recent convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reiterated the federation's call for a strong fair employment practices law covering both management and labor.

Meany noted that the federal government is now taking steps long urged by the AFL-CIO "to put the force of law behind the labor movement's own fight against discrimination."

"These are welcome steps," he declared, "but they must quickly be reinforced by a federal equal employment opportunities law that applies to all enterprises engaged in commerce, and to all unions as well."

Meany recalled that in his message to last year's NAACP gathering, he had predicted that the nation stood "on the threshold of a full and final breakthrough to the achievement of truly equal rights for all citizens—true equality for every American to develop his own talents to the utmost, in the direction he freely chooses."

This prediction, he observed, has been "dramatically supported" by events of the past 12 months. While there has been "ugly strife" in some parts of the South, he noted, there has also been, "in shining contrast," a peaceful revolution in other areas, such as Durham, Charlotte, Atlanta, Clemson University, and in northern communities which have moved to correct "injustices that were previously ignored."

Many barriers remain to be overcome in achieving full equality, Meany said, and not the least of them is the national shortage of jobs, "quite apart from racial considerations."

"If equal opportunity is to be meaningful," he said, "there must also be enough opportunities for everyone."

Still, he declared, the "full and final breakthrough" is not only in prospect, "it is well under way," and while not yet a total victory, "it makes total victory both inevitable and close at hand."

"Let us now move forward together," he urged, "the Negro community, the labor movement, the federal government and the great majority of decent Americans whose voices have too often been drowned out by extremists—let us move forward together under law, and with unrelenting pressure for stronger laws where they are needed, to the ultimate culmination of the American promise of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, shared equally by everyone in the land we love."

Women's Aid Sought in Rights Fight

Pres. Kennedy has called on the nation's women's organizations, including those affiliated with the labor movement, to take the lead in efforts to wipe out race discrimination and promote equal opportunity.

Three hundred women's leaders met with the President July 9 at the White House and, with few exceptions, enthusiastically applauded his civil rights program and set up an impromptu follow-up meeting that same night to discuss means of implementing it.

The group included a large delegation from the Women's Activities Div. of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education and from the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries and the auxiliaries of affiliated unions.

Kennedy laid down a five-point program, asking the women on their return home to:

- Participate in a program to keep youngsters from dropping out of school and encourage drop-outs to return to classes.
- Take part in biracial conferences and help establish contacts between white and Negro community leaders.
- Establish leadership training courses for women.
- Support his civil rights program, and especially a public accommodations law.
- Open the membership of all women's organizations to all races.

The delegates, representing a broad cross-section of women's groups from the United Daughters of the Confederacy to civil rights organizations, also heard from Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Later, in a meeting called by Mildred McAfee Horton, wartime commander of the WAVES, they met with Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther F. Peterson to discuss implementation of the President's program.

Before the White House session, COPE and Auxiliaries delegates met at the AFL-CIO building with Civil Rights Dir. Boris Shishkin and other members of the federation's staff.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Enforcement Held Key To Effective FEP Law

Federal legislation to outlaw discrimination in hiring must have the strongest possible enforcement provisions if it is to have any real meaning, the AFL-CIO's associate general counsel declared in a network radio interview.

Attorney Thomas E. Harris said the commission approach proposed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) in a bill since approved by the House Education & Labor Committee offers "the bare minimum of enforcement which could be regarded as giving the bill any real significance."

The alternative of lodging enforcement powers with the U.S. district courts, as proposed by Rep. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) and supported by other GOP members of the committee, is "so indefensible that it leads me to wonder whether they really want a bill," Harris declared on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO program carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Predicting that an FEP bill will pass the House despite southern opposition—if the barrier of the Rules Committee can be overcome—Harris said the chief issue shaping up between the main body of Democrats and the Republicans is in the enforcement section.

This is true as well, he said, in the Senate Labor Committee, which is due to open hearings soon on an FEP bill. Final committee action in the House was completed on July 11.

Patterned on NLRB

Harris noted that the Roosevelt approach is patterned after the National Labor Relations Board. A commission would conduct hearings on alleged violations of the equal employment opportunities measure, and then hand down orders enforceable in a U.S. court of appeals.

With the "rather dilatory" enforcement of unfair labor practices as an example, this would take about 2.5 years from the beginning of a case to the issuance of a court order, Harris observed.

The Griffin proposal, however, would add another year to this period by requiring first a full hearing before a commission, then a new "trial from scratch" of all the issues and testimony in a U.S. district court in order to enforce compliance, he said.

The approach of the Republicans, he said, is so "indefensible" as to give the impression "that they are not really for fair employment practices legislation; that for political reasons they won't say so and they, therefore, come out with a proposal which would give the form but not the reality."

An ideal bill, he continued, would provide even stronger enforcement than proposed in the Roosevelt bill, possibly including a mandatory injunction of the type provided in the Taft-Hartley Act against certain union violations.

Harris outlined the main provisions of the Roosevelt bill as:

- Forbidding an employer to discriminate in hiring or promotion or any terms or conditions of employment on account of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry.
- Forbidding unions to discriminate in admitting workers to union membership.
- Forbidding unions from attempting to get an employer to discriminate because of race.

In response to questions from Neil MacNeil of Time Magazine and Edward Woods of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Harris agreed that discrimination is "accentuated" in periods of slack employment and that so long as the high rate of joblessness persists the problem will not be totally solved by the enactment of an FEP law.

Goals Maintained By Canadian Labor

Toronto, Ont. — Canadian labor hopes to establish a better relationship with management but not by forsaking trade union objectives, Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress said in a speech before the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 20, 1963 | No. 29

Action on Rights Program Imperative, Meany Urges

Labor Hits FRB Rise In Interest

The Federal Reserve Board's action increasing the discount rate poses the danger of a "new recession" and guarantees an "increase in unemployment," the AFL-CIO declared.

The board's action—lifting the rate at which banks borrow from the Federal Reserve from 3 to 3.5 percent—will make borrowing more expensive and put the brakes on the "slight recovery America has experienced this year," Federation Pres. George Meany said.

Meany's comment came a few days after he had written FRB Chairman William McChesney Martin warning that a government policy of tighter money and credit during a period of high unemployment "will be moving away from solving" the nation's major domestic economic problem.

Commenting on the board's action, Meany termed it "outrageous" and said that "unless the Congress offsets this ill-considered action with a prompt, meaningful tax cut" the danger of a new recession is increased.

The Federal Reserve action in hiking the discount rate culminated several months of activity and preparation, said AFL-CIO Research Director Nathaniel Goldfinger. He noted that the FRB had allowed free reserves for banks to drop, thus limiting the funds available for borrowing, and that the interest rate on short-term 90-day government bills moved past the 3 percent level recently.

When short-term rates move beyond the discount rate, he said,

(Continued on Page 11)

'Work' Law Challenged In Wyoming

Cheyenne, Wyo.—A joint union-employer suit has challenged the constitutionality of Wyoming's new so-called "right-to-work" law.

Three locals of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and two employer associations which have collective bargaining agreements with the IBEW joined in asking a state district court to enjoin Gov. Clifford P. Hansen (R) and other state and county officials from enforcing the recently-enacted law.

The suit charges that the Wyoming law, passed last February and signed by Hansen, goes beyond the scope of state "open shop" laws permitted under Section 14b of the STRONG CIVIL RIGHTS legislation was urged on Congress by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as he appeared before the House Judiciary subcommittee holding hearings on the Administration's program. Shown with him are Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.), right, and Rep. William M. McCulloch (R-O.), senior GOP member of the group.

(Continued on Page 2)

Kennedy Urges Agreement:

Report of Rail Panel Due at White House

A fact-finding panel prepared to submit its report to Pres. Kennedy on issues in the long-smouldering railroad work rules dispute as two deadlines ticked closer.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, this was the picture:

Kennedy, at a July 17 news conference, warned that if the issue is put up to Congress, "no one can be certain in what form it would come out."

He re-emphasized a belief that the best solution would be for the parties "to reach an agreement themselves and not depend on the government to do it."

The President has said that he would transmit the panel's report to Congress on July 22, along with his own legislative recommendations "designed to dispose of the issues in this particular case."

The railroads agreed not to put their job-slashing work rules proposals into effect before July 29, and Kennedy declared he would not ask either side to postpone action beyond that date.

Lack of Bargaining Hit

Rail operating unions, in statements to the special six-member fact-finding panel, reiterated that the disputed issues could be resolved through collective bargaining and charged that repeated arbitration proposals and statements by Administration officials that a strike would be "unthinkable" have kept rail management from "meaningful" bargaining.

The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen reminded the panel that last May they had offered to agree to elimination of 5,500 helper's jobs, through attrition, and emphasized that the union still "stands prepared to negotiate." The Locomotive Engineers declared the unions do not consider bargaining at a "hopeless deadlock" on any issue.

The Association of American Railroads, representing 105 of the 195 railroads involved, issued a statement that legislation is "the only remaining means we can see of heading off a calamitous nationwide rail strike." It asserted that the operating unions have rejected "reasonable" proposals.

(Continued on Page 11)

Kennedy Bid Seen As 'Stirring Nation'

By John M. Barry

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged a major congressional effort to enact the Kennedy Administration's civil rights program, with even stronger enforcement provisions in some cases, and thus provide "full and equal rights for Negro Americans . . . in the here and now."

Meany stressed the "immediacy" of the civil rights crisis facing the nation as he testified on behalf of the President's omnibus civil rights bill.

There is no longer any time for "mulling over," he told the House Judiciary subcommittee conducting hearings on the bill.

"The mulling over has been going on for two decades; indeed, in the broader sense it has been going on for more than a century," he observed.

Noting that the efforts of Negroes to force their plight to active public attention had evoked a change in national attitudes, Meany lauded Pres. Kennedy for stirring "the nation's conscience" in his television address of June 11, his White House conferences on civil rights with public leaders in many fields, and the broad civil rights program he had submitted to Congress.

"As a result, the American people have begun to grasp the fact that civil rights is not a matter for abstract debate but an immediate crisis," the AFL-CIO president declared.

Steps to guarantee the rights of Negro citizens, he asserted, "are urgent, not because we say so, but because the course of history demands their enactment."

In a statement that Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) described as "refreshingly candid," Meany acknowledged that there is some "wrong-headed" thinking among segments of the labor movement regarding the rights of Negroes, but declared that the AFL-CIO is doing its "utmost" to change this thinking.

He reminded the House unit that despite these elements of opposition, organized labor has been a strong and consistent advocate of equal rights legislation and suggested that "on this score, our credentials cannot be challenged."

"I think it is fair to say that we are the only one, among the civil rights forces, which has openly called for legislation for the correction of shortcomings within its own ranks," he observed.

In outlining the AFL-CIO position, Meany put particular emphasis on equal employment opportunities as "the vital issue, the chief among equals," needed to give real meaning to other rights."

"The plain fact," he declared, "is that Negro workers as a whole, north or south, do not enjoy anything approaching equal employment opportunity."

On other points of the Administration's program, Meany set forth these views:

- A guarantee of equality of service in public accommodations must be enacted to end "an incredible and intolerable state of affairs" in which the Negro is "told to his face

(Continued on Page 12)

Kansas City Bus Union, Freed from No-Strike Law, Wins Major Gains

By Eugene A. Kelly

Kansas City, Mo.—This city's Street Railway Employes, freed by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling from the "no-strike" shackles of Missouri's King-Thompson Act, have won a new contract raising their wages 38 cents an hour.

The 970 members of union Div. 1287 voted overwhelmingly at a meeting July 14th, with only 19 dissenting voices, to ratify the new 28-month pact their bargainers had doggedly brought home. Besides raises retroactive to Nov. 1, 1961, and additional boosts for 1962, 1963, 1964 and most of 1965, the new pact calls for improvements in pensions, vacations, health and welfare benefits and uniform allowances.

Pres. John M. Elliott said at union headquarters in Washington that the agreement demonstrates that "where free collective bargaining can operate" public utility employes can work out their destiny successfully.

The union, along with others in Missouri, had fought for almost 15 years to invalidate the King-Thompson Act, which banned strikes against transit companies and other public utilities. Last month the top U.S. court ruled the law was in direct conflict with federal legislation protecting the right to strike. In a unanimous opinion, the court declared that Missouri had, through the fiction of state seizure of the utility, "made a peaceful strike against a public utility unlawful."

After the decision the union re-

(Continued on Page 3)

KEEP AMERICA BEAUTIFUL conference in Washington, D. C., featured ideas contributed by Robert A. Rosekrans, left, assistant director of ALF-CIO community service activities; Smith L. Rairdon of Owens-Illinois Glass Co., and Commerce Dept. Under Sec. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., right. Rosekrans reported on labor's cooperation with the group which has for 10 years carried on an anti-litter program aimed at preserving scenic beauty.

Wyoming 'Work' Statute Challenged on Legality

(Continued from Page 1)

Taft-Hartley Act. and is unconstitutional in two major respects:

- It bars the use of non-discriminatory union job referral arrangements which have been ruled legal by the U. S. Supreme Court under federal law.
- As interpreted by State Atty. Gen. John F. Raper, it would prohibit unions holding bargaining rights from representing non-members unless individually authorized in writing to do so.

This, the suit points out, is directly contradictory of the National Labor Relations Act which specifically requires unions to represent all employes in the bargaining unit.

Joining in the court challenge to the "right-to-work" law are IBEW Locals 415 in Cheyenne, 322 in Casper, 860 in Laramie, and two chapters of the National Electric Contractors Association.

Among Harshest Laws

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman said the Wyoming statute "would disrupt the normal labor relations in the electrical industry." He termed it "significant" that employers involved have joined with the IBEW locals in challenging the law.

The Wyoming law, one of the harshest of the 20 state "right-to-work" measures, provides a penalty of up to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine for violation.

The suit points out that if the employers live up to their union contracts they will be subject to penalties under the Wyoming statute. On the other hand, if they follow the Wyoming law, they will violate the federal law and breach their agreements with the IBEW locals.

Collective bargaining relations between employers and the unions, the petition declared, "have resulted and currently result in stability of employment relationships, the promotion of harmony and cooperation between employer and employes, the availability of sufficient skilled, competent and experienced artisans of the electrical trade . . . and establishment of an effective means of increasing production and quality."

The suit asks that the "work" law be held unconstitutional and that in the interim an injunction be issued barring its enforcement.

URW Wins Pay Boosts At General Tire Co.

Akron, Ohio—The Rubber Workers have negotiated a two-step pay increase for 80 employes at the General Tire & Rubber Co. warehouse in Springfield Township, Ohio. They will receive 9 cents an hour retroactive to July 3, and an additional 7 cents in the second year.

The agreement includes improved supplemental unemployment benefits and additional paid grievance committee time.

Equal Pay Booklet Outlines New Law

The Labor Dept. has issued a pamphlet explaining provisions of the new Equal Pay Act, which will require employers to pay equal wages to men and women for equal work. The law goes into effect June 11, 1964.

The pamphlet describes the coverage of the law and how it will be enforced. Copies are available from the Labor Dept.'s Wage & Hour and Public Contracts divisions in Washington, D. C., and at field offices throughout the nation.

Msgr. Higgins Named:

Dr. Annis Hits Catholic Press For Stand on Health Care

Dr. Edward R. Annis, president of the American Medical Association, has broadened his attacks on social security hospital insurance for the aged to accuse the Roman Catholic press and a prominent Catholic clergyman of preaching "socialism."

The accusation was made in a recent interview of Annis by a staff member of the Catholic Star Herald of Camden, N. J., in which Annis referred to a year-old article in the paper endorsing the King-Anderson bill's social security approach to old-age hospital insurance.

"This is typical of the distortion of the Catholic press," declared the doctor, a Catholic himself. "They are ignorant of the position of American medicine and firmly fixed in their socialist philosophies. These people are so firmly fixed in their view that they won't even listen to our point of view."

The Star Herald story reported that he then went on to accuse Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, of "distortions in his writings," which he said reflect the thinking of labor leaders and "their efforts to dominate American medicine."

Annis apparently was referring to an article by Msgr. Higgins in which he said that while people could disagree with the social security approach to health care, they could not label it socialism.

Msgr. Higgins said that if Dr. Annis had made up his mind "that I am a spokesman for labor" nothing would change it.

'Just Smile'

"There is no point in getting into an argument with Dr. Annis on something which has nothing to do with the argument over medicare," he said. "What he has to do is face up to the issue itself.

"Some statements you just smile at when people have made up their minds."

The Star Herald refused to smile, however. Noting that Annis had professed to be trained in logic as a result of his Catholic schooling, the paper asked how logical it was to decry social security financing of health care as "socialism" while applauding direct federal aid through the Kerr-Mills Act.

"Is it socialism," the newspaper asked "when the government helps educate doctors, launch medical research programs, build bigger and better hospitals? Or is it only socialism when the government undertakes to help the poor, to protect our senior citizens from impoverishing illnesses?"

New Jersey Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D), observed as he inserted the exchange in the Congressional Record that Annis was apparently classifying the Catholic press and Msgr. Higgins as "political quacks and charlatans," a phrase he has applied to supporters of the King-Anderson bill.

"I believe the nation is getting tired and bored with organized medicine's prophet of gloom and doom," Williams declared. "And I believe they would prefer to have him speak with the sort of responsibility they expect from a practicing physician."

In the Star Herald interview, Annis had cited approving references to "socialization" in the encyclical "Mater et Magistra" of the late Pope John XXIII. These, he said, meant "the socialization of people like the meeting the AMA is holding here [Atlantic City], but the program of medicare and the efforts of people like Msgr. Higgins is socialism, not socialization."

In a later column for the NCWC news service, Msgr. Higgins recalled that Cardinal Cicognani, Vatican secretary of state, had written a letter to Canadian Catholics making it "crystal clear" that public health insurance falls within the scope of "social security and social insurance" as these terms were used in "Mater et Magistra."

"Catholic social teaching does not say that the social security approach to medical care is the only approach or necessarily the best approach under all circumstances," the monsignor said. "It does say, however, that the social security approach to this and related problems is legitimate from the point of view of sound social ethics and may be the best approach under a given set of circumstances."

Jersey Supreme Court Hits Medical Monopoly

A New Jersey Supreme Court decision knocking out state medical society control of group health-medical plans has been hailed as "significant" by Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, who commended the court's ruling to the attention of "every physician . . . and officer of every medical society."

The state court's 7-0 decision killed a section of state law delegating to the New Jersey State Medical Society authority to approve or veto group medical plans under which subscribers prepay for health care and obtain service from physicians associated with the program.

The state medical society had given approval to only one group health plan—the Blue Shield plan sponsored by the society itself and having 18 member-physicians among its 23 trustees.

A non-profit competitor plan also backed by qualified physicians, Group Health Insurance, Inc., of New Jersey, was established in 1961 but it was denied medical society approval. GHI attacked the state law as unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court threw out the section of the law giving the medical society "such a power to restrict, or indeed to prohibit, competition in a field so vitally concerned with the public welfare."

This power, the unanimous decision decalred, "may not constitutionally be placed in the hands of a private organization such as the medical society, which has an interest in promoting the welfare of the only existing medical service corporation [Blue Shield] in the state."

The court ordered further hearings on another section of the law requiring that a medical-surgical group plan must have membership of 51 percent of the doctors in any county to function. The court referred to an Illinois Supreme Court decision killing a similar "51 percent" rule.

Cruikshank pointed out that the New Jersey decision drew a "clear distinction" between the "legitimate professional concerns of organized medicine and the business interests of the practicing physicians."

Non-profit group health practice, financed by subscriber prepayment, offers a useful means of improved care and economy in the face of rising medical costs and a serious shortage of physicians, he continued.

Yet in nearly half the states, including New Jersey until the court decision, medical societies have persuaded the legislatures to delegate control of the development of such plans to the private organizations of physicians, he said.

"We hope the decision of the New Jersey court will be read by every physician and by every officer of every medical society," Cruikshank emphasized.

Group Health Association of America, an association of non-profit medical-health plans, called the New Jersey decision a "victory over monopoly" in the health field. Group Health had filed a brief as friend of the court attacking the state law.

U. S. Moves to Enforce Pension, Reporting Acts

The Labor Dept. has taken court action against two employers to compel compliance with the reporting requirements of the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act and to enjoin them from future violations.

Named as defendant in one suit was Seilers, Inc., a Philadelphia meat packing company, which the department said has failed to file, and continues to refuse to file, a description or any annual report of the employe pension plan it administers. The plan covers 400 employes of Seilers and the Louis Burk Co., a wholly owned subsidiary.

In the second case, Charles Cushman Co., a shoe manufacturer in Auburn, Me., was accused of refusing to file reports for the years 1959 through 1961 on a group life insurance plan covering its employes.

The department also has named three unions in suits brought under the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

One suit seeks a court order to compel an election of officers under the Labor Dept.'s supervision in an unaffiliated local union at Huntington Station, N.Y. The complaint charges that Local 424 had failed to hold a secret-ballot election within the three-year period required by the Act. Its last election, the department said, was held Nov. 8, 1959, while it was still affiliated with the ousted Teamsters. Its members voted to disaffiliate from the IBT in October 1960.

Another suit seeks to invalidate an election of officers held last Jan. 6 by Jersey City Local 69 of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and to obtain a new election under Labor Dept. supervision. The action, based on a complaint by nine Local 69 members, charges that the local failed to give proper notice of the election or a reasonable opportunity for nominations and denied certain eligible members the right to be candidates.

In the first case of its kind since passage of the Act in 1959, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz is seeking a federal court order to terminate a trusteeship imposed by the American Guild of Variety Artists over its Philadelphia branch in October 1959.

The law limits such trusteeships to 18 months unless the parent union can prove the need for continuance for a purpose allowable under the law.

UPPW Wins Again At Plant in Maine

Rumford, Me.—The Papermakers and Paper Workers won a hotly contested election here from the United Mine Workers' District 50 by a vote of 1,055-724.

The decision at the fine-paper plant of the Oxford Paper Co., which employs 2,400, was the 15th that UPPW has won in the industry from the unaffiliated union.

District 50 lost bargaining rights to the UPPW three years ago after 14 years at Oxford Paper. It won new rights in 1960 and 1961, but failed to win a majority in an election last June. The latest election was a runoff between the two top unions.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

'Debt of Honor' Cited:

Pay Drive Pressed By Letter Carriers

More than 1,000 Letter Carriers from all sections of the nation have called on Congress to redeem a "debt of honor" and raise the pay of federal employes to levels "comparable" to private industry.

They came, on short notice, to an emergency legislative conference called by their union in an effort to get a higher congressional priority tag put on pay adjustment proposals submitted by Pres. Kennedy last Apr. 29. Kennedy acted under the 1962 salary reform law which directs the President to make an annual comparision of government and private industry salaries and, after consulting with federal employe unions, submit recommendations to Congress.

Letter Carriers' Pres. Jerome J. Keating told the delegates that the principle of annual salary reviews is in danger of becoming a dead letter if it is disregarded in its first test.

Noting that only 20 representatives and three senators had voted against yearly "comparability" pay adjustments, Keating said Congress has a "debt of honor" to government workers to carry out the intent of the law.

In an unusual display of "management" support for a union pay campaign, Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day and Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., addressed the conference and joined in urging prompt action by Congress.

'Entitled' to Fair Pay

Day said the 1962 salary reform legislation "was a milestone in recognizing that public employes are not second class citizens" and are "just as entitled as everybody else to fair pay."

Macy told the delegates that the Administration is "committed" to the annual pay adjustment principle.

He took note of union complaints that the "comparability" surveys on which the Administration's pay proposals are based are several years old before recommendations can be put into effect and said efforts will be made to lessen the time lag.

Keating earlier said the NALC doesn't consider the Administration pay plan "entirely realistic" because it would leave postal workers two years behind in pay comparability. "Real comparability," he said, would require an additional 6 to 8 percent increase.

Under the deferred second step of the 1962 pay raise legislation, salary scales for the largest group of postal workers will automatically rise next January from the present $4,565-$6,325 range to a range of $4,690-$6,450. The bottom of the range represents the entrance pay; the top figure is the 12th pay step based on length of service.

The new Administration proposal—which the President has asked to be effective in January—would set the entrance rate at $4,855 a year and the top rate at $6,615.

Before going to Capitol Hill to meet with congressmen and senators form their home states, the Letter Carriers adopted a resolution proposing a 10 percent increase in the civil service pensions of all retirees receiving less than $200 a month. The resolution also proposed automatic cost-of-living adjustments in pensions whenever the price index rises by 1 percent. Under present law, adjustments are made only when the index has risen 3 percent.

The three-day conference was scheduled to be divided between visits to Capitol Hill and report sessions addressed by members of Congress.

Clerks Due July 30

Another large group of workers, the Postal Clerks, is scheduled to come to Washington July 30 for a three-day legislative and grievance conference.

In addition to supporting salary legislation, the clerks also will seek enactment of a bill to abolish the work measurement system used by the Post Office Dept.

LETTER CARRIERS, called into an emergency legislative conference to press for passage of an Administration-proposed pay raise bill, are briefed by NALC Pres. Jerome J. Keating before leaving for Capitol Hill to visit congressmen and senators from their home states. More than 1,000 delegates came for the three-day conference.

IAM's F. A. Henson Dies in Sacramento

Sacramento, Calif.—Francis A. Henson, labor education expert for the Machinists and previously for the Auto Workers, died here suddenly at 57 and was buried in Hagerstown, Md., his birthplace.

Henson was conducting a class in trade unionism for officers and stewards of IAM Lodge 946 when he collapsed and died of a heart attack.

A graduate of Lynchburg College, Virginia, he did graduate work at Yale and Columbia Universities, became a secretary for the National Religion and Labor Foundation, and then joined the staff of the UAW in the early organizing days. He was a sergeant-major in World War II, and in 1954 became education director of the IAM's Great Lakes district in Cleveland, O. In 1961 he was transferred to Los Angeles.

Kansas City Bus Union Gets New Pact at Last

(Continued from Page 1)

turned to the bargaining table and, after two strikes of less than an hour each, won the coveted goal of a new contract from a reluctant management—Kansas City Transit, Inc., serving Missouri and nearby Kansas.

The challenge to the state law that resulted in the Supreme Court decision originated in 1961 when Div. 1287 voted to strike after months of negotiations failed to result in an agreement.

Company 'Seized'

On Nov. 13, 1961 the governor of Missouri ordered the transit firm "seized" and put under "operation" by the state. Then followed a permanent injunction by a court which sent the strikers back to their jobs.

The union appealed, but the Missouri Supreme Court upheld the injunction.

A major point in the union's ultimate legal victory was whether or not the case was moot, meaning no longer relevant. The state argued that it was because the governor in the meantime had "returned" the company to private management. The Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Justice Potter Stewart, said it wasn't because the union still continued to seek its rights.

The opinion concluded that "collective bargaining, with the right to strike at its core, is the essence of the federal scheme."

Labor-Industry Film Festival Set

The Fourth Intl. Labor & Industry Film Triennial will be held at Antwerp, Belgium, next November under the auspices of the Belgian Ministry of Employment & Labor.

The purpose of the affair is to recognize achievement and to compare and study the production of films dealing with such areas as industrial research, vocational education, technical information, human labor problems and union objectives.

Regulations and entry forms may be obtained from, and should be filed with, La Cinematheque Royale de Belgique, Palais des Beaux-Arts, 23 Ravenstein, Brussels 1, Belgium.

14,000 Inco Workers Win USWA Pact

Toronto—After eight months of hard bargaining, the Steelworkers have negotiated a first contract covering 14,000 employes of the big Intl. Nickel Co. of Canada.

The three-year agreement provides wage increases totaling 8 percent, plus significant improvements in pensions, sick pay and other fringe benefits. It covers workers at Inco mines and plants in Sudbury and Port Colborne, Ont.

An immediate 3 percent wage increase will be followed by 2.5 percent raises in the second and third years of the contract. The amount of the increase had been recommended by a conciliation board, but the USWA won additional pension improvements after members voted overwhelmingly to strike, if necessary.

Last year the Steelworkers won bargaining rights by ousting the unaffiliated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, a union expelled by the former CIO in 1950 on findings of Communist domination.

The USWA succeeded in writing a pension agreement into the company's contract for the first time, won improved early retirement benefits and full vesting of the company's contribution after an employe has reached the age of 50 and completed 15 years of service. The plan is company financed.

Among other insurance benefits, weekly sick pay will be raised from $40 to $50 and will be paid for a maximum of 32 weeks instead of 26.

Union Ranks Hold Firm In Hawaii News Strike

Honolulu—The Hawaii newspaper unions' strike against the Honolulu Advertiser and Honolulu Star-Bulletin is moving toward its second month with two things unchanged:

1. The employers' take-it-or-leave-it attitude on basic issues.
2. The unity exhibited by more than 800 workers in seven different unions, who are determined to maintain a solid front until they win their points.

About the only change in conditions since the strike started June 21 is that federal mediation efforts have been adjourned indefinitely.

The adjournment came on July 13 after the unions rejected a company proposal which they said was "nothing more and perhaps less than the companies have been offering since before the strike started."

The management offer would have reinstituted a sick leave waiting period and would have provided pay increases averaging less than 5 cents an hour for most employes over a two-year period.

7 Unions Strike

Striking the newspapers plus their jointly owned production facility, the Hawaii Newspaper Operators, are the Newspaper Guild, the Typographical Union, Pressmen, Photo Engravers, Machinists, and the unaffiliated Lithographers and Longshoremen, the latter representing circulation department employes.

The strike came after futile negotiations stretching back to February.

For the unions involved, basically the dispute was over wage demands and a company counter demand that a two-day waiting period for sick leave, bargained out of most agreements in 1959, be reinstituted. The unions had refused to consider the waiting period demand although stating they were willing to write sick leave policing machinery into the contracts.

Other Issues

Also at issue were vacations, holidays, medical insurance and other matters. The unions originally demanded $10 weekly across-the-board pay increases. They later reduced this to $7. The companies, also bargaining jointly, stuck to an original offer of percentage increases with a maximum of $3.50 a week.

At the request of federal mediators the strike was postponed twice for 24 hours, each time in last-minute efforts to end the impasse in negotiations. The companies did not move from their position that sick leave waiting periods must be instituted or offer seriously to bargain on wages.

The unions finally set up a joint strike strategy committee composed of members of each union involved. The committee is headed by Tommy Lum, Hawaii Newspaper Guild administrative officer, with David Bray, local ITU president, as secretary.

Plasterers Strongly Back Rights Policy

The executive board of the Plasterers has "unequivocally" endorsed the anti-discrimination policy statement issued by presidents of AFL-CIO building trades unions and has ordered both the statement and resolution of endorsement sent to all of the union's locals.

In commending Pres. Edward J. Leonard for joining in the anti-bias declaration of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., the Plasterers' board noted that the union's constitution, adopted in 1864, "deliberately and specifically" forbids racial discrimination. And that, the board emphasized, has been the union's "proud policy ever since."

Among the specific anti-discrimination provisions in the constitution, the board pointed out, is a fine against any member who refuses to work with another member "because of his race, creed or nationality."

Applications for membership, the constitution specifies, are to be judged on the "mechanical ability" of the applicant by open vote, and apprenticeship programs are required to be operated in accord with national standards.

In sending the resolution and statement to locals, the board called on the union's affiliates "to cooperate to the fullest" in enforcement of the union's laws.

The statement by the presidents of the 18 building trades affiliates called on all local unions to follow non-discriminatory membership, apprenticeship and job referral policies.

IBEW Hails Pay Gains In Two Bell Contracts

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has announced new contract agreements with both the Illinois and New Jersey Bell Telephone Companies covering some 18,400 plant, engineering and installation employes.

The Illinois settlement provides wage increases ranging from $2 to $6 a week, with some 90 percent of the 11,000 affected employes in the top bracket.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman said the $6 increase is the highest so far in Bell System negotiations. He set a value of 25.6 cents an hour on the package, including the initial pay hike and improvements in hospitalization and life insurance, vacations and pensions.

The 39-month agreement, to be submitted to a membership vote July 23, would be retroactive to July 7. It contains provisions for two wage reopenings. Freeman said the first segment of the contract would mean annual benefits totaling $6.25 million for Illinois Bell employes.

The non-wage benefits include:

- Higher pensions, achieved by cutting the amount subtracted from company retirement payments to one-third of a worker's social security benefits instead of one-half.
- A reduction of 10 cents per $1,000 of coverage in employe payments for group life insurance.
- A higher maximum on the company-paid "major medical" insurance program, and agreement by the company to pay 25 percent of the cost of basic medical insurance now, and another 25 percent later.
- Death benefits equal to a year's working wages for the surviving families of all retirees.
- A third week of vacation after 10 years of service instead of the present 15, effective next Jan. 1.

The New Jersey agreement will provide pay increases of $2 to $5 a week for the 7,400 employes, bringing top weekly wages to $142. The pact also reclassifies a number of southern New Jersey exchange areas into higher wage zones.

If ratified by the membership in a vote July 24, it will be retroactive to June 30 and run through Sept. 28, 1966. Provision is included for two reopenings on wages and one on fringe benefits.

Labor Lawyer Named To Law School Staff

Chicago—Alfred Kamin, Chicago labor lawyer, has ben named a professor of law at Loyola University Law School, the Very Rev. James F. Maguire, S.J., the president, has announced.

No-Discrimination Pact Approved in Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh—Seven local building trades unions here have agreed voluntarily to a non-discrimination program that permits on-the-spot verification by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission when skill tests are being given to membership applicants.

The unions waived further hearing after two days of testimony before the commission and agreed to accept a legally binding order of the HRC. A commission spokesman emphasized that the waiver in no way constituted an admission by the unions that they had in fact discriminated for racial or other reasons.

Commission Chairman Harry Boyer, who is also president of the State AFL-CIO, had high praise for the cooperation of the locals—Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 5, Ironworkers Local 3, Asbestos Workers Local 2, Elevator Constructors Local 6, Painters Local 751, Plumbers Local 27 and Steam Fitters Local 449.

Their cooperation, Boyer said, was of "tremendous help" to the commission and "very well may have helped to create a pattern for consideration by craft unions elsewhere" who are confronted with the same problem of alleged discrimination.

The HRC order to which the unions agreed calls for:

- Immediate acceptance into membership without discrimination of any non-white journeymen who meet present skill standards and other membership qualifications, uniformly applied.
- The enrollment of qualified applicants without discrimination in any apprenticeship training programs in which the unions participate.
- Acceptance of an appropriate number of qualified non-white applicants for apprenticeship in all future training programs, and agreement to set up no barriers to non-white apprentices where they are chosen solely by employers.
- Notification to the commission on request during the next two years of the number of known non-white applicants for membership or apprenticeship training and the number accepted or rejected.

Present at the two-hour meeting at which agreement on the order was reached, besides representatives of the seven unions, were Boyer, Commisisoners Edward G. Petrillo of Erie, who had presided at the hearing, Dr. Jesse D. Rever of Harrisburg, Mrs. Florence S. Reizenstein of Pittsburgh and Joseph X. Yaffe of Philadelphia, Secretary of Labor & Industry William P. Young, whose department includes the HRC, and Executive Dir. Louis Mason, Jr., of the Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations, whose agency had reached a similar understanding with six of the locals two days earlier.

Obsolete, Analysis Finds:

Jobless Insurance Program Seen Needing Major Overhaul

The federal-state unemployment compensation system developed a quarter of a century ago has become "obsolete" under today's conditions, according to an article prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research for the July issue of the American Federationist.

Today, the analysis points out, half of the nation's jobless are either ineligible for unemployment compensation or have exhausted their state benefits.

Most of those on the compensation rolls are recovering only a small portion of their lost wages. In 1939, maximum benefits were above 60 percent of average state wages in 35 states and territories; for 1963, only 1 state was in this category.

In addition to the decline in benefits in terms of proportion of lost wages, the Federationist article points out:

"A new and even more acute problem has been created as a result of rapid technological change and the impact of automation: workers are discovering that skills and experience acquired over a lifetime suddenly are made obsolete; some are not only thrown out of work—they become jobless indefinitely and perhaps permanently."

To meet these problems, at least partially, the Administration and the AFL-CIO have urged Congress to enact legislation introduced by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.).

The McCarthy-King bill would bring an additional 3 million workers under the unemployment compensation program and it will provide benefits for a longer period.

Up To 52 Weeks

"The most significant example of new thinking in this bill," the Dept. of Research analysis emphasizes, is the provision for up to 52 weeks of benefits for what the government terms the "very longterm" unemployed—those out of work 26 weeks or more. Between 1957 and 1962, this category of jobless rose 150 percent.

Under the McCarthy-King bill, a federal fund would be established based on a new uniform federal payroll tax of three-tenths of 1 percent. After a worker has been unemployed for 26 weeks—during which time, in most cases, he would be receiving state unemployment benefits—he would be eligible for up to 26 additional weeks of federal payments, depending on his work experience before becoming unemployed.

Thus a person who had been employed half of the previous three years could draw 13 weeks of extended federal benefits, while a worker employed two-thirds of the previous three years would receive the maximum 26 weeks of federal benefits.

The bill also would set federal standards for states to follow in setting the amount of benefits. The goal would be to enable most workers to recover half of their lost wages through unemployment insurance. This would be done by gradually raising the ceiling on benefits until it could be pegged at two-thirds of the average state wage.

Financing of the program would be strengthened by raising the taxable wage base from the first $3,000 of salary to $5,200.

Noting that the House Ways & Means Committee "has a full schedule this year" with tax legislation and hearings on social security hospital insurance on the agenda, the article declares that "the real test for the McCarthy-King bill will come in 1964."

The McCarthy-King Bill

The major provisions of the McCarthy-King bill are as follows:

1. Extension of coverage to 3 million more people: workers in small establishments with one or more employes and workers in charitable, educational and humane organizations.

2. Federal unemployment adjustment benefits from the 27th week up to the 52nd week of unemployment for all those who have exhausted state benefits and who have worked (a) half the time in the state base year and (b) half the time in the previous three years, provided they are unable to find work and maintain their eligibility.

3. A federal standard that state benefits must provide at least half the worker's lost weekly wage subject to a statewide maximum that will rise progressively until, after 1969, it will be two-thirds of each state's average weekly wage.

4. Financing improvements including (a) equalization grants to states having abnormally high benefit costs: (b) increase in the taxable wage base to $5,200 per employe; (c) a new federal tax of three-tenths of one percent to pay for the federal adjustment benefits and the equalization grants.

Guiana Union Victory Wins Meany's Praise

Hearty congratulations for a "magnificent fight . . . in defense of democratic trade union principles" have been sent by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Pres. Richard Ishmael of the British Guiana Trades Union Congress following victory in what is reported to be the longest general strike in Latin American history.

The walkout was aimed at pro-Communist Prime Minister Cheddi B. Jagan and a bill he had introduced in Parliament which would have permitted the government to determine all bargaining agents. The strike was called when the measure passed its third reading and ended when Jagan agreed to withdraw the proposal and not reintroduce it.

"The BGTUC's non-violent and non-political attitude during the 11-week strike was inspiring to the free trade union world," Meany said in his cable to Ishmael.

As part of the settlement, Jagan—who has never been able to control the British Guiana labor movement and has backed an unsuccessful rival union center—agreed that no labor legislation will be submitted to Parliament for four months after it is next convened.

He yielded also to the BGTUC's proposal that machinery be set up to give it full consultative status on any proposed labor legislation that may be considered in the future.

The strike, which brought the country's economy to a standstill until Jagan's Communist followers took to the docks to load and unload Cuban and Russian ships under the protection of British troops, had widespread support from the free labor world.

Financial help was sent by the AFL-CIO, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, British Trades Union Congress, Canadian Labor Congress, many European and Latin American labor movements, and several international trade secretariats.

William Howard McCabe, a member of the State, County & Municipal Workers on the staff of the Public Service Intl., was assigned to give technical aid to the strike. He estimated the number who walked out at 57,000. Some 22,000 to 23,000 sugar workers and their families were able to keep themselves going through their annual bonus. The rest were maintained throughout the walkout by the BGTUC.

AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew McLellan served as coordinator of assistance efforts in Washington.

Mental Health Plan Offered For Industry

New York—Union leaders and employers have become increasingly aware of the relevance of mental health to productivity and production and "to a more harmonious employer-employe relationship," according to National Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

"When we begin to realize, however, that the end product of emotional well-being is emotional well-being," he added, "and that higher productivity and increased production are only byproducts—only then will mental health in industry come of age."

Perlis' views were stated in an article in the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, journal of the American Orthopsychiatric association.

He suggested an industrial mental health program to include:

- Prepaid, comprehensive medical and hospital insurance coverage, including what is necessary for mental health.
- Group practice, including inter-disciplinary teams of psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, sociologists and the like.
- Union-management sponsorship of the program outside the collective bargaining area.

Canada AEC Workers Pick Office Employes

Toronto, Ont.—Nearly 400 clerical workers employed by Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd., at Chalk River and Deep River, Ont., have voted for representation by the Office Employes.

The international union has chartered a new Local 404 to include administrative, clerical and medical employes and laboratory attendants. OEIU Vice Pres. William Lowe conducted the membership drive with help from local members and Rep. William England of the Canadian Labor Congress.

Scholarship Winners Accept Awards

MUNICIPAL HONORS were given Allen Thomson, Bisbee, Ariz., when he was presented with his AFL-CIO scholarship. Here he is with his mother, Mrs. C. A. Thomson, as he received his certificate from Arizona AFL-CIO Pres. Fred Rhodes (left) and Sec.-Treas. John Evans. His father, a member of the Railroad Signalmen, died three weeks earlier before the ceremony.

THE IOWA AFL-CIO gave a banquet to honor Craig Allen Peterson of Mason City, second Iowan to win an AFL-CIO scholarship. Shown with him are State AFL-CIO Pres. Charles L. Davis (left), Sec.-Treas. A. Jack Lewis, Executive Vice Pres. J. B. Mincks (right).

These six youngsters, the 1963 AFL-CIO scholarship award winners, will receive up to $1,500 a year—depending on individual need and actual expenses—while attending the colleges of their choice.

It is the fifth successive year the federation has awarded college scholarships to outstanding high school graduates who competed in tests given by the National Merit Scholarship Corp.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a letter to the scholarship recipients, expressed confidence that continuation of their education "will enrich our society" as well as develop the talents of the students.

The AFL-CIO, he added, "looks forward to the day when all young people will have the opportunity to develop the full measure of their capabilities, regardless of their financial status."

THE BIG SMILE attests that William S. Jacobs (center) of Atlanta has just received his scholarship certificate from Pres. W. H. Montague, Sr. (right), and Sec.-Treas. J. O. Moore of the Georgia State AFL-CIO at ceremonies in Atlanta.

SCHOLARSHIP WINNER Judy Carol White of Tulsa, Okla., is seen with (from left) Pres. Roy Tillman of the State AFL-CIO; Federation Reg. Dir. Woodrow G. Pendergrass; Sec.-Treas. C. E. Wilson of the Tulsa AFL-CIO; Rep. C. C. Callicoate of Operating Engineers Local 948, to which her father belongs, and Tulsa AFL-CIO Pres. Alva Hollingsworth.

THANKS FOR AFL-CIO SCHOLARSHIP was given to members of Local 1790, Textile Workers Union of America, by 16-year-old Renee Stern of New York. Ranged behind her are, from left, Pres. Daniel McDonough of the local; Carl Stern, Renee's proud father and a member of the local, and AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, who made the presentation speech.

COMMUNITY REPRESENTATIVES and labor folks honored Michael Ehrick of Findlay, O., when his scholarship was presented by Sec.-Treas. Elmer Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO. Looking on are Kenneth Higginbotham and Walter R. Shrider, co-chairmen.

Rockefeller's Service

GOV. NELSON ROCKEFELLER has performed a national service of the highest order in alerting the Republican Party to the "real danger of subversion by a radical, well financed, highly disciplined minority."

One can have reservations about Rockefeller's comment that the "destiny" of the Republican Party is to "save the nation by first saving itself." But if the American political system is to continue to function in a framework of democracy, it is vitally important that the Republican Party—or any political party—effectively eliminate the subversive elements that gnaw at the vitals of principle and morality.

The radical right, as Rockefeller correctly points out, is "every bit as dangerous to American principles and American institutions as the radical left." It must be rendered impotent as a politically effective force in the same manner that the radical left has been eliminated from American political life.

The New York governor's challenge to his own party must be answered by those who have indicated a willingness to work with the radical right in an amoral bid for victory in 1964 based on racism, sectionalism and reaction.

The Tax Elite

THE AMERICAN ECONOMY of the 1960s has been producing a high, chronic rate of unemployment and the sharpest growth in millionaires since the late 1920s.

These apparently contradictory trends—a 5.8 percent unemployment level for the first half of 1963 and 398 persons filing returns with the Internal Revenue Service for 1961 showing $1 million or more in income—are rooted in a tax system that is becoming increasingly inequitable and economically inefficient.

The IRS reports that 92 new names were added to the millionaires' list in 1961—the biggest increase since 1928, when the number spurted by 221. The largest portion of the earnings of the 398 millionaires came from the sale of stocks and property, transactions covered by the capital gains rate, which is much lower than the surtax rates on ordinary income.

The capital gains loopholes in the tax structure have been responsible for a shift in the distribution of income, starting in the mid 1950s, and the channeling of a larger share of the national wealth to those in the high income and asset brackets.

At the other end of the income scale, relatively high tax rates on persons with low and middle incomes prevent the build-up of purchasing power needed to maintain and expand economic growth. There are no capital gains or other loopholes for low and middle-income taxpayers.

Until Congress takes corrective action on the tax system, to reduce the impact on the lower brackets and close the glaring escape hatches for high income groups, the distribution of wealth in the U.S. will result in a growing number of millionaires, members of an elite through the courtesy of the government.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, July 20, 1963 No. 29

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Whoa!'

TUC Battles Britain, Egypt, Yemen:

Scrappy Arab Unionists Lead New Fight on Aden Colonialism

By Arnold Beichman

ADEN—ON 75 SQUARE MILES of sun-drenched land at the southern end of the Red Sea, 180,000 Arabs have been carrying on an anti-colonialist campaign which thus far has involved:

The United Nations, the Intl. Labor Organization, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the Confederation of Arab Trade Unions, the British Trades Union Congress, and the governments of Britain, Egypt and Yemen.

The name of the British colony is Aden and the campaign is led by the Aden Trades Union Congress, probably the scrappiest trade union anywhere in the Middle East, and certainly the most legitimate free trade union in the area.

It is one of the paradoxes of modern political life that free trade unions are to be found either in democratic countries or what is left of the British colonial empire. Aden is no exception, although at the moment the Aden TUC, an ICFTU affiliate, is barred from calling strikes or demonstrations by government decree.

This little enclave on the Arabian coast had only one genuine resource—a superb deepwater port at the halfway point on the main east-west trade routes from the West to Southeast Asia and the Far East. This geographical accident has made Aden a strategic outpost in a part of the world which seems to be one vast ocean of petroleum. Eighty percent of Britain's oil comes from this part of the Arab world and so Aden, with its vast refineries, has become an essential military base to Britain.

To the Adenis, Britain is an unwanted intruder. After more than a century of occupation, the local population feels that "the winds of change" which have blown over Africa and most of Asia ought to start blowing over South Arabia. That Aden's prosperity and relatively high-wage levels depend entirely on the British presence here is of little concern to the "independence now" Adenis.

The British rulers here have been willing to grant the population everything—except independence. The Aden TUC was godfathered by the British TUC and the Labor government at the end of World War II. It was a good job because the present Aden labor leaders are well-educated, politically intelligent and mature. Their trade unions are as genuine as any to be found in the free world and their claimed membership figure of 18,000 is endorsed by the government. The members pay dues regularly, some by checkoff and some by shop-steward collections.

Labor is wealthy enough to be building at the present time a new headquarters which, upon completion next year, will be a handsome, circular edifice budgeted at almost $90,000. The land site was given free to the Aden TUC by the government, but one labor official here, looking the gift horse squarely in the mouth, suggested that the government was hardly being generous since it was giving Adeni workers their own land.

At the moment, the Aden TUC is hemmed in by a series of ordinances and decrees which last year impelled the ICFTU to file a complaint against the British government with the ILO charging infringement of trade union rights. At issue was an ordinance establishing compulsory arbitration and a strike ban in all but a few exceptional circumstances.

This ordinance followed an uninterrupted series of strikes starting as far back as 1956. There is no doubt that in the last few years, the strikes have been politically motivated in that their aim has been to bring pressure on the British to grant independence to Aden. Last year there were 34 major strikes, involving 20,000 workers as against nine in 1961 when 4,000 workers were involved.

A NUMBER OF ADEN trade union leaders have been jailed, including Abdullah al Asnag, the TUC general secretary who also serves as assistant general secretary of the Confederation of Arab Trade Unions, Nassar's labor arm in the Middle East. This is not to sugggest, however, that Asnag is subservient to Egypt although Egypt supplies much financial and political aid to the Aden TUC.

Conversations with Adeni labor leaders here make it clear that while they regard Pres. Nasser as a great Arab leader they are not prepared to replace British rule with Egyptian domination.

Technically, the TUC is not in politics since there is a Peoples' Socialist Party which carries on the "independence now" battle. But in actual fact, the TUC and the PSP leaders are one and the same.

The Aden question has already been a matter of discussion and report by a UN committee and it is certain that at the next UN session, the General Assembly will call for Aden's independence. Since Britain is determined to rule as long as possible, observers here predict that unless negotiations about a time-table begin soon, the threat of violent struggle is very real.

Morgan Says:

Fight for Civil Rights is Keyed To Fight for Full Employment

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

RECENTLY A CREW working on a new building in New York City spied the Attorney General of the United States hurrying along the sidewalk below. "Hi Bobbie," they called down from a scaffold, "don't forget the Italians and the Irish, too."

Morgan

The meaning behind their good-natured greeting was no joke. What they were saying was, in effect, "remember the Negroes are not the only ones who have problems." Indeed, as the belated and urgently necessary thrust for Negroes' constitutional and social rights penetrates more deeply into the fabric and the consciousness of the American society, it will, inevitably, produce counteractions. These reactions are already beginning to appear. Collisions have already occurred between Negroes and groups of whites who see the former's grasp for fully human status as a threat to their very jobs and their own precarious position in this era of automation and shrinking opportunities, for unskilled work.

In Los Angeles representatives of the Mexican-American community met with the county commission on human relations to discuss the growing concern of Mexicans that employers, under pressure of the present civil rights crisis, might dislodge them to make room for Negroes. In Chicago, Detroit, New York, Pittsburgh and almost every other city in the land, Poles and Czechs, Germans and Yugoslavs, in fact anybody anywhere with any feeling of job insecurity, whatever the amalgam of his heritage, is bound to become restive and perhaps even defensively belligerent as the Negro presses his demand for first-class citizenship—for the sad, cruel fact is that other minority groups too often do not have more than second-class citizenship themselves.

The segregationists' solution to this problem is simply to "keep the Negro in his place." Alabama's Gov. George C. Wallace, a young man wedded to the 19th century, appeared before the Senate Commerce Committee to oppose the Kennedy Administration's civil rights legislation. Implicit in his testimony was the worn theme that if only the carpetbaggers and the Communists would stay away, the South would handle the Negro problem in the paternal, patronizing fashion it knew best.

By his own modest assessment, the governor seemed to be little short of an idol of the Negro population of his state. "Some of my closest and best friends," he declared at one point—but here the crowded hearing room burst into such a roar of laughter that the record may not show whether he was referring to Negroes.

Gov. Wallace gallantly and repeatedly conceded that "Alabama is no Utopia." But it was clear that he felt it was a more ideal place for Americans — presumably including Negroes — to live than virtually any other state in the union, with the possible exception of Mississippi. It was also clear that his concept of Utopia did not have room for the principles of freedom, equal opportunity and the rights of man on which this union was founded.

NOW THE KENNEDY Administration by contrast, though not exclusively peopled with paragons and the wisest of men, concedes with some candor that the civil rights crisis is loaded with difficulties and downright danger.

It is a pity that the Administration has not yet publicly acknowledged the fact emphatically enough that the fight for civil rights is tied intimately and inextricably to the fight for full employment and the nation's economic health. Although they wouldn't have put it in those words, that's what those New York construction workers were saying to Robert Kennedy. More to the point they were saying that they were being asked to be something more than human if they were expected to give up their jobs to Negroes.

The Administration is not asking this, of course—though this is precisely the kind of fear the segregationists have been peddling in whispering campaigns for generations.

The problem suddenly and clearly becomes the task of rejuvenating the entire country, of marrying social justice and economic growth in an atmosphere of expanding opportunity. This is a large, heady and—some will say—entirely too idealistic an order. But it is an order, I suggest, that will excite and appeal to more Americans than the thinly resurfaced Tobacco Road that Gov. Wallace and his friends choose as the segregated highway to the future.

Washington Reports:

U.S. Surpassed by Red Nations In Information, USIA Head Says

THE COMMUNIST NATIONS are many times as active as the United States in telling their story overseas, Edward R. Murrow, director of the U.S. Information Agency, reported in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations.

The Soviet Union's jamming system, Murrow gave as an example, "would have cost us $150 million a year if we were operating one." He compared this with the only slightly larger sum, $157.9 million, that the USIA asked for all its operations this fiscal year.

"In the field of books, last year they went from 30 million to 40 million in non-Communist bloc nations," said Murrow. "In addition, they caused to be published outside the Soviet Union about 100 million more. We were able to produce in translation fewer than 8 million books. Also, we are being out-broadcast by the Soviet Union and by Communist China."

Murrow declared that the House of Representatives cut $15 million from the proposed USIA appropriation this year, which, he said, may have been due "to the fact that people do not know what we are doing. Our budget can be cut with political impunity because we have no constituency, we have no lobby."

The $157.9 million for which the agency asked, asserted Murrow, "is just a little more than is spent on advertising tobacco in this country every year. It is about half what is spent for headache remedies."

Unless the Senate restores the cut in the USIA budget, Murrow said, "we will not be able to expand our book-publishing program in Latin America, we will not be able to expand—as we had planned—our television production all around the world.

"WHAT WE ARE TRYING to do is tell the story of this country, tell it honestly and tell it effectively. Money isn't going to guarantee success, but the lack of it is certainly going to jeopardize success."

Murrow reported that the USIA uses "every known instrument of communication. The Voice of America is the best known, but we also make movie and television films, send exhibits abroad, publish books in translation, operate a wireless file, a radio teletype circuit that moves 10,000 words each day to five geographic areas. We also bring into this country students and leaders of opinion, giving them a chance to see for themselves. . . .

"The real cutting edge of the operation is represented by our people abroad who sit and talk with newspaper editors, with broadcasters and explain American policy face to face."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES has been refreshed by another full-scale assault, by the Messrs. Griffin of Michigan and Landrum of Georgia, on what they call "disturbing patterns" in National Labor Relations Board decisions. Once again, as last year, Landrum and Griffin got a full-scale reply from Democrats on the House Labor Committee, who pointed out that the "old" board appointed by former Pres. Eisenhower was given a terriffic shellacking in the courts for its decisions, whereas the present board headed by Frank W. McCulloch is working carefully "to explore new remedies" that will encourage "the practices and procedures of collective bargaining."

The two board critics were co-sponsors of the original Landrum-Griffin amendments of 1959 to the Taft-Hartley Act. They thus speak with the special apparent authority of those who four years ago managed to get a Republican-southern Democratic coalition strong enough to carry their proposal on the House floor.

Two points should be made:

First, the final bill passed by Congress was substantially modified in House-Senate conference committee. It was not their bill approved by both houses, but a measure refined and clarified. It was not a bill to be welcomed, but the original intent of Messrs. Landrum and Griffin was watered down. They could not then, and have not yet, obtained majority support for their present program.

Second, their principal objective in their attacks on the NLRB is simply to undermine the board's reputation in the area of unfair labor practices.

Landrum and Griffin want to remove the NLRB's power to decide charges involving unfair labor practices and force unions and workers to try their cases in the federal courts—where the rules of evidence are different, where the judges have no special expertness in the practical operations of collective bargaining, where the dockets are clogged with thousands of other cases and delays would be interminable.

For 28 years—ever since the Wagner Act was passed—the basic assumption has been that the most effective way to administer the law, to effectuate the purpose of promoting free collective bargaining, was to operate through a special agency with expertness in the field, subject to judicial review for due process and misfires.

Congress has twice adopted major amendments—but never altered that basic assumption.

* * *

A STRANGE and wonderful thing has happened to the prices the Tennessee Valley Authority is compelled to pay for some of its equipment.

Four years ago, TVA Purchasing Dir. Paul Fahey said, five U.S. manufacturing firms made bids ranging from $205,600 to $233,544 per transformer. Three foreign companies offered bids of $107,000 to $141,000—and the successful bidder was an English firm, which won out despite shipping costs, import duties and "lower labor costs" involving a differential applied to the advantage of American firms.

This year, said Fahey, the latest transformer contract was awarded to Westinghouse Electric Co. at a price of $75,600 each—"for identical equipment."

Bids for five U.S. firms "were one-third to one-half of the prices they offered four years ago," and "all but one were below the successful foreign bid on the comparable 1959 contract."

The TVA purchasing director remarked that four years ago, the U.S. firms' bids were opened just a week before the agency "began publicizing questionable bidding practices by electrical equipment manufacturers."

Deadpan, Fahey pointed out that TVA spends from $3 million to $7 million a year for power transformers and continued:

"Whatever factors have caused the decrease in transformer prices levels—more efficient production methods, foreign competition, anti-trust enforcement, or simply the free market at work—it means large savings to TVA and the electric utility industry as a whole."

EDWARD R. MURROW, director of the U.S. Information Agency, declared "We are a first-rate power; we should speak with a first-rate voice abroad," as he was interviewed by Harry W. Flannery on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. Murrow said both the Soviet Union and Communist China are more active in telling their stories overseas than the U.S. is.

How to Buy:

High Rates, Gaps in Coverage Mark New '65' Health Policies

By Sidney Margolius

PREVIOUSLY WE REPORTED that booming medical fees—inflated largely by the very indemnity insurance they are supposed to pay—have created a new crisis in medical care.

Indemnity insurance provides specific allowances, such as $15 a day toward hospital care, or up to $150 for hospital extras. But as doctors and hospitals have raised their fees beyond these allowances, the medical poverty of such groups as retired people, who usually have little or no medical insurance, especially have been heightened.

Now, with labor unions and many consumer co-ops urging passage of the Anderson-King bill to provide hospital insurance for the elderly under social security, the private insurance companies have come up with their own plans. These are the "Over-65," "Plus-65," "Golden 65" and similar policies being heavily advertised in various areas.

In particular, a number of insurance companies have joined together to offer "pooled coverage" for people over 65. These new "65 plans" are what a leading insurance company executive calls the "industry's answer to socialized insurance."

Ignoring the loaded remark about "socialized insurance," the new "65 plans" are a noticeably inadequate answer to the pleas of senior citizens and community organizations that Congress allow at least minimum health insurance under social security.

Even though the new plans may be the best the insurance industry yet has to offer to older people, a study by this writer, in consultation with actuaries and other experts, finds holes big enough to bankrupt a moderate-income elderly couple. In fact, even several other existing alternatives may be preferable.

This is not to say that you should not consider the "65 plans." It is to say that these plans still do not provide adequate coverage at a price most older citizens can afford, and that you ought to look over the other possibilities, whether seeking such insurance for yourself or an elderly relative.

THE POOLED "65 PLANS" organized by groups of insurance companies, already have been offered in Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York. It is expected that soon they will be offered on a regional basis in the other New England states, and in other states such as Michigan when state legislatures give the necessary approval.

The way the pooled plans work, an initial "open enrollment" period, usually two weeks or a month, allows anyone 65 or over to join without a physical examination. The policies offered are usually a basic hospital plan, and a "major medical" plan to cover unusual expenses. You can buy either or both. For example, if an older citizen already has Blue Cross hospital insurance, he can buy the industry's pooled "major medical" policy to pay for unusual medical expenses.

Two big defects are the cost of the policies, and the noticeable gaps in the insurance they provide.

In Massachusetts, for example, the "65 plans" were offered at $9 a person for the basic hospital insurance, and $17.50 for the total package including "major medical" insurance. In New York, the insurance industry offered another version at $10 a month for partial hospital insurance plus partial payments for surgery and doctor fees.

EVEN IF YOU COULD afford to spend this much for health insurance, you would find that the insurance itself is limited.

But an even bigger hole is the limit on hospital miscellaneous charges. The "65 plans" allow only a maximum of $150. In comparison, hospital "extras" have reached the point where they now cost almost as much as room and board. The survey of older citizens' expenses in New York found that the average hospital stay was a little over 13 days; the board bill was $364 and the charge for extras, $240.

To their credit, the new pooled plans do offer the period of open enrollment with no medical exam.

Until Congress finally heeds the pleas for basic health insurance under social security, it is necessary to select from a number of alternatives, none wholly adequate:

- If your union-employer welfare plan permits continued coverage after retirement, by all means take advantage of it.
- If not, consider Blue Cross with or without Blue Shield as your next best bet, if you can get in. Often you will find that Blue Cross either is cheaper than the "65 plans" or, where the cost is about the same, Blue Cross offers wider basic coverage.
- If you can't get into Blue Cross, and can't afford the new "65 plan" when it gets to your area, several low-cost policies are offered, as the "Golden 65" policy of Continental Casualty Co., at $6.50 a month, or the similar policy offered by the American Association of Retired Persons, 711 14th St. N.W., Washington, D. C., at $6. These are low in cost, but also limited in benefits, paying only $10 a day for hospital board and up to $100 for extras, plus a schedule of moderate allowances for surgery.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS were among first to get cars inspected in fourth annual free safety check conducted by Highway Employes Local 1011 of State, County & Municipal Employes in St. Paul, Minn. Mechanics and central office workers manned three lanes to check 10 items on each car, rejected 32 percent of autos for burned-out lights and other defects. Left to right above, Edward Pasch and Richard Schultz of Local 1011, and Safety Dir. Garnet Hall of Highway Dept., who praised union for showing way to 70 other Minnesota communities.

Group Health Booklet Out:

Major Role Seen for Prepaid Health Care

A VIRTUAL "EXPLOSION of medical knowledge" during the past 30 years, together with changes in the national economy, is producing the basis for vast changes in the way America provides health services for its people.

In this situation, group health prepayment plans appear increasingly to be recognized as the "medical care of the future," the Group Health Association of America says in a new pamphlet discussing the growing role of prepaid group health plans in the broad context of American medical care.

The GHAA publication notes that in scarcely more than three decades the prepaid group practice movement has generated widespread interest and developed stature in many communities in the United States and Canada. The reason for this growth, the brochure suggests, lies in the demonstrated ability of group practice prepayment plans to provide high quality medical care, to offer more efficient and economic methods of utilizing medical skills and health facilities, and to meet successfully the health care needs of numerous consumers.

Group medical practice is a system, the brochure explains, under which "the consumer receives comprehensive medical service from family physicians, specialists and other professional and technical staff working as a team in the medical center."

The doctors pool knowledge, experience, equipment and records, and they share responsibility for the care of the patients. The group income is distributed through salary, partnership or some other pre-arranged plan; as a result, no member of the medical group has a personal financial interest or stake in any particular patient or type of treatment.

The health care programs in which GHAA is primarily interested subscribe to the principles of prepayment of the cost of health care, group practice of medicine, comprehensive care of high quality directed by professional personnel, and control of general policy and administrative function by or in the interest of consumers.

Prepaid group practice offers a "proven solution" to many of the problems involved in providing adequate and economical medical care for employes of business and industry, a field in which both labor and management have found dissatisfaction with other types of health care arrangements, the GHAA publication notes.

Furthermore, it says, group health plans offer to physicians "the satisfaction and efficiency of constructive professional collaboration," and "for society as a whole, it makes more efficient use of skilled health personnel and of costly facilities."

The brochure cites five facts which it says offer major challenges to our society and our medical system:

- "A body of new medical knowledge and techniques for the prevention and treatment of disease and disability that were undreamed of at the turn of the century.
- "A revolution in public attitude from one of indifference to one of firm belief in the individual's right to health.
- "A rising demand for health services, coupled with willingness and the means to pay for comprehensive care.
- "The growth of prepayment insurance, and of labor-management health funds and benefit programs to help budget and spread the cost of medical care.
- "The growth of group medical practice to apply the new medical knowledge in providing comprehensive health service to people."

Copies of the brochure may be obtained from the Group Health Association of America, 704 17th St. N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Movie Stars, Board Chairmen Have Terrible Troubles Too

By Jane Goodsell

LIFE IS FULL of heartbreak and sorrow, and all of us have our troubles. Take, for example, these poignantly sad newspaper stories that can't help but bring tears to your eyes:

"GLAMOROUS MOVIE STARLET Joni LaRue has her beauty problems, too. In an exclusive interview, Miss LaRue admitted that her eyelashes are a dreadful source of embarrassment to her. 'They're so long and so thick,' Miss LaRue confessed frankly, 'that I have to have them cut and thinned regularly.' She also admitted that it is impossible to buy ready-made clothes to fit her 39-22-35 figure. 'I'm just not built like the average, easy-to-fit woman,' Joni admitted candidly, 'and I have to order all my clothes made especially for me. It's an awful nuisance.' "

* * *

"John McRittenhouse, chairman of the board of the Allied Pickle Corp., claimed today that he could scarcely make ends meet on his annual salary of $210,000. 'The confiscatory tax situation in my income bracket,' said Mr. McRittenhouse, 'leaves me practically insolvent. In order to maintain my family in reasonable comfort, I am forced to dip into capital.' "

* * *

"GOLDILOCKS O'TOOLE, 250-pound wrestler who recently knocked out a photographer and smashed his camera, which contained films of O'Toole without his hairpiece, admitted today that he was sorry. 'I have personality problems' said O'Toole, 'which stem from feelings of rejection that I suffered in my childhood. Basically, I'm a sensitive and insecure person.' "

* * *

"Simone Gigot, 16-year-old French authoress whose most recent book, 'Diary of a Nymphomaniac,' has attracted worldwide attention, was recognized today by a news photographer as she walked a brace of pet cheetahs down New York's Fifth Avenue. Wearing paratrooper boots, skinny pink hip-rider pants and a black alligator sweater, Miss Gigot pleaded for anonymity.

" 'I'm very shy,' she said, 'and I detest personal publicity. I want to wander, alone and unrecognized, through the streets of New York. Please,' she said wistfully, 'please don't invade my privacy.' "

Schnitzler Lists Problems:

Potters' Aid Urged On Emerging Issues

Las Vegas—The 69th convention of the Operative Potters opened here with Pres. E. L. Wheatley presiding as delegates heard a call for action by unionists from AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

The 220 delegates heard Schnitzler recount the accomplishments of organized labor, such as minimum wages, free public schools, unemployment insurance and social security. Pointing to the soaring birth rate and the statistics which project a U.S. population of 235 million by 1975, he declared:

"This nation is going to need such items as mass transit, more and better schools, more hospitals, water and sewage systems, recreational facilities, libraries and massive projects based on needs for urban renewal. We in organized labor seek these desirable ends for all the people of the nation, as we have historically in the past.

"We need to seek tax cuts and medical care for the aged under social security. To do all these things we must have the active support of the many smaller internationals such as yours. Such small union groups built today's massive institution of organized workers, the outstanding organization dedicated to advancement of humanity in the nation."

Appearing on the first day's program were local and state labor and government officials who welcomed the Potters' convention. With the possible exception of a resolution to change annual conventions to biennial in order to free more of the international's funds for organizing efforts, no serious floor contests are expected.

Two-Year Conventions

Pres. Wheatley in his keynote address pointed up the desirability of making the change to conventions held every two years. Annual conventions, he said, constitute "a tremendous drain on the financial resources of the international and the local unions" and pointed out that the vast majority of AFL-CIO affiliates hold conventions at periods of from two to four years.

Wheatley remarked that if collective bargaining contracts can be written for as long as three years, "I cannot fathom the reasoning for the Potters meeting in convention each year."

He also stressed the support the union has given the civil rights movement as initiated by the Kennedy Administration and pointed out that the international has had, for years, a prohibition against any kind of discrimination in its constitution.

Delegates were expected to pass on 56 printed resolutions, plus what may arise on the floor. No international elections were scheduled at the convention.

A UNION LABEL FASHION SHOW was one of the features of the recent South Carolina State AFL-CIO convention in Charleston. The show was produced by Local 503 of the Clothing Workers. Participating were (from left): Argent Padgett, Melissa Wood, Juliette Seabrook, Carry Gathers, June Laudermilk, Joe Ferguson, David Jarrell, Ophelia Domonick, Gerald Herring, Lottie Mae Mizzell, Ruth Douglas, Jerry Green, Catherine Sweat, Lucy Manning, Anita Driggers, and Sarah Bloom, ACWA union label regional director. Kneeling in front is Jerry Roach. Clothes that were modeled were donated by Manhattan Shirt Co. and Shawnee Manufacturing Co.

California Special Session Asked To Reconsider Budget Slashes

Sacramento—California's legislature went back to work in special session after winding up a six-month regular session that left everybody but business groups unhappy and angry.

Gov. Edmund Brown, angered by defeat of his tax plans and the manhandling of his budget, called the hard-pressed legislators back to do something about school, social welfare and health appropriations that had been slashed in an eleventh-hour assault on the budget.

Schools were hardest hit by the last-hour cuts, being deprived of a $100 million increase in funds over the next two years. Other deletions affected mental health services for children, aid for local mental health clinics, assistance for crippled children, hospital construction and what the govenor called "many, many other urgently needed services."

Brown charged "a minority of Senate members, catering to a handful of corporate interests," with blocking his tax reform proposals and precipitating the budget-slashing spree. He singled out the state Chamber of Commerce and Standard Oil of California for the leading role in scuttling proposals to speed up payments of corporate and personal income taxes.

The angry climax of the regular session, too, saw organized labor's legislative program go down the drain. Apart from a fair housing bill enacted in the last five minutes, labor had little to show from the six-month session. The California AFL-CIO described it as one of "inaction in the broad field of labor legislation" and "the most unproductive in recent years."

No Funds Provided

Even after passage of the relatively tough fair housing law, funds for enforcing the law were lost in the scuffle over the governor's tax proposals. The same fate befell a commission to study the impact of automation. The commission was authorized but its funds refused.

Labor won some improvements in the state's welfare program, one extending Aid to Needy Children benefits to families whose breadwinner is unemployed. It also won a full employment law requiring an annual report on the state's economy and recommendations for stimulating employment.

Apart from increases in the bottom brackets of unemployment and disability insurance benefits, these two programs were left virtually untouched.

Proposals for improvements in workmen's compensation went down the drain, too, including a rehabilitation program for injured workers and a new administrative division to aid workers in claiming their rights under the law.

In the consumer field, most labor-supported proposals were defeated except two: one imposes restrictions on deficiency judgments which until now have often forced debtors to pay for merchandise after it has been repossessed; the second requires advance notice of intention to attach a worker's pay.

Repeal Refused

The casualty list was long. The legislature turned down bills establishing representation election procedures in intrastate business and in hospitals and collective bargaining rights for teachers. It refused to repeal the jurisdictional strike act or even the "hot cargo" law which was declared unconstitutional years ago.

The legislature also rejected an anti-strikebreaker bill, a truth-in-lending measure, a law limiting court injunctions in labor disputes, a statewide minimum wage. Salary increases and the prevailing wage principle for state employes also were dumped.

Higher 'White Collar' Pay Tests Proposed

The Labor Dept. has proposed new minimum salary tests governing the exemption of white collar employes from overtime pay provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Under the law, executive, administrative and professional employes of covered firms are exempt from the overtime pay requirements if their salaries are above certain minimum levels and if they meet certain other tests of job duties.

The new, higher salary tests, if adopted as proposed, would become effective Sept. 3, when the federal minimum wage is scheduled to rise to $1.25 an hour for employes in most covered establishments and to $1.15 for retail and service employes brought under the act for the first time in 1961. Meanwhile, interested parties have 30 days in which to present their views to the Labor Dept.'s Wage & Hour & Public Contracts Divisions.

The proposed revisions would set the minimum salary tests for other than retail or service employes at $100 a week for executive and administrative employes, $115 a week for professional personnel, and $150 a week for exemption of such employes under a streamlined test of duties—the so-called "upset" rate.

Present regulations set minimums of $80 for executives, $95 for administrative and professional personnel and $125 for the "upset" rate.

In retail and service, the proposals call for setting the minimums first at $80 for executive and administrative employes, $95 for professionals and $125 for the "upset" rate. As of Sept. 3, 1965, these tests would be increased to match those for employes in other industries.

The AFL-CIO and other union representatives, in hearings leading up to the issuance of the proposed revisions, urged that the salary tests be increased to $125 for executives, $150 for administrative and professional personnel and $200 for the "upset" rate, with no distinction between retail and other employes.

State, County Okays Start On Housing

Boston—State, County & Municipal Employes will break ground next month for a $2.366 million apartment development to house low and moderate-income families displaced by urban renewal projects.

The 226-suite development in suburban Malden, Mass., will be financed under a section of the National Housing Act enabling the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages fully on non-profit developments, AFSCME Pres. Arnold S. Zander said.

The Malden development will be the seventh the union has built under the FHA program. Suites will be rented, as in all AFSCME-sponsored housing, on an open-occupancy, non-discriminatory basis. Rents will be approximately $65 a month for a one-bedroom apartment, $78 for two bedrooms, $90 for three.

Construction will start, Zander said, as soon as contracts assuring full union construction can be let.

Other projects are in Milwaukee and Madison, Wis.; Los Angeles; and Santurce, Puerto Rico. An unusual feature of all is that the union does not take advantage of its non-profit status but pays full real estate taxes out of a sense of civic responsibility and because "taxes pay our wages."

Zander said the union has tried to live up to the housing mandate of the last AFL-CIO convention.

Unions Launch Drive on Labor Day Death Toll

Washington—The fifth annual nationwide campaign to reduce the toll of accidents over the Labor Day weekend has been launched by the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Safety & Occupational Health in cooperation with the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council.

The need for the drive is pointed up by the fact that after three years of a declining accident toll during the annual holiday period, death and injury figures jumped sharply in 1962.

Last year 678 men, women and children—many of them members of AFL-CIO affiliates—were killed during labor's own holiday—501 on the road, 57 by drowning, 23 in boating tragedies and 97 from miscellaneous causes.

Chairman of this year's Safety Campaign Committee is Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

"I strongly endorse our 1963 Labor Day Safety Campaign," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wrote the presidents of international unions, "and urge you to cooperate by enlisting the assistance and active participation of all your affiliates in this very worthwhile campaign.

"Success in eliminating unnecessary injuries and deaths during the coming Labor Day three-day holiday depends on the broadest possible participation at the grass roots by all of our unions."

Meany has sent a similar letter to the officers of state and city central bodies. He asked them and the presidents of affiliates to circularize their locals to stimulate participation.

"We will all be proud and happy on Sept. 3," he added, "if through our mutually coordinated efforts the Labor Day weekend this year results in dramatic decrease in the unnecessary loss of lives among our members and their wives and children."

Hunter P. Wharton, chairman of the NSC Labor Conference and president of the Operating Engineers, has urged international union representatives who serve on the Labor Conference to join in promoting the observance.

Available for distribution to locals through their internationals are promotional fliers which briefly explain the campaign and provide a mailing label in duplicate through which the local can order a packet of booklets and guide to assist it in carrying the safety message to its members. Orders must be received before Aug. 1 at NSC headquarters, 425 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago 11, Ill.

The packet also contains an application for a certificate of recognition which can be earned by a union or an individual who does an outstanding job of promotion during the campaign.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

HIGHLIGHT OF WASHINGTON TOUR by some 600 members of the Ladies' Garment Workers from the union's Central Pennsylvania District included addresses by Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.), above, Rep. George Rhodes (D-Pa.), Assistant Labor Sec. James J. Reynolds and other Labor Dept. officials. The ILGWU members traveled to Washington in 17 buses for their tour of the Nation's Capital.

Guild Launches Drive On Bias in Newspapers

Philadelphia, Pa.—A multi-pronged program to eliminate racial discrimination in the newspaper industry was launched by the Newspaper Guild at its 30th annual convention here.

The convention recommended that top Guild officers meet with officers of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and other employer groups to draft a joint "program of action to eradicate racial discrimination" in accordance with the joint labor-management campaign of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

The Guild urged its locals to seek similar meetings with publishers on the local level. If necessary, it said, locals should seek the help of the President's committee and bring racial discrimination by publishers to public attention through informational picketing.

The convention suggested that the subject of equal opportunity be placed on the agenda of a forthcoming collective bargaining conference between newspaper union representatives and publishers, to be held under sponsorship of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions at Santa Barbara, Calif., in September.

It urged "a realistic, down-to-earth, meaningful program" aimed at ending discrimination in hiring but at developing apprentice training and other measures to upgrade minority-group employes.

Peaceful Actions Backed

In an accompanying resolution on civil rights, the Guild "wholeheartedly" supported "peaceful demonstrations by responsible organizations" to eliminate discrimination and segregation. It condemned any congressional filibuster against Pres. Kennedy's civil rights program and called upon Congress to take "immediate and positive action."

The convention warned against attempts to divert locals from "the path and goals of collective bargaining" by means of "new approaches" to union-management relations. While welcoming overtures to such approaches made in the wake of last winter's New York and Cleveland newspaper strikes, the convention insisted that "any such approaches" must "lead to attainment of our members' goals."

The Guild rejected "the cry that collective bargaining has failed."

"It has brought us strains," the convention declared. "But it has been the only path to achievement."

Taking note of the increasing role of automation in the newspaper industry, the convention recommended that the Guild's executive board institute "a study in depth" of the extent and effect of newspaper automation and "the collective bargaining remedies—both old and new"—that can be used to meet it.

The Guild urged two steps to restore the balance between unions and employers in NLRB proceedings.

It asked Congress to reinstate the NLRB's right to hold pre-hearing elections in order to eliminate "undue delays" between the filing of representation petitions and NLRB elections. And it urged the board to restore its old rule requiring an employer to grant a union equal time to address employes inside the plant when the employer has utilized his control of the plant to deliver an anti-union message to a "captive audience."

Finance Study

Noting depletion of the Guild's Intl. Defense Fund by the strikes in New York, Cleveland and elsewhere, the convention authorized appointment of a special study committee to examine the structure of its strike-lockout assessment schedule and benefit policies and report to the Guild's 1964 convention in Long Beach, Calif.

The study was authorized as an alternative to an executive board proposal that would have increased the assessment schedule from a $3-a-month top to a maximum payment of $6. It was substituted, by a 257 7/12-150 5/12 rollcall vote, for a modified proposal that would have provided for a $5 top.

Another executive board proposal calling for a study of the desirability of changing from annual to biennial conventions was defeated in committee and did not reach the convention floor.

The Guild's three top officers—Pres. Arthur Rosenstock, Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson and Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr.—were re-elected without opposition, as were five incumbent regional vice presidents. A sixth, Eric R. I. Cawdron of Ottawa, Ont., retired in favor of William H. McLeman, president of the Vancouver Guild.

A membership referendum will be held to fill six at-large vice presidencies, with Noel Wical, a leader of last winter's Cleveland newspaper strike, competing against six incumbents.

Rail Firemen Speed Parley At Deadline

St. Louis—Delegates to the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen convention here moved swiftly through a crowded agenda, with an eye on the approaching deadline in the work rules dispute. The convention, usually in session for many weeks, was working toward a July 23 adjournment goal.

To succeed retiring Samuel C. Phillips as assistant president—the union's second highest post—delegates elected M. W. Hampton on the first ballot in a three-way race with two other incumbent vice presidents, Homer L. Ellis and Don A. Miller.

Immediately afterward the convention unanimously re-elected Ellis and Miller vice presidents.

In other action, the delegates:

- Approved a recommendation by Pres. H. E. Gilbert that the union drop its 90-year-old monthly magazine and expand the Enginemen's Press, now published every two weeks, into a larger weekly newspaper.
- Rejected Gilbert's recommendation that the number of vice presidents be reduced from 14 to 10.

In major convention addresses, solidarity of all rail unions in the work rules dispute was emphasized by Michael Fox, vice chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association and head of the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept., and R. E. Davidson, grand chief of the Locomotive Engineers.

Texas Meetings Shun Struck Hotel

El Paso, Texas—First order of business at the convention of 200 Texas plumbing inspectors here was approval of their officers' action in moving the site of the parley from the strike-bound Hilton Hotel to the Cortez Hotel.

Members of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers, out since April 18 for higher wages in a first contract, have asked members of the First Cavalry Division Association, scheduled to meet here Aug. 23, to take similar action. Others who have supported the strikers include Texas members of the Railroad Trainmen, who refused to cross the picket line.

Cleveland ILG Unit Fetes Mrs. Gardiner

Cleveland—Bernadine Gardiner's 27 years of service as an officer of the Ladies' Garment Workers won a salute here at a dinner by members of the Cleveland Knitgoods Council. Mrs. Gardiner has been council manager for 22 years.

Speirs Reports to Convention:

Switchmen Asked For Merger Views

Buffalo, N.Y.—Pres. Neil P. Speirs of the Switchmen has asked the 350 delegates to the union's quadrennial convention here whether their officers should continue to explore the possibility of amalgamating with the Conductors & Brakemen.

Pointing out that railroad unions have been hard hit by the sharp decline in industry employment, he noted that the Switchmen's board saw amalgamation as a possible means of strengthening both unions.

The two 18,000-member unions have held exploratory talks, said Speirs, but continuation of the discussions would be "a subject for action" by the convention. Any final approval of amalgamation would require a membership referendum, he stated.

In his opening report to the convention Speirs noted that the union had made major wage gains in recent years but faces a continuing struggle to protect jobs threatened both by rail management's work rule demands and by railroad mergers.

Pressures Hit

Speirs rapped government intervention in the rail dispute, including what he termed "more and more White House pressures, either directly or through the Secretary of Labor."

He also attacked "alarming increases" in court injunctions in labor disputes, which he said prevented unions "from employing economic force at the appropriate point in collective bargaining negotiations."

Referring to the rapid spread of railroad mergers, Speirs told the delegates:

"You may think it's not a problem on your railroad. There is no such thing as a railroad where it is not a problem. We as a union can be merged out of business if the pattern continues."

Rail management's attack on its workers as "featherbedders" was described as "sleazy" by a government official who addressed the convention.

Ass't. Sec. of Labor Daniel P. Moynihan noted that railroad output per employe man-hour rose 78 percent between 1947 and 1961, more than twice the increase in non-farm industry as a whole.

"As a result of this achievement," he said, "railroad workers have sustained the disappearance of almost 700,000 jobs. To their credit, they went through this brutal experience without striking, without seeking special interest legislation, and especially without turning into bitter, alienated outcasts.

"In light of this," Moynihan added, "the introduction of the word 'featherbedding' into the work rules dispute was a pretty sleazy way of repaying American workers for what they have done for their country."

Moynihan expressed hope that the work rules dispute could still be settled through collective bargaining, declaring:

"The alternative to a voluntary decision will be an imposed decision—and that would be a terrible thing. It would result in a blow to pride, a loss of liberty, a failure all around."

House Coalition Kills 'Public Defender' Plan

A coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee killed a labor-supported Administration bill authorizing federal courts to set up a "public defender" system for needy defendants and adopted a weaker GOP substitute.

The committee-approved bill, sponsored by Rep. Arch A. Moore, Jr., (R-W. Va.), includes some elements of the Administration proposal. It would authorize payments for lawyers, assigned by courts or drawn from bar association or legal aid rosters, who represent indigent defendants. At present lawyers so assigned by federal courts are not compensated.

Stripped from the Administration proposal, however, was a provision authorizing each U.S. judicial district to appoint a full-time or part-time federal public defender and assistants.

Public defender legislation has been approved by the Senate in each of the last three Congresses, but has died in the House. The Senate Judiciary Committee, on July 10, reported favorably the Administration bill

In other congressional developments:

- The House Foreign Affairs Committee, continuing its closed-door review of the foreign aid authorization bill, voted tentatively to cut $430 million from the President's $4.5 billion request. In testimony before both House and Senate committees, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had declared that America's interests require more, not less, aid to the free world.
- An Administration-supported bill to extend the wartime Sedition Act to cover "seditious" statements made by Americans in other countries was approved 338-40.

8 Steel Firms Charged with Price-Fixing

New York—Eight companies which manufacture and sell most of the steel castings produced in the United States have been indicted by a federal grand jury here on charges of illegally conspiring to rig prices.

Also indicted on criminal anti-trust charges were nine company officials—including two who were fined after pleading no-contest on other anti-trust charges last October—who are alleged to have met monthly in hotels in various cities to set prices and exchange information on bids.

The indictment declared that the price-fixing conspiracy was carried on at least between 1956 and 1961, with the result that purchasers were deprived of the benefits of free competition.

Three of the firms—Bethlehem, Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton, and Erie Forge & Steel—are also defendants in one or more of a series of anti-trust indictments, returned during the past 15 months, dealing with other steel products.

Also charged in the new indictment are Blaw-Knox Co., Textron, Inc., General Steel Industries, Penn Steel Castings Co., and Birdsboro Corp.

Major Shift in Emphasis:

Training Act Change Urged To Aid 'Hard Core' Jobless

By David L. Perlman

A major shift in emphasis in the year-old Manpower Development & Training Act, to give more help to the "hard core" of the nation's unemployed, has been urged on Congress.

The "hard-core" group, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told legislators, includes hundreds of thousands whose lack of a basic education disqualifies them for existing training programs, plus teen-age school dropouts who have the highest rate of joblessness.

Testifying before both the House and Senate subcommittees in parallel hearings, Biemiller also joined Administration officials in warning that the entire fledgling training program "is threatened with annihiliation" unless Congress amends the law to knock out the requirement on states to match federal training funds starting next July 1.

Only four states have adopted enabling legislation, Biemiller noted, and only Tennessee and Montana have actually appropriated the matching funds. With few legislatures meeting next year, congressional action to continue the program with federal funds is "a life or death" matter, he emphasized.

Biemiller testified July 16 before a House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.) and on July 18 before the counterpart Senate group under Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). He was accompanied by AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger.

Basic Training Needed

When the training act was passed last year, Biemiller said, "insufficient attention" was given to the problem of training persons who lack basic facility in reading, writing and arithmetic. These elementary skills, he emphasized, are even more essential in the expanding service industries than in the dwindling number of factory production jobs.

He endorsed the Administration proposal for up to an additional year of educational training, and said it should not be limited to persons who meet the technical definition of "functional illiteracy."

Biemiller also strongly supported earmarking a larger portion of training funds—presently limited to 5 percent—for youth programs. He said he preferred a 20 percent figure, proposed in a bill by Holland, to the 15 percent suggested by the Administration. He endorsed lowering the minimum age at which the $20 youth training allowance may be paid from 19 to 16.

Moving Expenses

In addition, it would "make a lot of sense," Biemiller declared, for the government to pay relocation allowances to help unemployed persons and their families move to areas of job opportunity. Relocation, he pointed out, "takes money that the average worker—especially the unemployed worker—does not have."

Biemiller also proposed to the subcommittees these additional amendments to the retraining program:

- A provision that no training program shall be undertaken until it has been established that there are no unemployed workers with the necessary skills who are prepared to accept employment in the locality where the vacancies exist.
- An increased training allowance—"perhaps two-thirds of the going rate for the occupation for which the individual is being trained" — which would enable many more workers to enter and remain in a training program. "It is simply impossible to support a family over a period of months on the training allowances" now provided, which are keyed to the average unemployment compensation payment in the trainee's state, he testified.
- Establishment of labor-management committees at all state and community levels. Such committees are "encouraged" but not required under present legislation.

Biemiller emphasized to the subcommittees that the "basic need" is still for more jobs.

"Unless we have more jobs for which to train people, training programs will leave us with a better trained work force—but still unemployed."

In earlier testimony, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared that the present training program has been "skimming off" the better educated, most easily employable portion of the unemployed, "leaving as an even harder hard-core of unemployment the least schooled, least likely to succeed group."

The Administration's proposed amendments, he said, "will open the door of training opportunity wider for these workers."

Wirtz said the teenagers and other youth now flooding into the job search "are just the vanguard of an unprecedented and unparalleled number, 26 million, of new workers coming on the job market this decade."

Urging approval of the Administration's expanded training goals, Wirtz said that under the present program "we have not succeeded in reaching this group which is so desperately in need of marketable skills."

THE GOVERNMENT'S fledgling retraining program must be revamped to meet the needs of the "hard core" of the jobless, the AFL-CIO told House and Senate subcommittees considering improvements in the law. Shown with Chairman Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.) of the House unit are AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, left, and Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, right.

Recession Threat Seen In Interest Rate Hike

(Continued from Page 1)

then the discount rate must also rise. Otherwise banks can borrow from the FRB and reinvest the money at a higher rate.

Goldfinger stressed that all interest will feel the impact of the discount rate to 3.5 percent. The immediate impact will hit businesses seeking to borrow funds for intermediate or long-range needs and eventually the higher discount rate will affect all borrowing.

Early reactions indicate, he said, that banks will be more selective in making loans at the prime rate—the rate given business firms with the highest credit ratings.

On the point that the discount rate increase was needed to help the government meet the balance of payments problem, Goldfinger said there were other ways of handling the payments problem without slowing down the domestic economy and posing the danger of recession by tightening credit flow.

In his letter to Martin, Meany wrote:

"Contraction of money and credit in an under-employed economy has proved too dangerous, too often, in the past. We hope that the Federal Reserve System is not embarking on a course of tighter money and a general rise in the structure of interest rates, including long-term rates, at a time of high unemployment."

It is the AFL-CIO's conviction, Meany stressed, that "expansionary money and credit policies are in order." The unemployment rate in the first half of 1963 was 5.8 percent, the federation president noted, "and there is no sign of a significant decline of joblessness in the coming months."

Impair Solution

If the Federal Reserve "has decided to move to tighter money and a high level of interest rates," Meany added, we believe it will impair solution of "large-scale unemployment and persistent under-utilization of plants and machines."

Three factors in the current monetary situation "cause special concern" to the AFL-CIO, Meany wrote:

- The Federal Reserve has allowed free reserves of the commercial banking system to reach the lowest level in three years.
- The reports of a possible rise of the discount rate "cause uneasiness about future economic trends." Any increase in the rate can tend to push up other interest rates and a rise in long-term rates "will discourage the expansion of sales, production and employment."
- Reports that balance of payments considerations require tighter money policies are "further cause for concern." The increased unemployment and general slack in the economy that would result from higher interest rates "are too great a price to pay for a possible and only temporary reduction" of the balance of payments problem. Other approaches are needed "that will not sacrifice the health of our domestic economy."

Interest Rate Hike 'Incredible'—Reuther

The Federal Reserve Board's lifting of the discount rate is "incredible" in the face of current high unemployment rates, Walter P. Reuther, president of the Industrial Union Dept. declared.

"Regardless of its explanation, FRB action will eventually drive up the cost of money to home buyers, those who buy on installment credit, and small businessmen. It will inevitably have an adverse effect upon economic activity," Reuther said.

Rail Report Headed for President

(Continued from Page 1)

G. E. Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association and president of the Railroad Telegraphers, was named by Pres. Kennedy to take the place of George M. Harrison, chief executive of the Railway Clerks, who was unable to participate in the panel because of illness.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is the other member of the fact-finding group from labor ranks. Management representatives are Joseph L. Block, board chairman of Inland Steel, and Norfolk & Western Railway Pres. Stuart T. Saunders. Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz is chairman of the panel and Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges is vice chairman.

Factory Pay Hits High —For Those with Jobs

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's economic paradox sharpened in June as record overtime pushed the average weekly pay of factory production workers over $100 for the first time while unemployment levels remained critically high.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz issued this statement as the Labor Dept.'s detailed job report for June showed continued improvement in non-farm payrolls:

"The general comfort implicit in 70 million jobs and a $100-a-week factory wage must not . . . blind us to an unemployment rate that has remained above 5 percent since November 1957, to a youth unemployment rate of 16 percent that burns with a continuously hotter—and shorter—fuse, and to the heavy and disproportionate burden of unemployment that discrimination—past and present—has placed on the backs of a large segment of our citizenry.

"The record levels of employment and income we achieved in June," Wirtz continued, "offer the means to achieve the larger purposes of our society to which we are committed: full employment, equality of opportunity, elimination of poverty, improvement of educational facilities and opportunities, regeneration of urban areas and development of chronically ailing economic regions.

"We can achieve those purposes, if we will to do so."

The Labor Dept.'s earlier summary job report showed a rise of 800,000 to a total of 4.8 million unemployed in June. The key seasonally adjusted jobless rate held high at 5.7 percent of the labor force.

The detailed job report, based on nonfarm payroll data, showed a rise of 600,000 — "somewhat more than the substantial gain expected between May and June," the report noted—to a record 56.8 million. This was 1 million higher than a year ago.

The Labor Dept. reported seasonal gains in manufacturing and contract construction but gains in trade, services and transportation "all better than seasonal." Government employment remained unchanged, the report added, although a drop normally is expected from May to June when schools close for the summer.

June, as a peak month of employment, produced both milestones of the 70 million jobholders and the $100-a-week pay of factory workers. Government experts explained, both will fall off later in the year, since it takes time and steady growth before such breakthroughs become annual averages.

The June report said manufacturing developments were highlighted by the rise in the workweek and earnings. While the factory workweek rose seasonally by 18 minutes to 40 hours and 54 minutes, overtime hours hit 3.0 hours. This overtime was a high for June since such data were first collected in 1956, the report said, and Labor Dept. experts estimated it accounted for 10.6 percent of average weekly earnings.

Both weekly and hourly earnings were up 3 percent from June 1962, the report said.

The report also noted that the gain of 150,000 in manufacturing jobs to a total of 17 million was as expected, "after four months of substantially better-than-seasonal job gains."

Auto output continued very high, the report noted, maintaining auto jobs at the May level of 1.7 million, "although sizable cutbacks are usual in June."

Farm Labor Losing Out To Machines

Agricultural workers, already burdened with "the lowest wages and the highest unemployment rate of any group in our economy," are being forced off the farms by agriculture's continuing technological revolution—and even by geese—according to the National Sharecroppers Fund.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, former U.S. senator from North Carolina, is chairman of the Sharecroppers Fund, and Pres. A. Philip Randolph, of the Sleeping Car Porters, a vice president of the AFL-CIO, is vice chairman.

Fay Bennett, executive secretary of the 26-year-old organization, said in her annual report that for farm workers the past year has been marked by:

"Human waste . . . men displaced by machines . . . exploitation of the hungry . . . foreign workers competing for vanishing jobs."

A quarter of a million cotton pickers were displaced by machines in a two-year period. And cotton growers, in increasing numbers, are now using geese to displace men with hoes for weeding.

Meany Calls for Action 'Now' on Rights

Backs Kennedy Bills With Added Powers

(Continued from Page 1)

that he is not like other men—no matter what he may be in himself."

Observing that most of the "heat" on both sides of the civil rights debate is being generated by the public accommodations section of the bill, Meany suggested that the "dollars-and-cents" fears of southern businessmen "have no basis in fact or experience."

"We are completely convinced that a uniform federal law, uniformly obeyed, will not impose a burden upon any public establishment," he said.

"The Negro ought to be, and in fact is, as much a part of the 'public' as anyone else," he asserted. "A man who sets up a place of public accommodation has, by that action, voluntarily surrendered one segment of his right of 'freedom of association.' "

- Proposals to insure Negroes the right to vote through prompt action of federal courts and court-appointed referees are "superior" to present remedies and acceptable for the time-being, although labor would prefer authorization of federal registrars in areas where abuses are flagrant.
- The section on voting rights should be rewritten by the committee to establish the standard of a sixth grade education as "decisive" proof of literacy in states where literacy tests are required of prospective voters. The proposals in both the Administration and Republican bills that completion of the sixth grade be considered merely as "presumptive" proof could lead to "interminable challenges (which) would delay indefinitely the registration of qualified Negroes" and "destroy the purpose of the bill."
- Token school desegregation in the South "flouts the findings of the highest court in the land" and reveals "an obvious need" for the proposal to authorize the Attorney General to institute civil action on behalf of segregation victims.

Labor would prefer, however, that the Attorney General be empowered to act on his own discretion when circumstances warrant it, rather than on a written complaint.

- "We are wholly in favor of federal efforts to encourage interracial dialogue" through the community relations agencies proposed to mediate and investigate civil rights problems, and the AFL-CIO has called on its own member organizations and central bodies to originate or join with inter-racial committees in their own areas.
- The Civil Rights Commission "has surely earned, by its thorough and diligent work, the right to permanent status," particularly since the civil rights problem is not a temporary one.
- The proposal to permit the President to deny federal funds to states practicing discrimination has "our unqualified support" and in some respects may prove to be the most effective section of the bill because "it hits where it hurts—in the pocketbook."

"There is nothing unfair about this," Meany declared. "Those who take the federal government's money are simply required to obey the federal law."

He supported the section even though it might mean cutting off federal funds for unemployment compensation or apprenticeship training where a state was discriminating in these programs, Meany said in response to questions.

"I am not worried about the Secretary of Labor exercising his discretion in this area," he said.

With respect to fair employment practices legislation, Meany noted that the Administration's omnibus bill would merely clothe with statutory power the present jurisdiction of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity over employers under contract to the government.

A "clearly preferable" approach, he said would be the Roosevelt bill to require fair employment practices by all employers and all unions, an approach which the President endorsed in his message to Congress.

To help erase the blot of job discrimination, Meany said, "we ask you now, as we have asked the Congress for many years, for effective, enforceable legislation. . . . In other words, we need the force of law to carry out our own principles . . . to help us do what we want to do—mop up those areas of discrimination which still persist in our own ranks."

This is necessary, he said, because the labor movement is "not a monolithic, dictatorial body" as its enemies suggest, but operates in a democratic way and cannot dictate "even in a good cause."

Furthermore, he noted, while labor has been in the forefront of the fight for FEP laws and contract provisions, the employers who actually do the hiring, and their associations at every level—local, state and federal—"have been in bitter opposition."

Asked about the number of Negroes in certain building trades unions, Meany said he could give no exact figures, but pointed out that some of the craft unions have large numbers of Negro members whereas in others the percentage is much smaller.

"There is no easy solution" to the problem, he observed, but one approach that must be taken is a campaign to assure qualified Negro youths equal access to apprenticeship training in the skilled crafts.

Meany emphasized that as a trade unionist he was firmly opposed to the demands of some Negro spokesmen for "superseniority" and superior hiring preference for Negroes as "a form of penance" to correct and atone for past injustices.

Such proposals, he said, miss the point that "the only real remedy is jobs for all."

Our common goal, he declared, should be "justice, not vengeance."

"This is especially true when vengeance would be exacted from those whose only guilt was the color of their skin. We are against that sort of thing for Negroes; we are against it for whites as well."

Furthermore, he continued, "if you destroy seniority in the hope of correcting racial injustice, you destroy it entirely. Those who might reap quick benefits could also be the first losers. Once hired, what rights would they have to stay on the job? How and where would they plead if they were fired?"

Meany said that one aspect of the problem of more jobs for Negroes must be attacked through the stronger machinery proposed in the bill for enforcement of public school desegregation. Employers who protest that qualified Negroes are unavailable are sometimes using a pretext, he noted, but sometimes they are stating "the plain truth."

"The most important single reason why it is sometimes true," he went on, "is that Negroes, as a whole, simply do not have equal educational opportunities . . . because they are consigned to segregated schools."

MEMBERS of a newly-reconstituted Labor-Management Panel to advise the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service met with Pres. Kennedy during a day-long initial session. Pictured, left to right, are some of the 12 panel members: Gerry E. Morse, Minneapolis-Honeywell Co.; J. Curtis Counts, Douglas Aircraft Co.; Deputy Dir. Robert H. Moore of the Mediation & Conciliation Service; Pres. Cornelius J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers; Kennedy; Mediation Service Dir. William E. Simkin; Stephen I. Schlossberg, assistant to the director. Labor members of the panel not shown are Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel; Vice Pres. Jesse C. McGlon of the Machinists; Marvin J. Miller, assistant to the president of the Steelworkers; UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock.

Labor Must Persist in Challenge To Employment Bias, Henning Says

"American labor must persist in its efforts to realize full employment and the abolition of the last measure of job discrimination," declared Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning.

Henning, in a lead article in the current issue of the American Federationist, monthly publication of the AFL-CIO, observed that Negro demands for fair employment have focused on apprenticeship training as the key to better-paying and more stable jobs.

In an article entitled "Expanding Apprenticeship for All Americans," Henning described the Labor Dept.'s estimates for this decade of an increased need for skilled workers and a decline in the need for the unskilled.

Outlines Actions

He outlined action taken by the Labor Dept. to root out discrimination in apprenticeship programs within the influence of the federal government and to make training opportunities available to all minority group members.

Placing the problem of discrimination within the broader context of economic growth and full employment, he wrote:

"The Negro suffers because of his skin. But he suffers also because he often is an unskilled worker in an economy which has limited place for the unskilled. Finally, he suffers because he is a worker in a society which has not yet found the way to full employment."

In urging the labor movement to persist in its efforts to achieve full employment and wipe out job discrimination, Henning noted that bias exists everywhere—in the banking, insurance and newspaper worlds, in the professions and religions, and "is often strongest" in non-union sectors.

"The matter is moral," Henning declared. "For more than 100 years, labor has served as the social conscience of the nation. Unpurchased and unafraid, it has led the everlasting struggle to attain a society in which bread, security and freedom shall be the right of all Americans whatever their racial, religious or ethnic identity.

"Labor holds priceless credentials of sacrifice and struggle. It must use these credentials now as mortal conflict shakes the nation. The honor and duty of leadership rest with the trade union movement."

Henning pointed out that Negro unemployment "is consistently twice the overall national average." The national jobless rate averaged 5.6 percent in 1962, he added, but the jobless rate among Negroes was 11 percent. The jobless rate of unskilled workers was 12 percent in 1962.

He stressed that Labor Dept. projections of labor force needs show that in 1970 the nation will need 42 percent more professional and technical workers than in 1960; 24 percent more sales and service workers; 22 percent more skilled and 18 percent more semi-skilled. The unskilled group will decline, relatively.

These estimates, he added, assume a full employment economy.

7-20-63

Without this economic growth, he said, the unskilled will suffer at least their current jobless rate—twice the national average.

"Whatever the course of the economy, the days of the unskilled appear numbered," Henning said.

He noted the limitations of apprenticeship programs when matched against the dimensions of the teenage job need and tied their future to job growth.

He said that teenage unemployment averaged 816,000 in 1962. Between 1957 and 1962, he noted, registered apprentices in training averaged 150,000 a year and, of this group, only half went on to complete the course and achieve journeyman status.

Henning said it is crucial that the nation create 34.5 million new jobs in the 1960s to keep pace with population growth and technological change. For apprenticeship, unlike vocational education, is job-related, he added. Employers determine whether to hire apprentices and unions admit apprentices in a ratio to employed journeymen, he said.

"National morality and the times will permit nothing less than full job equality, but without full employment this means sharing job scarcity regardless of race, color, creed or national origin," Henning declared.

"Job equality must mean sharing the bounty, not the scarcity of national life."

OPEN ACCESS TO APPRENTICESHIP promises better-paying and more stable jobs for Negroes and other minorities, writes Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning. But economic growth is essential, he adds, if the Negro is to overcome the obstacles of discrimination and lack of skills.

Congress Takes Up Kennedy Rail Plan

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 27, 1963 | No. 30

Special Civil Rights Group To Spur Labor's Bias Fight

Rails Bow To Demand For Delay

By David L. Perlman

Congress won from the nation's railroads a 30-day breathing spell to take a careful look at Pres. Kennedy's complex proposal for averting a strike over the work rules dispute.

The President has asked legislation giving the Interstate Commerce Commission a two-year grant of jurisdiction over changes and modifications in existing work rules.

Bowing to demands from congressional leaders, the railroads took down from their bulletin boards notices of the job-slashing rules changes which would have sparked a strike by the five operating unions on July 30. The unions earlier said there would be no strike—and no cause for a strike—if the railroads refrained from unilaterally changing the rules.

The delay had been strongly urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a letter to Democratic and Republican leaders of the House and Senate.

Meany said Congress should have "adequate time" to consider legislative proposals for dealing with the rail dispute and to hear the views of the parties affected, as well as government officials and representatives of the public.

Congressional consideration "should take place free from the pressures and strains that would be

(Continued on Page 3)

Asks 'Strong' FEP Law:

Job Equality Key To Rights—Meany

Declaring that "now we must stop talking, now we must act," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany renewed labor's appeal for congressional passage of "strong federal legislation" to bar race discrimination by employers or by unions.

Equal job opportunity, Meany told a Senate Labor subcommittee, is a "prerequisite" for "true equality of opportunity" in other areas. So, he said, are measures to promote full employment—"programs designed to create jobs and to qualify people to fill them."

"The Negro needs money to keep his children in school," Meany said.

"The Negro needs money to purchase decent housing.

"The Negro needs money to utilize public accommodations.

"And the only way he can get that money is to find a good job," the AFL-CIO president declared.

Meany said it is "essential" that fair employment legislation include strong enforcement powers and give to the administering agency the authority to initiate complaints.

Bills introduced by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), chairman of the subcommittee, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.), and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) all meet these criteria, he said.

If enforcement powers are weak, Meany warned, the "most desirable" use of mediation and conciliation will be ineffective. These "cannot be successful unless strong enforcement powers stand behind the mediator," Meany declared.

A federal law should also include "broad powers to make inspections," Meany said. He pointed out that this feature of the Fair Labor Standards Act "has gone far to eliminate violations of minimum wage legislation."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters and the Negro American Labor Council, told the subcommittee that if fair employment legislation had not been killed by filibusters in 1946 and 1950, the nation would not be facing the civil rights crisis confronting it today.

"The urgency of the accelerating pressures across the country for equality now can best be understood against the background of such past defeats," Randolph declared. He added:

"There is usually a time when gradual, if sustained, change is desirable and possible. But there is also another time in which a vacuum created by the lack of action explodes when needs which will no longer wait press into it. This summer we have reached that hour."

Meany stressed the "long and continuing support" which the AFL-CIO and its predecessor organizations have given to civil rights legislation.

"The trade union movement," he said, "stands strongly for civil rights, but we know we have civil

(Continued on Page 8)

HOWARD JENKINS, JR.

First Negro Appointed to Labor Board

Howard Jenkins, Jr., assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, has been nominated by Pres. Kennedy as a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

A Colorado lawyer and a Republican, Jenkins is the first Negro named to the board by any president. His confirmation by the Senate will put him on the labor tribunal in place of Philip Ray Rodgers, whose term expires Aug. 27.

Joins House Staff

Rodgers, an NLRB member for 10 years, will become Republican counsel to the House Education & Labor Committee on Aug. 1 to replace Richard Burress, who is returning to the private practice of law.

The son of a letter carrier, Jenkins was born in Denver June 16, 1915. He played varsity football at the University of Denver, won a law degree there in 1941, and did graduate work in law at New York University before returning to Denver to practice labor law.

In 1943 he joined the War Labor Board and became chief enforcement officer in the Rocky Mountain Region. After the WLB gave way to the Wage Stabilization Board, he served until 1946, when he resigned to teach labor and administrative law as a faculty member at Howard University Law School.

Ten years later Jenkins joined the Labor Dept. as assistant to the solicitor. After the Landrum-Griffin Act was enacted he helped Commissioner John L. Holcombe organize the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports. Jenkins and his wife live in the District of Columbia and have a daughter, 20, and two sons, 17 and 10.

Big Cities Top Target In Drive

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has appointed a special five-man committee to step up the labor movement's campaign against discrimination.

The committee's first task, Meany said, would be to work with Administration officials to mount a campaign in 30 to 40 major cities to "wipe out discrimination wherever it exists—on the jobs, in the schools, in the voting booth, in the housing developments, stores, theaters, or recreation areas."

"In a real sense," Meany said, "this will be a campaign for the only kind of citizenship an American should understand—full citizenship."

The committee, which will be headed by Meany, includes AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Walter P. Reuther, president of the Industrial Union Dept.; C. J. Haggerty, president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Reuther and Randolph are vice presidents of the AFL-CIO.

Meany immediately notified Pres. Kennedy that the committee stood ready to work with his Administration in "a major effort to abolish" discriminatory practices in these areas. He recalled that the President had committed himself to such an assault on discriminatory practices during what

(Continued on Page 8)

Earlier Retirement, More Schooling Bring Drop in Length of 'Work Life'

The longterm rise in the work life expectancy of men was reversed during the 1950s, a new Labor Dept. manpower report has revealed.

This reversal reflects changes which will create formidable problems for the nation, the report indicates, as young people flood into the labor force and the ranks of older workers swell.

The study, entitled "The Length of Working Life for Males, 1900-60," shows the average 20-year old male will live another 50 years will work or seek work for 43 of these years and will make six job changes in his working career.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said "the dramatic change man's work life is undergoing" shows "the continuing need for a retrainable and highly diversified work force."

The report showed that the work life expectancy for men dropped by a half-year between 1950 and 1960 while life expectancy for males rose by one year. This reversed a trend which saw a six-year increase in work life expectancy between 1900 and 1940 and a three-and-a-half-year increase between 1940 and 1950.

The reasons behind the decline in the work life include a longer training period prior to entering on a work career and a drop in the retirement age, the report indicated, stating that the factor most directly affecting the earlier retirement age has been the continued liberalization of social security benefits and coverage.

The tendency to retire between the 64th and 65th year of life—the youngest age at which full benefits become available for men—just about tripled between 1950 and

(Continued on Page 6)

Plumbers Win NLRB Round In Daniel Case

Greenville, S.C.—A major southern non-union building firm, the Daniel Construction Co., Inc., has been branded guilty of unfair labor practices by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner.

Ruling that the company had threatened and coerced its workers preceding an NLRB election in November 1961, the trial examiner recommended that the results of the election be set aside and another balloting be ordered by the regional NLRB director.

The Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, which sought the 1961 election for Daniel's 600 to 800 employes at job sites scattered across five

(Continued on Page 2)

TEXTILE WORKERS' staff member Jim Blackwell took this picture of mob at Hartwell, Ga., starting to move in on union organizers as they handbilled Monroe Shock Absorber Co. plant. Seconds later, mob spotted Blackwell, who ran to car and got away in shower of bricks. Standing in center, back to camera, is Auto Workers Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse. Next to him, at left, is his assistant, Joe Mooney. Town law enforcement officers refused to protect rights of organizers whom mob beat and chased out of town, the unionists reported.

FBI Investigates Mass Assault On Union Organizers in Georgia

Hartwell, Ga.—An assault on six union handbillers by a rock-throwing, club-wielding crowd of 150 company supporters has brought the agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation into this county-seat town in the heart of the deep South.

Responding to a charge that federal laws have been violated, the FBI has been taking statements from union members who were attacked and scattered July 18, and from company representatives at the plant of the Monroe Shock Absorber Co. here, according to Organizational Dir. Nicholas Zonarich of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Though the governor of Georgia, the Georgia Highway Patrol and town officials had been warned of possible violence and had been asked to protect union handbillers, Zonarich said, town officers refused to stop company employes in company trucks, on company time, from assaulting the union men and warning them to "get out of town."

Victims of the mob action were listed by Zonarich as Auto Workers' Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse; Sec.-Treas. John Chupka of the Textile Workers' Union of America; IUD Carolinas Coordinator Jim Pierce; Joe Mooney, assistant to Greathouse; and Ken Young, Zonarich's assistant.

Zonarich said that though none of the six was hurt seriously, Chupka was clubbed with a stick and knocked down and all the union men were slugged repeatedly in clear view of police officers who watched the beatings as "interested bystanders."

The IUD organizing director said that earlier this year the UAW came to Hartwell to distribute handbills at the Monroe Co. plant as part of an organizing campaign aimed at a company plant in Nebraska. The firm's main plant in Monroe, Mich., long has been represented by the UAW.

In the first Hartwell handbilling, the union men also were met by a large group of company employes, sent out of the plant in company trucks, Zonarich reported. He said the organizers were stripped of their handbills, threatened with knives and crowbars, warned to "clear out or be killed," and that with police standing by, a knife was placed at one organizer's throat to force him to open his car trunk and surrender additional leaflets.

Zonarich and Greathouse then decided that a second handbill distribution would be made after all law authorities had been notified. On July 15, they said, Gov. Carl Sanders promised UAW representatives in Atlanta that he would order the state Highway Patrol to safeguard the legal right of organizers to handbill workers on public property.

When the organizers reached the entrance to the employes' parking lot a few days later, however, someone ran into the plant and about 150 men climbed into company trucks and drove outside the plant gates.

Greathouse, wearing a UAW tee shirt, was ordered out of Hartwell, all leaflets were seized and burned and the organizers were threatened, cursed and called "Communists" and "NAACPers," they reported. When they refused to leave they were pushed, pummeled and kicked up a hill toward watching police.

Greathouse said that when he reached the police, he asked that two of his attackers be arrested. One policeman, he reported, replied "We don't see a thing" and another told an organizer: "Maybe you'll understand that we don't want you here."

When the union men reached their car they found all the tires had been slashed. While Zonarich and Pierce went into town to buy new tires, the sheriff and police drove off. The organizers soon learned that only one service station was willing to sell them tires but that the mob would not permit the car to be repaired.

After more than four hours the organizers eluded the company men and returned to South Carolina. Later they sent a tow truck across the state line to rescue the car, they told the FBI.

Next move? Another leaflet distribution, with the aid of "a sufficient number of Georgia union members to insure success," as Zonarich puts it.

Plumbers Win Ruling Against Daniel Firm

(Continued from Page 1)

southeastern states, expressed "satisfaction" at the trial examiner's report.

The union filed objections and unfair labor practice charges against the company immediately after the election and a formal NLRB complaint was issued this year.

Daniel, a non-union stronghold in the construction field in its Greenville division, operates a highly scattered business with many projects running at the same time. Overall personnel policies, the NLRB said in ordering the 1961 election, "are set forth" by the company's main office here.

The trial examiner, George J. Bott, after hearings here and in Kingsport, Tenn., held that the company's executive vice president, Buck Mickel, and its mechanical department manager, Theodore Johnson, made repeated speeches to employes at many sites holding forth the threat of lost jobs if the workers voted for union representation and of continued employment if the workers voted against the union.

By interrogation of employes and by encouraging "reports" on union sentiment to foremen, Bott held, the company also "created an atmosphere" in which employes were denied "exercise of a free choice" in the election.

In addition to recommending that a new election be held, the examiner recommended that the company be required to post notices that it would no longer interrogate workers, threaten them with reprisals or restrain or coerce them in the exercise of their rights.

ACWA Laundry Board Re-elects Top Officers

New York—Clothing Workers' Vice Pres. Louis Simon has been re-elected as manager and secretary-treasurer of the 16,000-member Laundry Workers' Joint Board. Also re-elected by union members voting in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Hempstead and New Haven, Conn., were Pres. Roger Douglas and Assistant Mgr. Bert Jemmott.

'Big 6' Spurns 'Pattern':

Wood Strike Grows, 25,000 Now Affected

Portland, Ore.—An additional 5,000 wood and lumber workers went on strike at 10 locations of the Georgia-Pacific Co. to bring the total of those affected by the current industry strike and lockout to 25,000 workers in West Coast camps, shops and woods.

Hope for an end of the dispute was dashed when companies in the "Big Six" refused to accept a pattern set in a settlement between the Woodworkers, the Carpenters and the Simpson Timber Co., big independent firm which bargains separately, as does Georgia-Pacific. Contract talks also have been held with a third independent, the Scott Paper Co.

Meanwhile picketing continues at locations of U.S. Plywood and St. Regis Paper Co., along with those of Georgia-Pacific in Washington, Oregon and nothern California. Four other firms, members of the "Big Six," were not struck, but locked out their employes and shut down operations —the Weyerhaeuser Co., Crown Zellerbach Corp., Intl. Paper Co. and Ravonier, Inc.

The unions called the Simpson settlement the "first major breakthrough" in a solid management front of refusals to agree on contract terms. Ballots will be sent shortly to 5,000 union members on benefit changes including a 33.5-cent hourly increase in wages and "fringes" over a three-year period.

Union talks with Georgia-Pacific called by federal mediators were broken off when management refused to offer improvements. The strike started at Toledo, Ore., after the end of the annual vacation period and spread to the other nine locations. The U.S. Plywood Corp. and St. Regis Paper Co., two of the "Big Six" members, were struck June 5.

Special Problems

A spokesman for the unions said the strike was forced by the industry's refusal to grant a reasonable wage increase or to recognize special problems of the loggers, including travel time.

"We placed them on notice last year," he said, "that the employers should be prepared to grant a substantial wage increase in 1963 or face a strike. They chose a strike."

In 1962 and previous years, the unions recognized the industry's economic problems and did not press demands for more money, union negotiators reminded management in talks this year.

The Lumber & Sawmill Workers, affiliated with the Carpenters, broke off talks June 3 but delayed strike action. The IWA halted negotiations June 4 when a management spokesman said: "Our view of the economics of the industry differs from yours. Our position is unchanged. It will remain unchanged even if you take action."

The walkout against two firms began the next day. Later the unions filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the National Labor Relations Board, charging an illegal lockout by four firms and an industry association.

Irving Beller Joins AFL-CIO Staff

Irving Beller has joined the staff of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as an economist.

Beller comes to the federation from the Machinists, where he had served as an economist since 1959. Before that he was a research associate in the Industrial Union Dept. of the federation, assistant coordinator for the Electric Consumers Information Committee, history instructor at Drake University in Des Moines, and a Chicago social studies teacher.

Author of a chapter in Unions & Union Leadership, by Jack Barbash, and other writings, he has degrees from Chicago Teachers College in education, DePaul University in history and a master's degree in economics from the University of Wisconsin.

Oklahoma 'Work' Drive Draws Fraud Charges

Oklahoma City—Charges of fraud, forgery and intimidation in connection with the gathering of signatures for a so-called "right-to-work" initiative petition have been made before an Oklahoma State Supreme Court referee at hearings on the validity of the petitions.

Groups opposing a proposed constitutional amendment which would make it illegal for workers and their employers to negotiate union shop agreements must successfully challenge some 76,000 of the 212,000 signatures filed in order to keep the proposal off a referendum ballot.

'Colossal Fraud' Alleged

As the final round of hearings began before Supreme Court Referee Marian Opala, the chief attorney for the challengers said that examination of the signatures—which has involved more than a year of exhaustive checking—has disclosed evidence of "colossal fraud."

Attorney William C. Kessler charged that:

- Thousands of signatures of Oklahoma citizens were forged on the petition without their knowledge.
- Thousands of other names were duplicated on petitions, some appearing as many as four times. In some cases the duplicate signatures were forged; on others signers were told by hired circulators they could sign more than once, although this is a violation of state law.
- Many signatures were obtained by intimidation in contests sponsored by anti-labor business firms.
- Names of thousands of non-registered voters, many under voting age, were found on the petitions.

Kessler said that, in response to letters sent to persons whose names appeared more than once on the petitions, "many declared they had never signed this petition or any other."

Carol Bush Editor Of Hosiery Worker

Philadelphia—Pres. Adolph Benet of the Hosiery Workers has named Vice Pres. Carol L. Bush as editor of The Hosiery Worker in place of John J. McCoy, assigned to Charlotte, N. C., to assist in organizing.

Editor Bush will continue to serve as president of Branch No. 1 of the union here. She is the first woman elected a national officer of the AFHW since its founding in 1913, Benet said.

Carriers Hold Off on Rules:

House, Senate Units Study President's Rail Proposal

(Continued from Page 1)

engendered by a shutdown," Meany said. He urged a joint resolution calling on parties in the dispute to maintain the status quo for "at least 30 days."

Leading members of Congress, including chairmen of the House and Senate Commerce Committees, which have already begun hearings on the Administration bill, demanded that the railroads hold off on the rules changes. The employer spokesman, after first expressing reluctance to any further postponement, returned the next day to say the railroads had agreed "to cooperate with Congress."

Kennedy, in a special message to Congress, declared that the Administration has "exhausted" all the tools it possesses to deal with the situation, and "the responsibility now lies with the legislative branch" to avert a nationwide rail shutdown on July 30.

He warned that a prolonged strike could "topple the economy into recession" and push the unemployment rate up to 15 percent by the 30th day of a shutdown.

Both Kennedy and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz insisted that the Administration's proposal would not be compulsory arbitration but would merely provide "an interim remedy while awaiting the results of further bargaining by the parties."

Initial reactions of most rail union officials were skeptical, but the organizations said they would wait until they had the opportunity to testify before congressional committees to spell out their position on legislation. Railroad management gave its endorsement to the President's plan although later declaring they had reservations about a job protection provision which they had not been aware of on first reading of the proposal.

Here are the key features of the Administration plan:

● Rules changes on which the parties cannot agree may be submitted by either party to the Interstate Commerce Commission which can approve, disapprove or modify them. The ICC would be instructed to require, with the advice of the Secretary of Labor, protection of the job interests of affected employes just as it now is directed to require protection of the interests of employes before approving a railroad merger.

● The rules change would be in effect for two years, unless both parties in the interim reach an agreement through collective bargaining.

● The ICC would be authorized to obtain an injunction to prevent any strike over the rules issue during the two-year period. However, any ICC decision on rules could be appealed in federal courts on the same basis as other ICC actions.

● At the expiration of the two years, unless Congress extended the ICC's grant of authority, the government would step out of the picture entirely The new rules would, however, remain in effect and any attempt to change them would have to move anew through the lengthy procedures of the Railway Labor Act.

The President's message to Congress came after a final effort to settle the four-year dispute through mediation.

After a tripartite fact-finding committee had completed its report to the President on the issues in the dispute and the positions of the parties, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told newsmen he had found "enough indications" of a possible area of agreement to justify a renewed attempt to work out a settlement.

He met with union and management negotiators during the weekend but the effort failed—as had all previous mediation attempts.

Kennedy carefully avoided placing blame for the bargaining stalemate.

He noted that the issues involved, "unlike those of typical wage disputes, are ones with very little collective bargaining play left in them. The work rules aspects of the present dispute are regarded as do-or-die matters by both parties—and the history of industrial disputes shows that when employers and employes consider the issue to be vital, they can both stand a strike much longer than the country can stand it."

He said that the Administration had considered and rejected "compulsory arbitration of this dispute by a special or congressional panel . . . as inconsistent with the principle that solutions reached through free collective bargaining should always be permitted and preferred."

Likewise, he said, seizure of the railroads has been rejected as "unjustified" and "merely postponing the day of reckoning."

The ICC proposal, the President argued, "provides for an interim remedy while awaiting the results of further bargaining by the parties."

The unanimous report by the tripartite fact-finding committee—including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and G. E. Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, as labor members—summed up the dispute as follows:

"The work rules and pay structure at issue have evolved over almost 100 years of railroad operation and collective bargaining. Both the carriers and the brotherhoods recognize a present need to modernize their assignment rules and methods of compensation. They differ sharply, however, as to which rules should be revised and the manner and timing by which changes should be made."

The committee's role was limited to a report on the factual situation. It was not asked to, nor did it, propose a solution to the impasse or comment on the desirability of legislation.

Big Stumbling Block

The fact-finding panel found that some issues in dispute—including manning of self-propelled vehicles, the operation of trains over territories where more than one group of employes hold seniority rights and protection for employes displaced by technological change could be resolved if agreement is reached on other issues.

A chief obstacle to a negotiated or mediated settlement has been the demand by the railroads for the right to eliminate firemen-helpers on freight trains—which would chop off more than 30,000 jobs—and a free hand in determining the composition of train crews.

The panel found that there has been some narrowing of the differences, but the unions have firmly rejected any proposal which would submit issues in dispute to arbitration.

In the area of wages and fringe benefits, the panel said, management has taken the view that further discussions on compensation issues—beyond the scope of recommendations made by a Presidential Emergency Board—cannot be undertaken until the firemen and crew size dispute is resolved.

Other unresolved issues include the jurisdictional dividing line between road service and yard service crews and the union request for a formal apprenticeship program to train engineers.

TOP OFFICERS of the Switchmen were unanimously re-elected at the union's convention in Buffalo, N. Y. Left to right: Sec.-Treas. Daniel W. Collins; Exec. Vice Pres. William R. Meyers, and Pres. Neil P. Speirs.

Too Few Jobs on Rails, Switchmen's Union Told

Buffalo, N.Y.—The nation's railroads have too few workers, not too many, and are gearing their employment to "the requirements of a stricken economy rather than to those of a growing one," Economist Leon H. Keyserling declared in a speech to the quadrennial convention of the Switchmen.

Keyserling, who headed Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, said that if there were full employment in the economy as a whole, the railroads would need more employes, not less.

He noted, too, that the wages of railroad workers have risen more slowly in relation to productivity than those of many other industries. He cited statistics showing that worker productivity on railroads rose by 134 percent between 1939 and 1961 while wages went up only 69 percent.

The proposals to cut rail employment, he said, "wouldn't be quite so serious if there were other places for the dispossessed workers to go. But there is less room everywhere."

Keyserling attributed the hard-core unemployment problem to what he called a national "drift" over the last decade back to "the old, discredited theory" that "the economic tree should be watered at the top."

He said the "poor economic focus" of the country will be changed only "when those who make the decisions realize that the battle is not being yielded to the propagandists, the narrow interests and the misinformed."

In convention actions, the 350 delegates backed their officers by voting overwhelmingly for a continuation of merger talks with the Conductors & Brakemen. In a second resolution they urged that the Yardmasters also be included in the discussions.

The 18,000-member Switchmen and the 4,000-member Yardmasters are both AFL-CIO unions. The Conductors & Brakemen, which also has about 18,000 members, is unaffiliated.

Pres. Neil H. Speirs, who has headed the switchmen since 1959, was unanimously re-elected to another four-year term. Also re-elected were Executive Vice Pres. William R. Meyers and Sec.-Treas. Daniel W. Collins.

Vice presidents elected included Julius C. Van Heck of Inkster, Mich., George Clark of Fort Worth, Tex., Leon B. Richardson of West Des Moines, Ia., John S. Tamaska of Denver, and Lloyd A. Combs of St. Paul, Minn.

Rail Firemen Cite Pair For Averting Tragedies

St. Louis—Two locomotive firemen, whose jobs are at stake in the railroad work rules dispute, received safety awards at their union's convention here. Both were credited with having averted serious accidents.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen presented a plaque and a $250 check from the union to C. M. Bagby, a fireman-helper on the Wabash Railroad, and to Robert L. Schoenwald of the Great Northern Railway.

Schoenwald saved the life of his engineer, who collapsed at the controls during a switching operation, administering first aid and then completing the switching movement in time to clear the track for an oncoming train.

Bagby's citation credited him, in his role as a lookout, with alerting his engineer to stop the locomotive in time to save the life of a crew member who had been knocked under the train by an overhead wire.

The BLFE wound up its quadrennial convention—which usually lasts four to six weeks—midway in its third week to permit the 900 delegates to return to their home bases in preparation for a strike call if the railroads put their rules proposals into effect.

The convention completed its election of officers, re-electing these incumbent vice presidents: W. E. Mitchell, Don A. Miller, Homer L. Ellis, M. A. Ross, M. L. Mellett, J. L. Shattuck, N. J. Gibson, John Graham, and J. W. Jennings.

To fill vacancies, five new vice presidents were elected: William M. Watson, E. A. Thompson, Jr., D. C. Deering, Ralph L. McCollum and Howard G. Kenyon.

William C. Midcap was elected editor of the BLFE publication to succeed L. E. Whitler, who is retiring. Midcap has been alternate editor.

Earlier the convention re-elected Pres. H. E. Gilbert, Sec.-Treas. Robert R. Bryant and Legislative Rep. A. M. Lampley, and chose M. W. Hampton to succeed retiring Samuel C. Phillips as assistant president, the second-ranking office in the union.

May Hirings Up But Smaller Than Usual

The factory hiring rate rose from 38 to 39 per 1,000 in May, a rate the Dept. of Labor said was smaller than usual and below its year-ago level. The layoff rate dropped from 16 to 14 per 1,000, while the quit rate inched up from 13 to 14 per 1,000.

More Steel Companies Accept Vacation Pact

Pittsburgh — The Steelworkers have reached an agreement with the Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp. providing the 13-week extended vacation for senior employes which the USWA recently won from the major basic steel companies.

Earlier a similar agreement was reached covering employes of Kaiser Steel.

Automation Study Plan Announced by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has told Congress he plans to establish a Presidential Commission on Automation to develop "pioneer" policies to protect job security of workers while encouraging technological advances.

He will appoint to the commission "the ablest men in public and private life."

Kennedy announced his plan in his special message to Congress on the railroad work rules dispute, which he termed "the first of many" involving the issue of displacement of workers.

The President said the commission "should undertake the most comprehensive review . . . ever ventured" of automation problems and be prepared to submit its recommendations "no later than the close of next year." The commission will be charged with the responsibility of:

● Identifying the types of worker displacement, both technological and economic, which are expected during the next 10 years and the social and economic effects of the developments.

● Recommending specific actions to be taken by the federal government "in meeting its responsibility to share the costs and alleviate the losses of automation job-displacement."

Kennedy told Congress the commission's report "must pioneer in the social, political and economic aspects of automation to the same extent that our science and industry have pioneered in its physical aspects."

Solution of job displacement problems, the President said, "is of importance to the entire nation which now enjoys all the benefits of economic progress but, except when it is part of the employe group affected, now bears very little of its burdens."

A Gaping Void

IN THE MILLIONS OF WORDS spoken and written during the current civil rights crisis there is one gaping void—the position of employer organizations on equal employment opportunity legislation.

The record is quite clear on past efforts to obtain fair employment practices laws. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers have strongly opposed and contributed greatly to the defeat of this legislation in the years since the end of World War II and the termination of Pres. Roosevelt's wartime executive order banning discrimination in employment.

Long before the AFL-CIO merger, the AFL and the CIO separately pressed for FEPC legislation. Every convention of the AFL-CIO has gone strongly on record in favor of a federal law that would aid labor in its drive to wipe out bias in hiring and on the job.

The state organizations of the AFL-CIO have been in the forefront of efforts to secure state FEPC laws in the years when employer opposition teamed up with the Dixiecrat-GOP coalition to kill such measures in Congress.

Organized employer opposition to equal employment opportunities legislation has been one factor in limiting the drive to eliminate job discrimination. Individual employers also have denied at the collective bargaining table union requests for anti-bias clauses in contracts and provisions for fair promotion policies.

There is little doubt that if the NAM and the Chamber moved to support enforceable FEP legislation and made their views clearly known to employer-oriented congressmen and senators, a measure would move through Congress quickly.

★ ★ ★

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY, in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, noted "we have never at any time tried to gloss over the shortcomings of unions on the subject of equal opportunity. Yes, some of our members take a wrongheaded view; I have just said so, I have said so before and I repeat it again.

"But we in the labor movement publicly deplore these few holdouts against justice. We do our utmost to bring them around to the right side. And at the same time, the employers—who actually do the hirings—escape in many instances with no criticism whatever."

The business and industry associations, and individual employers, have in these days of upheaval and social revolution the opportunity to wipe out their record of bitter opposition to anti-bias laws at the federal, state and local level. They have the opportunity to make a positive contribution to the solution of the nation's most grievous problem.

If business and industry will join with organized labor in a campaign to secure passage of equal opportunities legislation a mighty blow will have been struck in defense of freedom and liberty.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, July 27, 1963 No. 30

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

A New Foundation

Meany Tells House Group:

Rights Crisis Confronts Nation —No Time for 'Abstract Debate'

The following is excerpted from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's testimony before the House Judiciary Committee on the President's civil rights program.

WE ARE HAPPY TO PRESENT our views on civil rights legislation in an atmosphere of impending action. As I am sure you know, we have appeared many times, before many congressional committees, under far less promising circumstances.

In the course of preparing this testimony, I looked through our files for a sampling of the civil rights statements we have made over the years —not only the congressional testimony, but convention resolutions and policy declarations by the AFL-CIO and earlier by the AFL and CIO as separate federations.

Those statements are remarkably consistent. They are not only consistent in what they propose; they are also consistent in their sense of urgency.

We have been insisting for a long time that establishing and maintaining full and equal rights for Negro Americans is a matter of "here and now." We have done this in the full knowledge that not all individual units of the trade union movement agree with the policies adopted, without apparent dissent, at trade union conventions.

This has contributed to our sense of urgency. The labor movement has not been the only advocate of civil rights legislation during the last decade; there have been church groups, and of course the Negro organizations themselves. But I think it is fair to say that we are the only one, among the civil rights forces, which has openly called for legislation for the correction of shortcomings in its own ranks.

On this score our credentials cannot be challenged. It can be truly charged that some segments of the labor movement have ignored the established policies of the AFL, the CIO and the AFL-CIO. We have said so ourselves, before Congress and elsewhere. We have pleaded for legislative help to translate principle into practice. But until very recently, there has been very little disposition on the part of the Congress, or the country as a whole, to provide that help.

Obviously this is no longer the case. And I think all of us must acknowledge that the change has taken place because the Negroes are no longer willing to wait for the white majority, in its own good time, to do what is right. I do not offer a blanket endorsement of every Negro demonstration, every sit-in or every picket-line. But it is beyond question that the organized militancy of the Negroes has forced their plight to the active attention of the nation.

Fortunately there was a quick response. Pres. Kennedy's firm and eloquent address on June 11 stirred the nation's conscience. It has inspired other men of good will to speak out. The overwhelming national consensus in support of equal rights is now becoming visible and is asserting itself at last.

We have been glad to note that the President has by no means let the matter rest. He has called to the White House the leaders of many groups, including businessmen, union officials, women, lawyers, Negro spokesmen and the clergy. He has brought together the congressional leaders of both parties. And he has submitted to Congress a program, part of which you are now considering.

As a result, the American people have begun to grasp the fact that civil rights is not a matter for abstract debate but an immediate crisis.

WE ARE NOT OFFERING a blueprint for the future—a program that can be mulled over and then set aside, or one that can be delayed by endless debate of technicalities. The mulling over has been going on for two decades, indeed, in the broader sense it has been going on for more than a century. What we are discussing here today is a program for the here and now, for this year, for this session of Congress.

* * * * * * *

The hour is too late for half measures. The battle for true equality for all Americans has now been joined; let us fight it out all the way.

It would help to clear the air, I think, if all of us recognized that equality can no longer be doled out in small portions. And it would help if the Negro minority realized that the final victory is at hand, and can be won—not in the distant future, but now—through the orderly processes of legislation and litigation as prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

We in the labor movement hope, with the deepest sincerity, that this will be a truly bipartisan effort. Many times in the past, when the nation has been plunged into crisis, the Congress has risen above narrow considerations of political advantage, and has provided the wisdom and statesmanship the occasion demanded.

This is just such a time. The legislation that finally emerges from your deliberations should be the country's bill. Nothing less will fully serve the national interest.

Morgan Says:

Rule of Fairness Might Key FCC Action on Air Editorials

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

RECENTLY A PLUMP, bouncy and eloquent congressman from South Carolina, William Jennings Bryan Dorn of Greenwood, appeared before the House Commerce subcommittee on communications which is holding hearings on a bill to regulate editorials broadcast by radio and television stations.

Morgan

Dorn said he was for editorializing on the air. He declared that broadcasters had reached their maturity and he indicated they might follow the lead of country newspaper editors whose weekly editorials, he judged, were a "breath of fresh air" and the best journalistic opinion being produced today.

Broadcasters in South Carolina, he said, look with fear on regulation from "far away Washington." It wasn't immediately clear just exactly where he stood on a measure introduced by Rep. John Moss, Democrat of California, to require a station which endorses a political candidate editorially to offer equal opportunity to opponents to reply. His extemporaneous oratory, even as a seated witness, would have stirred the pride of Nebraska's "cross-of-gold" spellbinder, whose namesake he was. But William Jennings Bryan Dorn, like many of his congressional colleagues, appeared to take an ambivalent approach to the admittedly important problem of the expression of private opinions over that precious public utility, the air waves.

At one point Dorn was asked about the handling of critical and controversial issues on newscasts. He leaned back, reflected a moment and then hunched forward and drawled into the microphone that he had heard some mighty strange reports on his car radio, things that, as a well-traveled congressman, he knew were just not true. He fondled the idea of having some of these broadcasters tell such a committee where they got their information. During the ensuing round of questions, Republican Rep. James T. Broyhill of North Carolina asked if he opposed censorship and Dorn allowed vehemently that he did. Then his questioner penetratingly observed that there could be an implication of censorship in such a procedure of governmental checking on a journalist's facts.

The Federal Communications Commission's new chairman, E. William Henry, indicated a polite but distinct coolness toward the idea of passing a law to regulate electronic editorials. He warned the subcommittee that unless the legislation were painstakingly clarified, a candidate's "equal time" to reply to an editorial could invoke the "equal time" clause of the communications act on behalf of all his opponents and one might get such a "merry-go-round" of replies that the broadcaster would be discouraged from editorializing at all.

While embracing the principles of the Moss bill, FCC Chairman Henry thought commission regulation, on the basis of fairness, was more appropriate than new legislation and he said the FCC plans to draft more specific rules on broadcast editorials in time for the 1964 election campaign.

LET'S FACE IT, some officials, elected and otherwise, would love to regulate the expression of the printed word. Opinion broadcast over the air falls into a special category because the government licenses radio and TV stations to use bands and channels of the ether and thereby exercises a certain control over broadcasting. Stations and networks—though the latter are not controlled except through the stations they own—are jumpy about this situation and they are still quivering over the charges of Newton Minow, Henry's predecessor, that television was a wasteland and radio a supermarket. Minow was not in fact, however, an advocate of stronger governmental control. He merely insisted that the FCC judiciously exercise the powers it already had and he repeatedly appealed to the broadcasting industry to demonstrate more responsibility in order to fend off further regulation.

The exercise of responsibility could be a key to the present dilemma. The FCC already has a rule of fairness on which it is supposed to operate and penalize stations violating it.

A candidate for office who has been victimized by a broadcast attack from right, left or center is entitled to redress of his grievances but does it follow that special machinery must be set up to right wrongs done to a politician? A larger wrong may be done a community by settling for watering down editorial criticism on the air which may be the only voice of dissent against newspaper monopolies in that community.

Washington Reports:

Minimum U.S. Standards Urged For State Jobless Pay Systems

FEDERAL STANDARDS to establish minimum amounts and duration for state unemployment compensation should be enacted by Congress this year to aid the long-term jobless and their families and help improve the economy, Senators Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) and Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on some 700 radio stations.

Four million persons were unemployed 15 weeks or more and 2 million of that number were jobless for more than half the year in 1962, Case reported.

This continuing high rate of unemployment reflects "a basic dislocation in the operation of the economy," McCarthy observed. The jobless rate has remained close to 6 percent of the total work force for almost six months. Latest reports of the Labor Dept. showed 4.8 million jobless, 400,000 more than a year ago.

Case observed that the introduction of a bill to improve the unemployment compensation system by himself and McCarthy and its cosponsorship by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) amount to "a bi-partisan move to meet a problem that knows no partisanship."

He decried what he saw as a tendency to "look at the number of people working . . . at the wage situation . . . at the general economic indicators, and not to look behind these factors."

"The fact is that the unemployment situation is most disturbing, and has been disturbing for a long time," he declared. Nevertheless, he noted, state unemployment payments are on the average less than a fifth of workers' weekly wages and in "some states much worse than that."

"THE PROBLEM for states like New Jersey, which doesn't pay large enough amounts but is relatively at the top of the list, is that promoters are able to induce business to settle or move to other states on the promise of lower taxes, lower benefits and all the rest," Case commented.

McCarthy said his bill would establish a national standard "that would somewhat more reflect" the change that has taken place in the cost of living and the fact that more people are out of work longer in the present economic situation.

Case said the legislation would increase the coverage by about 3 million and approach the original goal of half the worker's wages, limited by an amount equal to half the average in the state.

"It would leave up to the states and the regular fund the furnishing of benefits for the first 26 weeks," he said, "and then pick up, as a federal proposition, the larger part of the cost for an additional 26 weeks."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MIAMI BEACH—THE 55TH ANNUAL meeting of the Governors' Conference here suggested to some observers that the chief executives of the separate states ought to invent some new machinery of operation before their next conclave.

The governors of the states are potentially powerful men. Each of them has something to say about the selection of delegates to a presidential nominating convention, of one party or the other.

They are also men who in their home states confront a sea of troubles—mostly tax troubles. They don't know where to get the revenue to meet the mounting costs of new schools, higher teachers' salaries, more highways, improved health services, improved welfare services.

They are concerned about federal-state relations, about what they can contribute in cooperation on foreign trade, national defense and a dozen other issues.

The formal program of the Governors' Conference listed these big, broad, majestic subjects as its themes—foreign trade, science and research, expanded job opportunities, along with the handling of penal and rehabilitation services and the organization of a governor's office.

But the prototype of the frustrated state official here was Gov. William L. Guy of North Dakota, a Democrat who got through his Republican legislature a package of five tax bills and then saw the people, on referendum, kill the whole package.

The speeches on states' rights, the clarion declarations that our republican institutions are threatened by excessive federal power—these familiar arguments sounded unreal in the face of the hard reality that state and local voters are increasingly refusing to tax themselves to pay the bills for the privilege of continuing to take care of their state and local problems.

There was another side of the coin: the Democratic governors of Alabama and Florida, bitterly attacking federal intervention in the field of civil rights, also asserted that they saw no need for state government action. The Republican governor of Arizona, who in an ambitious press conference gave a puff to Sen. Goldwater for president, seemed to agree with them.

* * *

THE THEORY of the Governors' Conference when it was established more than half a century ago was that a useful purpose would be served by bringing together the chief executives of the states, who could be presumed to have problems in common.

They do, of course—but not altogether so.

Tax problems they have in common: six Republican governors and six Democratic governors were hurled out of office last year by irate voters rebelling against activist state administrations. On the other hand, there is almost total unlikeness between sparsely populated rural or mountain states and the huge polyglot industrial states such as California and New York. And between California and Mississippi, which lost a congressional seat in the 1960 census because of a departing population. And Alabama, which lost one seat, and Arkansas, which lost two.

The Governors' Conference, under the circumstances, becomes an instrument for national politics and pressures by national politicians.

Gov. Rockefeller of New York held an airport press conference on arrival proclaiming the urgency of a civil rights resolution and the conference instantly dissolved itself into confusion. The conclave voted, by a straight party-line division of Democrats over the Republican minority, to put itself out of the resolutions business. Sixty-eight other resolutions, besides Rockefeller's on civil rights, went down the drain when the resolutions unit was killed.

There were darkling threats that some governors would "bolt" if civil rights was taken up in a serious way.

It's hard to see how 50 active American state governors can meet these days with a pretense that they mustn't handle anything controversial. A disciplined seminar in specific limited issues is perfectly possible in the academic world—but all the governors are in politics.

FEDERAL STANDARDS for Unemployment Compensation should be approved by Congress this year to aid the long-term jobless and their families, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.), left, and Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) asserted in interviews on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

Study Shows Drop in Men's Work Span

(Continued from Page 1)

1960, the report noted. Between 1950 and 1960, the number of retired aged workers receiving benefits rose from 1.8 million to 8.1 million; the average monthly benefit rose from $44 to $74.

Also contributing to the earlier retirement pattern, the report added, were an increase in private pension plans—some with compulsory retirement provisions—the steady decline in farm jobs, a drop in non-farm self-employment and difficulty in older workers finding new jobs.

In past periods, the report explained, longer training periods and earlier retirement were more than offset by large increases in life expectancy. Thus work life expectancy always increased.

Between 1900 and 1950, life expectancy for a male child increased 18 years, from 48 to 66 years. Work life expectancy also rose, but only by 10 years, from 32 to 42 years.

But gains in life expectancy now become harder to achieve, the report pointed out, with an increase of only one year recorded in the 1950-60 period. The speeded-up trend of longer schooling and earlier retirement thus have now caused "the striking decline in work life expectancy."

"The implications of the decline in the length of working life are extremely complex," it continued.

"First, the decision to retire from the labor force is becoming more a matter of choice as social security and other retirement benefits increase in scope and amount.

"Second, the working abilities and experience of the older retired persons are not utilized.

"Third, the wishes and needs of older persons for more adequate income as well as the desire for recognition often go unheeded when they cannot find satisfactory employment.

"Fourth, the trend toward earlier retirement seems to be more or less irreversible as does the growth of the population 65 years of age and over.

"Thus the economic, social and political effects of these considerations will become substantially greater in the years ahead."

LABOR'S VIEWS on medical care and health insurance are set out in these three pamphlets, prepared for the 1963-64 high school debate program. The debate kit is currently being distributed to debate coaches and teachers with a letter from AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank stressing that "the best of modern medical care should be available to every family in the nation" and that "the achievement of this goal requires action by voluntary organizations and agencies, by federal, state and local governments, and by professional persons as well as lay citizens." The kit is available from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th St. N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Interest Rate Boost May 'Dampen' Economy

The interest rate boost voted by the Federal Reserve Board will have "dampening influences" on the economy, will have only "trivial effects" on the global flow of capital and will affect long-term interest rates, a member of the board told a House committee.

J. L. Robertson, a member of the seven-man board, who voted against increasing the discount rate—the rate at which banks borrow from the Federal Reserve—told the House Banking Committee that he feared higher interest rates would have an adverse affect on an economy that needs stimulation in view of "our high level of unemployment."

Board Chairman William McChesney Martin defended the FRB action, maintaining that the change in interest rates will not "have any effect on unemployment now." He told a committee member that he could give "no assurances" on whether the interest hike on short-term loans would affect mortgages and other long-term loans "because I can't forecast the market."

The House Banking Committee hearing on the action, called by Chairman Wright Patman (D-Tex.), came a few days after Pres. Kennedy said the FRB move was necessary to stem the flow of American capital abroad because of the balance of payments problem. He proposed in a special message to Congress a special tax on foreign securities bought by Americans.

The President called for legislation to tax purchases of foreign stocks by 15 percent and bonds and other interest-bearing securities by 2.75 to 15 percent, depending on the length of time the bonds run. He announced also that the U.S. has made standby arrangements with the Intl. Monetary Fund to allow the U.S. to draw on the fund for up to $500 million during the coming year.

The securities tax and the IMF arrangements were termed a step in the right direction toward meeting the balance of payments problem by Nathaniel Goldfinger, AFL-CIO research director.

But, he stressed, the key to solving the problem is to stimulate the American economy to high levels of employment and production.

The Treasury Dept. announced shortly after the President's message that the Administration has agreed to exempt new Canadian issues from the tax after pleas from the Canadian government that the action might endanger the Canadian economy.

The higher discount rate and the proposed interest equalization tax are the major portions of the Administration program designed to reduce the outflow of American capital in foreign investments on both a long-term and short-term basis.

The AFL-CIO has assailed the FRB hike in the discount rate as holding the danger of a new recession and declared that it will put the brakes on the "slight recovery" the nation has experienced this year.

The unfavorable balance of payments—a deficit in transactions between the U.S. and the rest of the world—stems from foreign and military aid programs and movements of American capital overseas. In direct trade, the U.S. has a favorable balance of greater exports than imports.

Longshoremen Choose Gleason as President

Miami Beach—The Intl. Longshoremen's Association elected Thomas W. "Teddy" Gleason as president, effective Aug. 16, and chose Capt. William Bradley for the new post of president emeritus at the union's 40th convention here.

Bradley, president for 10 years, will continue to serve on the ILA executive council. He presided at convention sessions where delegates also voted to take these actions:

- Move the national headquarters to Washington as soon as office space can be obtained.
- Intensify union legislative efforts on the state and national levels.
- Work for an amendment to Public Law 85-742, the federal safety code protecting workers on ships, to cover workers on docks, piers and other port facilities not now protected.

Convention committees reported to the delegates that the federal safety code, introduced by Pres. Kennedy six years ago when he was a senator from Massachusetts and enacted with his help, has reduced shipside accidents by 14.9 percent between 1961 and 1962 in the port of New York alone. At the same time, accidents on dockside increased sharply in the last half of 1962.

Delegates said that labor has been successful only in California and Washington in getting the states to adopt their own safety codes for port workers, and that nationwide legislation is the only practical answer.

The decision to emphasize legislative action came after the wisdom of this activity was stressed by several speakers including Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers, who is president also of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

Union spokesmen said the ILA may retain a New York office after headquarters are moved to the U.S. capital. Since the founding in 1892, the union has had its principal offices in Detroit, Buffalo and New York.

The convention picked John Bowers of Local 824, New York City, to succeed Gleason as executive vice president. Bowers beat George Dixon of Mobile, Ala., in a rollcall vote, 580-242. Dixon was a candidate of the ILA's Gulf Coast locals.

AFL-CIO Warns:

Tax Aid to Wealthy Won't Create Jobs

The tax cut proposed by Pres. Kennedy to put jobless Americans back to work is jeopardized by inherent weaknesses and now even more so by changes that may be legislated in Congress.

This is the warning of AFL-CIO economists in an analysis prepared by the Dept. of Research for the current issue of the American Federationist, monthly organ of the federation.

The only valid reason for a deep tax cut now, the analysis said, is to promote a swift increase of $20-$30 billion in the national output by spreading tax savings through the 43 million families with incomes of $10,000 a year and less.

Families in this income bracket can be expected to spend the money quickly with the effects rippling through the entire economy to stimulate production, expand jobs and increase business profits, the AFL-CIO economists declared.

What must be feared, they warned, is any tax cut actually voted may be concentrated principally for the benefit of corporation and high-income families, without the compensating factor of tax reforms to recoup revenue that already escape through loopholes.

A proposed $2.6 billion in tax reduction offered by the Administration is unjustified, the analysis said. Corporations last year had $37 billion in set-aside cash reserves after all taxes, dividends and normal depreciation allowance—$5 billion more than they spent for new plant and equipment.

"There have been times when lack of funds for capital investments retarded production and job growth," the article observed. "But this hardly seems to be the case today."

Reports emanating from the House Ways & Means Committee—the initial drafter of tax legislation—further suggest that Administration proposals may be weakened rather than strengthened, the analysis said.

Recommendations for the closing of loopholes "have been watered down or totally rejected," one by one, and "the big business campaign" for sharp corporation tax cuts and substantial cuts for upper-bracket individuals" may lead to a final bill giving "all, or nearly all, of the too generous savings originally planned for them" while the 85 percent of families with less-than-$10,000 incomes "would receive even less than the President proposed."

Cuts for corporations "should now be given the lowest priority," the article declared.

And unless Congress adequately closes tax loopholes that largely benefit the well-to-do, proposed rate cuts for the upper brackets "should be drastically curtailed."

The situation will be worsened if those clamoring for business tax cuts should also knock down federal spending for essential civilian welfare service needs, the AFL-CIO economists said. "If federal dollars are taken out of the spending stream as a tax cut puts them in, the economic effect of tax reduction will be nullified."

"What the economy needs," they emphasized, "is a $10 billion tax cut concentrated among low and middle-income families and supplemented by increased federal expenditures for public works—to create jobs and reduce unemployment."

Sound Dollar Tied To Strong Economy

The "underlying strength of the American economy" rather than the "gold in Fort Knox or the balance of payments statistics" is the real basis of the world's confidence in the soundness of the dollar, a Federal Reserve Board member told Congress.

J. L. Robertson, who dissented from the board's recent action in hiking the discount rate, added:

"There is a compelling need for invigorating our economy, putting our people, our materials and our money to work in an expanding, competitive, non-inflationary environment, with a corresponding strengthening of the capacity of the United States to exercise its role of leadership in the free world."

T. A. Lane Dies, Labor Dept. Aide

Thomas A. Lane, adviser on international affairs for the Labor Dept. and former U.S. labor attache, died at Walter Reed Army Hospital after a long illness and was buried in Arlington National Cemetery. He was 67.

A retired Army colonel at the time of his death, Lane joined the Bricklayers in early life while working for his father's building firm in Washington, D. C., and retained his interest in union affairs after studies at Georgetown University and service in World War I. In World War II he was military governor of Salerno, Italy.

Named labor attache at the U.S. embassy in Rome, he served also as embassy counselor until 1955, when he was named to the Labor Dept. post. For his war services, Lane had been awarded the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star and the Crown of Italy medal.

Stock Market Study Critical Of Practices

A professional study of the securities markets sent to Congress by the Securities & Exchange Commission, has pointed up "many specific weaknesses and abuses" that "call for attention and action."

The 1,200-page report prepared for the SEC is the second of a series based on an order from Congress two years ago to investigate charges of abuses in market practices.

The study group, in a letter to the SEC, said "the faults and defects disclosed in the study do not call for public alarm as to basic integrity of the securities market but neither do they permit complacency."

The report was critical of the operations of "specialists" in specific stocks, declaring that "conflicts of interest" were "inherent" in the combination of broker and dealer functions. It urged the end of floor trading, a change in the regulations on short selling and the charges for handling odd lot transactions (less than 100 shares).

The SEC is expected to make its own recommendations to Congress on the basis of the report. Its recommendations based on the first report, which dealt with the qualifications and training of stock market personnel, are now before congressional committees.

Proposed Cuts Assailed:

Job Links Stressed In U.S. Foreign Aid

The welfare and freedom of workers in the United States are closely tied to the welfare and freedom of workers of other countries, and so give American labor a tremendous stake in the foreign aid program, an AFL-CIO spokesman has declared.

John Beidler, AFL-CIO legislative representative, in a network radio interview, pointed out that, as a result, the federation has supported the foreign aid program from the very beginning.

Proposed reductions urged in the recent Clay report (The Committee to Strengthen the Security of the Free World) "would hurt rather than help the foreign aid program," Beidler said, and changes they suggested in the program were not beneficial changes." The committee was comprised of ten prominent Americans, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who dissented from the committee's report to Pres. Kennedy.

Questioned about aiding countries such as Viet Nam, now facing a crisis in its "democracy," Beidler pointed out that Viet Nam "is a battleground; it is no time to leave when the battle is being fought. If we don't continue aid there," he maintained, "we feel that country will be behind the Iron Curtain."

". . . A very large portion of the funds spent on foreign aid (is) actually spent in this country," Beidler said, "and we have estimated that this contributes approximately 700,000 jobs to the American economy. . . . This is a very important addition to the number of jobs in the American economy," he continued, "when our unemployment rate has exceeded 5 percent for more than 5 years."

Beidler warned against arbitrarily setting cut-off dates of current aid programs, as suggested in the Clay report. Such action, he said, "could do great damage."

"You can't sit in an office in Washington, D. C. and decide that in 1972 aid to the country of X can be cut off," Beidler said. "You don't know what is going to happen in the world and to that country between now and then. . . . I think we have to approach this with the idea that it is going to go on for a long time—but not forever," he concluded.

Beidler was questioned by Richard Dudman, Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Howard Norton, labor reporter for The Baltimore Sun.

Federal Court Orders Oklahoma Redistricting

Oklahoma City—A special three-judge federal court has dictated a drastic redistricting of the state legislature, heavily increasing representation of urban and suburban areas by requiring that both the Senate and the House be based on population alone.

In the most sweeping decision since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1961 that complaints of unfair state districting could be received by federal judges, the special court here:

- Laid out new district lines for both House and Senate seats, jumbling together counties and areas to approach equality of population between districts.
- Ordered that all candidates for legislative office within the new districts run at large in the scheduled 1964 election.
- Decreed that terms of office for all previously elected members of the state legislature will expire 15 days after the November 1964 election regardless of previously stated tenure.
- Decreed that its redistricting shall remain in force for the following eight years unless the legislature itself drafts new districts meeting U.S. constitutional standards for equitable representation.
- Rejected as inadequate a belated redistricting voted by the recent session of the state legislature. The court did not declare the legislature's action null and void since it has not yet gone into effect, but the result appears to be the same.

The court observed that under the revised statute, 31 percent of the people would have power to elect a majority of the Oklahoma House and that "invidious discrimination" was even more apparent in Senate districting.

The unanimous decision, sure to be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, was handed down by a bench consisting of Circuit Court Judge A. P. Murray and Dist. Judges Fred A. Daugherty and Ross Rizley.

The court said it was "reluctant" to perform a redistricting duty that should have been accepted by the legislature but indicated doubt that the legislature would ever adopt a program meeting the provisions of the U.S. Constitution's 14th Amendment guaranteeing equal protection of the laws.

'Guidelines' Ignored

The court pointed out that last year it had directed the legislature's attention to "guidelines" as offered in a proposal from the University of Oklahoma's Bureau of Government Research.

Its "guidelines" had been ignored, the court said in the present decision, and it ordered the university's proposed districts into effect.

The practical effect of the court's decision is to increase greatly representation of Oklahoma City and Tulsa in the state legislature and to reduce rural representation. Rural districts have had control in the past.

The court acknowledged that its decree might be "in excess of our judicial power" but observed that the issues were "squarely presented" and would be "authoritatively settled during the next term of the Supreme Court.

Illinois AFL-CIO Names R. G. Gibson

Chicago—Robert G. Gibson has been named secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State AFL-CIO succeeding Maurice F. McElligott, who died July 1.

Gibson is 35 and lives in Granite City, Ill. Son of a lead miner and boilermaker, he was an officer of Steelworkers' Local 16 in Granite City, secretary of the Tri-City Industrial Union Council, and a council staff member until merger with the former state AFL in 1958, when he became community services activities director for the state AFL-CIO body. He is now treasurer of the Young Democratic Clubs of America.

PARLIAMENT MEMBERS from Sweden get welcome from AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in federation headquarters and hear spokesman declare they feel at home in the house of labor. Part of the group of 22 MP's and eight other overseas guests is shown in the Executive Council meeting room with Schnitzler, left, and Erik Sodersten, labor specialist at the U.S. embassy in Stockholm. All the MP's are members of labor-backed Social Democratic Party.

UN Studies South Africa Oil Embargo

United Nations, N. Y.—The United Nations Security Council has taken up the report of an 11-nation committee urging an embargo on arms and oil traffic with South Africa in a pressure campaign to induce that country to abandon its total racial segregation policy of apartheid.

The committee stopped short of recommending expulsion from the UN. Three of the newer African nations—Ghana, Nigeria and Somalia—concurred in the recommendation despite the absence of this proposal.

Africans Bolted

African nations bolted the recent Intl. Labor Organization meeting in Geneva in protest of the presence of South African government, employer and worker delegates. The worker delegate was denied a seat as not being representative of any labor organization.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions meanwhile renewed its request to the Security Council that the council consider absolute expulsion.

Omer Becu, ICTFU general secretary, in a telegram to UN Sec. Gen. U Thant, urged that the council submit to the UN General Assembly a proposal that "states maintaining racial discrimination as a political principle" be expelled from both the UN and its specialized agencies.

The Security Council also is considering protests against "uncivilized and inhumane" policies of Portugal in its remaining African colony of Angola.

The ILO approved a proposal that expulsion of South Africa by the UN—parent organization of the ILO—be considered. It also provided for consideration of a constitutional change by the ILO itself to provide for expulsion.

South Africa had previously been requested by the ILO to quit the body unless it would abandon the apartheid policy.

The 11-nation UN committee termed the apartheid policy a threat to South African whites as well as to the Negro majority, declaring that "any conflict in South Africa precipitated by the racial policies of the government cannot but have the most serious international repercussions."

The committee recommended that UN members take all needed measures to enforce an oil and arms embargo, including a naval blockade under UN auspices.

Employer Attitude Here Appalls Visiting Swedes

America has strong labor unions, employers who are "negative" about union organizing efforts and too many jobless workers, 21 members of the Swedish Parliament concluded on their first visit to this country.

Admitting that a four-week tour was too short for comprehensive study, the MPs and nine other visitors—friends and family members—expressed pleasure at the "open, frank friendliness and sincerity" that "almost overwhelmed" them on visits to New York, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Atlanta, Washington and other cities.

The delegation—most of them members of Sweden's dominant labor-supported Social Democratic Party and all present or former union members—saw Niagara Falls, the United Nations building, the Ford River Rouge plant and Greenfield Village, Solidarity House, General Motors technical center, a baseball game and other sights, and were guests at dinner of Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther and at lunch of Chicago AFL-CIO officers.

They had meetings with Detroit Council members, got a key to the city from the acting mayor of Detroit, met with Chicago's Mayor Daly and other officials, toured a packing plant, visited Gustavus Adolphus College and met the faculty in Minneapolis, and in Atlanta saw the Lockheed Aircraft plant and Dr. Martin Luther King, civil rights leader. leader.

The delegation, on a tour arranged by the American Travel Association, a cooperative owned by unions and other co-op groups, was welcomed to AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington by federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and "briefed" on the state of the union by AFL-CIO department heads.

Profit from Experience

Schnitzler greeted the travelers in the name of Pres. George Meany, who had been called to the White House for discussions on the railroad bargaining crisis. Recalling his own past visits to Sweden, Schnitzler said America can profit from Swedish experience in retraining of workers and other problems of employment and joblessness.

Before returning, the delegation drew up a statement released by Tour Conductor Erik Sodersten, labor specialist at the U.S. embassy in Stockholm, and Arne Moller, secretary to the Social Democratic Parliament members and editor of the party magazine Tiden.

"Nothing has made such an impression on us as the spirit of progressiveness and far-sightedness that we have so often met," they said. "At the same time we are astonished at the many examples of American employers' negative attitude toward the efforts of unions to organize their employes."

They added: "It's exactly this organizational work by the labor movement which has been one of the basic elements in the strong economic development of our country," and a "decisive factor in the peace prevailing on the Swedish labor market."

Kennedy Asks Immigration Quotas' End

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to scrap the present "national origin" quota system for immigration to the United States and substitute a system of priorities giving preference to persons of needed skills and relatives of American citizens, regardless of nationality.

Kennedy said the present quota system, which labor and other groups have criticized as discriminatory, "is without basis in either logic or reason."

It assigns immigration quotas on the basis of the national origins of the U.S. population in the year 1920. The effect, Kennedy told Congress, is that the system is heavily weighted in favor of immigration from northern Europe and severely limits immigration from southern and eastern Europe and from other parts of the world."

As a result, the President said, some 60,000 quota numbers go unused each year because they are in excess of the number of persons seeking to emigrate from countries to which they are assigned, "while American citizens wait for years for their relatives to receive a quota" from nations with a backlog of applicants.

The President's proposal, if enacted by Congress, would gradually be put into effect over a five-year period.

UAW Member Named To United Fund Post

Lansing, Mich.—Mrs. Martha O. Reynolds, a member of Auto Workers Local 257 and a leader in a number of Negro organizations, has been named Community Service Activities staff representative to the Michigan United Fund. She succeeds Ray Garrett, who is joining the staff of the Saginaw Community Chest.

Mrs. Reynolds has been CSA staff representative to the Grand Rapids and Kent County United Fund.

Meany Names Civil Rights Task Force

Major Labor Effort Pledged to Kennedy

(Continued from Page 1)

Kennedy has called "this summer of determined effort."

Special staff will be recruited from the international union affiliates and assigned to the committee, Meany said.

In addition, he announced that he has instructed the directors of key AFL-CIO departments—legislative, political education, public relations, worker education, publications and research—to work closely with the special staff and to assign whatever manpower may be necessary to implement its work.

Reports 'Encouraging'

Meany said reports he had received from his earlier directive to the AFL-CIO's state and city central bodies, urging establishment of bi-racial committees, were most encouraging. But, he said, bi-racial committees still must be established in many cities and nearly all those already existing must be strengthened. This, he noted, would be the first task of the committee.

In his letter to the President, Meany reiterated the AFL-CIO's complete support of civil rights legislation now before the Congress, including legislation for equal job opportunity, a long-sought goal of the AFL-CIO.

"But," Meany said, "this is not the hour when men who truly believe in liberty, equality and brotherhood can consider their responsibility has been met by urging the Congress to act.

"We believe that speeches, testimony, resolutions and demonstrations all serve a purpose. But translating emotion into accomplishment demands the full measure of citizenship and in a democracy that means action as well as words.

"That is what this committee is designed for—action to wipe out discrimination wherever it exists."

Text of Letter

The text of Meany's letter to President Kennedy follows:

"Dear Mr. President:

"This is to inform you that the AFL-CIO has today created a special committee which stands ready to work with your Administration in a major effort to abolish discrimination during what you have so aptly called 'this summer of determined effort.'

"As you know, the AFL-CIO stands fully behind the legislative proposals you have made to the Congress. We have testified before the appropriate committees, urging enactment of the legislative proposals you have endorsed, including equal opportunity for employment—a goal of organized labor for more than a decade and a half.

"But this is not the hour when men who truly believe in liberty, equality and brotherhood can consider their responsibility has been met by urging the Congress to act.

"We believe that speeches, testimony, resolutions and demonstrations all serve a purpose. But translating emotion into accomplishment demands the full measure of citizenship and in a democracy that means action as well as words.

"That is what this committee is designed for—action to wipe out discrimination wherever it exists—on the jobs, in the schools, in the voting booth, in housing developments, stores, theaters or recreation areas.

"Besides myself, the committee will include William F. Schnitzler, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO; Walter P. Reuther, president of the Industrial Union Dept.; C. J. Haggerty, president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.; and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

Staff Assigned

"A special staff will be assigned to this committee, to work with our state and local organizations, and the directors of our key headquarters departments have been instructed to give this matter highest priority. The staff's first assignment will be to establish or strengthen already established bi-racial committees in each city.

"Let me repeat the pledge we made to you and the nation. You have our unstinting assistance in the campaign to achieve a full, enforceable civil rights program on every front. Your leadership in this effort has been inspiring at an hour when half-way measures would not suffice. We intend to do our part in this vital effort."

A STRONG fair employment law is essential to civil rights progress, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany tells a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Bar Job Bias Now, Meany Asks Senate

(Continued from Page 1)

rights problems within our own ranks.

"We know that there are those who in fact dissent" from the long-declared AFL-CIO position, Meany said. "We know this through their actions at the local union level, which we deplore."

Opposition, Meany told the subcommittee, has come from some union members in the South reflecting the prejudices of their communities and from some northern workers fearful of losing job opportunities.

In cooperation with affiliated unions and central bodies, the federation and its civil rights staff have worked to end discriminatory practices in unions "in the South as well as the North," Meany told the subcommittee.

These efforts, he said, "cannot hope to be wholly successful, simply because the AFL-CIO has only limited powers."

He told the subcommittee:

"This is one reason why we want strong federal legislation, legislation putting the muscle of federal law behind the goal of equal opportunity. We need the power of the federal government to do what we are not fully able to do."

Meany warned against the "pitfall" of seeking to correct past inequities by giving "special preference" to Negroes in hiring or "super-seniority" in layoffs. This, he said, "would merely replace one kind of discrimination with another."

He agreed with Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.) that the three bills before the subcommittee avoided this pitfall.

In response to questions, Meany made this distinction about priority for Negroes in applications for union membership or apprenticeship.

He said that when any group of applicants—such as sons of employers or of union members—have been given priority on a waiting list, equal preference should then be given to Negro applicants. However if the waiting list is based on date of application, it would be unfair to give any later applicant priority.

Labor seeks equal employment opportunity, "both through our own voluntary action and through enforceable legislation," Meany declared, "because it is right from any moral point of view . . . It is the American ideal that each man shall be judged on his own ability."

Kennedy Action Praised

Meany noted that "every President from Franklin Roosevelt on" has used his executive authority to prevent discriminatory practices by government contractors and he praised Kennedy's "expanded and accelerated" program in this area.

"But the government contract program is not enough," Meany declared. While it applies to millions of jobs, "there are millions more to which it does not apply."

GOP Committee Ranks Split on FEP Measure

Republicans split at least three ways as the House Education & Labor Committee formally cleared an Equal Employment Opportunity bill which would outlaw job discrimination because of race, religion or national origin—and back it up through a strong enforcement procedure.

Five of the committee's 12 Republicans hailed the bill, described it as "bipartisan," and said it should be passed "without delay and with minimal partisan rancor."

Subscribing to this statement were Representatives William H. Ayres (O.), Albert H. Quie (Minn.), Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.), Alphonzo Bell (Calif.) and Robert Taft, Jr. (O.).

Two Republicans—Dave Martin (Neb.) and Paul Findley (Ill.)—said flatly that the bill should be defeated because job discrimination "is not a proper field for federal legislation."

Representatives Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr. (N.J.) and Robert P. Griffin (Mich.) said they support the "principle" of barring discrimination in jobs but object because the bill would give too much power to the administrative agency set up to enforce the law. They said they will offer an amendment which would require the enforcement agency to go to court in order to seek compliance with the law.

Representatives Donald C. Bruce (Ind.) and M. G. (Gene) Snyder (Ky.) joined by Findley, appended a statement which did not take any position on the desirability of a fair employment law but declared that if one should be enacted, court enforcement should be required. The 12th GOP committee member, John M. Ashbrook (O.) did not sign any of the statements. None of the 19 Democrats on the committee issued a separate statement.

The bill, originally introduced by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), sets up an administrative machinery modeled after the National Labor Relations Board. A five-member Equal Employment Opportunity Board would hear and determine complaints of unlawful employment discrimination and issue orders which could be enforced in federal courts.

A separate office of Administrator would be established, comparable to the NLRB general counsel, to issue and investigate complaints.

Where states have adequate fair employment laws, the administrator would be empowered to cede jurisdiction to the state enforcement agency, but a complainant could petition a federal court to require the federal agency to take over jurisdiction if the state agency failed to process a complaint.

The bill would eventually cover employers with 25 or more workers and unions with 25 or more members, although initially the employment and membership cutoff would be 100.

Before formal enforcement action is begun, the administrator is charged with seeking compliance through informal methods of conciliation and persuasion.

The committee declared that its hearings had demonstrated that job discrimination "permeates the national social fabric—North, South, East and West." It said the bill, which now goes to the House Rules Committee, "is directed at correcting such abuses wherever found and is not focused upon any single section of the country."

Reuther Sees 'Vital' Start In Rights Bill

Property rights "must never be permitted to overshadow human rights and human dignity," Walter P. Reuther told a House Judiciary Committee at hearings on the Administration's civil rights program.

Reuther, testifying as president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and the Auto Workers, termed the Administration bill a "vital and necessary beginning . . . a moderate and restrained proposal."

The measure can be strengthened, Reuther told the subcommittee, "but if you compromise one principle of this bill, if you weaken it one scintilla, you will have failed a nation urgently looking to you for leadership."

Terming the public accommodations section "the single most important part" of the bill, Reuther said that once a businessman asks the public to deal with him he has no right to discriminate.

"Can anyone seriously argue," he asked, "that Congress has power to regulate the color of the margerine that goes on the restaurant table but not the color of the citizen who may sit at that table?"

The President's bill, Reuther said, deserves support as "a strong first legislative step towards the goal of a federal code of civil rights that will guarantee all Americans equality in law and equality in fact."

7-27-63

FTC Charge Hits Phony Labor Paper

The Federal Trade Commission has charged the operators of Trade Union News in New York with selling advertising in the publication by misrepresenting that the paper is endorsed by, affiliated with, or an official publication of a labor union.

The complaint names Trade Advertising Associates, Inc., and Joseph Lash and Eugene Serels, as officials and co-partners doing business as Trade Union News. They have until Aug. 11 to file an answer.

The FTC charged that the paper has no connection "in any manner" with any labor union and that it engaged in further misrepresentation by claiming itself to be a winner of national advertising and international editorial excellence awards.

The complaint further charged that the paper printed unordered advertisements and then sought payment for them, subjecting "firms and individuals to harassment and unlawful demands" in violation of the FTC Act.

The FTC developed its investigation on the basis of information supplied by the Intl. Labor Press Association, the organization which represents legitimate labor publications issued by AFL-CIO affiliates.

Labor Israel Group To Mark Anniversary

New York—Chairman Moe Falikman of the National Committee for Labor Israel has announced that the committee will celebrate its 40th anniversary Oct. 14 with a special show in Madison Square Garden featuring American and Israeli personalities.

GO with the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, August 3, 1963 | No. 31

Congress Urged by Meany To Launch New Rail Talks

July Jobless Rate Listed At 5.6%

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's jobless rate hung high at 5.6 percent in July despite a strong increase to a record 70.9 million jobholders, according to the Labor Dept.'s summary report.

Unemployment showed "the usual substantial decline for this time of year," the report said, dropping by 524,000 to 4.3 million.

"The decline over the month was among teenagers," the report added, "as many of those who had entered the labor market in recent months found jobs by July.

"However, unemployment was 300,000 higher than a year ago because of a rise in the number of young jobseekers over the year."

The key jobless rate, adjusted to account for seasonal influences, dropped slightly to 5.6 percent from June's 5.7 percent. This means 56 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were actively seeking jobs and could not find them.

Rate Up Over 1962

The 5.6 percent jobless rate in July compares to 5.4 percent for July a year ago. For postwar Julys, the jobless rate hit a peak of 7.5 percent in the worst of the 1958 recession; it registered a low of 2.6 percent in 1953.

During 1962, the rate remained

(Continued on Page 2)

Area Aid Bill Revived by House Unit

The federal program of aid to depressed areas got a second chance of survival as the House Banking & Currency Committee approved an amended version of a Senate-passed bill to expand the program and pump new funds into it through the Area Redevelopment Administration.

But the ultimate fate of the labor-backed legislation — defeated earlier in the House, 209-204— still was uncertain.

On the Senate side, an attempt to revive the Mexican farm labor (bracerós) program, due to expire Dec. 31, was blocked by a parliamentary maneuver sending it back to the Agriculture Committee. The House already had killed another bill to extend the program, which labor opposes as a device for curtailing jobs and holding down wages of U.S. farm workers. The

(Continued on Page 11)

GIVE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING a chance to function in the rail work rules dispute, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urges the Senate Commerce Committee. Committee members shown are, from left, Senators Hugh Scott (R-Pa.), Thruston B. Morton (R-Ky.), Norris Cotton (R-N.H.), Acting Chairman John O. Pastore (D-R.I.); a staff assistant, Morris Levin, and Senators A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) and Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.). At Meany's right is AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Single Package:

House Groups Seek Omnibus Rights Bill

House civil rights leaders will seek to combine Pres. Kennedy's proposals dealing with public accommodations, voting rights and school desegregation into a single package with a committee-approved fair employment bill—and then send it to the Senate intact.

Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee told a committee of civil rights leaders, including two labor spokesmen, that he will support a move to incorporate a strong ban on job discrimination in the omnibus bill his committee is now considering.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), sponsor of the fair employment bill which has been approved by the House Labor Committee, was scheduled to appear before the Judiciary Committee to urge consolidation.

The new strategy had the concurrence of Labor Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell, who earlier had said he would seek to bypass the House Rules Committee by trying to get the job bill to the floor through a rarely-successful procedure known as "calendar Wednesday."

By putting all the civil rights measures into one basket, supporters hope to consolidate their efforts and avoid an initial tactical setback.

Celler's announcement came as a committee from the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, including AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Jack Conway, executive assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., recommended the consolidation procedure.

On the Senate side, Steelworkers' Pres. David J. McDonald told a Labor subcommittee headed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) that legislation to ban discrimination in employment is the most important civil rights proposal before Congress.

The "heart of the racial problem in America," McDonald said, is "basically economic."

He said the legislation should be directed against all job discrimination, "whether that discrimination is practiced by unions or by em-

(Continued on Page 12)

Cites 'Narrowing' Of Disputed Issues

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged Congress to direct renewed negotiations in the railroad work rules dispute, under the eyes of a special congressional committee, before moving to any form of "compulsion."

Collective bargaining has "not been exhausted," Meany said. In fact, he emphasized, it has been tried only in recent weeks and has already narrowed the issues in dispute.

He told both Senate and House Commerce Committees that Pres. Kennedy's proposal to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to impose rules changes and bar strikes for a two-year period "adds up to compulsion."

He declared his "complete agreement" with Kennedy that the economy "cannot stand a national railroad strike." The President, he said, "has done everything in his power to bring this dispute to a reasonable settlement." Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and other top officials have "worked night and day" to bring the parties closer together.

Nevertheless, he emphasized, "I don't agree with their approach to settle this matter."

As an alternative, Meany proposed that Congress pass a joint resolution which would:

- Direct the parties to the dispute to "immediately resume collective bargaining" and instruct the Secretary of Labor and the National Mediation Board to assist the negotiations and "engage in mediatory action."
- Set up a committee of five congressmen and five senators to receive reports on the progress of negotiations. If the committee finds no prospect for a settlement "within a reasonable time," it would so report "together with recommendations for further action by Congress."
- Bar the railroads, during this procedure, from making unilateral rules changes and the unions from striking.

Meany told the committees his

(Continued on Page 12)

2 Kennedy Aides Hit Bonner Bill

Two Cabinet members have joined in warning Congress that a compulsory arbitration law would be too high a price to pay to avoid shutdowns in key industries.

It would have "a corrosive effect" on collective bargaining and "produce worse effects than the ills sought to be cured," Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges declared.

"If a third party decision is assured by law, one party or the other to a dispute will rely on it as a basis for evading responsibility for a hard decision," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz asserted. "It becomes a substitute not only for strikes, but for collective bargaining itself."

The two testified before the House Merchant Marine Committee, expressing the Administration's opposition to a bill introduced by Committee Chairman Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.) which would empower the President to refer maritime disputes to arbitration if collective bargaining and mediation fail to bring an agreement.

Although the language Wirtz and Hodges used in rejecting compulsory arbitration was almost identical to the arguments by rail

(Continued on Page 10)

Freedom in Latin American Nations Benefits All Workers, Meany Says

A free society in the nations of Latin America is of benefit to all workers because it makes their own freedom more secure, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a talk to students of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

Speaking to 38 students from Latin America and the Caribbean area at an orientation session in the federation's auditorium, Meany congratulated them on their approaching "graduation" from the institute and urged them to "carry back what you have learned" to improve society in their own land.

Six recent graduates who returned home to work for the British Guiana Trades Union Congress, he recalled, "made a contribution" to the successful fight for free trade unionism in that land. Recently Meany sent congratulations to the Guiana TUC for winning an 11-week general strike against a government-supported bill to determine all union bargaining agents.

Trade unions, Meany told the potential labor leaders, have a "very simple purpose"—to improve the status of members and help them "build a better life." Though conditions are different

(Continued on Page 11)

BUILDING TRADESMEN William Schacherbauer and Tony Vega, right, perform ribbon-cutting ceremony at new Phoenix, Ariz., skyscraper instead of customary mayor or governor. Vega is a laborer, Schacherbauer a carpenter foreman. Developers Stan Dru and Jim Colachis invited workers and their families, 400 strong, to housewarming at $7 million Executive Towers apartments. Follow-up was a letter of appreciation to Pres. W. L. Ruddick of the Building & Construction Trades Council for "fine work" done by construction crews.

Up 1.2 Percent in Year:

Cost of Living Jumps To New Record High

The consumer's cost of living jumped to a new record high in June with "substantial increases" for food, tobacco and used cars leading a general price advance, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The Consumer Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics rose by four-tenths of 1 percent—the largest rise in nine months—to 106.6 percent, the department said. This means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period now costs $10.66.

Arnold Chase, assistant commissioner of labor statistics, said the June increase "reflects more past inflationary pressure than any present or future inflationary danger." He foresees a "small increase, mostly seasonal," for July.

The June index, at 106.6, stands 1.2 percent higher than a year ago, the Labor Dept. report said, "primarily because of higher prices for food, housing and medical care."

The June CPI means a 1-cent an hour wage increase for some 85,000 workers, primarily in aircraft, trucking and public transit, whose union-negotiated escalator clauses are tied to the June index. Another 11,000 local cartage workers in California will get 2-cent hikes and 9,000 workers will receive 2 and 3-cent boosts based on the New York City index.

In a companion report, the Labor Dept. said the net spendable earnings—or take-home pay—of factory production workers rose by over 90 cents in June to a record $88.38 for the worker with three dependents. This was $2.27 higher than in June a year ago, the report noted.

Speaking of the June CPI, Chase told reporters "this is primarily a story of sugar, cigarettes and taxes."

Sales taxes were increased in several areas, pushing up the consumer's costs for apparel, home furnishings, new cars and other items, it was pointed out. In addition, real estate taxes and rents were on the rise.

Sales taxes rose to 4 percent from 3 percent in New York City and to 5 percent from 4 percent in Pennsylvania.

The housing index jumped two-tenths of 1 percent, reflecting higher real estate taxes in Seattle, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Kansas City and Philadelphia. Rent went up in San Francisco, Baltimore, Cincinnati and New York City.

Sugar prices soared 32 percent above the May level and stood 44 percent higher than a year ago.

Chase guessed, however, that it was "likely we have seen the peak in retail prices in sugar" though it will remain high for some months.

The "sharply higher sugar prices" were the major reason for the hefty eight-tenths of 1 percent advance in the CPI food item.

"Other goods and services" swung upward by 1.5 percent from May to 107.6 in June. This included a rise of three-tenths of 1 percent in medical care due to hikes in premiums for hospitalization and surgical insurance and dentists' fees.

Tobacco products climbed a sharp 3.1 percent reflecting the first price rise for cigarettes since 1957—most non-filter cigarettes were up 7 cents a carton and single packs up by 1 cent.

ABC Wins 2 Elections, Repels Raid

Workers at two plants of the Cushman Baking Co. have voted to join the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, the union has reported.

The ABC won two National Labor Relations Board elections, 172-150 at the Lynn, Mass., plant and 166-95 at the Portland, Me., bakery.

The two plants were organized with the help of the AFL-CIO regional director and the Massachusetts State AFL-CIO, the union said.

In another NLRB election, members of ABC Local 719 employed at the National Biscuit Co. plant in Fair Lawn, N. J., defeated an attempted raid by Local 405 of the expelled Bakery & Confectionery Workers. The vote was ABC 1,079, B&C 224.

The affiliated union said the raid was the second in two months despite a "no raiding" agreement with the present leadership of B&C. The latter union was expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership.

Union Leader Wins Brotherhood Award

White Plains, N. Y.—Pres. Robert Greene of Local 1783, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was cited by the Westchester region of the National Conference of Christians & Jews at its 4th Annual Brotherhood Awards Dinner.

State Supreme Court Justice John J. Dillon, one of the first recipients of the NCCJ regional wards, presented a scroll to Greene and praised his local's pattern of non-discrimination and its job training and placement efforts on behalf of the physically handicapped.

July Jobless Rate 5.6% Despite Seasonal Gains

(Continued from Page 1)

stubbornly high at about 5.5 percent of the work-force. So far in 1963, it has moved to a higher level; since January it has been recorded successively as 5.8, 6.1, 5.6, 5.7, 5.9, 5.7 and, in July, 5.6 percent.

The Labor Dept. observed that the unemployment rates for adults were close to those of a year ago, 4.3 percent for adult men and 5.3 percent for adult women.

"But the teenage rate continued well above the year-ago level," the report added, at 16.2 percent for July compared to 16.0 percent a year ago.

On the employment side of the picture, the Labor Dept. reported "a substantially better-than-seasonal change" as jobs rose by nearly 500,000 to a record 70.9 million.

Non-Farm Jobs Gain

All the rise was in non-farm employment, the report said, with the over-the-month increase concentrated among teenagers and young adults aged 20 to 24. Non-farm jobs reached 64.9 million; farm jobs remained level at 6.0 million.

Counted among the employed were 2.5 million non-farm workers on short workweeks for economic reasons, a small seasonal drop from June, the report noted.

The total labor force stood at 77.9 million—the same as a month earlier—and was 1.5 million higher than in July 1962, the report said. The over-the-year rise so far in 1963 has averaged 1.1 million, it added.

Among the 4.3 million jobless were 900,000 persons counted as longterm unemployed — looking for work and unable to find it for 15 weeks or longer. This group was down slightly from June's 1 million; it compares to a high of 1.7 million for the month in July 1958 and a low of 152,000 in July 1953.

Three-fifths of the 900,000 longterm jobless had been out of work 6 months or longer, the report said.

Referee Certifies Regan In SEG Election Fight

Hollywood, Calif.—Tony Regan has been certified as the new president of the Screen Extras Guild after an impartial referee rejected all challenges by opposing factions in the closely-fought balloting for six offices and the board of directors.

Nathan Cayton, retired chief judge of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, issued his findings after three days of hearings into disputes growing out of the election.

The certified election results showed Regan defeating the incumbent president, Jeffrey Sayre, 1,178 to 915. The two promptly issued a joint statement pledging their efforts to solve the union's problems in upcoming negotiations over the SEG contract and its health and welfare plan.

Other officers elected include First Vice Pres. Bob Burrows, Second Vice Pres. Tex Brodus, Third Vice Pres. Jack R. Clinton, Recording Sec. John R. Albright, and Treas. Joe Brooks.

Directors elected for three-year terms were Tex Brodus, Kit Carson, Murray Pollack, Margaret Bacon, Chester Jones, Hubert Kerns, Robert Edmiston, Bill Dyer, Roydon Clark, Tanya Somova and Emile Avery.

On one disputed issue, Judge Cayton ordered the counting of 89 ballots that were temporarily mislaid in the office of the Guild's accountants, but they failed to alter the results.

He also ruled that proper notice of the election had been given; that the Regan group's handbills provided "no foundation for invalidating the election;" that the votes of San Francisco and Hawaii members had been properly counted, and that the evidence did not support a charge that the Regan group had knowingly accepted financial support from persons other than SEG members in good standing.

LOOK for the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Runaway Dress Firm Loses Appeal

New York—The New York State Court of Appeals has refused to review a ruling by the appellate division of the State Supreme Court unanimously upholding awards of $61,000 and $22,464 against Judy Bond, Inc., runaway dress firm, for breach of its contract with the Ladies' Garment Workers.

The denial of further review in effect affirmed the lower court ruling of last Apr. 25 and the July 1962 finding of George J. Mintzer, impartial arbiter for the blouse industry here, that the firm could not run away from its contract by moving to the South and stranding its long-time workers.

Mintzer had ordered Judy Bond to pay $108,762 in damages to the union and the employes who had been left behind. Last December the runaway firm paid part of the penalty but refused to pay the balance pending its petition for review. The payment was for $25,301 representing underpayments, and overtime sums due shipping clerks who had worked 40 hours in violation of contract terms providing a 35-hour week.

The ILGWU has maintained picket lines against the firm and its outlets in New York, Atlanta and Los Angeles and is conducting a nationwide "don't buy" campaign in which more than 3 million leaflets have been distributed to the public.

Judy Bond had been under contract with the union for some 30 years. Contract renegotiations were nearing a conclusion when the firm suddenly closed its operations here, secured a plant in Brewton, Ala., and moved all its production to the South. Last May 17 a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner recommended that 12 fired ILGWU supporters in Alabama be reinstated with lost pay.

N. Y. State Employed 7.4 Million in June

Albany—Total employment in New York State was more than 7.4 million in June, up by 75,000 over May but 10,000 below that of June 1962, Industrial Commissioner M. P. Catherwood has reported.

Unemployment in June totaled 435,000 compared with 405,000 in May 1963 and 425,000 in June 1962. For New York City, estimated June joblessness was 266,900 or 6.2 percent increase.

Common Market Pay Up, Unemployment Still Low

Brussels—Record low unemployment and record high wages are the order of the day in the six countries making up the European Common Market, according to a report issued here.

In 1962 wages jumped an average of 10 percent. While real wages were somewhat offset by price increases, the real value of wage increases still showed a "very noticeable" improvement.

Highest pay increases took place in France, West Germany, Italy and Holland. In Holland and West Germany they were 10 percent higher than in 1961, in Italy 11 percent higher in industry and 15 percent higher in agriculture.

The increases in hourly wages were 15 percent in Italy, 12 percent in Germany, 9 percent in France and Holland, and 6 to 7 percent in Belgium and Luxembourg.

Unemployment was only 1.65 percent of the labor force in the European Six.

Negotiated by Steelworkers:

30,000 in Aluminum Firms Win Extended Vacation Plan

New York—An extended vacation plan providing 10 weeks off with 13 weeks pay every five years has been negotiated by the Steelworkers for virtually all of the 30,000 employes of five major aluminum producers in plants where the USWA has contracts.

The agreements, similar in broad outline to the steel industry pattern, were worked out here in nine days of talks by USWA negotiators with the Aluminum Co. of America, Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Co., Reynolds Metals Co., Olin Mathieson Corp. and Ormet, Inc.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald, who headed the union's bargaining team, termed the aluminum settlements "another significant contribution to the union's continued desire to provide more job opportunities and income security to our membership."

He emphasized that the agreements were reached "without the necessity of formal reopening and totally free of the crisis atmosphere deadline bargaining so frequently inspired in the past."

Present contracts in the aluminum industry were due to expire Aug. 31, 1964, and were reopenable as of last June 1. The USWA, however, began "discussions" with the companies on July 17 without serving formal reopening notices. The resulting agreements extend the contracts at least to June 1, 1965, requiring 60 days notice to be given on or after Apr. 1 of that year.

There were some differences from the extended vacation plan which led to last month's settlement with the 11 "big steel" producers, setting a pattern for other steel company contracts.

The steel plan gives 13-week vacations every five years to the upper half of the seniority roster of each company.

One-Year Eligibility

Aluminum workers will be eligible for the extended vacations after a year of service with their employer. Each year, starting Jan. 1, 1964, one-fifth of the eligible workers will receive a 10-week vacation with 13 weeks of pay.

As in the steel contracts, no wage increase is provided, but other improvements reported by the union include a $10 a week increase in sickness and accident benefits, raising the ceiling to $78 a week; $500 more in life insurance for active employes, and extension of hospital insurance coverage to 365 days.

McDonald, USWA Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel and Vice Pres. Howard R. Hague, coordinator of the union's negotiators, praised both the union bargaining committees and the management representatives who worked out the contract terms.

Stressing the value of the program "in terms of job and income security for the thousands of workers it covers," McDonald said:

"We believe that the amicable and forthright manner in which these contract discussions were conducted once more proves the worth of free collective bargaining when it is conducted by men of good faith and mutual understanding.

"The agreements demonstrate that there is understanding in the aluminum industry of the need to provide job and income security in the general interest of our national well-being. The industry negotiators' god will and sense of responsibility was recognized and returned in kind by our representatives with the result that our mutual problems were resolved swiftly and amicably."

First to sign the new agreement was Alcoa, the nation's largest aluminum producer, with 13,000 USWA members in 11 plants. Also affected were 8,000 workers at 10 Kaiser plants, 7,000 at eight Reynolds plants and a total of 2,000 in one Olin Mathieson plant and one Ormet plant.

HALF-CENTURY of service to the Hotel & Restaurant Workers by Louis Koenig was recognized when he was presented with a 50-year membership pin by Myra Wolfgang, who succeeded him as secretary-treasurer of Detroit Local 705 after Koenig had held the post for more than 40 years.

Aluminum, Auto Unions Achieve New Contracts

New York—The Aluminum Workers and the Auto Workers have reached agreement in separate negotiations with major aluminum producers on an extended vacation plan along the lines of the Steelworkers' settlement with the industry.

A union spokesman said new contract terms covering some 4,000 UAW members at four plants of the Aluminum Co. of America closely follow the USWA pattern of 10 weeks of vacation with 13 weeks of pay every five years.

The Aluminum Workers also reported agreement on a 10-week-vacation, 13-weeks-pay plan, but the additional three weeks of wages will go into a vested fund for each employe.

The AWIU said the new agreements affect about 8,000 members employed by Reynolds Metals Co. and about 11,000 at Alcoa plants. In addition to the extended vacation plan, they include increased insurance benefits and improved clauses affecting a number of local issues, a union representative said.

Still to be resolved are AWIU contracts covering workers at three other Reynolds plants and one plant of the Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., where local issues reportedly have delayed settlement.

The special fund into which the three-weeks vacation "bonus" will be deposited for AWIU members was established last year following a one-day strike. It was initially set up as a repository for "spillover" from the supplementary unemployment benefits fund. The deposits are vested in the name of each employe and accrue 3 percent interest a year. They are payable on retirement, death or any other termination of employment, in addition to regular pensions for which an employe may be eligible.

1,100 Hatters on Strike For Industry Pay Rates

New York—A strike of 1,100 Hatters for higher wages and improved working conditions has closed two plants at the Hat Corp. of America at Winchester, Tenn., and Sunbury, Pa.

A third plant at Norwalk, Conn., was shut down by the management and some 250 employes were laid off, the union said.

The result was to end production of all Hat Corp. products, sold under the Knox, Dobbs, Cavanaugh, Dunlap and Champ Hat labels.

Hatters' Pres. Alex Rose said two of the plants were struck because the workers, North and South, had a common grievance—wages substantially below those in the trade and well under those at the Norwalk, Conn., plant of the same firm.

In both struck plants, Rose said, the union made extensive efforts to arrive at a friendly settlement after the old contracts expired—May 1 at Sunbury, June 30 at Winchester. When talks bogged down, Local 91 at Sunbury and Local 109 in Winchester sent delegations to New York to join Rose in a final effort to resolve long-standing grievances.

The effort failed when top company executives refused to bring the firm's wage structure to a par with the rest of the men's hat industry, according to a union statement.

Rose said Winchester workers had complained repeatedly of grievances due to anti-union hostility, and charged that the firm had "downgraded" work at Winchester, reducing wages to a low point. At Sunbury the complaints involved substandard wages and working conditions.

Agreement on a new four-year pact had been reached at Norwalk June 19.

The union will conduct a country-wide campaign urging buyers to cooperate with the strikers and to buy only union-labeled hats.

1st Contract Signed by Tiemaker

Norwalk, Conn.—A longtime anti-union bulwark has fallen here as the M. Aron & Co. tiemaking firm signed a contract with the Clothing Workers.

The company, one of the nation's largest tie manufacturers, agreed to a three-year pact, granting the 80 workers a 22.5-cent pay boost over the term of the agreement. Also included are standard ACWA health, welfare and retirement benefits. Minimum rates for all categories, seven paid holidays and two-week paid vacations are also part of the contract.

The agreement was negotiated for the union by Assistant Pres. Howard D. Samuel and Thomas Flavell, manager of ACWA Local 169. Legal details were directed by Jack Shenkman, ACWA general counsel.

The company, a "Fruit of the Loom" producer, also agreed to send its large volume of contracting work only to union companies.

The company recognized the union following a card check in June. Samuel attributed the union victory to intensive organizing efforts and an effective consumer education campaign.

Fire Fighters Attack Mergers with Police

A full scale attack on attempts to consolidate fire and police departments of municipalities in this country and Canada has been mounted by the Fire Fighters.

Meeting at IAFF headquarters in Washington in response to a convention mandate, a five-member rank and file committee assailed the plan advocated by some city managers and municipal groups in what was described as "a mistaken, misguided effort to save money for their communities."

Wherever consolidation has been tried, speakers reported, it has failed to provide adequate fire protection. There is sometimes an improvement in police service but fire protection invariably suffers.

The high degree of skills required for modern fire-fighting and the increasing number of chemical and radiation hazards faced by today's professional fire fighters were stressed.

IAFF Pres. William D. Buck noted that some smaller communities have merged fire and police operations into a single public safety department. In some other cities, he said, there has been partial conversion, with separate departments but with some functions combined. He cited Peoria, Ill., a city of 103,000 population, as an example of the latter type.

Appeals to Smaller Cities

"The idea is most appealing to cities under 30,000 population, although the idea was pushed hard in the last two years in San Diego, Calif., with a population of 573,000," he added.

Warren Y. Kimball, Boston, director of fire services for the National Fire Protection Association, a trade group that sets standards in its field, told the committee that "municipal savings are fictitious" under consolidation.

Members of the anti-consolidation committee are: Carl Roesch, Buffalo, N. Y.; William Gibb, San Diego, Calif.; Garvin Soots, Ottumwa, Iowa; David Forgie, Scarborough, Ont., and Harry Langhout, Vancouver, B. C.

Cement Workers Win 23-Cent Gain for 12,000

Chicago—Wage and pension improvements valued at an average of 23 cents an hour for 12,000 employes of five major firms have been negotiated by the Cement Workers.

Pres. Felix C. Jones said the new pacts provide wage increases of 7 cents an hour this year and next; improvements in the group insurance program for employes and dependents as well as for retirees and their families; and a pension system "second to no other industrial plan."

The agreements, subject to ratification by the local unions, involve the Ideal Cement Co., Lehigh Portland Cement Co., Lone Star Cement Corp., Marquette Cement Mfg. Co. and the Alpha Portland Cement Co. Other firms with 5,000 employes previously had settled along similar lines, leaving only three major firms where settlements are expected soon.

Jones listed these improved benefits in the new pacts:

- Pension benefits raised to $2.75 a month times years of service, with a minimum of 10 years of credited service and no top limit on service.
- Full pension vesting upon separation for any reason besides death for workers with 15 years of credited service regardless of age, and age 40 for workers with 10 to 15 years of service.
- Pension benefits for victims of a permanent shutdown or a layoff with little likelihood of recall.

Also negotiated by the union was a restriction on overtime during periods of slack work; a fourth week of vacation after 20 years; a clause guaranteeing equal employment rights, and other contract improvements.

Union Investment Pamphlet Published

A new booklet designed to assist union leaders in the investment of general treasury, strike benefit and pension trust funds has been published by the AFL-CIO.

"The Investment of Labor's Funds," 24-page pamphlet, describes in simple terms the various short-term and long-term investments available to union financial officers and evaluates the characteristics of these investments.

Single copies of the publication, No. 130, prepared by the Dept. of Investment, are available without cost from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications. Up to 100 copies the pamphlet is available at 15 cents each; orders for 100 or more will be billed at $12 per hundred.

MILLION-DOLLAR SMILES of Steelworkers at Lebanon, O., greet the distribution of a half-million dollars in delayed profit sharing benefits under a contract with the former owners of Production Plating Works. Union representatives at the "payoff" meeting included, from left (seated): Local 4779 Vice Pres. Dewey Peters; Mrs. J. D. Poff, wife of a former local officer; Stan Wade of the USWA staff; standing, Robert Doggett, attorney for the union; Local Pres. Robert Jenkins. Unfair practice charges brought by the local against the new owners of the company—renamed Gas Appliance Supply Corp.—are still pending before the National Labor Relations Board.

Nearly $500,000 Distributed:

Profits Plan Benefits Paid in Job Dispute

Lebanon, O.—Distribution of nearly $500,000 in delayed profit-sharing benefits climaxed the latest victory of Steelworkers Local 4779 in a long and bitter dispute with the present and former owners of the Production Plating Works here.

USWA Dist. Dir. Al Whitehouse emphasized, however, that the fight to preserve union wages and conditions at the plant is far from over.

The profit-sharing payments to the 160 members of the local—which ranged to more than $5,000 in some individual cases—represented a management obligation under a two-year contract signed a year ago with Huyler's, Inc., former owners of the firm.

Still pending, Whitehouse reported, are the union's unfair labor practice charges accusing the new owner, Milton Keiner, of discrimination against USWA members in layoffs and rehirings following his acquisition of the firm about six months ago.

Fifty-four active unionists who still have not been recalled to work were among those who received checks in the profit-sharing distribution, Whitehouse said. The payments, he added, represented about 75 to 85 percent of the amounts due the employes, with the balance withheld until tax obligations are resolved.

Whitehouse said the dispute with Keiner began last December with the first reports that he was negotiating to buy Production Plating. Despite a strike-free record of more than 12 years of harmonious relations between the union and the company, the USWA official said, Keiner immediately began a publicity campaign to paint the union as irresponsible, charging that it had initiated an excessive number of arbitrations (although there had been only seven in the 12 years) and hinting he would move the company to Indianapolis.

Closed for Fortnight

When the sale went through, Whitehouse said, the new owner immediately closed the plant for two weeks during which all employes received discharge notices.

Keiner then refused to recognize the "successors" clause of the USWA contract and proceeded to rehire employes on a selective basis, openly seeking anti-union workers and refusing to recall employes identified as active unionists, Whitehouse charged.

The USWA first obtained a temporary injunction in the common pleas court here restraining the company from hiring new personnel while former workers were on layoff. When that injunction was dissolved, the local struck the firm, charging unfair labor practices.

In a rare action on behalf of a complaining union, the National Labor Relations Board general counsel moved into federal court in Cincinnati to obtain an injunction against the management. U.S. District Court Judge John W. Peck issued a temporary order restraining the company—which has been renamed the Gas Appliance Supply Corp.—from closing down, threatening to close, refusing to hire USWA members or threatening employes with dismissal for joining the union.

The local suspended its strike when, in the course of court proceedings, management made a commitment not to hire new personnel. The former owner, Huyler's, also agreed to honor its profit-sharing obligations under the contract.

An NLRB trial examiner has since completed hearings on the union's charges, but has not issued his report.

Ford Foundation Gives $85,000 To USWA Program at Indiana U.

Pittsburgh—The Ford Foundation has made an $85,000 supporting grant to help Indiana University finance an experimental college level residential labor education program backed by the Steelworkers.

The grant will partially underwrite the program over the next three years and supplements financial support already given by the international union and its Dist. 30, which covers Indiana and Northern Kentucky.

The program was conceived by Dir. James Robb of Dist. 30, the trustees of the district education fund, and the USWA Dept. of Education headed by Emery F. Bacon. During its first experimental two years it will be confined primarily to USWA members, with extension to members of other unions expected by 1965.

The program will get under way at the university on Sept. 22, with students to be known as "Indiana fellows" now being selected by a faculty committee. It will be administered by the university's Bureau of Industrial & Labor Services, headed by Duncan W. Murphy.

The union said the basic aims of the program are the opportunity for the development of trained and responsible leadership, individual growth through programs of personal enrichment and self-development, and the chance for union members to take their proper places in a free and democratic society.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald hailed the plan as "a giant step forward in the development of trade union education."

The Steelworkers have developed a plan, he said, formally accepted by one of the nation's great universities, "that will permit union people to obtain the same advantages of higher education that have long been given to those in the fields of agriculture, commerce and the professions." He continued:

"We are gratified indeed that the Ford Foundation has seen fit to provide such substantial financial aid to the labor residential education program and by so doing apparently has recognized the need and unique merit of such an educational course in the universities."

The curriculum developed by a university-labor advisory committee, Murphy said, will consist of four parts:

- A "core course" dealing mainly with trade union studies such as collective bargaining, labor legislation, labor history and related areas, to "provide a better understanding of the labor movement and its place on the American scene."
- Three courses in the social sciences and humanities, such as economics, sociology, psychology, political science and literature.
- An elective course in the participant's field of interest.
- A weekly seminar.

Applicants chosen for the school will receive fellowships valued at $2,500 to cover their expenses.

Local Told to Get Back Gift to Race Hate Group

Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has ordered Local 731, Memphis, Tenn., to recover $500 it contributed to a White Citizens Council fund in what Carey called a "treasonous" act.

In a letter to Local Pres. LeRoy Johnson, Carey noted that White Citizens Councils, besides their efforts to preserve segregation in the South, have supported legislation designed to weaken and destroy trade unions.

"To give them aid and comfort in the name of a trade union is treasonous," he declared.

The IUE reported that Johnson, in a telephone conversation with Carey, explained he had called a special meeting of the local in response to a petition that had been circulated without his knowledge. At the meeting, 50 of the local's 789 members voted the $500 contribution to the White Citizens Council in Greenwood, Miss., for the defense fund being established on behalf of the man accused of slaying Medgar Evans, Negro integration leader.

Carey's letter charged that Johnson and Local Sec.-Treas. Lena Logan had cooperated in the improper "diversion" of local funds and noted that Johnson had failed to vote against the resolution or record any opposition at the meeting, even though he was present as a delegate.

Citing sections of the IUE constitution and a number of convention resolutions committing the union to "the cause of equality," Carey suggested that the two officers should resign if they could not live up to their oaths of office, which he said require them to "adhere to and support all trade union policies determined upon or subscribed to by the IUE."

UTWA Wins Vote At Goodyear Plant

Cedartown, Ga.—Workers at the Goodyear plant here have voted for the United Textile Workers of America, 448 to 224, in a National Labor Relations Board election. UTWA Pres. George Baldanzi said the plant was the last unorganized Goodyear operation making fabrics used in tire manufacturing.

Baldanzi also, in a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, expressed thanks for help given during the organizing campaign by Dir. Paul Christopher and Henry White of the federation's Reg. VIII and Dir. Charles Gilman and W. R. Thrasher of Reg. VI.

Beirne and Carey Back Amendments to MDTA

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers has urged Congress to enact a legislative program to curb overtime work while there is "simultaneous unemployment of some 5 million workers."

The CWA president made the proposal in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee, headed by Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.), conducting hearings on proposed amendments to strengthen the Manpower Development & Training Act.

Beirne added support to AFL-CIO recommendations that the act be changed to increase training allowances, add relocation allowances, broaden eligibility requirements for trainees, and bar training programs where jobless workers already possess the desired skills.

He emphasized, however, that the MDTA "must be considered and evaluated within the framework of the overall economic situation in this country and the distressing continued high level of unemployment."

He said he was particularly concerned over the "paradoxical situation" of substantial overtime in some industries despite the high rate of joblessness. To combat this, he suggested that the MDTA be amended, or new legislation be enacted, to require premium payments of double-and-a-half time, triple time, "or any other penalty payment" Congress finds would deter work beyond seven hours a day or 35 hours a week.

In earlier testimony, Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers voiced support for the proposed MDTA amendments, coupling it with a call for action to increase jobs.

"We need a program to spur economic growth and create more job opportunities," the IUE president declared. "Among other things, this would include tax cuts, federal spending and public works projects. Unless this happens, the effect of retraining will be to give us better-trained unemployed workers."

Ohio AFL-CIO Picks Bollard As Secretary

Columbus, O.—Robert D. Bollard, staff representative of Steelworkers Dist. 25 in Cincinnati, has been elected secretary-treasurer of the Ohio State AFL-CIO. He was elected by the executive board to succeed Elmer F. Cope, who announced recently that he would resign effective Aug. 1.

Bollard began working as a laborer in a Fort Dodge packinghouse and after the war joined the Packinghouse Workers staff as an editor and education director. He also served on the staff of the Illinois Industrial Union Council before joining the Steelworkers' district staff in Chicago. He was transferred to the USWA's Cincinnati district in 1956.

Forty years old, Bollard served in the Armed Forces in World War II, spending part of the time in a prisoner of war camp. He is a member of the Labor Advisory Committee of the Labor Education & Research Service at Ohio State University.

ROBERT D. BOLLARD

Wholesale Fraud Charged:

Oklahoma Labor Completes Challenge to 'Work' Petition

Oklahoma City—Evidence of massive forgery of signatures and wholesale fraud in the circulation of a so-called "right-to-work" law petition were laid before a State Supreme Court referee as hearings wound up on challenges to the validity of the petitions.

A total of 104,806 of the 213,000 signatures or purported signatures on the initiative forms are challenged by attorneys for citizens' groups seeking to get the petition invalidated by the high court.

The massive challenge presented to Supreme Court Referee Marian Opala was offered by the State AFL-CIO, the Oklahoma Committee for Free Collective Bargaining and individual citizens. It resulted from a statewide signature-by-signature examination of petition forms and a meticulous check against voter registration lists.

In challenging the 104,806 signatures, Atty. William C. Kessler told Opala that the Supreme Court should declare the initiative petition invalid because of "wholesale fraud, forgery, and otherwise improper signatures." Approximately 76,000 signatures must be judged improper in order to invalidate the initiative.

Of the 104,806 signatures under challenge, 70,817 were protested as names of non-registered voters. Evidence placed before the court showed that more than 2,000 names appear two or more times on the petition forms. Signing of an initiative petition more than once is a felony under Oklahoma law.

Signed for 15 Aged

Attorneys for the circulators were scheduled to begin arguments against the challenge following a hearing recess.

Mrs. Willie Mae Jones, of Oklahoma City, told the court:

"The name on the petition is not in my handwriting. It isn't even spelled right. I don't know anything about it."

Ralph Gardner, of Comanche, said in an affidavit his name had been forged to the petition.

"I did not sign the petition nor did I authorize anyone to sign in my behalf," he stated. "I further state this is a forgery."

James A. Porter, operator of a nursing home at Sapulpa, testified he had signed the names of 15 elderly inmates at the instigation of John Frank, president of Oklahomans for Right to Work, Inc., circulators of the initiative petition.

"I signed the names of 15 persons in my nursing home," Porter said. "Mr. Frank told me it was all right."

Evidence of Fraud

A handwriting expert, Mrs. Sadie McBride, of Oklahoma City, testified to numerous instances in which scores of names had been written into the petition forms by the same person. She pointed out other instances in which identical handwriting was used to inscribe as many as 15 different names on the petitions.

She testified that it was a clear case of forgery when a circulator of a petition had signed all the names to a petition and then turned it in as bona fide.

Challenges for other irregularities included: no street address for notary, 8,850; circulator's address not on affidavit, 1,754; illegible signatures, 754; no city listed, 525; no street address or address illegible in Oklahoma City and Tulsa, 206; out-of-state addresses, 302; names not listed on circulator's affidavit, 190; no Christian name, 38; X-mark not properly witnessed, 43.

In addition to the challenges, protestants to the petition presented witnesses to show intimidation of employes by a few big employers in order to obtain signatures. In case after case, management personnel on lower levels testified to being given petitions by superiors and told to get them filled in.

Office meetings were held in many instances to further the drive, with prizes and money promised those who followed instructions.

"We have learned from these many witnesses that far more than half the signatures on these petitions are either irregular or the people signing didn't really know what the petitions meant," said Kessler. "They obtained a high percentage of their signatures from slum areas in Oklahoma City and Tulsa and from nursing homes and other elderly people.

"I have personally talked with hundreds of individuals who signed these petitions. I am amazed how it was misrepresented.

"Those signers who really know the purpose of so-called R-T-W are definitely a minority."

LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN honored a member whose "quick action saved the life of his stricken engineer and prevented a collision between two freight trains" in a ceremony at the union's recent convention. BLFE Pres. H. E. Gilbert, right, presented a plaque and a $250 safety award to Robert L. Schoenwald, a fireman-helper on the Great Northern Railway. At his side is Mrs. Schoenwald.

Goldfinger Sees Peril In Discount Rate Boost

The higher interest rates imposed by the Federal Reserve Board on short term loans will not ease the nation's balance of payments problem to any "significant" degree, but it will create a "real danger" of a recession, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger warned in a radio interview.

Conceding that the FRB "discount rate" is a "seemingly technical" issue, Goldfinger said that labor is concerned because any "tightening up of the money supply" threatens to increase unemployment.

The discount rate—recently raised from 3 to 3.5 percent—is the interest banks pay when they borrow money from the Federal Reserve System. Because they pay more for the use of this money, their increased cost is reflected in higher interest rates the banks charge for loans to their customers.

While the FRB and the Administration have said that higher short-term interest rates will keep in the United States money which would otherwise be invested in other countries at higher returns, Goldfinger challenged this assumption.

Interviewed on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public affairs broadcast carried by the Mutual network, Goldfinger said the flow of short-term investment money out of the United States is not a major factor in the balance of payments problem. In fact, he added, the outflow of dollars "is much less of a problem" than would appear from "panic" stories in the press.

The United States has in recent years had an "unfavorable balance of payments" because U.S. spending, purchases and investments abroad have exceeded spending by other countries in the United States.

A more meaningful step to curb dollar losses—and especially to halt the "export of American jobs"—would be to restrict direct investment by U.S. companies in enterprises in other industrialized nations, Goldfinger observed. He cited as an example the recent purchase by the Chrysler Corp. of a large interest in the Simca Co. of France, which he noted resulted in an "outflow of $100 million from the U.S."

A rapidly growing economy at home would "provide the basis for increased profitable investment opportunities," Goldfinger said, "so that American individuals and businesses would not look overseas for investment possibilities."

He reiterated labor's contention that the governing bodies of the federal reserve system, now "dominated by bankers," should be "opened up to broader representation . . . so that other viewpoints may be represented in the monetary management of the United States."

$3.6 Million Collected In California Backpay

San Francisco—For the second year in a row, a state agency has collected more than $3 million in unpaid wages for employes. The total for the year ending June 30 was $3.6 million.

First Parley Held in FEC Rail Strike

Jacksonville, Fla.—Board Chairman Edward Ball of the Florida East Coast Railway, whose non-operating union employes have been on strike since Jan. 23, held his first meeting with heads of five rail labor organizations since the walkout started.

No agreement was reached, said Chairman George E. Leighty of the unions' negotiating committee, but Ball said he would "reconsider" arbitrating the long dispute.

Leighty added: "I do believe Mr. Ball now has a better idea of the kind of men and the kind of situation he's dealing with."

Ball is a wealthy financier who administers the $500 million Alfred I. duPont estate. Others at the meeting, called by Federal Mediator Frank K. Sweitzer, were Presidents Harold C. Crotty of the Maintenance of Way Employes, C. L. Dennis of the Railway Clerks, A. J. Bernhardt of the Railway Carmen and Michael Fox of the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes' Dept.

Leighty, who is president of the Railroad Telegraphers, said strike issues were discussed and that both sides agreed to "keep in touch." Arbitration previously had been rejected by the railroad.

The strike was called after management refused to match the raise of 10.28 cents an hour agreed to by all other major railroads last year. Members of operating unions have respected the picket lines and only a little traffic has moved over the rails.

The spirit of the strikers remains high, according to Chairman J. H. Hadley of the union strike committee, who said the workers are still determined "to win their just rights."

IAM Local Leaders Attend Rutgers School

New Brunswick, N. J.—Local leaders of the Machinists from northeastern states spent a week at the IAM Leadership School on the Rutgers University campus here on a course of studies which ranged from bargaining techniques to civil rights and problems of urban renewal.

Race Parity Standards Set for Apprenticeships

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has announced new standards for certification of apprenticeship programs aimed at insuring equality of opportunity in accordance with a June 4 directive of Pres. Kennedy.

The President had instructed the secretary of labor, in carrying out his duties under the Federal Apprenticeship Act and Executive Order 10925 dealing with equal employment opportunity "to require that the admission of young workers to apprenticeship programs be on a completely non-discriminatory basis."

Wirtz announced that the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training henceforth will withhold certification of apprenticeship programs unless they meet these criteria:

- "Selection of apprentices must be determined on a basis of equal opportunity. Qualification for entrance into apprenticeship programs should be determined by fair tests, occupationally essential physical requirements and other merit standards. Eligibility should be determined on the basis of specific requirements in order that any discriminatory aspects of individual programs can be clearly and promptly judged. A significant number of minority group members in a given program, or a reservation system for such a number, will be viewed as meeting this standard.
- "Previously developed application lists for apprenticeship must be in harmony with the first standard. Where they are not, these lists must be disregarded to the extent necessary to provide current opportunity for a significant number of individuals from racial and ethnic minority groups.
- "After selections have been made, it must be demonstrated that no discrimination exists either in the apprenticeship program itself or in the employment to which the program is related. Factors to be judged in this respect include job assignment, promotion, demotion, layoff or termination, rates of pay, or other forms of compensation or conditions of work.
- "Where apprentices are selected from a restricted pool, as in the instance of present employes of a firm, the foregoing standards shall govern both admission to the pool and selection for apprenticeship."

Wirtz also announced that a cooperative plan is being developed by the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training and the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to carry out another directive in the President's June 4 statement.

This requires a review of all federal construction programs "to prevent any racial discrimination in hiring practices, either directly in the rejection of presently available qualified Negro workers or indirectly by the exclusion of Negro applicants for apprenticeship training."

UAW Seeks Borg-Warner Pact Changes

Detroit—The Auto Workers have served early notice on the Borg-Warner Corp. of the union's intention to terminate collective bargaining and pension agreements covering 5,800 workers at five company divisions.

The notice was given 15 months in advance of the normal contract expiration dates to give management and the union "adequate time to negotiate an agreement which would better assure the retirement security of employes represented by the UAW," the union said.

The plants are at Muncie, Ind.; Chicago and Rockford, Ill., and Memphis, Tenn., where contracts permit notice of termination "at least 60 days" in advance of the termination date. At seven other Borg-Warner locations, UAW contracts restrict notice of termination to "within 60 days" of termination.

Dir. Ken Bannon of the union's Borg-Warner Dept. said the UAW holds 12 collective bargaining pacts and 12 pension agreements with the firm and that in the case of the five affected divisions, the pension language is almost identical.

"We think, and the Borg-Warner local unions think," said Bannon, "that the time has come to utilize more effectively the moneys held under these separate pension plans" to assure the employes' pension security.

"We have suggested to the company, as one means of accomplishing this end, the creation of a single pension plan covering all the divisions" with UAW-represented employes.

The Answer Is Bargaining

SLOWLY EMERGING from the deft propaganda smokescreen thrown up by the railroads in the four-year-old rail dispute is the simple fact that the roads have yet to engage in real collective bargaining.

Railroad management has directed its campaign for work rules changes at the general public rather than sitting down in earnest with the unions representing their workers to determine, in the tradition of give-and-take negotiation, a solution to an admittedly vexing problem.

The rail unions, since the inception of the dispute, have been forced into the position of accepting or rejecting reports of various commissions and government boards, as is, rather than employing these recommendations as a basis for bargaining.

The net effect of all the findings to date has been to tell the rail unions that they have no choice but to bargain away thousands of jobs, to sign a contract permanently to put out in the street members currently employed.

Against this background, the railroads have had no pressing need to bargain a settlement. There has been no incentive for them to reach a peaceful agreement with their workers.

The Administration proposal to place the work rules decision in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission has the same deficiency of allowing the railroads to avoid normal bargaining, although the Administration has stressed the need for continued negotiations during the ICC-decision-making period.

As the hearings of the House and Senate Commerce committees continue, the realization that the railroads have in effect bypassed normal bargaining procedures is coming more clearly into focus.

Senators and congressmen, concerned over the serious effects of a rail shutdown and the damage to labor-mangement relations resulting from binding decisions imposed by a governmental agency, are urging intensive bargaining efforts to secure an agreement.

It's time for the railroads to demonstrate their responsibility and concern for the national interest and sit down at the bargaining table in earnest to work out a reasonable solution in the best interests of their workers, the railroads and the country.

Facts on the Dollar

THROUGHOUT American history discussion of monetary policy has been conducted in a highly charged emotional atmosphere, and the current debate over the balance of payments problem is no exception.

There has been a rash of stories on shrinking U.S. gold reserves and doubts have been raised on the stability of the dollar. The Administration's program to cut back the payments deficit has added to the confusion.

The American dollar is the soundest and sturdiest currency in the world. The soundness of the dollar is geared directly to the vitality and vigor of the American economy.

The recent rise of interest rates to meet the payments deficit will have the ultimate effect of putting a damper on this vigor and vitality and make it more difficult to expand economic activity.

The basic solution to the balance of payments problem is an economy fully utilizing all its manpower and resources to bolster the confidence of American and foreign investors.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, August 3, 1963 No. 31

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Stay on the Main Track

Wages, Working Conditions Lag:

Jordan Trade Unions Function —But Progress Is Slow, Uneven

By Arnold Beichman

AMMAN, JORDAN—The big news here is that youthful King Hussein has taken to inviting Jordan's labor leaders to the Basman Palace for lunch. Last June, the 28-year-old monarch of this Arab kingdom paid his first visit to the headquarters of the Jordan Federation of Trade Unions.

The much-overlooked news, however, is that the palace wining and dining and royal visiting isn't doing very much for the workers of this country. Jordan, in area about the size of Indiana, arose from the aftermath of World War I and the glamorized exploits of Lawrence of Arabia. The U.S. government is committed to the maintenance of this constitutional kingdom as about the best strategic bet in a Middle East where government officials change so fast that even foreign embassies have difficulty in keeping track of who's in charge.

The cost to the U.S. of that maintenance since 1956 has been about $300 million in military aid, budgetary aid and surplus foods. It also meant calling out the U.S. Sixth Fleet last April when Nasser-inspired demonstrators thought the time had come to send Hussein into exile or to join his assassinated grandfather, King Abdullah.

In so shaky a kingdom, one can assume that trade unions would reflect the royal uneasiness. And they do—government restrictions on the right to strike, low membership, lip-service encouragement to unions and protective laws which sound good only on paper.

For example, there is now a mandated 8-hour day, 6-day week—covering employers with five or more workers. Since about 90 percent of the urban workforce is in places of employment with fewer than five workers, the workday frequently is from sunup-to-sundown. Wages for unskilled workers average about 10 cents an hour, for skilled workers from 20 to 30 cents.

The Jordan FTU, which got its start in 1954, claims a membership of 13,000, the biggest constituents being office and clerical workers (4,500), and municipal and public works employes (3,000). The secretary-general, Wajih Mango, is also secretary of the Tobacco Workers, with 700 members.

Obviously well-to-do, he says he takes no salary for either of his two union posts since his job as a supervisor in a tobacco factory pays him a good wage. A man of 53, Mango has three sons—one a doctor, another an accountant and the third completing law studies at the University of Cairo. He is serving his second elected two-year term as JFTU secretary-general.

One of the biggest unions, the Taxi Drivers & Chauffeurs Union, is outside the JFTU. It claims a membership of 5,000 out of 12,000 employed in the transport industry covering taxis, buses and trucks. Headed by Sami Mansour as general secretary, the union disagrees with the representation policies on the JFTU executive board and on international affiliation.

Mansour, who said he receives a small subsidy from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, believes that the JFTU ought to belong to the ICFTU. JFTU officials are strongly opposed to such affiliation because Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, is a member. Mansour argues that precisely because Histadrut is an affiliate, Jordan labor ought also to join so that Arab labor opinion could have a voice in ICFTU deliberations.

THE ONLY ARAB affiliates in the ICFTU are the Aden Trades Union Congress and one of the Lebanese federations. However, a number of Arab unions are affiliated directly to international trade secretariats—such as the petroleum and transport workers federation, to which Histadrut unions also belong.

Mansour was chauffeur for King Abdullah for six years until the monarch's murder in Jerusalem by an Arab extremist in 1951. Thereafter he became a taxi driver and founded the union in 1954. As one of its nine paid officers, he receives about $140 monthly, which is considered a good wage, plus traveling expenses to the union's regional offices. Mansour toured America last year on a U.S. "leader grant" and proudly displayed the AFL-CIO tie pin he had been given on a visit to federation headquarters in Washington.

Split though they are, both sides seem to agree that the Jordanian worker is making little progress either in wages or working conditions. And, as one leader put it, "we can expect very little help from the government." However, all unions receive some subsidies from the Ministry of Labor which, officials say, is used to meet emergency needs of their members. The JFTU received, for example, $1,820 last year, Mansour's transport union, $840. The JFTU income in 1962 was $6,020, of which the government subsidy represented 30 percent.

Whatever aid the government offers the unions, it has little meaning for the workers, approximately 17 percent of whom in urban areas are unemployed and, said Mango, the figure is rising.

Morgan Says:

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Seen Giant Step Back from Insanity

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

BEHIND THE SUCCESSFUL negotiation of a test-ban treaty looms a large fact that we should not forget. Pres. Kennedy hinted at it when he revealed that three times in the last 2½ years the U.S. and the Soviet Union had approached the brink of possible war. The large fact is this: the U.S. was leading from strength, not from weakness. Our nuclear capabilities are already overwhelming. In the last two years we have mixed in with them a build-up of so-called conventional forces to give our defense posture a more credible balance and flexibility instead of the "all-or-nothing" stance it seemed to have when Washington's emphasis was almost exclusively on deterrence backed by the threat of "massive retaliation."

Morgan

We have made and are continuing to sustain heavy military commitments in Southeast Asia. Indeed it was Kennedy's willingness to risk war in Laos, a willingness clearly conveyed to the Kremlin, which apparently did more than anything else to bring an uneasy and imperfect but at least partially workable truce to that unhappy kingdom. We have held fast and refused to negotiate away the freedom of West Berlin and last October the President, again at excruciating risk, faced down the Soviet premier and forced him to withdraw his offensive missiles from Cuba.

Adding all this up, and throwing in the Sino-Soviet rupture which cracked communism's monolithic myth, one might be tempted to conclude that in approving a test ban the West can live with, Khrushchev was leading from weakness, not from strength. He even appears to have judged a limited test ban so urgent to the Soviet Union's own needs that he did not, as preliminary anxieties suggested he might, insist on tying the treaty to a non-aggression pact—although he did get a commitment from us and the British to discuss and explore the tricky terrain which would have to be traveled to reach such a pact.

Some people can hardly be blamed, then, for asking why, if we were pressing him so hard without a test ban, we chose to give him a kind of surcease he may not deserve. In the first place it is not that much of a let-up. The U.S. intends to continue underground testing—in which radioactive fallout is minimal—and will keep its facilities ready to handle a resumption of testing elsewhere if the Soviets violate the agreement. Furthermore there is no detectable tendency by the Administration to cut present military strength. Khrushchev & Co. are clearly in a bind both domestically and within the rest of the Communist world, but their threat to the non-Communist world is still hard and real.

The conviction seems to be growing in Washington that Moscow initialed the test ban treaty not out of desperation, but with the conviction that it was best for Soviet national interests—and if this is so it could be the best guarantee that Khrushchev will stick by it.

Moreover, the consensus of expert Administration judgment that the White House acted upon was based, or so it looks, on the reasoning that though each side may gain some advantage over the other in some military area, neither can expect to gain much cumulatively and that therefore, on balance, the limited test ban formula is worth the calculated risks.

SO WHAT WE HAVE here if the Senate, after advice, will consent, is a step away from global insanity. It is a tentative step but it is, comparatively speaking, a giant step because it is the first one taken formally since a monstrous pile of human flesh and countless other objects, animate and inanimate, melted under Hiroshima's mushroom cloud 18 years ago.

In the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists some months ago a distinguished physicist of the Rand Corp., Amron H. Katz, wrote that "though waging war is deadly, it is intensly simple and direct, consisting principally of many people getting positive orders. Unfortunately, there isn't any corresponding set of positive orders, any prescription, that can be written for peace.

"We need some kind of gigantic moral equivalent," Katz went on, "some activity on which we can focus and spend our energies and resources—the conquest of space, disease, hunger, the problem of world education, the development of resources, the problems of population. Clearly we don't have to invent problems."

Ironically, moral forces don't move nations much except when they are converted into the motivations or excuses for the immorality of war. This test ban treaty could be the first ingredient in a prescription for peace. It is not yet a refined, pure ingredient and it won't be strong enough to prevent the nuclear virus from spreading to France and China. But the medication must begin somewhere.

Experts predict that in the future such countries as Sweden, Switzerland, Belgium, Japan, Israel and even India and Indonesia could have atomic capabilities. If these can be diverted to producing electric power, blasting out harbors, tapping oil reserves, proliferating disease-curing isotopes and powering space ships, the results may make nuclear war look a little less desirable to everybody.

Washington Reports:

FEP Act Held Vital Element In Total Civil Rights Package

WITH A NEGRO jobless rate twice as high as that of whites, and a rate three time as high for married head-of-family Negroes, a national Fair Employment Practices Act is one of the civil rights measures most needed, Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.) and Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on almost 700 radio stations.

Hawkins said that the bill to be presented on the House floor "combines the best thinking and the commitments of members of both parties," and that the chances for its passage are good.

"We had wonderful bipartisan support [in committee] in eliminating what would be points of opposition," the California Democrat said.

Goodell said that the FEPC bill on which the House will vote is modeled after those in states such as New York and California, but that there are important differences.

"One of the key changes we made in the subcommittee and full committee, as a result of the bi-partisan approach," said the New York congressman, "was the separation of the process of judging cases and prosecuting them.

"An administrator will do the investigating, the conciliating, and, if necessary, the prosecuting. A five-man board will hear the cases."

GOODELL SAID that where a state law is being effectively administered, the case may be referred to the state. He observed that most of the states operating under FEPC laws settle cases of discrimination in management or labor by conciliation. Out of 9,700 cases in New York, he said, only 12 have gone to court.

Hawkins pointed out that the rate of Negro youth unemployed is also greater than the rate for whites—twice as many, in proportion, being jobless. There is concern, he declared, about the number of school dropouts among Negroes.

Many non-whites have failed to go beyond the sixth grade in school, in some states 40 percent of the total, compared to 6 percent of the whites," remarked Goodell.

Both spokesmen said that an FEPC is not the whole answer. Unless unemployment is reduced, unless full employment is attained, "we shall only have, as AFL-CIO Pres. Meany said, 'a sharing of misery'," commented Goodell.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A CURIOUS PATTERN can be observed in the successive rearguard actions southern senators have waged in the civil rights battles of recent years: each time they have vowed total defiance of one or two sections of the program and branded the sponsors of such proposals "far-out" advocates and "extremists." By implication the rest of the program has seemed less seriously objectionable even though not exactly welcome.

The interesting thing is that the ground shifts: the voting rights of all qualified citizens may be at least half-conceded now, but in 1960 and 1957 they were less freely conceded. Equality of opportunity in the marketplace of jobs is no longer so "extreme" a proposal that it is rejected out of hand. Some of the heat has gone out of the issue.

Whether a civil rights bill in 1963 will include a fair employment practice section is obviously still uncertain. The point is that the discussion is less touchy and sensitive.

And what is the "hot" issue of 1963? The public accommodations section of Pres. Kennedy's proposals. Yet if any principle seems plain, it should be that when any American citizen—well-behaved and orderly—drives along the highways, he should not be turned away from a public motel, restaurant or service station because of the color of his skin. He should not be forced to plot and scheme and lay out inconvenient routes to obtain decent lodging, food and rest for his family.

This is now the "hot" point for opponents, or at least the hottest. It does seem that other things—things that are not considered utterly intolerable in 1963—might have been so viewed three years ago and six years ago. At what future time will a public accommodations bill come to seem less intolerable to those now prepared to fight to the death against it? Couldn't it be considered rationally, rather than with so much emotion, this year?

* * *

IN THE MEANTIME, a stepped-up Republican drive is taking place in the South. The GOP in Virginia is entering more candidates for the legislature than it has for nearly 90 years. In Mississippi it has chosen candidates for both governor and lieutenant governor.

The Mississippi election is this year, and the Republican National Committee's southern division proudly cites Newsweek as calling it the "most important" political event of 1963. The GOP candidate for governor, a former Democrat naturally, is Rubel Phillips, also a former chairman of the Public Service Commission. For lieutenant governor it is State Sen. Stanford E. Morse, Jr., also a former Democrat.

The issues emphasized in Republican printed material are conservatism, states' rights, private enterprise, Kennedy "socialism." The underlying resentment of the civil rights issue remains hidden—but Republican Sen. Tower of Texas, who was featured speaker at a fund-raising dinner for the Republican Mississippi candidates, has not established himself as exactly an ardent champion of rights for racial minorities.

The 1963 Mississippi elections are indeed important—for what they reveal about possibly growing Republican strength, and not less for what happens in the Democratic primary race for governor.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who shares many segregationist convictions but was a force for decency and restraint during his term, is opposed by two major rivals. One is Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, who helped Gov. Ross Barnett during the battle over admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi; the other is Charles L. Sullivan, who served as an unpledged elector in 1960 to vote against the Democratic nominee, John F. Kennedy, in the electoral college.

* * *

AN ADDED ELEMENT: Democratic Rep. E. C. Gathings of Arkansas, has inserted in the Congressional Record 30 solid pages of small type critical of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The identical material was printed in the Record in 1956, and it cost $2,632.50 to reprint it.

EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITY depends on passage of the Roosevelt bill cleared by the House Labor Committee and also on seeing that the economy is strengthened to provide more jobs, Rep. Charles B. Goodell (R-N. Y.), left, and Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.) asserted on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Truth-in-Packaging Bill Given Chance of Passage in Congress

IN A TIME when consumer exploitation has become a serious problem, consumers have not been able to get a bill through Congress to protect them from deceptive practices.

Recently, in what they privately admitted was sheer desperation, a group of consumer-minded senators staged a "Consumers Day in the U.S. Senate." In speech after speech Senators Kefauver, Hart, Douglas and Javits sought to call the attention of the public and their fellow senators to proposals for laws requiring honest packaging, truth in lending, a federal consumer counsel and other needs.

Now, after years of complaints about deceptive packages, the truth-in-packaging bill sponsored by Sen. Philip Hart (D-Mich.) appears to have a chance of getting through Congress.

The bill has been approved by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, 5-3, and will shortly come up before the full committee. If approved there, it has a good chance of getting through the Senate itself, since the Administration supports it. Both state weights-and-measures officials and agricultural officials' associations have testified in favor of it.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) also is expected to start moving soon to get approval of the House for the bill.

Despite its simple, harmless requirements, the truth-in-packaging bill has become the center of the ludicrous spectacle in which the entire might of one of America's most-powerful industries is arrayed against it. The record of the testimony taken by Hart's subcommittee indicates that actually $100 billion worth of industry is fighting this innocent little bill. The food and allied industries are approximately three or four times as big as the steel and auto industries.

All that the truth-in-packaging bill asks for is that housewives be treated a little more honestly and informatively when they shop for packaged goods. It would merely require that net weights be displayed prominently on the front of the packages without qualifying adjectives such as "giant half-quart"; that illustrations on the package should not deceive, so that a picture of chocolate-chip cookies, for example, doesn't show more chocolate chips than the cookies really provide, and that printed "cents off" advertising on packages be eliminated if an integral part of the package.

THE BILL ALSO would empower the Food & Drug Administration and the Federal Trade Commission to establish weights and measures at which goods may be sold; for example, in pound units instead of 15.25-ounce packages.

But even these mild provisions, which ultimately would benefit industry as well as consumers and the national economy, have become the target of truly violent opposition with about as much industrial power opposing the bill as you can get. It has become the No. 1 target this year of both the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers. Also opposing are the Advertising Federation of America, Association of National Advertisers, National Canners Association, and Grocery Manufacturers Association.

The most influential support for the bill has come from the AFL-CIO, which has become the chief source of countervailing power on behalf of consumer protection, backers of the bill.

Other important supporters include the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., increasingly active recently on behalf of consumer protection, National Consumers League, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Retired Teachers Association, American Association of Retired Persons, Consumers Union, and local consumer groups and state consumer officials.

In testimony favoring the bill, U.S. Food & Drug Commissioner George P. Larrick pointed out that it would merely encourage compliance with commonly accepted standards of honesty.

This measure is needed urgently because in recent years packaging has deteriorated from such standards of clarity and honesty. As far back as 1957, trade union and consumer cooperative newspapers first pointed out the number of products that give you not-quite a pound or a quart, and the many "look-alike" packages which vary in the actual amount of food or detergents they provide.

If you aren't able to compare costs per ounce, pound or quart, you can seriously overpay. For example, you may be led into buying the rice that really comes to 33 cents a pound instead of the one for 19 cents or the tuna fish that comes to $1.20 a pound instead of that available at 60 cents, Mrs. Nelson pointed out.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

SUPPORT for the Washington demonstration for jobs and civil rights, scheduled for Aug. 28, was planned at a meeting in New York. Speakers included, from left (seated), Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO, and Cleveland Robinson, chairman of the administrative committee of the groups sponsoring the demonstration; (standing) the Rev. George B. Ford, pastor of Corpus Christi Church; Bayard Rustin, deputy director of the sponsoring committee, and Rabbi Balfour Brickner, director of the committee on interfaith activities of the American Hebrew Congregation.

Solutions Proposed:

New Study Examines Problem of Dropouts

WITH MORE THAN 30 percent of students leaving high school before graduation, the problem of school failures and dropouts is of urgent national concern. There is no simple answer to the problems of these 1 million youngsters each year, but enough is known to enable parents, teachers, counselors, and community agencies to help them.

Unless these students are guided, they will face mounting difficulties. Statistics bear this out: The unemployment rate among dropouts is double that of the general population; they are also out of work for longer periods; dropouts are the hard core of those who do the most menial and routine tasks, year after year; and finally, 85 percent of the relief clients, to take Cook County, Ill., as an example, have not completed high school.

In School Failures and Dropouts, a new Public Affairs pamphlet, Edith G. Neisser summarizes what is known about the causes and treatment of this serious personal and social problem.

Pointing out some clues to potential school failures, Mrs. Neisser describes leaving school as "nearly always a symptom . . . of a problem which has been building up over a long period, and it usually creates more difficulties than it solves."

"The way to dropping out," she writes, "is paved with failures." Particularly significant is failure to learn to read; three times as many poor readers as good ones drop out.

Family instability and the shifting population of big-city slums, where "75 percent to 80 percent of the high-school boys and girls are disadvantaged Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, or southern mountain white people"—this is the environment of many of the school dropouts.

There are danger signals that Mrs. Neisser urges parents to be alert to: the child who is repeatedly involved in mischief-making; a marked decline in the quality of work after reaching high school; an unusual need for attention and reassurance; truancy and persistent tardiness; poor achievement in spite of good ability.

Despite the seemingly overwhelming personal and environmental difficulties, Mrs. Neisser feels strongly that parents, teachers, school counselors and administrators, and community agencies working together can change the picture. Her specific suggestions for parents stress encouragement rather than punishment.

Several interesting and effective pilot projects, starting in the lower grades, are convincing evidence that preventive programs and fresh approaches to teaching can encourage students to complete their schooling.

Such projects offer hope that the problems of at least some potential school failures and dropouts can be solved; and that the personal waste and suffering, as well as the heavy costs to society, of delinquent youth and of unemployed and unemployable young people and adults can be reduced.

School Failures and Dropouts is available from the Public Affairs Committee, 22 East 38th Street, New York City, at 25 cents a copy.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Folks Hardly Ever Get Nostalgic About the Joy of Sulking as Kids

By Jane Goodsell

PEOPLE OFTEN wax nostalgic over the wild, preposterous naughty, goofy things they did when they were kids.

They remember sledding, standing up, down Dead Man's Hill; shooting rubber bands in class; playing hookey from school; smoking cigarettes in a tree house. Things like that.

Sure, all those things were great, no doubt about it. But I can't understand why nobody ever mentions one of childhood's most delightful forms of naughtiness: sulking.

Few activities were more blissful than a good, long soul-satisfying sulk.

It didn't make much difference what started you sulking. Maybe it was something you had to do, and didn't want to. Maybe it was something you wanted to do, and weren't allowed to. Or something somebody said that hurt your feelings or made you mad. What started it didn't make much difference as long as it gave you an opportunity to flounce up to your room.

Once there, you'd lie on your bed, wallowing in self-pity. You'd visualize yourself getting very sick (maybe even dying) and all of them standing around being sorry because they'd been so mean.

You'd lie there, sobbing into your pillow, but stopping occasionally just in case somebody might be knocking at your door. You longed for somebody to knock on the door so you could tell them, in a heart-rending voice, to go away.

I SUSPECT that any child who doesn't enjoy an occasional sulk is truly unhappy and insecure.

I still think it would be fun to flounce up to my room and sulk like a seven-year-old.

But, alas, it wouldn't be the same. With adulthood comes disillusionment and doubt. You'd know, right from the beginning, that you would sooner or later have to emerge from your room and apologize for the way you acted. It would spoil everything.

Children, the lucky little bums, can enjoy cheap thrills for the moment. They can walk through puddles without worrying about catching cold. They can gorge themselves on chocolate sauce with no thought of their waistlines. And they can sulk in wholehearted bliss, heedless of the dreadful moment when they must come out and make apologies.

Adults anticipate the awful moment of anticlimax, and decide to skip the whole thing because it's not worth the price.

This, I guess, is what they mean by Emotional Maturity.

At Harvard Parley:

Schnitzler Challenges Business To Adopt 'Dynamic' Approach

Cambridge, Mass.—American businessmen have been challenged by a labor spokesman to be more enterprising, more dynamic, more alert to the opportunities of making "free enterprise" really work.

"This is the kind of business community that we in the American labor movement want," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the Public Relations Institute of the School of Business Administration at Harvard University in a panel discussion of "labor's role in keeping business dynamic."

It is not enough, he said, for a "dynamic" business society to have scientific management, heavy investment, shrewd promotion or imaginative enterprise because "all of them put together will fail unless there are consumers with money to spend."

Income Keystone of Business

Asserting that "broadening and raising consumer income is more important" than ever, Schnitzler called for more jobs and higher wages, adding:

"We are convinced that this is the keystone of 'dynamic' business today; and it is the role which labor, by itself and through government, will strive to fulfill."

Schnitzler further identified labor's role as that of "creating a healthy economy" and "stimulating the creation of customers" at home and overseas. He called attention to a major business shortcoming in this language:

"The plain fact is that the purveyors of goods and services . . . are more interested in selling what they want to make than in making what people want to buy. And they never seem to think about improving the income levels of the consumer so that the consumer can afford to buy more."

He cited two great opportunities that business has for expanding its markets—the 16.75 million workers who have been exempted from the minimum wage and overtime guarantees of the Fair Labor Standards Act; and the expanding American population which he sees as "not a threat but an opportunity—if they have jobs, and money to spend."

Schnitzler listed this outline of labor proposals to spur the economy and create more job opportunities:

- A tax cut of $10 billion, concentrated on the lowest bracket of taxable personal income, coupled with a reduction in taxes on the first $25,000 of corporate earnings to save $10 billion for smaller businesses.
- Increased federal expenditures for education, housing, urban redevelopment and mass transit.
- Expansion of the public works program as long as unemployment remains at 5 percent or more.
- A federal monetary policy that keeps interest rates low to encourage business expansion.
- A series of programs designed to meet the unemployment problem—area redevelopment, stronger jobless insurance, extension of wage-hour law protection, job retraining and other measures.
- A shorter workweek—35 hours, with double time for overtime to spread employment.

All these measures and more are needed to stimulate "home front" business, and on the export front most labor people have accepted the concept of trade expansion, Schnitzler said, because "a successful export trade by American business is essential to that concept."

He said business can do its part by "making what people want to buy" and by learning from the "Yankee traders" of a century ago who "sold what they had" overseas and bought what they were sent to buy.

Pointing out that "any number of companies" currently run their production lines at about 80 percent of capacity, the federation officer said "they would run at 100 percent of capacity—thus creating more jobs, more markets, more transportation, more profits—if they could sell the other 20 percent of their capacity."

New Consumers Increase

Then he added that, having traveled overseas regularly, "I know there are plenty of places where many of these products are desperately needed and could be sold." In the emerging nations, every success in raising living standards "creates a new consumer whose purchasing ability is constantly rising," he asserted.

Schnitzler said he agreed it would not be profitable for individual manufacturers to become involved in the export business, but asked: "How about 100 percent of these manufacturers pooling their abilities into a single operation" to seek out markets and serve as a sales and distribution branch? The West German and Canadian governments now are doing just that, he said.

As to claims that high U.S. wages have "priced us out of the world market." Schnitzler answered that the charge is "demonstrably untrue."

The remedy for wages of 20 cents an hour overseas is not 20-cent wages in America but higher wages in other lands, he added. The AFL-CIO spends a quarter of its income to help other labor movements better themselves, he said. One such project is the American Institute for Free Labor Development, which trains future leaders in democratic unionism abroad, Schnitzler related.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL, strengthening Connecticut's ban on discrimination in the sale or rental of housing, is signed by Gov. John Dempsey (D) after a successful campaign for its enactment by labor and other statewide groups. Standing, left to right, State Civil Rights Commission Chairman Ralph Goglia; Mrs. Jeannetta H. Clark, legislative chairman of the NAACP, and State AFL-CIO Pres. John J. Driscoll, who was chairman of the legislative coordinating committee for the housing bill.

Ohio's GOP Legislators Cut Labor Protection

Columbus, O.—Ohio workers "came out second best" in the recently-concluded session of the legislature, according to an analysis by the State AFL-CIO.

In its summary, the state federation declared labor-backed bills to improve unemployment and workmen's compensation were shunted aside in favor of employer-backed legislation to cut compensation to the jobless and injured. Other conclusions:

- Emergency legislation to permit Ohio participation in the federal program of aid to dependent children of the unemployed was bottled up by the Republican leadership.
- The GOP-controlled legislature killed or took no action on labor-supported legislation including bills for a state minimum wage law, more liberal registration and election laws, a "truth-in-lending" extension of the civil service merit system, restrictions on the use of strikebreakers, fair hearing procedures on injunctions in labor disputes, and a state labor relations law.
- A labor-supported bill to prohibit discrimination in housing and home financing was killed by a House committee although enactment of such a bill had been a campaign pledge of Gov. James A. Rhodes (R).
- The closest to passage of any major labor-backed bill was Senate approval of a measure to include fringe benefits as part of the prevailing wages which must be paid on public projects. The bill was killed by the House Industry & Labor Committee.

Employers Win Changes

Employer-requested amendments attached to the unemployment compensation law will require workers to have had at least 32 weeks of employment in their "base year" in order to be eligible for a full 26 weeks of benefits. Previously, only 20 weeks was needed.

Other new restrictions reduce compensation by amounts received in severance pay, pension payments and vacation pay and by one-half of social security payments. The law also was changed to make it more difficult for workers to qualify when they are laid off after having quit a prior job, to deny compensation to workers idled because of a strike at another plant owned by the same employer, and to deny benefits to employes dismissed during a pregnancy.

Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO had written the governor urging a veto of both the unemployment and workmen's compensation bills. Rhodes, however, signed the workmen's compensation measure and announced that he will sign the jobless benefit bill.

The State AFL-CIO summed up the legislative outcome as follows:

"From the beginning of the session to the last day, labor was forced to fight a defensive fight to preserve the gains that it realized in the Democratic-controlled 1959 legislature. It was a losing fight."

Union Ratifies New Pact at U.S. Tobacco

Richmond, Va.—Members of the Tobacco Workers at the United States Tobacco Co. operation here have voted approval of a new three-year contract providing a 5 percent wage increase and other benefits.

TWIU Vice Presidents Howard W. Vogt and George Benjamin aided the negotiating committees of Locals 214 and 225 in winning these gains:

- Wage adjustments in numerous work classifications plus wage increases of 8 to 12 cents an hour.
- An eighth paid holiday — Memorial Day.
- Sick leave rises from a maximum of 17 to 21 days for those employed 24 months or more; and from 10 to 12 days for workers employed from 14 to 23 months.

The agreement provides also that an increase of 3 percent will be added to the base rate next June 1, and 2 percent on June 1, 1965.

Among the products made by TWIU members here are Encore, Sano and Stratford cigarettes; Skoal and Key chewing tobaccos, and Dill's Best, Model, Old Briar and Mapleton smoking tobaccos.

Kaiser Sharing Bonus Averages $100 in June

Fontana, Calif.—More than 4,700 Steelworkers at the Kaiser Steel Corp. plant here received cost-sharing bonuses for June averaging about $100 per worker, the highest "payout" thus far under the sharing plan.

In all, participating workers have received benefits averaging about $352 above base pay for the four months the plan has been in effect.

A joint announcement by the USWA and Kaiser said that the company's savings in material, supply and labor costs, below the 1961 base, amounted to $1.48 million in June. Under the formula agreed upon, about one-third—$470,000—was distributed to the eligible employes.

The announcement said the payments were equivalent to 24 percent of standard hourly wage rates, on the average, and ranged from 17 percent to 47 percent. The average hourly payment for participating workers came to 62 cents an hour.

The statement cautioned, however, that cost savings during the next few months "are likely to be reduced as a result of the general decline in orders for steel experienced in recent weeks."

"Although the plan has built-in compensatory factors for varying levels of operations," it continued, "the greatest possible cost savings opportunities exist under high-level, optimum production conditions."

The sharing plan was worked out in more than three years of negotiations by a special committee composed of union, company and public representatives who began their discussions following the lengthy 1959 steel strike.

Kaiser workers are guaranteed at least as much in pay and fringe benefits as other steel workers, plus a monthly distribution of cost savings as against the comparable month of 1961. Individual benefits under the sharing plan vary according to base pay.

In effect, the plan removes wage matters from the scope of negotiations, but normal bargaining procedures are followed on all other matters.

Kaiser's 7,000 employes were given the option of joining the new sharing plan or retaining existing incentive systems. Initially, 3,930 chose to take part in the pioneer program, but the number has been rising each month.

Prior to the June "payout," distributions averaged $80 or 55 cents an hour for the 3,930 participating workers in March, $95 or 66 cents an hour for about 4,100 workers in April, and $77 or 50 cents an hour for 4,400 workers in May.

Rauh Appointed Counsel by UAW

Detroit—The Auto Workers have announced the appointment of Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., of Washington, D. C., as general counsel, effective Sept. 1. He will succeed Harold Cranefield, who will continue to serve as a legal consultant to the UAW.

Rauh has been Washington counsel for the UAW since 1951. A former law secretary to two Supreme Court justices and counsel to several government agencies, he has participated in a number of major civil liberties and civil rights cases. He is a former national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action and is a leader of the Democratic Party in the District of Columbia.

Caribbean Union Seminar Held by PTTI

Barbados, West Indies—Twenty-four students of trade unionism from the Caribbean area have completed a week-long seminar on democracy and trade union rights conducted by the Postal Telegraph & Telephone Intl., secretariat associated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Students attended the seminar from British Guiana and the Caribbean islands of Antigua, Barbados, Bermuda, British Honduras, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, St. Kitts-Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Trinidad.

The sessions dealt with parliamentary procedures, organizing, trade union administration, history of the Caribbean labor movement, grievance procedures and allied topics. Lecturers included Assistant Sec. Basil Blackman of the Caribbean Congress of Labor; Gus Cramer, Communications Workers; Pres. Andrew L. Jackson of the British Guiana Post Office Workers, and Wallace J. Legge, PTTI inter-American representative.

The seminar was opened by Sec. Frank L. Walcott of the Barbados Workers' Union, with a welcoming address by Labor Minister W. A. Crawford of Barbados.

POSTAL CLERKS MEETING IN WASHINGTON for legislative conference hear Legislative Dir. John O'Connor describe situation regarding federal pay scales and action needed in Congress.

Postal Clerks' Parley Lines Up Support for Pay Raise Legislation

A three-day legislative conference called by the Postal Clerks rallied congressional support for pay raise legislation which Pres. Kennedy has urged in order to make government salaries "comparable" to the rates of private industry.

A second goal of the conference, which drew 1,000 delegates from locals in all sections of the nation, is legislation to abolish the work measurement system used by the Post Office Dept. The union has termed it a "speedup."

At an opening rally, before delegates left for Capitol Hill meetings, a bipartisan group of senators and congressmen welcomed the postal workers and pledged support for the union's pay goals.

On the platform were Senators Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.); Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.); Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) and Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), and Representatives James H. Morrison (D-La.), Arnold Olsen (D-Mont.) and George M. Wallhauser (R- N. J.).

The clerks' legislative conference was the second step in a major campaign by federal employe unions to get a higher congressional priority on pay leigslation. Two weeks earlier the Letter Carriers held a similar rally, bringing in members from nearly every congressional district.

Postal Clerks Pres. E. C. Hallbeck urged the delegates to remind their congressmen that just last year Congress adopted a salary reform law which established the principle of annual salary adjustments to maintain comparability with private industry, based on annual wage surveys by the government.

Even if the Administration pay proposal were enacted and took effect next January, Hallbeck said, it would be "comparable" to private industry rates in 1961-62 "and would still leave us two years behind."

The union charged that the work measurement system has proved to be unreliable and inexact, permits abuse, and has resulted in a heavy additional cost for supervision.

In the only resolution acted on, delegates unanimously endorsed a statement by their union's executive council affirming the organization's "unqualified support" of merit principles in hiring, assignments and promotions without regard to race and color.

The statement rejected any departure from merit principles—"no matter how highly motivated"—as a remedy for "past discrimination or any form of racial imbalance."

The resolution reaffirmed the union's "solemn determination" to help eliminate all forms of discrimination from the postal service.

Encouraging Monopoly:

Atomic Power Plan Protested by Labor

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to reject a proposal that ownership and control of nuclear fuel for atomic power plants be ceded to private industrial firms.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller warned that the effect of such an action would be to hamper the development of nuclear power and encourage monopoly control by a few giant companies and a handful of private utilities.

'Abdication' Charged

The Atomic Energy Commission has proposed that the government gradually give up its exclusive control of nuclear fuels, such as uranium, and enable private firms to obtain them directly, either in the United States or through imports.

Biemiller told the congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that this would represent an abdication "of the important responsibilities of the federal government as the American people's principal steward of their natural resources."

The AEC proposals are "highly premature," Biemiller told the committee. He charged that the agency has lagged in meeting "its responsibility to accelerate development of civilian nuclear power technology" and said development of nuclear power would be slowed even further if the responsibility were shifted to private industry.

Private ownership of nuclear fuels would increase the cost of generating nuclear power, he warned, and this in turn would discourage private utilities from developing such power on a competitive basis with conventional energy sources.

Atomic fuels, Biemiller said, represent "resources which properly belong under public ownership and public control."

The AFL-CIO's opposition to the proposed legislation, the committee was told, also expresses the views of the federation's Metal Trades Dept., which includes unions that are bargaining representatives for more than two-thirds of the organized workers at installations of AEC contractors.

The proposal to permit private ownership of nuclear fuels drew the endorsement of the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., which said that "if industry continues indefinitely to rely upon government as its sole supplier of nuclear materials, it is extremely doubtful whether the goal of strengthening free competition in private enterprise will ever be attained."

Unions Helping Many Students With College Scholarship Funds

Scholarships were presented to 13 sons or daughters of members of Utility Workers Local 1-2 at a luncheon in New York attended by union leaders from this country and abroad, representatives of management, education and the clergy, and the winners' families.

The first prize, a scholarship worth $1,500, went to Joseph T. Himmelsbach, of Long Island City, who attended St. Francis Preparatory School and will go to Fordham University.

Second prize of $1,000 was won by Robert T. Angarola, Jackson Heights, N. Y., who will attend Fairfield (Conn.) University, and third award of $750 to Peter J. Quigley, Scarsdale, N. Y., who will study at Yale University.

Awards of $500 each were presented Alice Berman, William Hoff, Patricia J. Leonard, Edward T. and Joseph P. McDermott, Kenneth W. MacLean, Gayle R. Schilling, Barbara K. Seipel and Catherine E. Wardach. A special citation and a watch were awarded Mary C. Waters, who won a National Merit scholarship.

A scholarship worth $6,000 sponsored by the Maryland-D. C. AFL-CIO was presented by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to Jack Schwartz, son of a charter member of the Baltimore Typographical Union, at a luncheon in Washington. The award is in memory of the late Frank J. Coleman and the late Robert C. Lester, long-time officers of the central body. The winner plans to attend Johns Hopkins University.

The Retail Clerks awarded seven scholarships valued at $2,000 each to members' children—Theodore Bartke, Chicago; Joan Barbieri, Philadelphia; Jeffrey Schweitzer, New York City; Carrie Lou Walters, Salem, Ore.; Ivan Crissman, Jr., High Point, N. C.; Suzanne Fretthold, Rocky River, O.; and Richard Wieland, Sunland, Calif.

Local 324 of the same union scheduled a ceremony for Aug. 14 at which $5,000 in scholarships were to be presented to 10 union members and four members of unionists' families in Long Beach, Calif., southeast Los Angeles County and Orange County. Top awards of $750 were won by Rudolph C. Shepard, Long Beach, and Robert P. Gunton, Jr., Santa Ana.

Building Service Employes' Local 32B, New York, gave $19,200 in scholarship grants to four children of members—John F. Quinn, Mary Ellen Haier, John A. McHugh and Cecil E. Ward, Jr.

Another BSEIU unit, Local 25, Chicago, gave college scholarships worth $2,000 each to Catherine Sullivan and Richard S. Drozd, children of members of the Office, Theatre & Amusement Building Janitors. Both winners won election to the National Honor Society in high school.

Building Laborers Local 74 in Washington awarded a $1,000 scholarship to Martin Webster Porter, Nokesville, Va., who was graduated this year as valedictorian of Jennie Dean High School, Manassas, Va.

The winner plans to attend Virginia State College. His father, James I. Porter, has been a member of Local 74 for 11 years. His mother is employed by the Defense Dept.

The local also presented scholarships valued at $250 each to Barbara Ann Jackson of Washington and to Joan Christine Hancock, Nanjemoy, Md.

At commencement exercises of the Camden County Vocational & Technical High School in Merchantville, N. J., Technical Engineers Local 241 presented a $100 U.S. bond and a trade handbook to youths selected by the faculty as the year's outstanding graduates—Garry E. Bittle, Mt. Ephraim, in electronics, and Thomas E. Druce, Merchantville, in machine drafting.

The local represents technical employes at the Camden and Moorestown plants of the Radio Corp. of America. It also gave winners a letter of introduction to RCA personnel managers.

NEW secretary-treasurer of the Alabama AFL-CIO is Asa G. Trammell, 38, of Tuscaloosa. With his father and grandfather active in the Bricklayers, he is a member of the Rubber Workers.

Hodges, Wirtz Warn Against Bonner Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

unions in opposition to the Administration's plan to submit the railroad work rules dispute to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the two Cabinet members said there was a distinction between the two situations.

Wirtz said legislation to compel the settlement of a "particular dispute" is justified "when it is clear that every possibility of settlement by collective bargaining has failed and when a strike or shutdown will hurt the public before it hurts either party enough to induce settlement."

But he emphasized that "this decision must be reached after the exhaustion of collective bargaining possibilities as they exist without the promise of arbitration."

In the rail dispute, the unions have charged that management has refrained from give-and-take bargaining because the railroads were confident a strike would not be permitted.

Wirtz acknowledged that labor-management relations in the maritime industry have often been stormy and that problems of technological displacement of dockworkers are serious. He added:

Basic Factor

"The central, most basic, factor in the waterfront difficulties is probably the fact that there are already over 4 million people unemployed in this country . . .

"The passage of the tax law proposals now before Congress—which will strengthen the economy and mean more jobs—will do more to lessen the intensity of labor strife on the waterfront than any disputes-settling procedures can possibly do. The one is a cure, the other a crutch."

Health Insurance Bill Offered in California

Sacramento, Calif.—State Assemblyman Alfred H. Song (D-Monterey Park) has introduced a bill to provide a statewide program of prepaid health insurance within the framework of the California Unemployment Insurance Code.

The bill, backed by the State AFL-CIO, would finance the health insurance through a 3 percent employer contribution on wages up to $3,800 a year.

Nuns in Israel Form Own Union

Jerusalem—Nuns who teach at Catholic schools in the Holy Land have formed the world's first trade union of teaching sisters and affiliated it with the Union of Israeli School Teachers.

"We want to be like all other teachers in this country," said Sister Maria Theresa, born in France and one of the 37 teachers of the Franciscan, Sacred Heart and Carmelite orders.

The nuns formed a local, not for collective bargaining but to have access to additional professional training, lectures, seminars and excursions. They said "we won't strike on our own behalf but shall certainly join any general strike."

Two Weeks Abroad:

New Pact Finances Trips for Workers

Philadelphia—A unique "worker-to-worker" plan spreading expense-paid trips abroad among employes of the Dewey chain of luncheonettes has been negotiated by Local 434 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

Under the local's new contract, which also provides pay increases and other benefits, four or five Dewey workers a year will receive two-week trips to other countries, starting in the summer of 1965, with their employer picking up the total tab.

The travel program will be financed out of a special fund set up under the contract, which calls for employer contributions of 75 cents a week per employe. This is expected to yield about $10,000 a year, half of which will be used to underwrite the overseas trips.

The other half will provide scholarship aid for children of Dewey employes and contributions to worthy causes selected jointly by the union and management.

Local Sec. Ed Rovner, who conceived the "hands-across-the-sea" bargaining goal while on a vacation trip to Israel and Europe, said he hoped the travel plan will help improve the conception of Americans held by people of other countries.

"Wherever I went," Rovner said, recalling his own trip, "I sought out hotel and restaurant workers in an effort to get acquainted with my kind of people. One of the things I learned is that the only Americans they see are the relatively well-heeled trippers who patronize the hotels and restaurants where they work, and often the image they leave behind is no credit to the U.S.

"I decided to try to figure out some way for American working people to make such trips despite their modest incomes."

These are the kind of Americans—"people like themselves"—that waiters and other workers in foreign countries are eager to meet, Rovner suggested. While few culinary workers in the United States have the income or resources to finance trips abroad, he observed, under the arrangement with Dewey "they, too, can contribute to the important work of establishing people-to-people contacts at all levels of life."

Candidates for the annual trips will be nominated in each of Dewey's 13 units, and the final selections will be made by a vote of the employes.

Those chosen for the trips, moreover, will be paid for lost time while away and will still receive their regular vacations to "travel America" if they choose.

LATIN AMERICAN AND CARIBBEAN STUDENTS attending the American Institute for Free Labor Development visit AFL-CIO headquarters for briefing session on purposes of the institute and description by federation staff members of operations of their departments. Shown speaking is Pres. George Meany, flanked by Serafino Romualdi, institute executive director, left, and Al Barkan, acting director of COPE.

Democrat Is Elected To Fill Walter's Seat

Bethlehem, Pa.—Democrats harvested a welcome victory here as State Sen. Fred B. Rooney rolled up an unexpectedly large margin in beating Republican Roger G. Bartlett for the House vacancy created by the death of the late Rep. Francis E. Walter.

In an all-out campaign involving Kennedy Administration policies and a "states' rights" program offered by Bartlett, voters gave Rooney the victory by a 50,307 to 42,298 count on the basis of complete returns less absentee ballots.

Rooney's 54.5 percent of the vote compared favorably with Walters' own margins in recent years as the 15th Congressional District switched the last three elections to Republican presidential nominees and also gave Pennsylvania's GOP Gov. William W. Scranton a substantial margin last November.

It was the first victory for Democrats this year in three special House elections. They had lost two to Republicans who took over California district seats previously held by Democrats.

Labor was heavily involved in the campaign on the basis of the sharply different policies advocated by the candidates and as a result of direct attacks on union political activities by Bartlett.

Fearing a light vote in the special election—the date of July 30, set by Scranton placed it in the vacation season and allowed only 30 days of campaigning—a newly created Congressional District COPE Committee worked in every county to publicize the issues and get voters to the polls.

Bartlett, an employe relations executive with Bethlehem Steel, was endorsed by a Washington, D. C., newsletter, Human Events, which has become a recognized clearing house for right-wing groups. He denied association with the John Birch Society, and Republican leaders in the capital charged Democrats with "desperation" in raising a right-wing issue.

Bartlett attacked the COPE activity, charging that labor brought in "high-powered outsiders" to "tell people how to vote."

Scranton himself campaigned in the district for the Republican nominee. The COPE drive was aided by Hugh J. Mullin, regional COPE director, and Michael Johnson, executive vice president and state COPE director of the State AFL-CIO.

The final vote was above 65 percent of total registration, unusually high for a special election.

Work Halts in May Below 1962 Level

All measures of strike and lockout activity in May were, the U.S. Dept. of Labor said, "significantly below" the levels for May 1962. There were 600 work stoppages affecting 165,000 workers for 1.75 million man-days of lost time—or 17 hundredths of 1 percent of all working time.

The comparable figures for May 1962 were 653 stoppages involving 262,000 workers for 2.52 million man-days of work, or 25 hundredths of 1 percent of all time worked. The May 1963 percentage of lost time was lower than in any but two Mays since the end of World War II, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Rep. Nygaard (R.-N.D.) Dies of Heart Attack

Rep. Hjalmar Nygaard (R.-N.D.) died at the Capitol July 18 of a heart attack. A hardware store proprietor, he was serving his second term in the House.

His death left the party lineup in the House 257 Democrats, 177 Republicans, with one vacancy.

Shipbuilders Win 28 Cents At Todd Co.

New York—The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers have ratified a contract settlement providing a 28-cent raise in pay and other benefits for 4,000 production and maintenance workers at Todd Shipyards, Inc., in Brooklyn and Hoboken, N. J.

The agreement, reached a day before a July 31 deadline, was the first in the current round of negotiations between the union and East Coast shipyards. Still to be settled are pacts with the Maryland Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. and Bethlehem Steel Co.

The agreement provides wage hikes of 6 cents an hour as of Aug. 1, with additional 5-cent increases next Aug. 1 and a year later; nine paid holidays instead of seven; improved vacation, insurance and hospitalization benefits; and retirement at age 62 instead of 65, with pensions after 15 years of service.

Management also agreed to maintain $1,000 in life insurance for early retirees until they reach 65. The pact strengthens seniority rights, improves job classifications and the arbitration procedure, and provides a 22-cent hourly premium rate for those in galvanizing work or working with glass materials.

UMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said the parties agreed to limit the contracting-out of work and set up a joint committee to study loss of jobs and ways to increase earnings. It was agreed also that if the Todd yards get nuclear work, there will be a method of reviewing wages, safety and working conditions.

New York AFL-CIO To Help Disabled

New York—A new centralized service for handicapped workers was launched by the City Central Labor Council here at a meeting attended by leaders of labor, government, and the federal, state and local vocational and rehabilitation services.

The Rehabilitation Liaison Project was made possible by a three-year $270,000 grant from the Vocation Rehabilitation Administration of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, to be matched by the AFL-CIO council over the period.

A liaison office at the council's headquarters will be manned by professional social service and medical workers to counsel union members and their families on services available to disabled workers, including job placement.

Meany Hails Freedom As Aid to All Workers

(Continued from Page 1)

in each country, workers can learn from each other, he said.

In the United States, labor never has found it necessary to set up its own political party but instead has used its economic strength to gain better conditions on the job, and has set up its own political arm in the Committee on Political Education, he observed.

Some unions do not have to use the strike weapon, he said, but others have used it, when necessary, to good effect.

Another interest, he added, is the "maintenance of a type of government, and society, under which it is possible to preserve a free trade union movement." Noting that there are large areas of the world without free labor movements, he asserted:

"In this atmosphere of cold war, of a struggle between a free society and dictatorship, we have a definite interest. If workers are prevented from exercising their rights, we feel it's a threat to the existence of free unions everywhere."

Similarly, free societies in Latin America are important economically, politically and from a union point of view, he said.

Three federation representatives, present at the request of the students, described the work of their departments—Acting Dir. Al Barkan, COPE; Dir. Albert J. Zack, Dept. of Public Relations; and Jack Sessions for Dir. Lawrence Rogin, Dept. of Education. Ernest Lee, Dept. of Intl. Affairs, was meeting chairman.

The students were from Antigua, Argentina, Aruba, Bolivia, British Guiana, Chile, Colombia, Curacao, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Surinam, Trinidad and Uruguay.

The institute was launched last year, with $20,000 in "seed money" appropriated by the AFL-CIO Executive Council for training in democratic unionism.

House Group Revives Area Aid Money Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

Senate substitute was expected to reach the floor again.

As finally approved by the House committee, the depressed areas bill would cut out federal aid in the construction of motels and hotels in economically depressed regions, trimming $100 million from the $455 million increase in ARA funds sought by the Administration and approved by the Senate.

Earlier, the committee defeated by the closest possible margin—a 14-14 tie—an attempt by Rep. Robert A. Taft, Jr. (R-O.), to add a legislative ban on racial discrimination in all ARA-approved projects.

Motels Barred

The ARA already has regulations barring discrimination, but they do not apply to motels or hotels. Trimming these projects from the program was viewed as an effort to remove the bill from the area of civil rights controversy and to enhance the chances of reclaiming the votes of some southerners, who had teamed up with Republicans to reject the measure in its first journey through the House.

Nevertheless, the bill still faces a stiff challenge in the House Rules committee, where Chairman Howard W. Smith (D-Va.) has declared his opposition, and the Republicans will have another chance to propose the civil rights amendment if and when it comes up for a floor vote. Supporters of the bill say the ARA will run out of money next winter.

Senate revival of the "braceró" bill was temporarily blocked by a rarely used parliamentary device employed by Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), who objected that the measure had been reported out by the Agriculture Committee without a quorum present and without hearings.

Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-R. I.), over the protests of Committee Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D-La.) ruled that the bill was still in the custody of the Agriculture Committee. Ellender maintained that a majority of the group had been reached through proxies.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller has written all Senate members urging rejection of the measure, which would extend the Mexican farm labor program for one year. Biemiller declared that U.S. farm workers, among whom unemployment is "very high and is sharply increasing," desperately needs "the hundreds of thousands of jobs for which Mexican nationals are now imported."

Congress Urged to Reopen Rail Talks

Role of Watchdog Suggested For Special Joint Committee

(Continued from Page 1)

proposal was supported "without reservations" by the five railroad brotherhoods—the AFL-CIO affiliated Trainmen, Firemen & Enginemen, and Switchmen, and the unaffiliated Locomotive Engineers and Conductors & Brakemen.

At a special night session of the Senate Commerce Committee, he presented his proposal as the views of the railroad unions and the whole of organized labor.

"I am as completely convinced as I have ever been that I'm presenting the views of organized labor as a whole," he said. "Of this, I haven't the slightest doubt."

The day following the hearing, four committee members—Clair Engle (D-Calif.), Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) and E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska)—introduced a bill to carry out Meany's proposal. It differed from an earlier measure introduced by Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.) only in that the Senate bill set a 60-day time limit for the watchdog committee to report to Congress.

Meany stressed that the railroad dispute is "unique," that "there is no comparison with any other type of labor dispute" because "people are being asked to give up their jobs." It involves, he said, "the lives of thousands of workers."

Railroad workers, he said, don't want "to be paid for doing nothing. They do want their jobs. They expect to be treated in a reasonable way."

The work rules, he said, should be modernized "not only for the benefit of the carriers but for the benefit of the workers as well."

Asked if it would be fair to require railroad management to continue to pay workers it claims are not necessary while collective bargaining continues under the eyes of Congress, Meany replied caustically:

"Perhaps if the railroads cut out their advertising, they might be able to stand the cost a bit better."

He referred to the large-scale advertising and public relations campaign the railroads have carried on since 1959 in an effort to pin a "featherbedding" tag on their workers.

None Should Profit

Meany said that if Congress is going to "compel people to work because of a paramount public interest," then perhaps the public interest should be further maintained "by seeing that no one makes a profit" as a result.

"I don't want a strike," Meany declared.

"I don't want public ownership of the railroads.

"I don't want compulsion.

"I have a lot of faith in collective bargaining."

Democratic and Republican committee members alike expressed deep interest in Meany's alternative to a compulsory settlement, questioning him closely about its details.

At the Senate hearing, Meany stressed that establishment of a watchdog committee was not intended to "stall" a solution to the dispute. Such a committee, he urged, would be able to determine quickly whether good faith bargaining was, in fact, going on.

He said that while he would have no objection to establishing a "reasonable" time limit, a firm deadline might tend to delay genuine give-and-take bargaining until the last minute.

While the watchdog committee would not have a direct mediatory role, he said, "I would hope they would get into it with both hands and feet."

As for the Administration proposal to hand the dispute to the Interstate Commerce Commission, Meany said, "this to me doesn't make sense."

Without "impugning the integrity" of the ICC members, he said, "I don't think that by background and experience they are the best people to handle this dispute."

It may be, he declared, that "someway down the road we may have to have compulsion, but I don't think we need that weapon at this time."

Although the rules dispute is nearly four years old, there was no actual bargaining until last May, after the report of the Presidential Emergency Board and "not a great deal" since then.

Speaking of his experience as a member of a fact-finding panel set up by Kennedy, Meany said "I don't think the two sides are too far apart on some of the main issues."

There has been "some good bargaining" in the last few days, Meany declared, which gives "a reasonable hope" that the dispute can be settled by voluntary agreement.

Concurrent Hearings

Shuttling back and forth between the House and Senate committees, which are holding concurrent hearings on the rail dispute, chiefs of the five operating unions emphasized their belief that a solution could be reached at the bargaining table.

Referring to a renewed mediation effort by Wirtz which resulted in a new written proposal by management, Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Firemen & Enginemen told the House committee:

"I think I can see a turn for the better in our negotiations."

He said a congressional watchdog committee would provide "a shot in the arm" to spur bargaining.

The chief management negotiator, J. E. Wolfe, said the new railroad proposal contained "some adjustments" from previous positions "in an effort to try to reach an agreement." He insisted, however, that it is "highly improbable" that a voluntary agreement can be reached and said Meany's proposal would "merely delay" final disposition by Congress.

Pres. Charles Luna of the Trainmen said of the proposal to submit the rules dispute to the ICC:

"Call it any name you wish and it still adds up to compulsory arbitration."

Switchmen's Pres. Neil P. Speirs charged the railroads have "brainwashed" the public through a massive propaganda campaign and have resisted bargaining "confident that Congress would pass a law requiring the dispute to be settled by compulsory arbitration."

At one stage Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), acting chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, suggested that the time might better be used in collective bargaining.

"It is my fervent prayer that we will wake up sometime this week and find that an agreement has been reached. I only hope Congress will not be called on even to debate this matter. The acrimony which is bound to occur would do neither party any good," he said.

INTENTLY FOLLOWING testimony on the rail work rules dispute at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing are Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, left, and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

D. C. Housing Bias Ban Given Support of Labor

The Greater Washington, D. C., Central Labor Council has urged the city's board of commissioners to outlaw discrimination in the sale, rental or financing of housing.

Pres. J. C. Turner testified at a public hearing that "strong steps" are needed to remedy the racially segregated housing pattern in the nation's capital.

The three commissioners, appointed by the President, serve as the combined executive and legislative body for the voteless District of Columbia. The proposed ordinance is based on a declaration and finding that discrimination in housing constitutes a danger to health conditions and public welfare in the community.

Both Turner and Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights criticized as too weak a draft ordinance under consideration. They urged adoption of a substitute which was drafted by a six-member Lawyers Committee on Fair Housing.

The stronger draft was also endorsed by two other labor witnesses—Ben Segal, education director of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and John M. Thornton, legislative representative of the Steelworkers and chairman of the National Capital Voters Association.

Turner said Pres. Kennedy's executive order barring discrimination in federally-aided housing "is a step in the right direction," but leaves "serious gaps" which must be filled by local fair housing regulations.

Shishkin called for an ordinance which would empower the commissioners to enforce through the courts the ban on discriminatory practices and to revoke the licenses of real estate brokers found guilty of discrimination.

He and other labor witnesses objected to language in the commission's proposed ordinance limiting the non-discrimination protection to "respectable" and "well-behaved" home-seekers—phrases which are left undefined.

Turner suggested that the proposed human relations commission which would enforce the program be given power to initiate complaints and make investigations on its own. It also, he said, "should initiate a broad educational program designed to obtain voluntary compliance with the ordinance."

Strong support for an anti-discrimination ordinance came from leading Washington clergymen of all major faiths and from an Interreligious Committee on Race Relations headed by Catholic Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle.

URW Film Shows Union's Early Days

Akron—An 18-minute film showing scenes from the early days of the Rubber Workers has been produced by the URW to help "instill a sense of dedication to the union as a cause" in new members. Climax of the "Right to Live" is the 1936 Goodyear strike here.

The film can be obtained from the URW Education Dept. at 87 S. High St., Akron 8, Ohio.

Drive Opens in House For Rights Bill Package

(Continued from Page 1)

ployers, or by both together.

He strongly opposed a proposal by Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) that unions be deprived of the benefits of the National Labor Relations Act if they discriminate, declaring that the attack "must be made on an across-the-board basis, not directed to unions alone."

The Goldwater proposal, McDonald charged, "simply eliminates the union and leaves the employer free to discriminate as he pleases."

Filibuster in Committee

Two other Senate committees were engulfed in what appeared to be marathon hearings on the President's "rights" proposals.

In the Senate Judiciary Committee, the hearings reached the full filibuster stage as Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr. (D-N.C.) held the floor for six successive days, including five in which he engaged in a running cross-examination of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy on constitutional and other issues.

Ervin said he could not estimate how long his questioning of witnesses would take, declaring he is seeking "full data" on the Administration proposals.

A suggestion by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.) that the committee hold night session with one member authorized to take testimony was rejected by Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), who said the committee is "making as much progress as we can."

Over in the Senate Commerce Committee, which is considering separately the portion of Pres. Kennedy's proposal dealing with non-discriminatory access to public accommodations, a parade of southern governors testified—some moderately, some adamantly—against federal legislation in this area.

In a major departure from the solid southern opposition, however, Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., of Atlanta told the committee he favored federal legislation to eliminate segregation, "slavery's stepchild."

He said Atlanta has made progress but declared the task of dealing with discrimination in public accommodations would have been easier if there had been a national law to guide local officials and businessmen.

GO with the UNION LABEL
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

IUE Slates Early Start On GE Talks

An early start on 1963 negotiations will be undertaken by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the General Electric Co., with full-scale bargaining to begin Aug. 5, IUE Pres. James B. Carey has announced.

As early as last April, Carey set Sept. 1 as the target date for a new national agreement to replace the present contract, which expires Sept. 29. Union and company subcommittees have held 28 meetings since May 3 in search of solutions to a number of problems affecting GE workers.

Carey has asked management to join IUE in "creative bargaining, unshackled by rigid positions."

He suggested that an early agreement could be achieved, and crisis bargaining avoided, if both sides approach negotiations "with an open mind, a desire to meet the needs of workers, a willingness to bargain on facts, and a recognition of the public interest."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, August 10, 1963 | No. 32

Major Vocational Aid Bill Passed by House, 377-21

NEWSMEN INTERVIEW Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.), chairman of a House Labor subcommittee which has held hearings on the effect of imported Mexican farm labor on the wages and job opportunities of U.S. farm workers. Flanking Williams are Senators Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.), second from left, and Maurine B. Neuberger (D-Ore.). Both are members of the Senate Agriculture Committee which, over their objections, endorsed without hearings a bill to extend the program another year. Williams is sponsor of a bill for a national farm labor recruitment program with protective conditions to provide manpower needed for large farms. (See story Page 12)

Rail Union Chairmen Summoned

The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen have summoned 156 general chairmen to Washington Aug. 13 and a union official said "we're hopeful we'll have a proposal to put before them."

Under the union's constitution, the general chairmen have the power to accept or reject contract proposals in the work rules dispute.

BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert convened the meeting at the urgent request of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who has played a mediating role in a renewed attempt to settle the dispute through collective bargaining before the Aug. 29 showdown date.

Wirtz declared in a wire to Gilbert:

"It is imperative if settlement is to be reached on the key fireman-helper issue in the current railroad case and on the other issues involved that BLF&E representatives with full authority to make a binding agreement be present here in Washington, D. C., at the earliest possible time."

While the convening of the general chairmen raised hopes for settlement of the dispute without congressional intervention, BLF&E Vice Pres. J. L. Shattuck, who has been representing the union in the latest round of negotiations, noted that while the union "expected" to receive a specific new management proposal to submit to the general chairmen, it did not have such an offer at the present time.

Negotiations Reopened

In a development welcomed by members of House and Senate committees faced with alternative legislative proposals, representatives of the five operating unions and of railroad management met across the bargaining table for the first time in several weeks. Top government mediators termed it "a useful session."

The meeting followed submission by Wirtz of a series of recommendations designed to settle the principal stumbling blocks in the long, bitter rules dispute.

A BLF&E spokesman said his union had accepted the Wirtz proposals "as a basis for discussion and agreed to undertake negotiations to implement them."

While there are many railroad work rules demands which must be resolved before an agreement can be reached and the possibility of a nationwide strike averted, observers generally agreed that the issue of displacement of locomotive firemen has held up progress to-

(Continued on Page 4)

Training Geared to Job Shifts

By David L. Perlman

A labor-backed vocational education bill, geared to the training needs of a fast-changing job market, sailed through the House by a 377-21 vote after a sharp political hassle over a proposed anti-discrimination amendment.

The bill, considerably expanded by the House Education & Labor Committee over the original Administration proposal, authorizes $450 million in new funds over a four-year period. This would be in addition to money appropriated for existing programs, which the AFL-CIO has contended give topheavy emphasis to dwindling agricultural needs and to home economics courses unrelated to job training.

In another major development, the House Rules Committee unblocked the Administration's $1.2 billion college aid bill which provides loans and grants for construction of classrooms, laboratories and libraries. It now goes to the House floor.

The House-passed vocational education bill authorizes $45 million in new funds the first year, approximately double the Administration budget request. Republican members of the Labor Committee objected that this was "excessive" but did not seek to cut the amount when the bill came to the floor.

The authorization would jump in subsequent years to $90 million, $135 million and $180 million by the fourth year.

In addition to the new funds —which after next year states must match by increasing their

(Continued on Page 12)

Outlook for 3d Quarter Good:

After-Tax Corporate Profits Set Record in 2d Quarter

After-tax profits of U.S. corporations reached the highest rate for any quarter in U.S. business history in the second quarter of 1963, and third-quarter profits are expected to maintain this record-shattering rate.

The Wall Street Journal reported that the April- June period racked up profits at an annual rate of $28 billion, topping the $27.7 billion figure of the fourth quarter of 1950 which reflected the scare-buying boom of the Korean War.

Compared to the second quarter of 1962, the Journal estimated that profits increased 15.9 percent, with steel and railroads registering increases of 96 and 53 per cent respectively.

As to the July-September period, the Journal said "early indications from a countrywide survey of major industries are that there will be another gain over a year earlier, though probably not as big a gain as in the second quarter."

The profit figures reported by the Journal do not reflect higher depreciation allowances permitted by the Treasury under new guidelines issued a year ago. Government figures show that corporate depreciation allowances for the second quarter of this year were $32.1 billion, an increase from $30.7 billion in the same quarter of 1962 and $27.3 billion in 1961.

Cash flow estimates—the combination of after-tax profits and depreciation allowances—disclose that corporations in the second quarter of 1963 had $60 billion, at an annual rate, available for dividends and investment, compared to $55.3 billion for the same quarter in 1962 and $50.2 billion in 1961.

The sharply improved cash flow position of U.S. corporations, which economists consider the pertinent measure of a company's profitability, is reflected also in corporate dividend payments. In the second quarter of this year dividend payments

(Continued on Page 2)

NAM's Political Arm Offers Money, Advice

By Willard Shelton

A new Business-Industry Political Action Committee, sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers, is open for business and ready "to provide financial support to congressional candidates who support the principles of constitutional government."

Announced in New York as "the political action arm of American business and industry," BIPAC said through its chairman, St. Louis banker Kenton R. Cravens, that it will also seek "to encourage citizens to be more active and effective in the political party of their choice."

BIPAC also will seek to inform citizens on "important political issues" and summarize "the records of officeholders and candidates," Cravens' announcement said. It is designed for citizens interested in "preserving and strengthening" constitutional government, protecting individual liberty and "promoting our free, private and competitive enterprise system," he said.

Named as acting executive director of BIPAC is a former Alabama four-term congressman, Laurie C. Battle, who left the House in 1954 to challenge Sen. John J. Sparkman in the Democratic primary for a Senate seat.

The campaign was shot through with suggestions of a civil rights showdown, with Battle's support-

(Continued on Page 10)

Shell Oil Strike Peace Checks Attack on Jobs

By Eugene A. Kelly

Houston, Tex.—A strike that kept 2,100 Oil Workers on the picket line for almost a year, staking their jobs and income against a demand for "management rights" to cut costs by work rule changes has ended in a new contract with the Shell Oil Co.

The union, in a salute to the strikers for their "long and valiant battle against tremendous obstacles," said the new pact stems "to some degree at least" Shell management's campaign to "institute radically different work practices at the expense of the employes and the unemployed" in Houston.

A one-year agreement on working conditions was concluded after two months of intensive negotiations spurred by Dir. William Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service. Simkin stepped in after early talks were stalemated by a breakdown in collective bargaining between union and management.

Members of OCAW Local 4-367 ratified the agreement Aug. 6, and the first group of strikers returned to work the next day at the big refinery and chemical plant in nearby Pasadena, Tex. Effective on their return was a 5 percent wage increase, the industry pattern negotiated by the OCAW and Shell while the strike was on and put into effect at other Shell plants.

The OCAW, calling the settle-

(Continued on Page 4)

Lost Time From Strikes Remains Low

Lost time due to strikes and lockouts beginning in the first half of this year stayed at the same low level, in relation to total working time, as for the comparable period last year, according to a Dept. of Labor report.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated the lost time at 16 one-hundredths of 1 percent and said it was below the level of all other postwar years except 1957, 1958 and 1961.

Other findings of the midyear report:

- The number of workers involved in stoppages beginning in the first half of 1963 was 540,000—the lowest figures for any half-year since the end of World War II.
- The number of stoppages was 1,880 beginning in the first half year and 138 continuing from 1962, a total that was lower than in any other year except four. The latter stoppages involved 108,000 workers.

The BLS reported also on strikes and lockouts in June—675 involving 190,000 workers. Lost time for the month was 18 one-hundredths of 1 percent, a figure lower than in any other June except one—1961.

The bureau reports all stoppages involving six or more workers and lasting a full shift or longer. Its figures do not include workers made idle by shortages.

Building Trades Rates Increase

Increases in wage rates of union building trades workers in the second quarter of 1963 raised the average 2.3 percent or 9.1 cents an hour, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The rise, to an estimated $4.09 an hour, was slightly smaller than in the corresponding quarter of last year.

The hikes, reflecting spring bargaining and deferred increases, ranged from 5.8 cents to 11.5 cents for some two-thirds of the workers surveyed in seven major trades in 100 U. S. cities.

KINGSPORT PRESS strikers use mobile radio-equipped patrols to keep in touch on a widely-separated picket line in strike for a new contract that started Mar. 11 at nation's biggest hard-cover book printing plant in Tennessee. Shown left to right: Carrie East, Stereotyper; Picket Capt. James Sorah, Printing Pressman; J. W. Frazier and Sue Garrett, Stereotypers. Sorah, an amateur radio operator, set up a short wave radio set at strike headquarters and installed receivers in 20 cars like this.

Moderate Improvement Registered in July Jobs

Job conditions in the nation's 150 major employment centers showed continued "moderate improvement" in July, the Labor Dept. has reported, with 38 on the "substantial unemployment" list.

The July total of 38 major areas with 6 percent or more jobless was a slight improvement from June's total of 39. But it was the lowest total for any month since July 1960, when there were 37 such areas. A year ago there were 48 such areas.

Looking ahead, on the basis of employer hiring plans, the Labor Dept. said the indications were for a moderate expansion in non-farm jobs in more than three-fourths of the major areas. The gains are expected in both durable and softgoods industries.

"The only significant employment losses anticipated to early autumn," the Labor Dept. said, "are scheduled retrenchments in a number of steel production centers."

On the July report, the Labor Dept. said that "in marked contrast with June, when 16 major areas were shifted to new classification categories, 15 of them to groupings of lower unemployment, there were only three reclassifications in July, all in the direction of lower unemployment."

Improvement in Canton

Canton, O., was removed from the substantial unemployment list—the 6 to 9 percent jobless grouping—and put into the "moderate" unemployment or 3 to 6 percent category.

The improvement was due to increased steel production, together with over-the-year rises in nondurable manufacturing, the report noted.

Altoona, Pa. and Huntington-Ashland, W.Va.-Ky., improved from the 9 to 12 percent jobless category to the 6 to 9 percent grouping.

The improvement in Altoona resulted in large part from increased activity in the area's railroad car shops, the report said.

In the Huntington-Ashland area, the report added, job gains occurred in construction, cement and glass production.

The Labor Dept. also reported that the total of "smaller areas" with substantial unemployment remained at 174 in July. A year ago, there were 190 such areas; in July 1962, there were 230; in July 1960, there were 116.

Among the smaller areas, the changes offset each other. Rockingham-Hamlet and Wilmingham, N. C., were removed and Taunton, Mass., and St. Cloud, Minn., were added.

The Labor Dept. now has classified 17 major job centers, 101 "smaller" areas and 470 "very small" areas as suffering "substantial and persistent unemployment." These areas, which have had high unemployment over an extended period of time, have been recommended to the Dept. of Commerce for classification as "redevelopment areas" under the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961, the report said.

Such areas are also eligible for federal funds for local public works under the Public Works Acceleration Act.

Contempt, Spite Laid To Southern Railway

The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen will ask a federal district court to find the Southern Railway in contempt for violating a court order to employ firemen-helpers on all trains in accordance with existing work rules.

The railroad, in what BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert termed a "disrespectful, spiteful" response to the court order, has hired about 100 elderly Negroes, ranging in age up to 85, to sit in the fireman's seat and do no work. At the same time, the union said, experienced firemen discharged when the Southern acquired the Georgia Central Railroad remain out of work.

Use of the retired Negroes as pawns in the railroad work rules dispute was sharply denounced by Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Carey, in a letter to directors of the railroad, termed the action "an incredible travesty of morality and a cruel and despicable use of the racial issue." He added:

"The harm you have inflicted on our American way of life . . . will bear bitter dividends for years. . . .

"The indignation of trade unionists and all other decent people throughout the country at this merciless flaunting of the dignity of work is incalculable."

Since 1959, the Locomotive Firemen have charged, the Southern has refused to hire replacements for firemen who leave, retire or die. The railroad is the lone major carrier which is not a party to the national work rules dispute, having withdrawn from the management committee to carry on its own battle with the operating unions.

The district court order, which the union says the railroad has flouted, ordered Southern to "maintain" working conditions in effect prior to 1959 and employ a fireman-helper on all locomotives.

Gilbert charged that the refusal to hire or train qualified firemen has "endangered the lives" of railroad crews and of the public.

Trades Vote Levy For Organizing Drive

Rochester, N. Y.—The Allied Building Trades Council has voted to assess all 17 affiliated unions $1 per member to expand an organization drive and to fight what it regards as the growing menace of nonunion construction in the Rochester area.

The resolution was approved unanimously by delegates at the council meeting.

New Machinery Needed:

Payments Problems Called Block to Jobs

The government's concern with balance of payments problems has played "an important role in failure to achieve the objective of maximum production and employment," a Brookings Institution study declares.

The study, undertaken at the request of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, concludes that the new international financial machinery to handle the payments problems is the only means of assuring that the "higher priority programs" of full employment and production are not subordinated.

Nations that run payments deficits over a long period restrain their own economic expansion, the study says, adding that this approach "induces restraint without regard to whether internal conditions call for restraint or expansion."

The study directly assailed as "inadvisable" moves to raise long-term interest rates if high employment levels are to be restored, and said in general that "the expansionary fiscal policy needed to restore high employment has been delayed and made more difficult to achieve by fears that expansion would make the balance of payments worse."

This approach, the study notes, has prevented the lowering of interest rates needed to promote high domestic investment and growth.

Balance of payments deficits occur when a nation's expenditures in all of its business, financial and aid transactions with foreigners exceed its income from foreign sources.

The U.S. has in recent years had an unfavorable balance of payments because U.S. spending, purchases and investments abroad have exceeded spending by other countries in the U.S. On a trade basis, however, the U.S. had exported more than it has imported, giving it a favorable balance in this area.

The AFL-CIO has opposed the recent increase in the Federal Reserve Board's discount rate—the rate at which banks borrow from the board—designed to prevent the flow of short-term investment funds overseas. The FRB action will tend to increase all interest rates and hold back necessary growth and expansion, the AFL-CIO contends.

The Brookings study, headed by Walter S. Salant, says that by 1968 the U.S. balance of payments situation will be greatly improved. However, it went on, reduction of the deficit will create international financial problems for the free world unless new global financial machinery is created to see countries through relatively short-term payments problems without requiring them to impose drastic restrictions on their domestic economies.

2d Quarter Profit Rate Sets All-Time Record

(Continued from Page 1)

reached $17.6 billion, compared to $16.4 for the same period a year ago and $14.8 billion in 1961.

The Journal declared that if the government's estimates of second-quarter profits for all U.S. corporations approximate the increases shown in the paper's survey, "it would put the quarter's figure up to a rate of more than $28 billion a year. In 1962 corporate profits for the entire year were $24.6 billion.

The paper's survey included 19 auto and equipment companies accounting for almost one-fifth of the corporate profits in the compilation and showing an increase of 19.3 percent over the same three months of 1962. An increase over the third quarter of last year is expected for the current three months.

Larger oil profits also are indicated, said the Journal, which reported the 14 companies in its survey showed an increase of 15.6 percent for the quarter over a year ago.

Steel profits are likewise on the rise, the paper said, attributing the 96 percent increase over the 1962 quarter to stockpiling against a possible strike this year.

Of the 33 industry groups covered in the compilation, all but 8 showed increases over the same quarter in 1962.

AFL-CIO Convention Will Open Nov. 14

The fifth constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO will open Nov. 14 in New York City at the Americana Hotel.

The first and founding AFL-CIO convention was held in New York City in December 1955. Biennial sessions since then have met in Atlantic City, San Francisco, and Miami Beach.

Lumber Firms In Lockout Recall 16,000

Portland, Oreg.—Four lumber firms, members of the industry's so-called "Big Six," have announced the recall of 16,000 workers who were locked out early in June when two unions called a strike against two other "Big Six" employers.

At the same time 198 smaller firms, bargaining as the Timber Operators Council, recommended that TOC employers who have not been struck put into effect a wage increase rejected earlier by the unions, the Woodworkers and the Lumber & Sawmill Workers, affiliated with the Carpenters. The increase was for 12 cents an hour retroactive to June 1 and another 14 cents in the next two years.

The unions called the two moves an attempt to break the strike, disrupt union solidarity and weaken the strikers' militancy. They conferred with lawyers on possible unfair labor practice charges against the TOC and its members. Similar unfair practice charges were filed earlier against "Big Six" and its members.

After a breakdown in contract negotiations on June 6, some 4,000 employes of the U. S. Plywood Corp. and the St. Regis Paper Co. walked out of company woods, camps and shops in California, Oregon and Washington. The next day the four other "Big Six" firms laid off 16,000 non-striking employes.

A month later an additional 5,000 union members struck at 10 locations of the Georgia-Pacific Co.

Unity Aids Newspaper Unions:

Joint Bargaining Wins in Honolulu

Honolulu—An unprecedented demonstration of unity and joint bargaining among seven newspaper unions produced a major victory ending a 44-day strike against Honolulu's two big daily newspapers, the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser.

In the first newspaper strike in this island state's history, some 800 employes of the two major dailies maintained solid ranks for nearly seven weeks and emerged with seven ratified contract agreements providing approximately $2,223 in benefits for each full-time employe in wages and fringes across the next three years.

It was "a victory in terms of principle and money," said union leaders, "a blockbuster settlement, one of the best in the industry in recent years."

The seven unions negotiated improved pensions, paying at the rate of $4 per month multiplied by years of service at the Star-Bulletin, and institution of the same pension system at the Advertiser, which previously had had no pension plan.

Wages were raised at the top rate of $5 a week for maximum pay employes and $4 per week for minimum pay employes, retroactive to June 1, with additional increases of the same amounts in the second and third years of the contracts.

In addition, the unions won increased company contributions to the medical insurance coverage and life insurance plans, gained an increase in severance pay of from 20 to 30 weeks, and improved holiday schedules.

Sick Benefits Big Issue

A major issue—a management effort to reinstitute a two-day waiting period before payment of sick leave benefits—was settled on terms the unions had agreed to bargain about before the strike began.

Sick leave benefits will be payable at once for the first illness of an employe for each year, with provision that thereafter a two-day waiting period can be imposed by decision of a joint management-labor board.

The seven unions maintaining their unity during lengthy contract negotiations and throughout the strike were five AFL-CIO affiliates — Typographical Union, Newspaper Guild, Pressmen, Photo Engravers and Machinists —and the unaffiliated Lithographers and Longshoremen. The latter represents circulation department employes.

A joint strike strategy committee was headed by Tommy Lum, Hawaii Newspaper Guild administrative officer, with David Bray, local ITU president, as secretary.

Wages Stressed

For the unions the issues were basically wages and the company effort to impose retrogressive restrictions on sick leave pay only two years after the unions had bargained out the waiting-period provision.

The strike was twice postponed by the unions, at the request of federal mediators, despite failure of negotiations to offer much hope that management would bargain realistically.

The walkout involved a commercial production facility, the Hawaii Newspaper Operators, jointly owned by the two newspapers in addition to the dailies themselves. Unresolved local issues delayed settlement of the strike at this plant.

UNION HANDBILLERS at Convair plant in San Diego, Calif., urge members of Machinists and other consumers not to buy H.I.S. men's clothing produced in non-union plant of the Henry I. Siegel Co. in Bruceton, Tenn. The Clothing Workers are conducting national "Don't Buy" campaign at plant gates and department store entrances. The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that Siegel committed unfair labor practices during an ACWA organizing drive in Bruceton.

Meany to Ask Council to Approve Engravers, Lithographers Merger

Merger plans of the Photo Engravers Union and the Amalgamated Lithographers will be recommended for approval by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, Federation Pres. George Meany announced.

Meany's announcement followed a meeting in his office with a joint committee headed by Pres. Kenneth J. Brown of the Lithographers, and Pres. William J. Hall of the Photo Engravers.

The Photo Engravers have been an affiliate of the AFL-CIO from the time of the merger in 1955. The Lithographers were affiliated until August 1958. The proposed merger would bring the Lithographers back into affiliation.

The two union presidents reported, Meany said, that after "a year of discussion and negotiation the executive councils of both unions were recommending to their conventions that the two unions merge."

"It seems to me that such a merger is truly in the interest of labor unity and fully consistent with the policies of the AFL-CIO," his announcement continued. "Therefore, I shall recommend . . . that the AFL-CIO Executive Council approve the merger plans, thus bringing back into affiliation the independent Lithographers group."

The Executive Council will meet at Unity House, Pa., beginning Aug. 12. The 20,000-member Photo Engravers Union will hold its convention in Miami starting Aug. 19 and the 40,000-member Lithographers will open their convention Sept. 9 in Montreal.

Meany's meeting with Hall and Brown's joint committee was the second time the proposed merger had been discussed with him. Leaders of the two unions had met with him last January to report on initial developments.

Hall and Brown said that the executive councils of their respective unions had approved a proposed merger agreement, a declaration of principles for the merged organization and an implementation agreement. Under the constitution of each union, approval by its convention of the merger agreement will then go to a mail referendum of all members.

After approval by the referendum vote, a merger convention would be held to write a constitution to be submitted to a second referendum of all members for approval.

Pilots, United Airlines Agree on New Contract

Chicago—The Air Line Pilots and United Airlines have agreed on a new 18-month contract covering more than 3,000 pilots—the first combined agreement since the merger of United and Capital Airlines two years ago.

The negotiations, which started in late 1960 before the merger and became joint negotiations last October, resulted in an agreement on pay rates ranging from $1,161 a month to $2,655 and improvement in rules, working conditions and pensions plus some new fringe benefits, the union said.

The pact also settles "the crew complement problem" on United with a provision that jet planes will be operated with a minimum of three pilots.

Such planes formerly had three pilots and a flight engineer but the National Mediation Board ruled in 1961 that United pilots and engineers should be represented by one union and the pilots were certified. Later it was agreed that the engineers could be given pilot training and the crew size was cut back to three. These changes are now covered by the new contract, according to the union.

ALPA also reported that the work of merging United and Capital pilots into one unit has been accomplished.

New pay rates, effective July 1, range from $1,973 to $2,655 a month for captains with nine years of service; $1,373 to $1,687 for copilots, and from $1,161 to $1,433 for second officers. The former rates ranged from $1,775 to $2,501 for United captains, and from $1,484-$2,090 for Capital captains.

Other new benefits include minimum payment of $600 a month for voluntary retirement at age 60 after 20 years of service; vacation pay of 1 to 4½ months; company-paid life insurance of $6,000 to $35,000, based on earnings; partial payments by the company of United's sickness and accident program; and partial company payments of pilot contributions to the retirement plan.

ALPA Pres. C. H. Ruby called the settlement an "excellent example of how labor and management can successfully and peacefully settle their problems without government intervention" when good faith and the desire to settle characterize both parties. The agreement, he said, followed "one of the largest and most complicated negotiations ever conducted" in the air transport industry.

Labor Aides Named To Job Advisory Unit

Madison, Wis.—Two labor representatives have been named to the 16-member advisory council for the State Employment Service and the Manpower Development Training Program.

They are Sec.-Treas. George Hall of the State AFL-CIO and Pres. J. F. Friederick of the Milwaukee AFL-CIO. The council is charged with helping solve statewide problems relating to employment.

Spanish Mine Strike Given ICFTU Backing

Brussels, Belgium—Asturian miners who recently went on strike in Spain have been given the full support of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"In the name of the international free trade union movement, we greet the Asturian strikers and assure them that we are ready to support by all the means at our disposal their action in favor of their just demands," said ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu.

U. S. Fails to Use ILO Fully, Faupl Charges

The U.S. has failed to use the Intl. Labor Organization to the full extent of its potential, Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl told a House subcommittee.

The House group, holding hearings on the recent ILO conference during which the African delegates walked out in protest against the presence of South Africa, heard Faupl also criticize the State and Labor departments for failure to keep worker and employer delegates fully informed on African developments.

He told the subcommittee that a matter of concern to himself and the AFL-CIO with regard to the ILO was "the only intermittent interest of the U.S. government in ILO affairs."

"This interest," he declared, "rises and falls with the proximity of the (ILO) Governing Body meetings and Plenary Conference. For example, there is an inadequately sustained interest in the activities of the ILO staff and its many technical programs, how justifiable these are, and how they fit in with other aid programs and needs in the social and labor fields.

"If there were more continuous interest in the ILO, the government might be better informed and be also in a better position to exert its influence through diplomacy well ahead of procedural crises."

Faupl pointed out that the U.S. has ratified only seven out of 118 ILO conventions on matters affecting the standard of living of millions of people throughout the world.

"The ILO must stand as a symbol of service to all countries and we should be the first to demonstrate this," he said.

He declared that too often relations at the ILO are on the government level, that information and reports come almost entirely from governmental sources and that a greater effort should be made to obtain needed information and studies from other sources such as employers and labor unions.

"This is a field," he said, "where I feel there is room for improvement—not only in our relations to foreign delegates, but also in relations between the government members and workers' and employers' members of the delegation."

U. S. Court to Hear Apportionment Suit

Port Huron, Mich.—A panel of three federal judges has agreed to hear a suit seeking to throw out the legislative districting provisions of Michigan's new state constitution.

The action was filed by Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan AFL-CIO. Judges Clifford O'Sullivan, Fred Kaess and Stephen J. Roth rejected a plea that it was "premature" and denied a petition by Republican State Senators Frank Beadle, Paul Younger and John Fitzgerald to delay a hearing pending decisions in other court actions.

PROPOSAL for resumption of bargaining in the railroad work rules dispute under the eyes of a "watchdog committee" of Congress is discussed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany with Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.), right, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee.

156 BLFE Chairmen Called to Washington

(Continued from Page 1)

wards settlement of other phases of the dispute.

The House and Senate Commerce committees both ended public hearings and stood by to hear reports on negotiations from Wirtz before trying to reach a hard decision on legislation.

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to refer the dispute to the Interstate Commerce Commission and give the ICC authority to impose rules changes for a two-year period if the parties cannot reach a voluntary agreement.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany placed before Congress an alternative plan, endorsed by the rail unions, for renewed negotiations under the eyes of a "watchdog" committee of Congress. A number of members of both the House and Senate committees have sponsored the Meany proposal or variants of it.

Meany, while agreeing with the President that the economy "cannot stand" a railroad strike, has contended that collective bargaining "has not been exhausted" and that the "weapon" of "compulsion" should not be resorted to at this time.

He and rail union spokesmen have also questioned the suitability of the ICC to decide a labor dispute.

The railroads have set Aug. 29 as their deadline for unilaterally imposing their work rules demands.

Unions Hail Change:

'One-Union-or-None' Policy Dropped in Navy Shipyards

The Navy, following a series of setbacks from arbitrators, has dropped its policy of insisting that all workers at government shipyards—from typists to toolmakers—must be represented in collective bargaining by the same union or by no union at all.

The policy shift came to light as the Charleston Naval Shipyard agreed to recognize the Charleston Metal Trades Council as exclusive bargaining representative for some 5,500 hourly-paid workers.

Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. hailed the agreement as the first voluntary acceptance by the Navy of a shipyard bargaining unit composed exclusively of blue collar workers.

Although there have been differences among government employe unions regarding the composition of bargaining units, AFL-CIO affiliates including the Government Employes, Technical Engineers and Patternmakers as well as the metal trades unions had all opposed the Navy's insistence on an all-inclusive bargaining unit.

The Navy's original policy would have forced them to compete among themselves to represent groups of employes they did not claim, and would have made it difficult for any union to win the majority necessary for exclusive recognition and the right to negotiate a written contract.

A key decision by Arbitrator Philip Taft at the Boston Naval Shipyard declared the Navy's argument that multiple units would place a "great burden" on management "cannot be supported by industrial experience."

Taft recommended establishment of separate units for clerical and administrative employes; for certain technical and professional employes, primarily engineers and draftsmen; for pattern makers as a separate craft, and for the other blue collar trades in the unit sought by the local Metal Trades Council.

A similar multi-unit decision was handed down by Arbitrator George S. Ives dealing with the Norfolk Naval Shipyard at Portsmouth, Va.

Ives also chided the Navy for its persistent oppositon to multiple bargaining units, declaring in effect that the determination of the bargaining unit is one which should be made by workers on the basis of their desires and common interests. It is not up to the employer "to propose a collective bargaining unit on behalf of its employes," he declared.

Once bargaining units are established, exclusive recognition may be accorded either on the basis of a secret ballot election or through a card check demonstrating majority support for the union.

Recognition at the Charleston shipyard was on the basis of a card check.

The issue of appropriate bargaining units in the federal service has arisen only in the past 18 months, following Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition in the civil service.

This, for the first time, gave government workers and their unions the right to negotiate written agreements and directed agencies to give exclusive recognition to any union representing a majority of employes in an appropriate unit.

Shell Oil Strike Peace Checks Attack on Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

ment "one with which we are not fully satisfied but with which we think we can live," cited these "accomplishments" of the strikers:

- Forcing management to "recede from its first demands that it be given absolutely unilateral control over work assignments." Instead, the union observed, "we have preserved our previous union protections against arbitrary work assignments and have secured written limitations on the extent to which the company may vary past work practices."
- Reducing the extent of potential layoffs of workers by the company with language guaranteeing no further layoffs for the duration of the agreement "except after prior consultation with the union on ways to avoid or cushion" such layoffs.
- Obtaining assurance from management that "revised work rules in this agreement will result in minimizing the contracting out of our work" in the future.

Stood for Principles

In its statement the union said the strikers "stood firmly for their principles" despite the fact that the oil firm "was able to continue operations on a substantial basis." Shell kept up production by turning over automated work to some 1,200 non-union supervisors and technicians.

Of the 2,100 members who went on strike Aug. 19, "only eight have deserted our ranks," said the OCAW, adding: "We appreciate the personal intervention of Dir. Simkin. With his intervention June 8 we were able for the first time to get into real bargaining."

The union said its officers recommended the settlement and its members accepted it "in the knowledge that they fought a clean, hard fight for important principles and with the determination to re-establish an effective relationship" with management.

Appreciation was voiced for "the support and understanding" of the community and the labor movement. The strikers were given backing and aid by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, the federation's Executive Council, and many union groups.

Shell management announced during the strike that it could operate the Pasadena plant with 390 fewer workers. Recently Shell notified 227 workers at the bottom of the seniority list that they will not be recalled. After the settlement Shell agreed that 163 others would stay on the job although they will not be replaced when they leave the work force for any reason.

Shell is the fourth major oil firm which has been struck by OCAW locals and other in the last four years to prevent management from carrying out unilateral work rules changes.

Unilateral Control Sought

A common feature of each of the long-drawn-out 1962-63 struggles with Shell, Socony-Mobil and other firms was a management drive to change contract language so as to give the companies unilateral control of working conditions, job assignments and premium pay.

The effect of such demands would have been to leave management largely free to do what the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in a handbook stressing a drive for "management rights," called for —the right to shift workers from job to job without consulting the union, to cut the number of employes for economic reasons, and to remove major protections from the area of matters to be arbitrated.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council called attention last Nov. 18 to the drive and urged support for the union.

Appellate Court Upholds Union In Shipyard Work Rules Dispute

Philadelphia—A union claim that an employer broke the law by unilaterally changing the pay and working conditions of 17,000 shipyard workers in 1959 has been upheld by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The three-judge court, unanimously reversing a National Labor Relations Board decision of Oct. 25, 1961, which had been appealed by the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, ruled that the action of the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s shipbuilding division in changing rules and pay without the union's consent was a refusal to bargain.

The appeals court ruled that the NLRB decision was "premised on an erroneous view of the law," denied the board's petition for enforcement of its ruling and returned the case to the board "for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion."

Union Pres. John J. Grogan welcomed the decision, observing that it might "compel many industrialists to change their policy" on rules alterations.

The 1961 board decision, and a supplementary decision in 1962, were signed by all five members of the present board. Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented in 1962 on a minor point but concurred in all the major findings.

The dispute arose during negotiations between the IUMSWA and Bethlehem on a new contract covering hourly-paid employes at the company's East Coast shipyards.

In answer to union proposals for improvements in the contract expiring July 31, 1959, Bethlehem management presented a so-called "White Book" of changes—eliminating the cost of living adjustment formula, reducing premium pay, limiting the scope of the arbitration clause, and changing the grievance procedure. When the union refused to accept these changes the firm put them into effect unilaterally in August 1959.

22-Week Strike

Union members continued working under no-contract conditions until January 1960, when they struck for 22 weeks. An NLRB trial examiner later ruled that Bethlehem broke the law by insisting on a contract clause requiring the signature of employes on grievances but held that it was not guilty of "subjective bad faith" in its conduct.

Unilaterial changes put into effect Aug. 13, 1959, were held not to constitute an unfair labor practice "because the parties by this time had reached an impasse" in bargaining.

In 1961 the board adopted the conclusions and recommendations of the examiner. On a union application for review it held, six months later, that the company had unlawfully deprived union representatives of their seniority rights and also acted illegally "by unilaterally abandoning the grievance procedure of the expired contract and substituting its own procedure."

The appellate judges upheld that latter section of the board's decision. It also upheld the board's conclusion that Bethlehem did not violate the law when, upon expiration of the old contract, it stopped enforcing the union shop dues and check-off provisions. They held, however, that the company's unilateral action on seniority rights and the grievance procedure was unlawful, and brushed aside the board's view that the violation was merely "technical."

"Regardless of how characterized," the court ruled, "the changes altered conditions of employment and were therefore unlawful."

Noting that the board's examiner had referred to the union's "fixed and stoney inflexibility" and that as the days of bargaining wore on "adamancy only became stronger and stronger," the court concluded:

"It is not contended that the union's adamant position was in any sense a violation of its duty to bargain.

"Indeed, in view of the company's unlawful insistence on its grievance-signatory plan and its unilateral alteration of the conditions of employment on Aug. 1, the union's position was completely justified."

Labor Raised Rights Bail In Birmingham

Funds to free demonstrators in Birmingham last May and seal an agreement between white and Negro leaders to work peacefully toward full civil rights were provided by organized labor.

The AFL-CIO, the Industrial Union Dept., the Auto Workers and the Steelworkers put up $40,000 each, providing the collateral for bail bonds for some 850 persons who had been jailed during the five weeks of demonstrations.

The agreement between the white and Negro community that led to peace in the city and has been continually implemented rested in early May on the release of the demonstrators.

The long period of demonstrations had exhausted immediate sources of collateral funds for bail bonds, and the leaders turned to organized labor for help.

The funds were immediately made available by the four groups, the demonstrators were released on bond and the agreement signed.

$712,000 Collected In Unpaid Earnings

Albany—The State Dept. of Labor collected $712,000 in minimum wage underpayments by 4,808 employers and turned the money over to 17,101 workers in the first half of 1963.

Filling Social Needs Held Key to Jobs

Federal Leadership Urged by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has called for federal leadership to meet such critical social needs as schools, hospitals and urban renewal through the employment of millions of jobless workers.

Each $1 billion of federal investment in public service construction creates 100,000 jobs directly and leads to another 50,000 to 100,000 jobs indirectly, according to the lead article in the current AFL-CIO American Federationist.

The analysis entitled, "America's Need: Social Services and Jobs," warned that "a strange paradox afflicts an America striving to create the good society, the democratic society in which no one shall live in want or fear.

"For the national economy which has demonstrated such remarkable ability to meet the challenge of war has failed to rise to the challenge of peaceful needs," it added.

Produced as a Labor's Economic Review report by the Dept. of Research, the analysis says the paradox is posed by two conditions:

Jobs, Services Needed

"On the one hand, well over 4 million people are jobless and about 15 percent of industry's plants and machines lie idle.

"On the other hand, a fast-growing population suffers a continuing shortage of vital social services: children need schools; people generally and the elderly in particular are in want of housing, health care, hospitals and nursing homes; city people and suburbanites require mass transport; communities need libraries; the great cities rotting at the core must be replanned and rebuilt; pollution of water and air must be controlled; the natural beauties of the nation must be preserved and developed for human enjoyment.

"Common sense would seem to say that one problem can be used to solve the other.

"Federal leadership, action at the national level to start things moving, obviously is required if people are going to be put to work to meet public needs."

The job-creating impact of government construction does not end at the building site, the AFL-CIO observed. In the chain reaction effect, the article said, public works outlays spur activity in the factory, on railroads and highways and in warehouses in the production and distribution of materials and equipment.

Taking up the slack in the economy would produce increased incomes for both business and working people and higher tax revenue for government, the article said. America has lost billions of dollars of potential wealth in the past decade as a result of unemployed manpower and idle plants and machines, it noted.

"At present, a $10 billion tax cut is necessary to start America back to work," the AFL-CIO stressed.

"The right kind of tax cut in 1963—tax reduction for low and middle-income taxpayers — can quickly inject consumer buying power and spending into the economy and boost sales and jobs.

"As the tax savings are spent and the effects spread through the economy, they can add about $20 billion to $30 billion to national production within approximately two years — boosting sales, production and employment."

But this is not enough to eliminate the economic slack in a period of labor-displacing automation and rapid labor force growth, the analysis emphasized.

Needs Can Be Met

The nation has a real need for essential public services and only by meeting this need through the employment of the jobless and the idle plant and machines can sound economic progress be achieved, it contended.

The federation economists cited a series of studies carried out by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Dept. of Labor to support labor's case for meeting social needs and creating jobs.

These studies, said the AFL-CIO article, showed a direct job-creation of about 220 man-hours of work per $1,000 of government spending. Changes in prices and increases in productivity since that time have reduced needed labor per dollar of expenditure, the analysis said, adding:

"An estimate of direct labor needs, at present, would be about 200 man-hours of work per $1,000 in government spending or one fulltime job for a year for each $10,000 of spending.

"An expenditure of $1 million for government construction directly creates about 100 jobs—approximately 40 at the construction site and 60 in the various supply and distribution industries."

On the types of jobs involved, the construction work obviously calls for such skilled craftsmen as plumbers, carpenters, electricians, bricklayers, sheet metal workers, iron workers and others.

But the BLS studies also show, the report added, that about 25 to 30 percent of the jobs created at the building site are for unskilled and semi-skilled workers.

"Government construction, therefore, creates many jobs indirectly—at the building site and in manufacturing, transportation and warehousing as well," the article said.

"Government expenditures of $1 billion for public building programs create approximately 40,000 on-site construction jobs and about 60,000 jobs in producing and distributing building materials and equipment."

Study Quoted

On the point of direct job-creation, the AFL-CIO economists quoted from a study of urban renewal programs by Peter Wagner of the National Planning Association, an independent research group.

"Urban renewal," according to Wagner, "will require more labor input than almost any other expenditure of equivalent size. To be sure, a considerable increase in labor productivity in this sector must be envisaged during the next two decades, but expenditures for urban development will remain highly labor-intensive. Moreover, the type of labor needed will always include a high proportion of male workers of relatively low skills. This is the very type of labor for which employment opportunities, already a serious problem, will be increasingly scarce in the future."

The analysis pointed out that, with $1 billion in federal outlays creating about 100,000 jobs on and off the building site, the economic chain-reaction will create an additional 50,000 to 100,000 jobs.

The resulting pickup in economic activities, it said, also will reduce government expenditures for unemployment insurance and public assistance for destitute families. It quoted Gerhard Colm of NPA as telling the Joint Economic Committee last March that $1 of increased government investment in urban renewal can stimulate $2.50 to $3 in private investment, expanding the "private spending so necessary for the economy as a whole."

The review also explained the chain-reaction effect on job-creation by citing a Senate report on the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1963. That report was quoted as saying a three-year investment of $500 million by the federal government will be matched by at least $250 million of local public investment, plus another $500 million provided for construction and equipment, payable from revenues of the transport system. Thus a $500 million federal investment will produce a total of $1.25 billion in spending for capital outlays, the Senate report observed.

Hailed as Example

The Public Works Acceleration Act was cited as a meaningful example of meeting real needs and creating jobs through federal leadership.

A great response absorbed all $400 million in federal funds appropriated by January 1963 for some 3,756 projects, the article noted. By last April, another 6,200 projects requiring $1.2 billion in federal funds awaited approval, with only $450 million additional having been appropriated.

The AFL-CIO has urged an extension of this law through 1964 and an appropriation of $2 billion to support it. This would be matched by about $1 billion in state and local funds, directly creating about 300,000 jobs and, indirectly, another 150,000 to 300,000 jobs.

In terms of national job needs, the analysis said, more than 3 million jobs are needed "for full employment now." It pointed out the nation has over 4 million jobless and some 2 million working part-time. In addition, some 800,000 are estimated by Kennedy Administration experts as having stopped looking for work because jobs were not available.

Against this, the AFL-CIO listed such social needs as the lag in building 75,000 new classrooms each year; the needed replacement of 10.5 million housing units; a need for $1 billion a year this decade for urban renewal programs; a shortage of 1 million hospital and nursing home beds and a lack of other health facilities; public recreational facilities requiring an outlay of up to $20 billion between now and 1975; airport and highway building and modernization.

Debt Would Rise

The federal debt obviously will rise in the next year or two if taxes are cut by $10 billion and the government increases its investment in public services, the article observed.

After the economy is operating in high gear and unemployment is at a minimum, then the government should seek a balanced budget or budget surplus to prevent inflationary shortages, it said.

"America can afford increased government investment outlays to create jobs, boost sales and improve public services," the article concluded. "The nation cannot afford the waste and increasing social danger of rising unemployment and inadequate public services for a growing population."

Coleman Faces Johnson In Mississippi Runoff

Jackson, Miss.—Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, who campaigned on a straight-out segregationist and anti-Kennedy platform, and former Gov. J. P. Coleman will face each other Aug. 27 in a runoff primary for the Democratic nomination for governor.

In a state where "moderate" sentiment on race issues has not manifested itself substantially as in Georgia and South Carolina, Johnson was the front runner in the initial primary Aug. 6 with 157,718 votes in nearly complete returns.

Coleman, described during the campaign as a "quiet segregationist," ran second with 136,534 votes to gain a spot in the runoff primary. Charles Sullivan with 107,253 votes was knocked out of the race.

The runoff primary issue is where Sullivan's votes will go. Eight years ago, Coleman beat Johnson in a runoff despite the fact that Johnson led the first primary. Sullivan campaigned this year, however, by imputing a charge of state "disloyalty" to Coleman for supporting Kennedy electors in the 1960 presidential election.

Johnson political advertising was heavy on anti-Kennedy themes during the campaign. The lieutenant governor emphasized that on one occasion he had faced U.S. marshals in an effort to "bar the door" of the University of Mississippi at Oxford to James Meredith, a Negro whose enrollment was ordered by a U.S. Court of Appeals.

Gov. Ross Barnett, who led a futile fight against Meredith's admission after bolting the national Democratic ticket in 1960 in favor of independent electors supporting Virginia's Sen. Harry F. Byrd for President, was prohibited from seeking re-election by the one-term provision of the Mississippi constitution.

A newly-active Republican Party in the state is fielding candidates for governor and lieutenant governor, plus a few seats in the legislature, in the November general election. The GOP candidate for governor is Rubel Phillips and for lieutenant governor is Stanford E. Morse, Jr. Both were previously office-holding Democrats. Their campaign doctrine is that the Republican Party offers a better alternative to the Kennedy Administration than "states' rights" Democrats.

Our Choice: Up or Down

JULY 1963 was the 69th successive month that the unemployment rate in the United States was 5 percent or greater of the nation's labor force.

July 1963 was the month also when surveys of corporate profits for the second quarter of 1963 disclosed an annual rate higher than any previous three-month period in business history.

It was the month, also, when the 1963 automobile model year drew to a close with an all-time production record of 7,340,000 cars—210,000 units higher than in the previous record year of 1955 but produced with 162,000 fewer workers.

Rocketing profits, shattered production records and chronic, high unemployment is not the right mix for a healthy, expanding economy. It is a formula for continuing malaise that could develop into a dangerous illness.

★ ★ ★

THE JOB FIGURES for July highlight the contradictory forces at work in the economy. The Labor Dept. reported 70.9 million workers gainfully employed during the month—a figure once beyond credulity. But for every 1,000 persons in the labor force, 56 were seeking jobs and could not find them.

In an economy that employs 70.9 million workers, the unemployment factor is sometimes brushed aside as inconsequential. But the July 1963 unemployment figures are 300,000 higher than a year ago, when profits and production were running not quite as high as this year. And the jobless rate a year ago July was 5.4 percent; in 1963 it had increased to 5.6 percent.

The influx of new, young jobseekers this year sent the rate for the teen-age unemployed to 16.2 percent compared to 16 percent a year ago, another pertinent factor in the unemployment picture as the population boom of the immediate postwar years begins to show up in the jobless totals.

★ ★ ★

THE LONG-SOUGHT-FOR remedies to invigorate the economy —a $10 billion tax reduction in low and middle-income brackets and increased expenditures by the government to create jobs and meet the nation's crying need for public and social services—are still in the offing.

The expanded manpower program to retrain and relocate workers displaced by newer technology and automation is still on the drawing board.

A strong civil rights program that would wipe out job discrimination and provide education and training opportunities for Negroes and other minority groups is grinding its way through a hesitant Congress with the conservative coalition opposed to measures that would ease the tragically high unemployment rate among these groups.

The American economy can drift just so long in a condition of record-shattering profits, chronic high unemployment and job displacement through introduction of automation.

It is during this period of what has been described as a sideways-sliding economy that measures must be taken to prevent the downturn or recession that inevitably results from an imbalance such as the present one.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, August 10, 1963 No. 32

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

The Pace of Things

'. . . an End in Itself?':

Automation May Not Be Worth The Price Society Has to Pay

DOES ALL AUTOMATION, every instance of technological change represent progress?

We have come to accept the general concept that the changes automatically bring with them the hope for a fuller life for individual citizens and for a stronger and more prosperous nation.

Is this a rigid, undeviating rule? If there are exceptions, what are they?

In recent months more and more authorities on the subject have been raising questions and voicing doubts. They appear to be wondering whether a line should be drawn indicating that at some point automation ceases to be a process for the social good, for human betterment, and becomes an end in itself.

Pres. Kennedy wants a more profound consideration of this problem and he spelled out some of his concerns in his message to Congress relating to the railroad dispute.

He announced that he intends "to appoint a Presidential Commission on Automation of the ablest men in public and private life." He asked that this commission "undertake the most comprehensive review of this complex and many-sided subject ever ventured and report no later than the close of next year."

The President openly wondered if the gap between technological change and the price paid in human terms might not be growing too great. He quoted the Presidential Railroad Commission, which declared that "revolutionary changes even for the better carry a high price in disruption [that] might exceed the value of the improvements."

House Majority Whip Hale Boggs recently stood in the well of the House and gave vent to some of his own alarm in this area. He said:

"It is commonplace to say that today's world is growing swiftly. I am afraid many of the people who say this, however, are still unaware of just how fast the automation pace is and how much it will influence our lives.

"We have grown up in a world where work is the accepted role of most human beings. It is almost inconceivable to imagine a world in which most of us did not spend our most productive hours earning our daily bread.

"Yet the time has come, in selected pockets of U.S. industry, where machines do the real work and man is only a caretaker. His work is negligible, as to what is accomplished.

"And the machines are getting more competent all the time they are gobbling up at a tremendous rate the work humans used to do.

"It appears to me that the tide of industrial revolution is engulfing us, yet the force of the tide is felt chiefly by those in industry dealing with it."

The congressional leader has called for a White House Conference on Automation.

An article in Life magazine by Keith Wheeler points out that "while automation promises a fuller life for most people some day—if it can be understood and controlled—it offers no comfort to human beings caught right now in the undertow of the technological tide."

WHEELER DESCRIBES some of the new robots currently being employed to replace workers, adding:

"What, then, does all this mean to the muscles and hearts and minds of men who not only need to work in order to live but also, by eons of instinct, have been conditioned to understand that they need work for the sustenance of their souls?"

He asked John I. Snyder, Jr., chairman of the board of U.S. Industries, what he felt was happening to people. Snyder replied:

"It means they are out of work. Optimists like to compare this to the industrial revolution —but the analogy is wrong. People got hurt then because we were breaking into an industrial society, but with these new tools we are obsoleting not only our conventional machines, but modern men as well. The industrial revolution created jobs. Now we're using sophisticated machines to destroy jobs."

To which Wheeler asks:

"When you destroy the job, do you also destroy the man?"

Morgan Says:

South Dakota Senator Urges Moderate Cut in Arms Budget

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THE JUNIOR SENATOR from South Dakota, George McGovern, has thrown into the middle of the test ban treaty discussions a related but politically perhaps an even more complicated issue, the size of our defense budget. A former college professor with more than an academic sense of history—he flew 35 missions against the Nazis as a bomber pilot in World War II—McGovern is a loyal New Frontiersman; he once headed Pres. Kennedy's Food for Peace program. But he thinks the military budget is too high because it is adding nuclear warheads to an arsenal which already contains far more weapons than we ever would or could use even in "total" war.

Morgan

After a long and careful personal study of the problem, McGovern proposed in a major floor speech selective cuts in expenditures for warheads which would total $5 billion. He would divert this respectable nest-egg to peaceful purposes to strengthen the economy and enrich the fabric of American society.

The senator's formula was inspired, in part, by a study of U.S. strategy made by a group of educators headed by Seymour Melman, professor of industrial engineering at Columbia University. In a nutshell, Melman argues with almost evangelical zeal that in building up our defenses we have reached, and then proceeded to ignore, a new military condition which the brass calls "overkill." This means that in accumulating between them nuclear weapons with an explosive power of 60 billion tons of TNT, the United States and the Soviet Union are now capable of killing off each other's population not just once but scores of times over. Indeed that 60 billion figure provides enough nuclear dynamite to aim a 10-ton bomb at the head of every human being on the planet.

Melman contends that without moving an inch toward disarmament it is possible to cut between $22 and $23 billion out of the $56.7 billion defense budget and still not weaken national security because the cuts are mostly in the redundancy of nuclear weapons. He would divert this basket of savings into industrial productivity which he maintains, with conviction, is being starved by the greediness of military demands robbing the civilian economy of the vitamins of proper industrial growth.

Some responsible government officials who have studied Melman's plan insist that he has grossly oversimplified the problem; that he hasn't, for example, taken into proper account the additional missiles that might be needed to knock out Soviet missile bases now being "hardened." Even Defense officials concede, however, that for at least two years we have had tens or hundreds of times more nuclear weapons than we would ever use.

McGovern didn't think Melman could safely justify his colossal cuts but he and several other members of Congress have been impressed with the professor's basic argument. However, when McGovern and Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.) went personally to the Pentagon recently to ask how much actual overkill capacity we already had, they found the going rough. They didn't get the runaround, exactly, but nobody seemed to know the answer.

NEVERTHELESS, McGovern concluded Congress could cut $1 billion from the Atomic Energy Commission's $1.8 billion budget item to produce new warheads, and $4 billion more from the Army, Navy and Air Force retaliatory weapons budgets without reducing security. On the contrary, he argued in his speech, it would strengthen it by making more money available for public health, education, conservation and job retraining. He coupled his cuts with a proposal to oblige major defense contractors to set up operating committees to plan for conversion from military to civilian use when cutbacks come. An "arms economy," he said, "has added to our civilian production costs, decreased our efficiency, undercut our competitive position in international trade and aggravated the balance of payments problem."

There is too much logic and good sense in the senator's idea for it to have easy sledding. Congress, like almost everybody else, is suspicious of new approaches and slow to change. Furthermore even though the long-term prosperity is more promising, this concept would shrink some defense contracts—enough to give some congressmen apoplexy.

But now, in the fluidity of East-West relations, is the time to explore new approaches to security and take a wide rather than a narrow view. McGovern himself gave such counsel in his maiden Senate speech last March when he wisely warned against a "senseless fixation on Castro" that was blinding us to the problems of the hemisphere. Now we must stretch our horizons to reach the world's problems whereon, McGovern said, "both Americans and Russians must make a choice between the quick and the dead."

Washington Reports:

Democrat, Republican Assail Extension of 'Bracero' Program

TWO MEMBERS of the House, a Republican, William T. Cahill of New Jersey, and a Democrat, Jeffery Cohelan of California, have reiterated that Public Law 78, which permits the importation of Mexican migrant farm workers (braceros) into the United States, should come to an end. Both voted against extension of the legislation in the House on May 29, and declared against attempts of some members of the Senate to revive the proposal.

"It seems rather anomalous to me that since we have great unemployment here in the U.S. . . . we still persist in bringing foreign help into this country to do the work that Americans can do and want to do," Cahill declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Undersec. of Labor John Henning told the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor that "unemployment and underemployment among our rural population has been estimated at 4 million workers."

Cohelan pointed out that the Mexican Federation of Labor and Catholic Church leaders in Mexico have both expressed themselves as favoring an end to the bracero program.

"Many of the Mexican workers don't return to their families when they go back," said the Californian.

"Also many of the workers, to be signed on, are required to pay $120 to the functionaries as a fee. In addition they pay for a 'cantena,' in which there is also strong evidence of exploitation."

CAHILL SAID that "only 1 percent of the farmers of the U.S. benefit in any way from the program. It isn't just the farmers who want to extend it, but the myriad of people beginning with the recruiter . . . who are making money on this program and each year seeking to extend it for two more years."

Cohelan asserted that the program doesn't help raise the level of the Mexican worker, but instead pits him against those in this country who are our most depressed.

Cahill observed that the program was originally set up at the time of the Korean War "for an emergency situation." Since then, he said he has found, "even those who proposed an extension have said each time they wanted it only temporarily."

The number of braceros coming into the U.S. has decreased each year since the program began, he said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, a normally sedate operation with a sedate president well typed to present the same old views in the same respectable way, seems to have come up with a tiger. Edwin P. Neilan managed a speech at the National Press Club here—this is an audience which assures coverage for anything strikingly said—denouncing voters as "bribers" of members of Congress and denouncing members of Congress as "bagmen."

Not all members, you understand, and maybe not all voters. "Many members," Neilan conceded, "bravely resist" pressures from their home districts for projects that waste the nation's substance. But many a congressman "sells his high office to buy votes," and many a voter "casts his vote for the highest briber."

To him, Neilan declared—right out in public—it is "difficult to rank such conduct higher in the moral scale than the association of politicians, party girls and spies in Great Britain."

One may passingly observe that Brother Neilan seems alert to the moral degradation of communities which want public works and urban renewal but curiously blind to the moral turpitude that might just as easily be attributed to those who use public platforms to lobby to get their own taxes cut—which is what much of the CofC operation is, at bottom. However, the parable of the mote and the beam has universal application, no doubt.

* * *

WHAT REALLY INTERESTS this observer about Neilan's speech is its assumption of correctness as well as of superior rectitude.

It surely would be conceded as arguable that urban renewal—an expensive business involving billions—might genuinely be believed by some voters to be worth while, admirable, desirable, even essential. Bleeding hearts, maybe, but not bribers.

Does Neilan honestly think that a congressman votes for such things as area redevelopment just to "bribe" the voters into returning him to office? A good many happen to think that sound public policy, mercy, sympathy and humaneness require that somebody pay some attention to the plight of people in run-down areas.

Federal school aid can be defended on principle—indeed, this is the only possible way to defend it. The kind of voters I admire are those who, as a matter of principle, are disturbed about the shocking school dropout situation, the illiteracy of many adults, and think the country must do something about it.

And the tax structure which is Neilan's genuine beef about the conduct of his nation's affairs? A great many people fought for the graduated income tax—it was pushed by both Republican and Democratic leaders before we got it through by constitutional amendment—because they believed it was socially desirable, equitable, a tax system fair and just.

* * *

NOBILITY OF CONCEPT is not a weakness of Neilan's.

A member of Congress who seeks to get his district qualified for area redevelopment aid and accelerated public works may not really be guilty of trying to "buy" office by sending home a bagful of goodies for the worthless creatures who don't want to work. It is just possible that he is affirmatively sensitive to human distress.

A member who votes for higher federal standards of unemployment compensation may not be trying to "bribe" a home-town union local into supporting him for re-election.

He may be appalled—and many are—at the deterioration of the compensation system since its enactment in 1935. Deterioration, mind you, that has come about largely because smug businessmen have supported state capital lobbies that have clawed down the tax rates and pushed up the disqualifications.

Some of us, thank you, don't attribute moral degeneration to conservative members of Congress who vote the way Neilan likes them to vote—that is, against federal action on anything except subsidies to business and tax favors to corporation executives who own stock. My own observation is that they are voting their convictions, honestly held.

So do a good many liberals, a little bit of truth Neilan will never grasp.

CONTINUATION of the bracero program of bringing Mexican labor into the U.S. is not to the benefit of the braceros or of U.S. agricultural workers seeking jobs, Rep. Jeffery Cohelan (D-Calif.), left, and Rep. William T. Cahill (R-N. J.) declared on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Food Prices Moving Upward After a Whole Year of Stability

By Sidney Margolius

AFTER A WHOLE YEAR of stable living costs, wage-earners are being hit by a boost in the cost of living. Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale food price index by midsummer had reached its highest level since last December. This means you're going to pay more for food, and especially meat, when you visit the supermarkets unless you are alert to seasonal good buys.

Not only food but clothing and rugs will cost you more this fall. For rugs, our advice is to shop the August furniture and floor-coverings sales.

But not all prices are going up. Refrigerators are the bargain of the year—prices have been trimmed again. The two-door frost-free models, which are fast becoming the standard, are being featured in summer sales for $200 and even less in 12-cubic foot sizes.

A new round of reductions on television sets has made available 16-inch sets for under $100. This is the lowest price yet for U.S.-made models. Retailers also are cutting the spread between all-channel TV sets and the VHF. Some now charge only $20 more for the all-channel models. These give you reception on UHF channels as well as on the relatively fewer VHF channels. After Apr. 30, 1964, only all-channel receivers will be sold. It costs manufacturers only about $15 more to equip TV receivers with all-channel tuners, trade sources estimate.

You also can find good values in upholstered living room chairs and sofas in the midsummer furniture sales. Manufacturers have reduced prices not merely on the moderate-grade promotional chairs but also on better-quality chairs.

Here are tips on money-savers for August:

JUICE GOUGE: The current high price of frozen and canned juices is, frankly, a gouge. Frozen orange juice currently costs 50 percent more than a year ago. The price hike is blamed on last winter's Florida freeze. However, at the time of the freeze, stocks of orange juice concentrate were the largest on record—more than double the previous year's and 2.5 times average. Thus canners and retailers reaped windfall profits on these big inventories.

Our only advice is at least to buy the stores' own brands of orange juice and other concentrates.

You can substitute tomato juice for orange juice if you use correspondingly more, since it has less than half the vitamin C value of orange juice. One relatively good value is orange-grapefruit juice. It has almost the same vitamin C value of orange juice, at a little lower price.

But be sure you buy actual juices and not the canned "fruit drinks," "fruit punch," etc., now widely sold. These have water as their leading ingredient.

AIR CONDITIONERS: Recent hot weather has caused a run on air conditioners. Be sure you know what you're buying. Manufacturers have been pushing low-priced models ($129-$149) that are rated for only 4,000 BTU's (British Thermal Units). The more candid retailers warn that these can cool only a small room. Actually, some of the more-effective 6,000 and 7,000 units at $159-$179 don't cost much more than the 4,000s.

Most of the larger manufacturers now have their BTU claims checked by the Electrical Testing Laboratories, Inc. Thus you can be sure of the reliability of the BTU rating if the air conditioner carries the NEMA certification emblem. This shows the rating complies with the rating standards of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association.

Also find out how much wattage is used by various models with the same BTU rating. The more carefully-designed models consume fewer watts for the same cooling output, thus holding down your electricity bill.

FOOD BUYING CALENDAR: Use meat sparingly this August. Pork especially is expensive. The many special sales of broilers and small turkeys this summer are one potential money-saver. Retailers are pushing broilers in parts—selling separate packages of legs, breasts, etc. But the whole bird is priced lowest, next cheapest are quarters, and most expensive are parts. Canned tuna fish also is in heavy supply and priced low.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

THIS POSTER, prepared by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., is a reminder that the week of Labor Day is also Union Label Week. Proclamations to this effect have been issued by many governors and mayors.

Aid to Conscientious:

FHA Can Help Ease Mortgage Problems

WHEN A HOME OWNER who conscientiously tries to avoid default finds it temporarily impossible to keep his payments up to date on his Federal Housing Administration insured mortgage, he should promptly confer with his bank or lending institution about the possibilities for some form of relief for his situation.

Under the FHA program there are several things that can be done to help the home owner with a temporary setback, an illness, a family emergency, disaster, or a similar occurrence that eats into his income to the point where he is forced to default on his mortgage.

FHA home mortgage regulations allow the lender to wait as long as a year from the date of default before beginning foreclosure action. Many lenders are willing to use this 12-month leeway in helping the borrower to avoid foreclosure by getting his mortgage back into current condition.

During this time, the lender can voluntarily accept reduced monthly payments from the home owner or carry the mortgage in its delinquent condition. In either event, the borrower agrees to make up the back amount later through extra payments equivalent to partial or to full installments.

Most lenders are willing to be lenient with responsible borrowers whose mortgages go into default as the result of financial difficulties that can be straightened out in a reasonable amount of time.

Besides the voluntary relief they furnish in default cases, lenders are encouraged, in hardship cases, to submit forbearance proposals to the local FHA insuring office for approval. By this means FHA gives lenders full discretion to grant special forbearance relief to any home owner whose default is due to circumstances beyond his control and whose mortgage will probably be restored to good standing within a reasonable period.

In hardship cases of this sort the lender:

- Makes an arrangement with the home owner through which payments may be either postponed or reduced for a specified forbearance period not to exceed 18 months.
- Makes an agreement with the home owner for a plan under which regular monthly payments will be resumed after the forbearance period and the back amount on the mortgage will be paid up before the mortgage matures.

The FHA does not dictate the repayment terms of such agreements other than to require provision for payment by the maturity date of the mortgage. This leaves the lender free to work out a method for the borrower to make up the defaulted portion of his mortgage in such a way as to relieve him from higher payments for a time after the actual forbearance period.

If the mortgage were eventually foreclosed FHA, in accordance with its regulations, would reimburse the lender for mortgage interest accrued and uncollected during the forbearance period. (U.S. Housing Notes.)

From Soup to Nonsense:

Our Cat—Right from Scratch She Acts Like She Owned Us

By Jane Goodsell

A CAT HAS US. I'd like to say that we have a cat, but unfortunately this is not the case. The cat has us—and right where she wants us, too.

She came to live with us a couple of months ago, and right from the start she has acted as though she owns the place and we are her willing slaves. To set the record straight, this is not true. We are her unwilling slaves.

Her name is Clair — actually Clair de Lune—but she doesn't answer to it. She doesn't answer to anything. Molly calls her Honey or Sweetie Pie or Poor Babykins, and the rest of us call her Here Kitty or Oh You Awful Cat.

As I say, she doesn't answer to any of these names, but don't think it's because she's confused. We're confused, but she's supremely poised and self-assured. She knows we want her to come, but it's beneath her dignity to answer a summons from her inferiors, and she shows up at her own sweet time—usually about two in the morning.

She is a Siamese, which establishes her as a member of the feline aristocracy. Since all cats consider themselves superior to people, she is a natural snob. She considers herself mistress of the household and she tolerates us with haughty disdain.

We fixed a nice bed for her in the basement, but of course she doesn't sleep there. She sleeps in Molly's bed. I don't mean on the bed or underneath the bed or curled up at the foot of the bed. I mean in the bed, with her head on the pillow and the blankets tucked under her chin. Molly sleeps scrounched over in the corner.

SHE TURNS UP her nose at cat food, but I can't exactly call her fussy. She'll eat anything that's left on the kitchen table—a leg of lamb, a bowl of salad, a strawberry tart—anything that wasn't meant for her to eat.

She has a loud, complaining voice, and she meows with annoyance at the slightest delay in service or attention.

And yet, despite her difficult, tyrannical, inconsiderate, snobbish ways, that cat has us exactly where she wants us. We were frantic with worry the day she disappeared for six hours, and weak with relief when she returned. Each of us wants to be the one whose lap she snuggles in, and whose leg she rubs against in her moments of condescending affection—even if she snags our stockings in the process. We smirk with pride when she lets us pet her.

I can't explain why we feel that way about her when she treats us so shabbily. Anyway, if you have a cat, you don't need an explanation. And if you don't have a cat, you'll never understand.

Union Workers Keep UN Building Trim

24-HOUR maintenance keeps United Nations a gleaming showcase of world's striving for peace. Telescope scaffolding is used in cleaning giant "picture window" at General Assembly.

GARDENER CARES for this indoor plant arrangement viewed daily by 3,500 visitors, 3,000 international secretariat employes and some 2,000 delegation members and observers. Six gardeners are among the corps of craftsmen.

CHILDREN of the United States, with their pennies and nickels, paid for construction of this large ornamental pool—their gift to the United Nations. Here, the pool has just been emptied and is being given one of its regular cleanings.

AIR CONDITIONING louvre is removed for cleaning by one of 15 maintenance men who are kept busy with upkeep on the 39-story Secretariat building, the General Assembly and the related facilities.

UPHOLSTERY repair shop at UN is kept busy with maintenance on more than 17,000 chairs. Experienced workers keep the furniture in good condition.

CARPENTERS erect stage in the General Assembly hall for special concert marking Human Rights Day. Plumbers, electricians and other crafts are on full-time duty behind the scenes at the UN.

THOUSANDS OF FEET trample the carpets in the public conference rooms and General Assembly hall. Sometimes this calls for on-the-spot repairs such as this maintenance worker is making while a group of visitors listen to a guide during their tour of the UN.

LEGISLATION to permit private firms to own nuclear fuel was strongly opposed by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, right, in testimony before congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, headed by Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.), left.

Congressional Probers Look into Bank Thefts

Congressional investigators are taking a sharp look at a steady rise in bank embezzlements to determine whether new legislation or more effective use of existing federal authority is needed to prevent fraud.

A staff study is under way by a House Government Operations subcommittee, headed by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.). It is scheduled to be followed by public hearings.

Latest statistics from the FBI and the American Bankers Association present an even grimmer picture of widespread fraud than earlier reports which were described as "shocking" by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Thefts Increase

In 1960 the FBI reported 1,771 cases of internal bank fraud, a majority of which were committed by bank officers from president to cashier.

The 1962 FBI statistics, the House subcommittee was told, shows that the number of internal thefts reached an all-time high of 2,257.

While federal bank examiners appraise the soundness of the assets and operating practices of federally-chartered banks, there is no legal requirement for commercial banks to have annual audits of accounts of the type required by law of all trade unions. Most smaller banks, which suffer the largest proportion of embezzlement losses, have strongly opposed any internal audit requirement as too costly.

While surety companies have for some time expressed concern over the bank fraud problem in trade publications and trade association meetings, the issue was publicly raised when the AFL-CIO launched a hard-hitting campaign to protest heavy additional bonding charges imposed on unions under a little-known provision of the Landrum-Griffin Act. This required "faithful performance of duties" bonds as well as the customary commercial bonding of officers and employes handling money.

The provision initially added 50 percent to the cost.

Schnitzler and a committee of AFL-CIO secretary-treasurers were able to get the premium cut in half in the fall of 1961 by demonstrating that surety companies had suffered no losses whatever under this new bonding requirement. A new round of negotiations with the rate-setting Surety Association of America is currently under way.

The association found, Schnitzler said, "that the trade union movement has the best bonding experience in America," including "all of business, all banks, all fraternal organizations."

In a report to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in testimony before Congress and in speeches to union conventions, Schnitzler emphasized the contrast between the record of banks—one of eight of which experiences an embezzlement each year—and the record of the trade union movement.

The report to Meany, following the rate cut negotiated with the bonding companies, declared:

"Responsible union financial officers and employes have a record incomparably superior to the record of responsible officers and employes of banks.

Balance Against Banks

"If you put the record of the officers and employes of banks against the record of trade union financial officers and employes, the balance is shockingly against the banks—and should be shocking to the country."

In addressing the Sheet Metal Workers convention last year, Schnitzler noted that in 1961 there were 427 bankers "convicted for stealing from their own banks" and an additional 300 awaiting trial or being sought by the police.

"If the record of the presidents of our affiliated unions was as rotten and disgraceful as the presidents of the banks, it would mean that 11 and one-half international presidents would go to jail every year for stealing from their own unions," he added.

The problem of lack of audits of bank records was pointed up in a survey by Price, Waterhouse & Co., a leading accounting concern which found that 36 percent of embezzlements were discovered through "unexpected circumstances" rather than as the result of internal safeguards.

Labor Credit Unions Rise to 1,091 in 1962

Madison, Wis.—A total of 1,091 credit unions were operated by trade unions in the U.S. during 1962, according to the annual report of the Credit Union National Association.

All but 128 were sponsored by labor unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

Union Delegates Fight Anti-Labor Laws:

Canada's New Democrats Re-Examine National Issues

Regina, Sask.—Canada's preoccupation with the problems of a bilingual and bicultural nation highlighted the second convention of the New Democratic Party.

The social democratic party supported by labor met in Regina, capital of Saskatchewan and seat of Canada's only New Democratic provincial government. Sweltering heat in the convention hall matched the oratory of some of the 800 delegates seeking a solution to a nationalization of Canada's French-English question.

The vigorous French Canadians, now pushing for strengthening their role in national life, represent nearly 30 percent of Canada's population. They account for most citizens of Quebec, about half the population of New Brunswick, and pockets in every other province.

The convention recognized the need for greater autonomy for French Canadians and observed that "too often the French Canadian fearing the assimilation of his language and culture has seen in the call for national unity a disguised attempt at assimilation."

The New Democrats urged improved facilities for Canadians to learn both French and English at the same time in all points of Canada, as is provided in Quebec for English-speaking Canadians; expansion of Canadian Broadcasting Corp. coverage in both languages; promotion of bilingualism in the federal civil service and federal aid for simultaneous and written translation services.

About half the cost of convention arrangements at Regina's Exhibition Auditorium went to provide simultaneous translation of proceedings. Delegates were issued transistor receivers and could follow speeches and discussion in either language.

A strong labor delegation representing 200,000 affiliated union members was present. Some 20 percent of the delegates represented local, national and international unions, provincial federations and local labor councils.

Anti-Labor Laws Reviewed

In a pre-convention session 135 labor delegates made a critical review of anti-labor laws in most provinces passed since 1959. Saskatchewan was singled out for high praise for legislation passed since the present government came to power.

Labor delegates also urged provincial legislative conferences to familiarize trade unionists with repressive legislation, to promote national campaigns against anti-labor laws and to push stronger support of the New Democratic Party.

William Dodge, Canadian Labor Congress executive vice president, noted that "the platform of the New Democratic Party and the platform of the CLC are almost identical, so it can be hardly surprising if the NDP has the support of the CLC."

Explaining labor's stake in Canada's political lineup, Dodge stated, "We are not looking for control. We are not suggesting a government run just by trade unions," he added. "What we do want is a voice in the affairs of our nation and reasonable treatment from our legislators."

The CLC spokesman-delegate said that "There can be no doubt whatsoever that in the two years since the NDP came into being at Ottawa, our new party has made a great impact on the national scene." In the 1962 and 1963 federal elections the party gained about 14 percent of the total national vote, and 26-27 percent in industrial urban areas.

Helstein a Speaker

Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers, and George Brown, deputy leader of British Labor Party, were to address the convention as fraternal delegates.

Other matters on the agenda included strong policy proposals to cut unemployment, the highest of any western industrial nation and accounting for $3 billion in lost production annually. The convention urged national economic planning with fiscal and monetary policies geared for full employment and expansion of the public sector of Canada's economy. The party declared that "In the modern state unemployment has become an anachronism."

Repatriation of the ownership of Canadian industry, through buying back selected industries in which foreign ownership is restrictive and contrary to the best interest of the Canadian economy, was urged. It was pointed out that Canadian concerns controlled abroad were up to 50,470 in 1959 from 25,500 in 1946. Petroleum is now 90 percent foreign-owned, mining 61 percent, manufacturing 57 percent, rubber 98 percent, automobiles 97 percent, electrical apparatus 81 percent, chemicals 77 percent.

Consumer protection was proposed through legislation against "unscrupulous promotion techniques, misleading advertising, poor quality and overpriced goods, and devious credit schemes." A consumers' bureau under a cabinet minister, with research origination and regional offices to administer legislation, was proposed.

There was hot debate anticipated later in international affairs revolving around Canada's NATO membership, nuclear weapons and Canadian entry into the Organization of American States.

Labor delegates were active on all convention committees. It was a working convention, without the flamboyance of the founding convention, but delegate participation was strong as new policies were developed for the next step in building the party.

NAM's Political Arm Offers Money, Advice

(Continued from Page 1)

ers charging that Sparkman had yielded too much on the civil rights plank at the Democratic National Convention of 1952, when the senator was named vice presidential nominee on Adlai E. Stevenson's ticket.

Much of Battle's organization strength came from Alabama political leaders who in 1948 had backed the Dixiecrat candidate, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina. against Pres. Truman. There was no chance for Alabama citizens that year to cast their votes for Truman: electors favoring him were denied a place on the ballot.

Margin Was Healthy

Sparkman beat Battle and two minor rivals in the 1954 primary by a healthy margin, getting 323,000 votes to Battle's 208,000.

Although Cravens' announcement did not mention the NAM sponsorship of BIPAC, the effort of the businessmen's association to set up such an "action" group was freely disclosed last May 18, when the AFL-CIO News carried a story about the scheduled new fund-raising operation dedicated to electing "conservative-oriented" congressional candidates.

NAM Vice Pres. Edward I. Maher told the News at that time that although BIPAC would not be an official arm of the NAM, the association "approved the idea" of such a group and was giving it "support and encouragement." Five businessmen, all NAM directors. were named to the original BIPAC committee that now is expanded to 13.

The NAM's director of public affairs, Robert L. Humphrey, told the News he had been working for a number of years to set up a political action group to raise funds and channel campaign contributions to congressional candidates.

'Collision Course'

Frankly conceding that it would function in much the same way as the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education—but often on what amounts to a collision course—Humphrey said he "always admired" the COPE operation.

"I have read the records clear back," he said, "and it is my opinion that no organization in politics could function except along the COPE pattern."

Maher last May disclosed that the "membership dues" scale under consideration for BIPAC would range from $10 to $99 a year—a detail that was confirmed in Cravens' official announcement.

Sliding Dues Scale

Maher said that the $99 dues might be paid by "top" business or corporation people, $25 by "second rank officials such as vice presidents" and the $10 dues fee by others. Cravens emphasized that "only individuals can provide the dues money" to make BIPAC's efforts "effective." The corrupt practice laws forbid contributions to candidates in federal elections from organization funds of corporations, national banks and labor unions.

Among the 13 "founding directors" of BIPAC named by Cravens are officials of corporations whose executives have been frequent contributors to or sponsors of various right-wing groups. Available records show these facts about four of the BIPAC directors:

Records Listed

R. Downs Poindexter, president of the Superior Iron Works & Supply Co., Inc., Shreveport, La., contributed $500 in 1960 and $500 in 1961 to Americans for Constitutional Action, a right-wing conservative group active in the political field.

Clifford J. Backstrand, board chairman of Armstrong Cork Co., is a sponsor of Young Americans for Freedom, a campus group sometimes described as "Kids for Goldwater," and gave $100 in 1962 to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, considered the "intellectualist" wing of the campus right-wing movement.

Arthur H. Motley, publisher of Parade Publications, Inc., gave $100 in 1959 to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists.

The Washington Water Power Co., of which BIPAC director Kinsey M. Robinson is board chairman, has twice made $100 contributions to Harding College in Arkansas, a center of extremist right-wing publications and operations.

Brown Cites 'Common Sense':

Merger Talk Hailed At ITU Convention

Long Beach, Calif.—As he has done for the past several years, Pres. Elmer Brown opened the 105th Typographical Union convention here on the theme of merger of the allied printing and related trades unions.

"We must not ignore advances made in the printing, publishing and related trades but meet each of these challenges with advanced knowledge of all the elements involved in new or improved production plans," he said.

"To do this we cannot pull our skirts about us blindly and wish away the other people in the printing, publishing and related crafts. Common sense demands that we consult with them on our mutual problems."

Over a period of several years Brown and other ITU officers have been consulting with top officials of the Printing Pressmen, the Newspaper Guild and the Papermakers & Paperworkers on plans for effecting an economic merger of the unions identified with the printing and publishing industry.

The ITU president told the delegates they should give thoughtful consideration to the possibilities of an economic merger with one or more of the ITU's sister unions.

"While such a merger, however desirable, cannot be effected immediately," he said, "we believe our continued cooperation and discussions with our sister unions will within the very near future bring to our membership a practicable and acceptable plan for the economic merger of the unions in the printing, publishing and related industries."

Pres. Arthur Rosenstock of the Newspaper Guild echoed Brown's sentiments, repeating a quotation from a joint statement issued by the ITU and the Guild after a meeting of the officers of the two organizations in 1960:

"We are convinced that unity is demanded to build the collective strength of our members striving for just wages and working conditions and to combat the attacks of unfair employers and the effects of punitive legislation."

He said that his union still holds with the intent of the statement.

"If we are not prepared immediately to take steps to unite, we must at least keep talking about it," Rosenstock said.

Other officers of unions involved in the merger discussion were scheduled to speak later.

Highlights of Brown's keynote address included reports that:

- The ITU has attained a new all-time weighted average weekly wage scale of $130.09 a week.
- The average workweek for the union is now below 37.5 hours.
- The ITU continues to score gains in its campaign for the enactment of the city and state anti-strike-breaker laws. Two new state and 20 city ordinances were enacted during the past year.
- The ITU training center at Colorado Springs has doubled its student capacity and more than 1,500 students have been trained there. The training center offers courses covering the newer processes of producing the printed word which have come from the rapid technological evolution in the industry.
- The international has launched a unionwide organizational campaign covering most states.

STUDIO CONFERENCE on the new AFL-CIO film, "In Common Brotherhood," brings together, left to right, AFL-CIO Dir. of Public Relations Albert J. Zack; Producer Joel O'Brien, script writer David Davidson and Director William Buckley. Produced for showing to television audiences over Labor Day and to other audiences thereafter, the movie tells the story of the federation and its interest in international affairs all over the world.

Labor Hits Scranton Bill To Slash Jobless Aid

Harrisburg, Pa.—A statewide labor rally here, hurriedly called by the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO when Gov. William W. Scranton (R) proposed a bill to revise the state unemployment compensation system on the eve of the legislature's adjournment, was followed within 24 hours by Scranton's withdrawal of the bill.

Pres. Harry Boyer of the state body, calling the bill "cruel and shocking," said "hundreds of thousands of jobless Pennsylvanians who are threatened by this legislation are the beneficiaries" of the rally and urged union members to continue their efforts to defeat the Scranton proposal.

Scranton, in announcing that the bill was being withdrawn from consideration, said the subject would be referred to the Joint State Government Commission for a report to a later special session of the legislature.

The bill was given the legislature by the Scranton administration on July 15, and given a hasty first reading with minor amendments as legislators scrambled to adjourn by July 31.

The state labor body flashed the news around the state with a bulletin analyzing the bill and asserting that at least 190,000 jobless workers, then eligible for unemployment benefits, would be adversely affected.

The measure was "among the worst to be introduced in the General Assembly in recent years" affecting the unemployed, the federation said.

Boyer and Executive Vice Pres. Michael Johnson, addressing an overflow rally here of several hundred union representatives who later visited their legislators, said the bill would:

- Give a tax reduction of 40 percent, or $6 million a year, to banks, utilities, major oil firms and other employers with low labor turnover; and load a 20 percent tax increase on firms with a higher turnover of workers.
- Cut benefit payments to an estimated 75 percent of the jobless by canceling unused wage credits for long-term unemployed; eliminating the present uniform duration of 30 weeks; eliminating seasonal workers from coverage; deducting half of social security payments and other payments from private pension plans financed by employers; and eliminating all benefits less than $15 a week.

The bill also provides increased benefits, to a maximum of $5 a week, for an estimated one-fourth of the claimants.

Chattanooga Labor Opposes Sales Tax

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Chattanooga AFL-CIO has strongly reiterated its long-standing opposition to any form of a local sales tax.

Delegates who unanimously voted to reaffirm the council's stand also instructed the officers to inform Mayor Ralph Kelly of organized labor's views. During the discussion delegates called for equalization of assessments on which property taxes are based and cited other forms of taxation as "more equitable" than the sales levy.

Brown Issues Ban on Bias In California

Sacramento—Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) has issued an executive order prohibiting any form of discrimination by state employes, firms doing business with the state of California and business firms licensed by the state.

The order, based on the state's first Code of Fair Practices, spells out a comprehensive policy of nondiscrimination to serve as a guide for all departments of the state government in their relations with minority groups and individuals.

Brown signed the order before leaving on a vacation trip to Europe. He said California has a "fine record" in the field but that new steps are needed. Atty. Gen. Stanley Mosk heads a statewide civil rights task force to insure code compliance and to coordinate all state civil rights activities.

The code covers employment policies, state services and facilities, contracts, employment service, educational programs and institutions, licenses and regulatory agencies, housing, law enforcement, and recipients of benefits, loans and grants.

The order requires annual progress reports to the governor and posting of the code "in conspicuous locations in all state facilities."

A similar order was issued in Kentucky recently by Gov. Bert T. Combs (D).

Hatters Board Votes Backing For Strikers

New York—The executive board of the Hatters has voted full backing for 1,100 workers on strike against the Hat Corp. of America at plants in Sunbury, Pa., and Winchester, Tenn.

In addition, locals in all branches of the union have pledged "full moral and financial support" for the duration of the strike, Pres. Alex Rose said.

The walkout was voted by local union members when the firm refused to bring earnings of employes up to the standards of comparable plants, according to Rose. Strike support plans include picketing of selected stores of the Hat Corp., which sells Knox, Dobbs, Cavanagh, Dunlap and Champ hats.

The strike began on the 10th anniversary of a strike against the same firm in Norwalk, Conn.

AFL-CIO Film Depicts World Role of Labor

A new black and white sound film, taken by a camera crew on a 12,000-mile swing around the world and picturing labor's involvement in international affairs, has been produced for the AFL-CIO and is available for showing on television stations and to private audiences.

Called "In Common Brotherhood," the movie was prepared especially for Labor Day viewing. Running time is 30 minutes.

Some 25 percent of the AFL-CIO's annual income is spent on international affairs—helping build free unions all over the world wherever help is asked.

The new 16-millimeter movie has its own musical score. The script was written by David Davidson, past national chairman of the Writers' Guild of America. Production for the AFL-CIO was by Joel O'Brien, with direction by William Buckley.

O'Brien previously produced "Land of Promise" for the federation, and it was shown on more than 250 TV stations. Also he was producer of "People and Politics" for the Committee on Political Education and "Anatomy of a Lie" for the Machinists, the latter an expose of the National Right to Work Committee's "And Women Must Weep," a distorted "documentary" story of a strike.

"In Common Brotherhood" includes views of Pres. Kennedy as he spoke recently in divided Berlin, and as he greeted the first graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development in the White House rose garden.

Also shown are scenes filmed in Caracas, Tel Aviv, Geneva, Kenya, Uganda, Washington, D.C., and other locations.

The position of the AFL-CIO in world affairs is summed up in the movie by Pres. George Meany, who also spoke in Berlin and other cities of the stake that American workers have in freedom everywhere.

Arrangements for the film were made by Albert J. Zack, AFL-CIO public relations director, and M. S. Novik, the federation's radio and TV consultant.

U.S. Asked to Raise Share of Health Cost

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to raise the government's share of the cost of health insurance for federal employes and to retain "freedom of choice" as to the type of plan an employe may choose.

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair told a House Post Office & Civil Service subcommittee that an apparently "inconsequential" provision in an Administration bill could "impede the development of community-sponsored group practice prepayment plans."

The clause objected to, he said, would enable the Civil Service Commission to disqualify from the federal program any plan which had fewer than 300 participants.

Such disqualification, he continued, would handicap the development of group prepayment programs in smaller communities where the number of federal employes might be limited.

In the area of employe-employer sharing of costs of health insurance, Fair noted that the federal government has lagged behind private industry by paying less than half the premium costs for insurance. While the amount paid varies with the plan selected, the average U.S. payment is only 38 percent of the cost, he noted.

He suggested an additional federal contribution of $2 every biweekly pay period for an individual and $5 for a family, with a ceiling of 50 percent of the cost.

Noting that most unions have negotiated non-contributory health insurance plans with their employers, Fair said raising the federal contribution rate would bring the government in its role as employer "more nearly in line with the practice in the private community today."

British Manufacturing Wages Show Increase

London—Average weekly wages in manufacturing industries during April were $46.13 for men and $22.88 for women, according to provisional statistics made public by the Ministry of Labor following its regular semi-annual survey.

AFL-CIO Reiterates Stand:

Labor Calls for End Of Bracero Program

The AFL-CIO has again strongly urged Congress to kill the Mexican "bracero" program this year and substitute a national farm labor recruiting program to provide U.S. workers "in adequate numbers, under fair conditions and at the places needed."

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, testifying before a Senate Migratory Labor subcommittee, said the one-year extension of the bracero program proposed by the Senate Agriculture Committee would be a "tragedy" for American farm workers, who have "nowhere to go but into the ranks of the hard-core urban or rural unemployed."

Biemiller and Arnold Mayer, legislative representative of the Meat Cutters, endorsed the principles of a voluntary farm worker recruitment bill introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.) and 10 co-sponsors.

It would provide for domestic workers transportation, housing and guaranteed work comparable to that which growers now provide for laborers imported from Mexico.

The labor witnesses emphasized, however, that the domestic program should be geared to upgrading wages of farm workers and not tied to "prevailing wages" which have been sharply depressed over the years by the availability of braceros.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the Senate was preparing to take up the Agriculture Committee bill to continue the program an additional year. It had reached the floor a week earlier—having been reported out without hearings over the protests of opponents—but Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) forced it back to committee by making a point of order that a quorum was not present when the committee voted.

Committee Recalled

Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D-La.) quickly convened his committee and won 11-5 approval of the bill after a 9-7 vote turning down a motion to hold public hearings.

In testimony before the Williams subcommittee, Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning made it clear that the Administration does not support a simple one-year extension of the bracero program—a direct contradiction of a claim made the Agriculture Committee's report.

Henning endorsed the principles of the Williams bill and declared that the Labor Dept. "would oppose any further extension of Public Law 78 [the bracero program] without amendments which would bring the required job offers made to Mexicans and to domestic workers more closely together."

The House on May 29, in a surprise move, had defeated a bill to extend the bracero program for two years by a 174-158 vote.

Biemiller told the Labor subcommittee that the AFL-CIO is opposed to continuing importation of Mexican workers because:

- It has "undermined wage and work standards for American farm workers."
- It has levied a "tremendous social cost" by perpetuating poverty.
- It has fostered "a system of colonialism" which "solves no long-run problems for the imported foreign worker or the domestic worker he replaces."

Concept 'Repugnant'

"The concept of an alien labor force in our country, a labor force stripped of the normal rights of citizens or residents, is repugnant to men of good will," Biemiller declared.

Mayer told the subcommittee that the Williams bill aims at the "greatest problem" of U.S. agricultural workers, that of unemployment.

He pointed out that "sharply increasing mechanization is taking a fearful toll of farm labor jobs" and that "U.S. workers are not only available for farm work, but they are available in ever-increasing numbers."

Braceros, he noted, are given work guarantees, "free transportation, free housing and medical services—but domestic workers get none of these benefits."

WORKER DELEGATES from three countries were included on an Intl. Labor Organization committee that protested South Africa's apartheid policies to United Nations Sec. Gen. U Thant at a meeting in New York following the annual ILO conference. Shown here on a visit to the office of the AFL-CIO Committee for United Nations are (from left) Naomi Spatz, executive secretary of the committee; Sec. Gen. Mahoud Benazzedine of the General Union of Tunisian Workers; Kalmen Kaplansky, international affairs director for the Canadian Labor Congress; Sec. Gen. Jean Mori of the Swiss Trade Union Federation, and their escort, Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate.

House Votes Expansion, Reforms In Vocational Education Program

(Continued from Page 1)

present spending by an equal amount—the bill authorizes a more flexible use of existing vocational training funds, including shifting money from farm training to other categories and requiring that at least 25 percent of home economics education be directly linked to job training.

New federal funds provided would be used:

- To help construct area vocational school facilities.
- To provide vocational training for persons attending high school, for those who have completed high school and for those who have dropped out of school before graduation.
- To provide special vocational education "for persons who have academic, socio-economic, or other handicaps that prevent them from succeeding in the regular vocational education program."
- To provide training or retraining for persons already in the labor market who are not receiving benefits under other manpower development programs.

Advisory Group Included

An Advisory Committee on Vocational Education would be established by the bill and would include members from both labor and management as well as education and government.

While the bill was passed with rare unanimity, the final vote was preceded by a barbed debate over a Republican attempt to tie on an anti-discrimination amendment which Democrats charged would ensure defeat in the Senate.

The GOP motion to recommit the bill to committee with instructions to attach the civil rights proviso was defeated on a 217-181 rollcall vote which closely followed party lines. Earlier the amendment, sponsored by Rep. Alphonzo Bell (R-Calif.), was beaten 194-146 on a non-record teller vote.

While Republicans, including Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.), taunted Democratic civil rights advocates about their refusal to vote for the anti-discrimination amendment, northern Democrats challenged the GOP to pledge the same solid support for the Administration's overall civil rights bill—expected to reach the House floor within the next month—which includes a provision authorizing the cutoff of federal grants to any programs operated within the states in a discriminatory manner.

Democrat Augustus F. Hawkins, Los Angeles Negro serving his first term, bluntly labeled the GOP civil rights position "phony" and said if the amendment carried it would kill the bill and deprive more Negroes than whites of needed job training.

'Political Shell Game'

Another freshman Democrat representing a constituency with a nonwhite majority—Rep. Thomas P. Gill of Hawaii—blasted the Republican tactic as a "political shell game."

He said the people in Hawaii know that their congressmen, "when the time comes to vote on a civil rights bill, are going to be here with both feet, with both hands, and our hearts and heads. Our people know we are going to work for the toughest civil rights bill that can come out of this Congress."

Gill said he hoped that the "great ardor" shown by Republicans for the anti-discrimination rider "continues for a few weeks until we get a chance to vote on a civil rights bill that means something."

Apart from the partisan civil rights debate, Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, agreed with hardly a dissenting voice that the expanded program—admittedly a form of federal aid to education—was necessary and desirable.

Its basis was a report submitted to Pres. Kennedy by a special vocational education panel, whose members included AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the federation's Standing Committee on Education. The panel found that present laws did not provide the flexibility needed to train workers to meet present and future employment needs and recommended a $400 million-a-year federal program.

The Administration's original bill was criticized in House testimony by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller as "completely inadequate" and a subcommittee, headed by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) voted a substantial increase in new funds.

In other congressional developments:

- The Senate followed its Appropriations Committee recommendations down the line and approved a $5.49 billion dollar money bill for the Labor Dept., Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and related agencies. The bill partly restored House cuts in the budget request for the National Labor Relations Board and the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The Senate rejected 49-33 an amendment by Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D-O.) to cut $25 million from the U.S. Employment Service and forbid it from advertising job vacancies. Private employment agencies have led a major campaign to curtail the USES, while the Administration and labor have sought its expansion. The Senate also turned down, 54-29, a bid by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) to add $30 million to the manpower training program.

- House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) assured delegates to a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People legislative conference that Congress will remain in session until it acts on civil rights legislation. But he said that "speaking frankly, we need three Republican votes" in the House Rules Committee to bring civil rights legislation to the floor. The committee is composed of 10 Democrats, half from the South, and five Republicans.

8-10-63

Citizens' Group Backs Tax Cut Bill This Year

A citizens committee including businessmen, trade unionists, farmers and educators has warned that Congress may have to shoulder "the blame for the next recession" if it doesn't pass an effective tax cut bill this year.

Its statement came as the House Ways & Means Committee moved into the final stage of drafting a tax bill which would combine cuts in tax rates with a partial closing of some existing loopholes. Still undetermined was how closely the House bill would resemble the Administration's proposals.

The 48-member Citizens Committee for Tax Reduction & Revision in 1963 cited these "economic facts of life" as evidence of a recession threat:

- Unemployment, at 5.6 percent, is above last year's rate.
- Retail sales have hung at the same level for the past eight months.
- New orders for hard goods placed with manufacturers have declined.
- Steel production is down from earlier this year.

"It is a fact," the committee stated, "that new jobs are lagging while new workers are increasing. And it is a fact that the national economy has slowed down when it should be expanding. If the present session of Congress does not face up to these economic facts of life, the blame for the next recession may well be placed on its doorstep."

Pres. Howard R. Bowen of Grinnell College is chairman of the committee and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is one of five co-chairmen. Other labor representatives are AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison and James A. Suffridge, Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, Social Security Dir. Nelson Cruikshank and Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger.

While joining in the committee's broad support for a comprehensive tax bill benefiting all sections of the economy, the AFL-CIO has emphasized that it believes the greatest need is "an immediate tax cut of approximately $10 billion with the major emphasis on the low and middle income family groups" to provide "high velocity purchasing power."

Anti-Bias Riders Opposed by Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the House Judiciary Committee recently that labor wants legislation to bar the use of federal funds for any program where discrimination is practiced.

Labor opposes, he made clear, any piecemeal efforts to attach anti-discrimination amendments as "riders" to general legislation, a tactic which has often been used to kill a bill.

The AFL-CIO's position, Meany said in reply to a question, is "that we don't want riders, we want an overall prohibition, everywhere."

Council Spurs Rights Drive Keyed to Legislation, Cities

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year

Saturday, August 17, 1963 No. 33

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

THE AFL-CIO Executive Council meets at Unity House, Pa., with Pres. George Meany in the presiding officer's chair and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at his right.

Warns Recession Threatens in '64

By Saul Miller

Unity House, Pa.—An intensified drive for civil rights keyed to mobilizing labor's strength at the legislative and grass-roots level emerged as the major theme of the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting here.

In its four-day session the council declared the federation can make its "major contribution" to civil rights victory by "continuing its all-out legislative activity on Capitol Hill and its efforts to . . . bring an end to segregation and inequality in the local communities of America." (See story Page 2.)

While civil rights policies received major attention, the council also issued a number of significant statements on peace and disarmament and domestic and foreign economic policy.

It sounded a clear call for ratification of the limited nuclear test-ban treaty by the Senate but warned that the treaty's potential as a step toward world peace can be realized only through "greater unity of purpose, cohesion of policy and action and overwhelming capacity for defense" by the U.S. and its allies. (See story below.)

In the domestic economic area, the council warned that present economic trends are pointed toward a recession in 1964 unless strong and decisive government action is taken without delay. (See story Page 2.)

In the foreign economic policy field the council called for action on a four-point program to solve the balance of payments deficit as an immediate problem, declaring flatly that fear of the payments deficit cannot and should not be used to justify curbs on economic expansion that would further injure the welfare of American workers. (See story Page 2.)

The council assailed also the "narrow interpretations" of the U.S. Tariff Commission under the Trade Expansion Act that are preventing workers from receiving adjustment assistance benefits. (See story Page 3.)

The Council received also a report on the expanding activities of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, supported by the AFL-CIO, disclosing that by the end of this year 12 institutes to train Latin American and Caribbean trade union leaders will be in operation as well as a school for advanced studies in Washington. (See story Page 4.)

In the civil rights area the council dealt with three aspects of the problem:

Civil Rights Targets

The selection of three cities by a special AFL-CIO committee and task force where labor would take the lead in creating community-wide organizations to wage the fight for full civil rights for all groups.

The encouraging report of the shrinking number of segregated local unions among AFL-CIO affiliates, currently at 172 out of more than 55,000 local unions.

Adoption of a statement that the question of whether AFL-CIO affiliates will join the Aug. 28 March for Jobs and Freedom is for the individual unions to determine, that the federation shares the goals and the objectives of the sponsors, but that it will continue to stress the legislative and grass-roots community approach.

In internal matters the council approved a report by Pres. George Meany on the merger plans of the Lithographers and the Photo Engravers and his support of the plan. The proposal to merge the Photo Engravers, an AFL-CIO affiliate, and the Lithographers, which disaffiliated several years ago, will receive its first test at the Photo Engravers convention in Miami next week. The merger plan must

(Continued on Page 3)

Approved by 287-113:

House Passes College Aid Bill For Classroom Grants, Loans

By David L. Perlman

A $1.2 billion college aid bill, setting up a three-year program of federal grants and loans to build classrooms, laboratories and libraries, sailed smoothly through the House with strong bipartisan support.

The bill, approved 287-113, is the third federal-aid-to-education measure to pass the House this year. In April, the House adopted a 10-year program of federal grants for medical, dental and nursing schools, combined with a student loan program. Earlier this month, a major expansion of vocational education grants won 288-122 approval.

None of the bills—all backed by labor and the Administration—has yet been acted on by the Senate.

While the House, with rare Democratic and Republican unity, was rejecting all attempts to cut back the college aid bill or force a court test on the constitutionality of grants or loans to private colleges, another Administration bill was having rockier going in the Senate.

A low-cost proposal to establish a volunteer National Service Corps, to help communities meet pressing social service needs, barely squeaked through by a 47-44 vote—and then only after it was trimmed back to an experimental two-year program.

Recommittal Beaten

Republicans and southern Democrats joined forces to oppose the measure, and a motion by GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) to send it back to a committee pigeonhole was beaten by only two votes.

The college aid bill is similar to a House-approved measure last year, which died when conferees were unable to reconcile differences with a Senate-passed bill.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) held out hope for enactment of the college aid program this year. He said he thought the bill had a "good chance" and declared he will try to get it to the floor before the Senate begins consideration of civil rights legislation.

The House-passed bill authorizes, over a three-year period:

- $690 million in matching grants for construction or improvement of undergraduate academic facilities, with 22 percent of the funds earmarked for junior colleges and technical institutes.
- $145 million in matching construction grants for graduate schools or for cooperative graduate centers created by two or more universities.
- $360 million in low-cost 50-year loans for construction or improvement of academic facilities.

Specifically excluded from the bill is any assistance for facilities used for religious instruction or worship.

Some congressmen from both parties opposed, as violating constitutional church-state separation, assistance of any type to colleges connected with religious institutions. An amendment to delete aid to non-public colleges was beaten 132-62 and a proposal to ask the

(Continued on Page 12)

New Deadlock Blocks Railroad Rules Pact

Top government mediators once again sought a formula to get the railroad work rules negotiations back on the track after a new deadlock.

Rail management, which has repeatedly called on Congress to impose a settlement of the rules dispute, declared bluntly that a negotiated agreement on the key fireman-helper issue is "hopeless."

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen retorted that the railroads have failed to meet their collective bargaining responsibilities and have maintained an attitude of "no settlement on other than our terms."

Gilbert, acting at the "urgent" request of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, had summoned his union's 156 general chairmen to Washington, D.C., in the expectation that he would have a new management offer to put before them.

At that time, both sides had agreed to negotiate on the basis of suggestions made by Wirtz and it appeared that the key issues in the four-year-old dispute were be-

(Continued on Page 11)

Senate Urged to Ratify Limited Test Ban Pact

Unity House, Pa.—The AFL-CIO called on the Senate to ratify the limited test-ban treaty as a "first step toward possible limitation or reduction of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction."

But the federation's Executive Council warned that the treaty's potential as a step toward world peace can be realized "only if our country and its democratic allies develop ever greater unity of purpose, cohesion of policy and action and overwhelming capacity for defense."

The treaty, the council declared, "provides mankind with an opportunity to end the danger of radioactive contamination of the atmosphere by halting these blasts which endanger health and produce genetic damage."

Fortunately, it added, the treaty "does not depend for its execution on the good faith of the Kremlin rulers."

"In spite of its limitations, it can provide a firm foundation for

(Continued on Page 3)

A GROUP OF AFL-CIO Executive Council members, shown at the Unity House meeting, includes, clockwise from the left: Vice Presidents James A. Suffridge, A. J. Hayes, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul Hall; Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, and Vice Presidents Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin and L. M. Raftery.

Cincinnati First on List:

AFL-CIO to Push Rights Fight Into Major U.S. Communities

Unity House, Pa.—Labor's campaign to carry the civil rights fight into the nation's major cities will be launched in Cincinnati, with Washington, D. C., and Boston tentatively selected as the next areas of operations.

The cities have been selected as the first of a group of 30 to 40 where labor "will take the initiative" in involving all groups in the drive to give Negro and other minority groups full equality and opportunity.

The announcement of the first target cities by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany highlighted a full and active discussion of civil rights at the Executive Council meeting here. It included a progress report on elimination of segregated local unions by federation affiliates and adoption of a statement emphasizing the AFL-CIO's determination to "mobilize complete support" for civil rights legislation and leave to "individual union determination" the question of whether they should join the Aug. 28 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

Meany told reporters that selection of the first cities in the federation drive to end segregation and inequality of opportunity in local communities was made by a task force set up in conjunction with the special five-man civil rights committee named recently to give major emphasis to the AFL-CIO drive.

The five-man group consists of Meany, Sec.Treas. William F. Schnitzler, vice presidents Walter P. Reuther and A. Philip Randolph, and Pres. C. J. Haggerty, of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. The task force includes heads of AFL-CIO service departments such as organizing, community services, public relations, publications, and education.

Meany told reporters that under task force direction, Donald Slaiman and Walter Davis of the federation's Dept. of Civil Rights will set up meetings with local central bodies and key representatives of international unions to help create broad local civil rights groups or have labor join existing groups.

The overall objective, Meany declared, and the task of the committee is to have labor extend its fight for civil rights and play its full part in the campaign to wipe out discrimination.

Segregated Locals Going

In the report on segregated unions, Meany stressed that the labor movement is making "very good progress" in eliminating segregated locals and that AFL-CIO affiliates are applying more pressure than ever before to wipe out all forms of discrimination.

This was the highlight of a report from the Civil Rights Committee made public by the federation president at a press conference.

Meany said that the extensive report from Schnitzler disclosed that of the more than 55,000 local unions in AFL-CIO affiliates, there are at present only 172 segregated locals and that the affiliates are making progress in reducing even this "very low figure."

Noting that no international affiliate has a color bar in its constitution, Meany stressed that all affiliates are working to bring all of their locals into compliance with AFL-CIO constitutional provisions.

The report showed that the 172 local unions still not integrated are in 23 international unions and that the number of segregated locals ranges from two locals each in seven affiliates to 30 segregated units in one affiliate.

There are also four local unions which are completely segregated because there are only Negro workers employed in the industry involved in the specific area.

Meany said in reply to a query that many international unions may have some locals where some sort of discrimination is present, in fact, if not in policy, but he stressed that the internationals are "putting the heat" on the locals and that progress is good.

The council approved a statement declaring that AFL-CIO affiliates "have every right" to join in the Aug. 28 March on Washington.

The AFL-CIO itself can make its major contribution to victory in the civil rights fight "by continuing its all-out legislative activity on Capitol Hill and its efforts in cooperation with other like-minded groups to bring an end to segregation and in equality of opportunity in the local communities of America," the statement stressed.

Noting the number of Negro organizations sponsoring the Aug. 28 demonstration, the statement emphasized that the AFL-CIO shares their goal of overcoming prejudice and discrimination and meeting the problems of Negro joblessness.

"We obviously support completely the right of any American to peacefully protest for a redress of grievances," it continued. "This is a precious American right which the trade union movement has often used and which we may often use in the future."

Whether AFL-CIO affiliates join the demonstration "is a matter for individual union determination," the council said. The AFL-CIO role, it stressed, will be to continue "our own two major efforts—on the legislative front and at the grass roots level."

In reply to queries, Meany said the AFL-CIO has a "wide community of interests" with the groups sponsoring the demonstration and that the council is neither endorsing nor condemning the Aug. 28 program. There is a real question, he said, of whether the demonstration will help the legislative situation, noting that many liberal members of Congress are disturbed by the possible reaction to and results of the march.

He declared he believed the statement would not have "an adverse effect" on the sponsors of the demonstration and the Negro community.

No Repudiation

"Responsible leaders of the Negro groups will not take this statement as a repudiation," he said.

All members of the executive council approved the statement except two who had some reservations—Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and A. Philip Randolph, he said.

The council voted $10,000 to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to carry on its work as a legislative coordinator and clearing house operation in Washington. Negro and labor groups are represented in the group.

Balance of Payments Program Proposed

Unity House, Pa.—A four-point program to meet the immediate problems posed by the balance of payments deficit, coupled with expansionary economic policies and new international monetary machinery, have been called for by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The council declared firmly that fear of a payments deficit cannot be used to justify curbs on economic expansion and said that compared to America's unemployment problem the payments deficit "has been vastly exaggerated."

The council statement called for:

- Direct restrictions on investments of U.S. companies in other industrial nations, a major factor in the balance of payments problem and a cause of the loss of American jobs.
- Elimination of the 25 percent gold cover on U.S. currency. Most nations have abandoned this device long ago, the council noted, and "there is no rational reason for the U.S. not to make all of its gold available for international transactions, if necessary."
- Direct U.S. restrictions on the flotation of foreign securities in American money markets.
- Reversal by the Administration of the "money-tightening and interest-raising policy" of the past few months.

The nation's difficulty, the council said, is not the payment deficit, but "the decline of international confidence in the dollar . . . due to continued economic slack in America. . . ." Noting the exaggeration of the problem, the council pointed out the annual deficit rate of $3 billion in the first half of 1963 is small compared to total national production of $580 billion.

The council said that signs of an increasing payments deficit and "pressures from western Europe central bankers" led the Administration to impose monetary restraints on the domestic economy. The tightening money supply, increased interest rates and a hike in the discount rate, it asserted, have put "a damper on the faltering advance of the economy" at a time of high unemployment and unused capacity.

The council praised Administration moves to arrange to borrow $500 million from the Intl. Monetary Fund and the proposed interest equalization tax on American purchases of new issues of foreign stocks and bonds floated in the U.S., but added that the nation "has not taken several essential basic steps" to solve the payments difficulty.

On direct investment of American companies in foreign countries, the council pointed out that this involved an outflow of $1.6 billion in 1962 and ran at an annual rate of $2.2 billion in the first quarter of 1963. The council made it clear the restriction should apply only to industrial nations, with no controls involving investment in the developing countries.

Direct flotation of foreign securities in U.S. money markets resulted in an outflow of $1.2 billion in 1962 and has been at an annual rate of $1.8 billion in the first quarter of 1963.

The council warned that "America must not sacrifice the domestic economy and the welfare of American working people in dangerous and self-defeating attempts to solve the balance of payments problem."

"Continued efforts to curb the economy and to hold down wage increases at home not only will worsen the difficulty, but will result in unfair treatment of the major segments of the American population."

Canada Sets Up Bargaining Study

Ottawa, Ont.—A. D. P. Heeney, former Canadian ambassador to the United States and a long-time civil servant, has been named chairman of a special committee charged with planning machinery for collective bargaining between the government and its civil service.

Prime Minister Lester Pearson, in announcing the appointment, reaffirmed the government's determination to establish what he called "an appropriate form of collective bargaining and arbitration." The committee will work with civil service employe groups in developing its program.

The government has long consulted civil service organizations on wages and working conditions. However, the employes want the right to bargain collectively, and have agreed to renounce the right to strike for arbitration of disputes and grievances.

Federal Action Urged To Avert '64 Recession

Unity House, Pa.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council declared that "present economic trends are pointed toward a recession in 1964" unless decisive government action is taken to stimulate the economy.

Analyzing the nation's economic outlook as of mid-1963, the council declared that government action to increase sales, production and employment "could change the present course" and prevent a recession next year.

It called for a "substantial tax cut" concentrated among moderate and low income taxpayers as "essential" to boost buying power, sales and jobs.

At a press conference, federation Pres. George Meany said he was "very much concerned about the continuing high unemployment rate" which, he pointed out, has been above 5 percent for nearly six years.

"There are disturbing indications that things may get worse in 1964," he added.

The council stressed that a $2.1 billion tax cut for corporations when weighed against proposed tax cuts for individuals "is indefensible."

The council pointed out that last year corporations got a $2 billion tax cut while individuals received nothing.

The council read the economic situation this way:

- New orders for hard goods placed with manufacturers have been declining.
- The steel output has dropped sharply since May and there is no sign of an upturn.
- Retail sales have remained at the same rate for eight months with no indication of an increase in the making.
- Installment credit has been at a peak in recent months and will probably level off or weaken in the months ahead.
- Housing starts have remained at about the same level for many months.
- Investment in new plant and equipment is rising and will probably continue to increase through the end of 1963. Industry is now operating at only 85 percent of capacity and new installations will add 4 percent this year, indicating an increase in idle capacity unless there is a rise in sales.

The council called on the House Ways & Means Committee before winding up its tax writing sessions to eliminate the present dividend credit.

"There is no excuse for this kind of windfall for unearned income," it said.

The council re-emphasized its strong belief that increased federal expenditures for public works are needed to supplement the right kind of tax cut.

Md.-D. C. Council Elects C. A. Della

Charles A. Della, a member of the Steelworkers and secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-District of Columbia AFL-CIO since its formation in 1957, was elected president at the annual convention in Washington.

Della defeated Woodrow F. Strong, president of Meat Cutters Local 555, Washington, who had headed the area organization since 1958, by a vote of 672 to 476. Elected without opposition to succeed Della as secretary-treasurer was William B. Scheffel of Fire Fighters Local 734, Baltimore.

Council Steps Up Labor Rights Drive

Racial Crisis, Jobs Dominate Sessions

(Continued from Page 1)

be approved by the conventions of both unions and by referendums of the memberships of those unions.

Meany also announced the appointment of Alexander Barkan as director of the Committee on Political Education. Barkan has been acting director since the death of James L. McDevitt earlier this year.

The council also:

- Officially kicked off labor's campaign for the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation by presenting it a check for $250,000 representing advance gifts from eight international unions. (See story Page 4.)

Approved a report by Meany on the financing of the Solidarity Fund of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions which would set an annual budget of $1.75 million a year with the AFL-CIO's share $716,000.

Mourned the death of Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), "a warm, abiding friend of labor," and declared he would receive posthumously the Murray-Green Award for "great services to the cause of humanity."

- Voted $25,000 in support of the Woodworkers and Sawmill Workers strike on the West Coast and called on all affiliates to support their 10,000 strikers. A tentative agreement for settling the dispute was reached next day. (See story this page.)
- Voted $5,000 to aid the Bookbinders and other printing trades unions which have been on strike since last March against Kingsport Press, Kingsport, Tenn. About 1,600 workers are involved in the long dispute.
- Voted $10,000 to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to carry on its work as a legislative coordinating and clearing house operation in Washington. Negro, labor and civil rights groups are represented in the conference.
- Named William J. Farson, executive vice president of the Newspaper Guild, and Anthony J. DeAndrade, president of the Printing Pressmen, as AFL-CIO fraternal delegates to the British Trades Union Congress convention in September in Brighton, England.

Tariff Unit Assailed On Trade Act Policy

Unity House, Pa.—The U.S. Tariff Commission's "rigidly technical interpretations" of the Trade Expansion Act "are preventing workers from receiving the benefits of the adjustment assistance program," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

Unless there is some relief from these "narrow interpretations," the council warned, the AFL-CIO "will be compelled to insist on amendment of the statute" to prevent future misinterpretations of congressional intent "on administrative avoidance of adjustment assistance to workers."

The Trade Expansion Act, passed last year with AFL-CIO support, provided for assistance to workers and businesses adversely affected by increased imports resulting from government trade decisions. This included extended unemployment benefits, retraining, relocation and other aid.

Three AFL-CIO unions have petitioned for adjustment assistance under these provisions on the basis that increased imports have caused unemployment. In all three cases the Tariff Commission rejected the plea.

"In no case thus far has the commission indicated a desire to implement the new trade program's provision of adjustment assistance for workers," the council declared.

Aid for workers injured by the trade program is "an essential and inseparable part of the government's trade expansion effort," the council said. Failure to keep the promise of adjustment assistance can destroy "the popular support that is needed" for the program, it warned.

The trade program can be successful, the council added, "only if American workers are provided with an adequate opportunity to receive adjustment assistance when they are adversely affected by increased imports."

The AFL-CIO unions which carried trade injury cases to the Tariff Commission and were turned down are the Steelworkers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Textile Workers Union of America. The cases involved transistor radios, iron ore and cotton sheeting.

MEETING THE PRESS at the AFL-CIO Executive Council gathering at Unity House, Pa., was a regular occurrence for Pres. George Meany. He is shown with Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack, left, and Robert Wentworth, assistant director, right.

Senate Urged to Ratify Limited Test Ban Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

world peace and effective disarmament through strict inspection and control," the council declared.

The statement called on the U.S. government to "reject unequivocally" any notification by the Soviets that its East German regime has acceded to the test-ban treaty." Any arrangement, understanding or pact "which would bring the slightest diplomatic stature or legitimacy to this Soviet-imposed [East German] regime would fatally hurt German democracy and the prospects for German national unity in freedom."

The council "heartily" supported Pres. Kennedy's plea for continued vigilance, national strength and greater Atlantic unity "as the best guarantee for world peace and freedom." It noted that Moscow would never have accepted the test-ban treaty if the U.S. were weak and the Soviet needs to "resort to tactical changes in its drive for world conquest and domination."

These factors, "not any belated nobility of motives or conversion to the cause of peace have led Khrushchev to accept the limited nuclear test-ban treaty," the council declared.

On Moscow's proposal for a nonaggression pact between NATO and the Soviet bloc, the council declared such an agreement would sanctify "the fruits and loot of Soviet conquests of yesterday" and perpetuate the division of Germany. It added: "The Soviet rulers have done nothing yet to qualify them for being accepted by us as sincere partners for peace."

Two Major Strikes Supported by Council

Unity House, Pa.—Support for striking lumber workers on the Pacific Coast and for Kingsport Press workers, on strike since March at a big Tennessee book-printing plant, has been voted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The council voted $25,000 to aid almost 10,000 members of the Woodworkers and Carpenters, out since June 6 in contract disputes with the U.S. Plywood Corp. and the St. Regis Paper Co., and since early July at 10 locations of the big Georgia-Pacific Co.

Pres. George Meany said the council heard IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung report on the strike, which at its high point involved some 29,000 workers in California, Oregon and Washington. After the council action, settlement was reached for most of the strikers.

The Auto Workers, in a separate action, also made a $25,000 contribution to the strikers.

The Executive Council voted also to appropriate $5,000 for members of five unions on strike at Kingsport, Tenn., since Mar. 11 over inadequate wages at the plant of the nation's largest hardbook printer. The unions are the Bookbinders, Printing Pressmen, Typographers, Stereotypers and Machinists.

The employer has rejected all union settlement offers and also turned down proposals by an arbiter suggested by management itself. More than 1,600 workers are out in Kingsport, where picket lines have been maintained for more than five months.

Meany said AFL-CIO affiliates will be asked to come individually to the support of the strikers.

Stricter Stock Exchange Controls Proposed to Safeguard Investors

Greater government regulation of the nation's stock exchanges and the over-the-counter securities market to protect investors highlighted proposals in the third and final report of a special staff study submitted to the Securities & Exchange Commission.

The study declared that the New York Stock Exchange's self-regulation approach has been "seriously unsatisfactory" in some areas while providing "constructive leadership" in others.

Among the various regulatory problems involved, the study singled out for severe criticism the so-called "front-end load" contractual mutual fund plans. It recommended that Congress look into the situation in terms of possibly outlawing this type of plan.

These plans, the study declared, "encourage high-pressure selling." Because salesmen get their full commission from the initial 13 payments, there is "a strong incentive to sell these plans regardless of the circumstances of the purchaser in order to realize commissions," it said.

There are 50 contractual mutual fund plans registered with the SEC. They generally operate by investors agreeing to put in anywhere from $25 to $100 per month for 10 years. More than half the first year's payments are used to pay the salesman's commission and are not invested in the fund shares.

If an investor cancels the plan or skips a payment allowing the plan to lapse he suffers a sharp loss. The study notes that one-sixth of all investors paid a 50 percent sales charge and another one-sixth paid commissions of more than 18 percent. The maximum commission allowed by the Investment Company Act is 9 percent.

The latest figures available indicate that more than 1 million contractual plans are in force. The value of the mutual fund shares purchased through these plans was about $2.3 billion.

Rubber Workers Plan Jobless Benefits Test

Akron, O.—Rubber Workers Pres. George Burdon has announced that the union will file a test case challenging a ruling by the Ohio Unemployment Compensation Board that denied benefits to workers involuntarily retired because of age.

Labor Pays Last Homage To Kefauver

Unity House, Pa.—"Estes Kefauver was a true humanitarian, a firm disciple of democracy, a defender of consumer interests and a warm and abiding friend of labor."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, in a statement on the death of the Tennessee senator, declared that the labor movement is "poorer because of his sad and untimely death."

Noting that last February it had chosen Kefauver to receive the AFL-CIO's Murray-Green Award for his "great services to the cause of humanity," the council resolved that the award will be given posthumously. It also assigned Stanton Smith, coordinator of AFL-CIO state and city central bodies, who worked and served with Kefauver in many battles for the public good in Tennessee and the nation, to represent it at the funeral services.

The AFL-CIO's "great admiration, our deep sense of gratitude and our overwhelming sorrow," the council said, will be spread on the records of the federation, and transmitted to Kefauver's family and to Congress.

ICFTU Fund Stabilized By Council

Unity House, Pa.—The Solidarity Fund of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has been put on a permanent financial basis with an annual budget of $1,750,000 of which the AFL-CIO's share will be $716,000, Pres. George Meany reported to the Executive Council.

The fund, which operates on a voluntary contributions basis, has been financed since 1958 through three-year campaigns with target goals. In the 1958-60 drive, the AFL-CIO contributed $1 million a year; in 1961 the federation's contribution was $750,000, in 1962-63 it rose to $1.225 million each year. The $716,000 will start in 1964.

The new permanent budget, Meany said, is based on actual annual expenditures of the fund, which is used to carry on ICFTU work in helping set up free trade unions in underdeveloped areas and new nations.

Meany, chairman of the Solidarity Fund, told the council that the new financing arrangements had been worked out at a meeting of the fund committee in Geneva last month. In addition to the fund contribution, the AFL-CIO pays annual per capita dues, bringing the total payments to the ICFTU to $1.1 million.

Meany reported that the British Trades Union Congress, which dropped out of Solidarity Fund operations a few years ago, has rejoined and will resume contributions.

GBBA, Employers Outlaw Discrimination

Philadelphia—An agreement outlawing discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin has been signed by the Glass Bottle Blowers and the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, which represents 28 leading manufacturers.

The agreement was initiated by GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton and was signed by him and J. Thomas Rimer, institute labor relations director. It reinforces a tradition of non-discrimination.

FOURTH GRADUATING CLASS of the American Institute for Free Labor Development meets in the lobby of the AFL-CIO building before commencement program at which Pres. George Meany presented diplomas. The class of 23 Spanish-speaking trainees and 15 English-speaking students, all from Latin America and the Caribbean islands, took intensive training in a joint project designed to help develop democratic trade unions. Graduates later toured industrial plants in Cleveland, will return soon to their own lands for on-the-job training.

New Training Centers Planned By Growing Free Labor Institute

Unity House, Pa.—Twelve institutes to train Latin American and Caribbean trade union leaders will be in operation by 1964 with a school for advanced studies in Washington, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced.

The institutes, created by the American Institute for Free Labor Development, will be working also through a Social Projects Dept. in the planning and initiation of $300 million of projects involving Latin American trade unions under the Alliance for Progress program.

Meany declared that the Executive Council had received a complete report on AIFLD progress from Federation Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who serves as the organization's secretary-treasurer, highlighting the growth and expansion of its activities.

Jointly Financed

The institute is financed by the AFL-CIO and a group of American businessmen and by the government through grants under the Alliance for Progress program. Meany is president of the AIFLD, businessman J. Peter Grace is chairman of the board, and Serafino Romualdi, on leave from the AFL-CIO, is executive director.

The organization currently has nine schools in operation that have graduated over 700 Latin American and Caribbean trade union leaders in three-month sessions. The graduates return to their countries to continue for nine months full-time internships with the labor movements.

The expansion to 12 schools by the end of the year will be accompanied by conversion of the Washington school into an institute for advanced studies to give even greater depth and background to the future leaders of the Latin American unions.

Projects Under Way

The Social Projects Dept., working with the Agency for International Development on housing, credit union, consumer cooperative and other projects involving unions, is currently working on projects costing when completed about $300 million. The first of these projects, a housing development for workers in Honduras, will be dedicated shortly and a large housing development in Mexico City is in the advanced planning stage.

Meany said the social projects work is "going along very well" and that it will be a major factor in making the Alliance for Progress meaningful and effective.

He said the AIFLD currently is operating on a budget of about $1 million a year.

Free Labor Institute Graduates 38 Students

More than 100 notables representing American labor, the government and the diplomatic corps were in the audience when AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany gave diplomas to 38 graduates of the fourth graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development and read a congratulatory message to the graduates from Pres. Kennedy.

Two student speakers, chosen by the class, responded with dramatic speeches of appreciation for labor's helping hand to workers below the U.S. border.

Patrick O. E. Hamilton of British Guiana, speaking for 15 English-language trainees, expressed "sincere appreciation to the free labor movement" for its aid to the Guiana Trades Union Congress in its crucial general strike protesting a government attempt to impose rigid controls.

Classroom lessons and field trips, he said, "have served as a stimulus" to those from the Caribbean area in their "struggle for social justice and a better life."

Graduate Alfredo Enrique Carvajalino Lobo of Colombia, speaking for 23 Spanish-language trainees, said he foresees the "concept of a vigorous Pan-Americanism among the workers of America" which will "enable our great international organizations to carry on their fight against every brand of totalitarianism."

In his luncheon speech Meany likened the institute's development, beginning with an idea proposed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, to that of the Intl. Labor Organization, which was conceived by the late Pres. Samuel Gompers of the former AFL and has had four decades of growth.

Beirne, who was toastmaster, advised the graduates that "if each of you thoroughly trains just two more unionists," the fourth class will have resulted in more than 100 fighters for democracy.

Other speakers included Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver, Argentine Ambassador Roberto T. Alemann and Jamaican Ambassador Sir Neville Ashenheim.

Weaver assured the class that the success or failure of the Alliance for Progress program rests with the students, and others like them. Alemann said all who desire enduring peace and government by law must walk together in wiping out poverty, hunger, illiteracy and the denial of freedom. Sir Neville said that labor and management, working together, can help to keep the free world free and united.

Court Refuses Ban on Pickets

Jamestown, N. Y.—U.S. District Court Judge John O. Henderson of Buffalo has rejected a petition by the National Labor Relations Board for an injunction barring further picketing by the Furniture Workers at the struck Jamestown Sterling Corp. here.

The NLRB had sought the injunction pending a hearing set for Aug. 28 on charges by the company that the union is engaging in illegal organizational picketing. Henderson ruled, however, that the board had failed to establish that the picketing was for illegal organizational purposes.

The Aug. 28 hearing also is expected to focus on UFWA challenges to a decertification election at the plant last Mar. 5 in which the union lost representation rights by a vote of 90 to 25.

Meany Asks 'Unstinting Support':

Eleanor Roosevelt Fund Drive Opens

Unity House, Pa.—The AFL-CIO officially kicked off labor's campaign for the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation by presenting the organization a check for $250,000.

The money represents advance gifts from eight international unions and signaled the opening of an all-out campaign to have every AFL-CIO member contribute one hour's pay or $1 to the foundation.

Pres. George Meany told reporters that the check had been presented to Philip Klutznick, campaign chairman for the foundation. Klutznick reported on the progress of the foundation's campaign to the council, along with Hyman Bookbinder, foundation director.

Originally Adlai Stevenson, foundation chairman, was scheduled to meet with the council but attendance at the funeral of the late Sen. Estes Kefauver made it necessary for him to cancel the trip.

At its mid-winter meeting in February the Executive Council pledged labor's full support to the foundation campaign and created the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund committee with Vice President Joseph D. Keenan as chairman.

To support this committee in its campaign to raise funds from affiliates, Meany has written the officers of all AFL-CIO affiliates, state and local central bodies and directly affiliated unions stressing that the drive is "a major undertaking" of the federation.

Single Campaign

Meany called for "wholehearted, unstinting support" for the Keenan committee. There will be only one campaign for the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund, he wrote, and he stressed that the standard for contributions would be one hour's pay or $1 per member.

Eleanor Roosevelt, Meany wrote, "for almost 60 years of her tireless life was identified with the struggles and aspirations of working people." She was, he added, "one of the greatest humanitarians of our time."

The foundation was chartered by Congress on Apr. 23, 1963, at the request of Pres. Kennedy, members of the Roosevelt family and a group of national leaders headed by Stevenson. The trustees of the foundation include Meany, Keenan and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and David Dubinsky. The target of the campaign is a $25 million fund to carry out the major interests of Mrs. Roosevelt.

The foundation has undertaken commitments for a series of cancer research projects and international cancer fellowships, an enlarged school for underprivileged, emotionally disturbed boys and support for organizations backing the work of the United Nations.

The foundation is currently studying other programs and projects.

The AFL-CIO's memorial fund committee, headed by Keenan, includes Meany, Reuther, Dubinsky and Vice Presidents Lee W. Minton, Joseph Curran, Paul Hall, A. J. Hayes, David J. McDonald, Jacob S. Potofsky and Richard F. Walsh.

Factory Job Rise Less Than Normal

The hiring rate of factory production workers rose from 39 per 1,000 in May to 47 in June, a sizeable increase but smaller than the usual rate of summer pickup in jobs, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Factory hiring stayed below the level of June 1962 to continue an over-the-year trend which began in the last quarter of 1962. Factory layoffs declined seasonally during June from 15 to 13 per 1,000 employes and the layoff rate stayed at a comparatively low level as it has since February.

The quit rate edged down from 14 to 13 per 1,000 in June, when a small increase normally is anticipated, according to the BLS monthly report on labor turnover.

Al Barkan Appointed New COPE Director

Unity House, Pa.—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced the appointment of Alexander Barkan as director of the federation's Committee on Political Education.

Barkan had been serving as acting COPE director since the death of his predecessor, James L. McDevitt, last Mar. 19. He had been deputy director of the committee since Feb. 1, 1957, and before that was assistant director from the time of the AFL-CIO merger, Dec. 5, 1955.

ALEXANDER BARKAN
Named COPE Director

A 54-year-old native of Bayonne, N.J., Barkan taught at Bayonne High School for four years following his graduation from the University of Chicago in 1933.

Former Textile Organizer

In 1937 he became an organizer for the Textile Workers Organizing Committee, forerunner of the TWUA, and later was named a sub-regional director.

He joined the Navy in 1942 and earned 15 battle stars during three years of World War II service, much of it on the battleship Alabama. Following his discharge in 1945, he became veterans director for the former CIO Community Services Committee. A year later, he returned to New Jersey as executive secretary of the State Industrial Union Council. He rejoined the TWUA staff in 1948 as political action director, a post he held until his COPE appointment with the merged federation.

Barkan is married, has two daughters and lives in Bethesda, Md.

Cooperation Pays Off:

30.5c Wage Package Ends Timber Strike

Portland, Ore.—Joint strike action by two unions of timber workers won wage increases of 30.5 cents an hour in new three-year contracts constituting what the unions called their biggest victory.

Wood and lumber workers who struck June 6 against two members of the industry's "Big Six" employers will start returning to work Aug. 19 at all Big Six operations if the new pacts are ratified in a referendum vote due for completion Aug. 18.

Already ratified are new contracts between the two unions—the Woodworkers and the Lumber & Sawmill Workers, affiliated with the Carpenters—and the Georgia-Pacific Co., big independent firm. Four other independents, who withdrew from the Timber Operators' Council, also came to terms on a similar 30.5-cent package of benefits.

The Big Six operators are the St. Regis Paper Co. and the U.S. Plywood Co.—both struck in June—and the Weyerhaeuser Co., Crown Zellerbach Corp., Intl. Paper Co. and Ravonier, Inc., which locked out their employes when the strike started but recalled them to work recently.

Of the 29,000 workers affected at the peak point in the strike-lockout, an estimated 4,000 stayed on strike while negotiations continued at scattered points. These included some 2,500 St. Regis employes at Libby, Mont., and Klickitat, Wash., and employes of several TOC operations in southern Oregon.

Settlements with most operators along the lines of the "pattern" are expected shortly.

The unions credited their victory to effective joint cooperation. It was the first time since the Woodworkers broke away from the Carpenters 26 years ago that joint negotiations had been achieved, according to spokesmen for both unions.

Agreement was reached a day after the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted a $25,000 contribution to the strikers. The Auto Workers also contributed $25,000.

The settlement provides wage boosts of 15 cents an hour this year, another 6 cents next year, and an additional 6 cents in 1965; a wage adjustment averaging 2 cents an hour for skilled worker classifications; and a formula under which travel time will be paid to loggers at an additional cost of 1.5 cents an hour.

To settle a major point of dispute—the demand of the employers for an end to overtime for Saturday or Sunday work—the new pacts provide that there shall be no discrimination against workers who refuse to work overtime, and no concerted action by either party to use overtime as a bargaining "weapon." The companies agreed to drop demands for other changes in the hours-of-labor sections of the contracts.

Wage Increases Settle 3-Week Hatters Strike

New York—A three-week strike at two plants of the Hat Corp. of America has been settled with "substantial" wage increases and other contract improvements, the Hatters announced.

The chief objective of the strikes—upgrading of wages—was met by an increase of 40 cents an hour over a three-year period for 700 workers at the Winchester, Tenn., plant and a 25-cent boost at Sunbury, Pa., where 400 are employed.

Negotiating committees from the two plants met here with company officials, approved the settlements, and recommended ratification, Pres. Alex Rose said.

New terms at Winchester include wage hikes of 15 cents the first year, 15 cents the second and 10 cents in the third year of the contract. Management also agreed to contribute 3 percent of payroll into a pension fund in the third contract year and to pay one-half of 1 percent more into the existing welfare fund.

An additional paid holiday, improved vacation fund payments, higher minimum scales and similar benefits help bring Winchester standards up to those in the rest of the industry.

In Sunbury, where wages had been higher than in Winchester, the rates will be raised by 10 cents the first year and by 7.5 cents for each of the next two years. Also added was a third week's vacation after 10 years, two more paid holidays and one-half of 1 percent additional toward the welfare fund.

The union obtained a commitment from the firm not to divert work from one plant to another but to maintain stable work conditions and job security in all locations, including one in Bethel, Conn. Rose said the successful outcome of the strike was due to the militancy and union-mindedness of strikers.

Strike-Lost Time Low in California

San Francisco—Work time lost because of strikes in California in the first six months of 1963 was the lowest for any comparable period since World War II. Total workers involved were 18,000, well below the average for the first decade.

Ernest B. Webb, state director of industrial relations, said lost time totaled 260,000 days during the January-June half-year as against 1.87 million lost days a year ago and nearly 3.25 million days, the postwar high, in 1952's first half.

STUDENTS at the Industrial Engineering Institute sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the University of Wisconsin, all full-time union officers or staff representatives, take a time study on a lathe operation, putting into practice lessons learned in class.

Union Representatives Explore Industrial Engineer Techniques

Sixty-two union representatives, picked by their international unions for special training in time study, job evaluation and synthetic work measurement systems, have completed a two-week program at the University of Wisconsin—site of the sixth annual Union Industrial Engineering Institutes.

The summer session, sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and the university's School for Workers, was designed to help full-time union representatives deal with industrial relations problems from the viewpoint of better protecting the interests of workers.

Students from 15 Unions

This year's student body came from 15 unions. The faculty included seven industrial engineering specialists from the trade union movement and two instructors from the School for Workers. The institutes were directed by Bert Gottlieb, the AFL-CIO's industrial engineer, and Norris Tibbets of the School for Workers.

As in past years, the emphasis was on practical application of classroom theory. For example:

- Time study students worked with stop watches and clipboards in the university's machine shop as well as in classrooms.
- Job evaluation trainees brought a rate adjustment grievance to mock arbitration before a professional arbitrator, Dr. Reed Tripp, an economics professor at the university. He handed down a decision and explained his reasoning.
- Contract language dealing with various synthetic work measurement systems was discussed and evaluated in this advanced course.

The largest contingent of students came from the Molders, who sent 15 officers and representatives as part of the union's long-term program of training all staff members in industrial engineering techniques.

Other students—the 62 attending marked a record number for the institute—came from the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Machinists, Steelworkers, Allied Industrial Workers, Boot & Shoe Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Pulp-Sulphite Workers, Communications Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Auto Workers, Bookbinders, Boilermakers, and Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Faculty members, in addition to Gottlieb and Tibbetts, were: Kermit K. Mead and Fred Simon, Auto Workers; Clem Lewis, Utility Workers; Charles Hall, AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Don Wasserman, Machinists; William Kuhl, Boiler Makers, and George Hagglund of the School for Workers.

All of the instructors from the trade union movement were loaned by their organizations as part of the cooperative sponsorship of the institutes.

The graduation ceremony for the institutes heard Stanley Ruttenberg, economic adviser to the Secretary of Labor and former director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

IUE Opens Bargaining With GE, Westinghouse

Negotiations between the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and two major electrical equipment manufacturers—the General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp.—have begun with the presentation of union proposals for substantial wage increases and improved job security for more than 100,000 employes of the two firms.

Meetings with GE management in New York City opened with a call by IUE Pres. James B. Carey for an "amicable settlement" well in advance of the Sept. 9 contract expiration date. The union, representing more than 70,000 workers in 100 GE plants, has proposed major contract improvements in keeping with the "glowing" profit position of the industry's leading corporation.

The agreement at Westinghouse expires Oct. 15. At meetings in Pittsburgh, IUE negotiators proposed a job protection plan, limiting the contracting-out of work during layoffs, restricting overtime except in emergencies, giving the worker the right to move with his job, setting up a joint labor-management committee on automation, and making other improvements in line with the firm's "comfortable financial situation."

After GE contract negotiations three years ago the IUE charged, and a National Labor Relations Board examiner upheld its claim, that GE failed to bargain in good faith in that it "caused and prolonged" a 20-day strike by forcing IUE eventually to accept its "take-it-or-leave-it" contract offer.

The union says a possible roadblock to an early GE settlement this year is management's "present insistence" that arbitration be severely restricted.

Oklahoma 'Work' Group Told to Verify Petitions

Oklahoma City—Sponsors of a so-called "right-to-work" initiative petition have been ordered by an Oklahoma Supreme Court referee to answer charges that nearly half of the 212,000 signatures submitted are invalid and should be thrown out.

The "work" group, which is seeking a referendum on its proposal to write a ban on union shop agreements into the state constitution, moved to dismiss the challenge filed by a citizens' committee including leaders of the State AFL-CIO.

Referee Marian Opala rejected the motion. He then went on to direct attorneys for the petition circulators to produce evidence in court that the challenged signatures are, in fact, valid.

He asked for an affirmative showing of proof, on a county-by-county basis, that names challenged on grounds of forgery, duplication of signatures, non-registered voters and other irregularities meet the provisions of the state's initiative petition statute.

In earlier hearings, opponents challenged 104,806 names—more than enough to disqualify the petition if the challenges are upheld. Of these, 70,817 names were challenged as being those of persons who are not registered to vote.

William C. Kessler, attorney for the group opposing a "right-to-work" law, said many of the signatures turned in were "flagrantly improper."

He cited sworn testimony at the hearing by a nursing home operator who admitted that he had signed the name of many of his patients to the petition after having been told that it was "all right" for him to do so.

The battle over the validity of the petition has been going on for more than a year. The petition campaign was launched by "right-to-work" forces after the legislature had killed bills to impose a compulsory open shop or submit the issue to referendum.

First 35-Hour Week Gained in Manitoba

Winnipeg, Man.—The first 35-hour week in Manitoba is provided in a new contract covering some 250 members of Fur Workers Local 91F of the Meat Cutters and the Furriers Guild of Canada.

The shorter workweek agreement replaces a 37.5-hour week clause in the previous contract. It also raises wages by $2 a week retroactive to June 1 and again on June 1, 1965.

Political Confrontation

THE 1964 CONGRESSIONAL elections may witness one of the most direct confrontations between liberal and conservative forces since the days of the New Deal.

Liberal members of Congress, especially the group of liberal senators elected in 1958, face a sharp challenge from forces ranging from the radical right John Birch Society and its allies to the financially potent political action operations of the American Medical Association and the new group recently unveiled by the National Association of Manufacturers—the Business-Industry Political Action Committee.

The emergence of the ultra-conservative right wing in the 1962 elections was essentially a dry run. Although pretty thoroughly rejected in the few direct contests where there were identifiable candidates, the right wing has increased its activities in preparation for the 1964 contests.

It has marshaled its forces for an attempted take-over of existing Republican Party organizations in some states and has sought to convert southern Dixiecrats into an operating election-day coalition against the campaign to wipe discrimination from the face of the nation.

The right wing is making a direct bid also to nominate a conservative GOP presidential candidate to give national leadership to the drive to elect rightist senators and congressmen.

There is wide agreement that the right wing is well financed and staffed and in alliance with the various anti-liberal business groups will probably make one of its strongest bids for power next year.

★ ★ ★

THE OFFICIAL EMERGENCE of the Business-Industry Political Action Committee (BIPAC) has been long in the coming. Business and industrial groups have been extremely active in presidential and congressional elections for decades. They have helped finance the campaigns of candidates favorable to their views and have had a key voice in the selection of presidential candidates, usually on the Republican ticket.

The creation of an official political action group dedicated to the support of conservative candidates brings out into the open, to an extent, the historic political operations of the business-industry community. And this is all to the good because it is important that the voters have a clear idea of not only what a candidate stands for but which groups are actively supporting his election.

Thus organized labor, which has actively and openly worked for election of liberal and progressive candidates, will face a determined conservative drive in the tough 1964 races. Labor's evaluation of the issues, its assessment of the candidates, its review of the voting records will be countered and challenged by the right wingers and the conservatives.

This is the time, then, for the basic spadework that produces election day victories—the voter registration drives, contributions to COPE, participation in the selection of candidates so that voters in all districts and states have a real choice and the issues are brought into focus clearly and sharply.

Now, 15 months before the critical 1964 elections, is the time to prepare for a showdown with the right-wing, conservative challenge on the future course of American political life.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:

John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, August 17, 1963 No. 33

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'It's Later Than You Think'

Engineer Urges Employers:

If You're Going to Automate, Spare a Thought for Workers

Here is a thoughtful analysis by an automation engineer that first appeared in Computers and Automation for September 1962 and was reprinted by the Executive, published by the Columbia University Graduate School of Business. Entitled "Let's Be Honest About Automation," it was written by William B. Floyd of Bridge, Inc.

AS AN ENGINEER, I spend my time, as do many other engineers, trying to devise new methods, new systems, and new machines to "save labor." I believe in what we are doing. That is, I know, as everyone does, that what we are doing is "socially useful." But the "good of society" is a euphemism indeed to the man who is left without a cash income because it is his labor that has been saved.

We cannot feel that our job is done, or well done, until we can find practical ways to translate the ultimate, social benefit of automation into immediate, tangible benefit to everyone immediately concerned.

It is to the advantage of stockholders and to lenders generally for the business in which they have invested to operate at as low costs and at as high profits as possible. This means greater efficiency in all cases and automation in some. Greater efficiency is also to management's advantage.

However, if we wish to be entirely honest, efficiency is almost never to the immediate advantage of the workmen in an organization or to labor leaders. Short of some rather intangible considerations, the advantage of the people working in an organization (in many countries) lies in securing the highest wages and the greatest security, for the least time and the least effort, that they can possibly obtain, by collective bargaining or in any other way. Labor leaders share these aims, plus the aim of maximum total employment and hence the maximum number of dues-paying members.

We do not blame stockholders and managers for striving for their maximum advantage. That is the principle on which our free enterprise system is based. In the same spirit, we can scarcely blame workmen or labor leaders for striving for their maximum advantage.

Looked at from their point of view, why should the people working in a company go out of their way to increase efficiency, stop featherbedding, or make automatic equipment work when they have nothing immediate and tangible to gain and may thereby lose their own jobs or those of their fellows? What does a man owe to an organization to which he does not belong?

Applied to automation, belonging means being told in advance what is being planned and how those affected will be retrained for higher-paying positions, or will be rewarded with shorter hours, or will receive pay increases, as their share of the savings from automation.

BELONGING MEANS that no one is laid off in periods of recession or when automatic equipment is installed. Lower income in a recession may force lower pay, but proportionately for all, including management and stockholders. . . .

The real problem of automation, if we wish to be entirely honest, is that it accentuates basic weaknesses in the way our economy is presently organized. It calls attention to two such weaknesses: first, that our system is not yet recession-proof, and second, that not all of the people in most organizations have a sense of belonging.

The effects of automation in a period of business expansion are rarely serious. When jobs are plentiful, the man who is fired because machines have taken over his job may not be particularly distressed. He merely steps out into another job, possibly a better one. But in a recession or in a depressed area the story is quite different when a man is laid off coincident with the installation of automatic equipment.

How to prevent recessions is a presumably solvable but as yet unsolved problem. Until it is solved, we might say that during a period of recession we should declare a moratorium on automation.

This may be too simple an answer . . . A moratorium on automation, if it could be enforced, would mean wholesale layoffs of the people who build automatic machines. Their number probably is greater than the number of people who would be laid off as a result of installing the machines. Automation involves a capital expenditure, and according to some economic theories, greater capital expenditures are precisely what we need to pull out of a recession.

Thus, very likely, automation will continue to be a whipping boy until we do find some way to avoid recessions and to maintain more job opportunities than there are people to fill them.

Morgan Says:

Chicago Pilot Program Eases High School Dropout Problem

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

PRESIDENT KENNEDY chose to open [a recent] news conference with an urgent lecture about the seriousness of high school dropouts. More than a million youngsters, he said, would fail to stick out their education by the time summer vacation rolls around next year, including 400,000 who won't even show up for classes this September.

Morgan

A vicious circle is revolving here with dizzyingly dangerous consequences to the American society. The dropout of today is the delinquent of tomorrow if he—or she—hasn't already become one. At the same time job opportunities for people without a high school education are shrinking although opportunities for those educated to develop technical and other special skills are increasing. This further isolates the dropout as an unproductive dreg in his community—unless he can be "reached" and given training that will make him useful.

In 1961 Congress approved an Administration plan to spend not more than $10 million a year for two years on pilot projects in search of ways to combat juvenile delinquency. Mayors and other officials of cities involved in this experiment will reveal their various findings on the problem as witnesses before a Senate Labor subcommittee headed by one of the most energetic liberals in Congress, Pennsylvania's Democratic Sen. Joseph Clark, himself a former mayor of Philadelphia.

The subcommittee already has before it Clark's bill to extend the pilot project another three years and it has begun hearings to explore the effects of idle youth on society—it being the theory of the senator and many other authorities that unemployment, delinquency and dropouts are directly related problems. The race question is also deeply involved in this whole tangled picture, with its denial of equal educational, job and other opportunities to Negroes and other minorities.

The first witness, Frederick W. Englund, vice president of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. of Chicago, which operates a chain of department stores and restaurants in northern Illinois employing 10,000 people, related his firm's experience with a project known as the Double EE program—employment and education for high school dropouts.

Two years ago Carson had a shortage of help. The Chicago school board persuaded the company to hire dropouts. This involved a special training operation. It was partially financed by a one-year $50,000 Ford Foundation grant for teachers' salaries and special materials. The first 59 recruits for Double EE went to school two days a week, worked the other three. Beginning pay was $1 an hour. Half the class requested to work on their days off. They not only learned clerical or sales jobs, they were taught something meaningful about city government, the law, a citizen's rights and responsibilities.

But at Carson's a new atmosphere was added. Their jobs were not artificial. They were wanted. Lessons were related to work. College-trained junior executives were assigned to them as big brothers and big sisters to advise them and help give them the feeling they "belonged."

WHAT HAPPENED? Englund cited John B., age 16, from a middle class white family, above average intelligence, bored because school gave no outlet for his artistic talent. Now he's in Carson, Pirie, Scott's window display department, has nearly doubled his wage, resumed high school and will graduate this fall.

Then there was Susan L., 17, Negro, daughter of a prostitute, called "the dunce" in school which she quit because she had no friends. Her grandmother beat her. She had a chip on her shoulder, a low IQ but basically a pleasant personality. She made an excellent sales girl and has now left Carson's for a better job.

Harold P. was a teen-age gang leader. He came to Carson's from lower middle class surroundings with a high IQ. He was started in the stock department, now has a semi-supervisory job and is going to night school because he wants to be president of the company.

Carson's had dropouts drop out too but Double EE has expanded with school board support. Englund conceded candidly this was no company charity operation. Seven and a half million such ill-educated, under-equipped youngsters will join the U.S. work force this decade, he said, and they represent a "social and economic loss to every citizen and taxpayer" and a loss to business as consumers. When Clark asked if he had any advice for the subcommittee, Englund replied: get more business leaders involved with the problem. The rest of us might lend a hand too.

Washington Reports:

Shriver Terms South America Major Challenge to Peace Corps

SOUTH AMERICA presents an important challenge for the Peace Corps, according to Robert Sargent Shriver, director.

Shriver, interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on nearly 700 radio stations, declared:

"There is a tremendous job ahead in South America, because I don't think we can have a profitable and safe North America without a profitable and safe South America. For too long we have neglected our responsibilities and opportunities in Latin America. I hope the Peace Corps will be working there as long as there is a need for the security of the United States."

The Peace Corps director said that Congress has been asked for an $108 million appropriation to send 12,000 to 13,000 volunteers overseas. This represents an expansion of 2,000 to 3,000, he said, and will mean that the number of countries aided can be increased from 47 to 51.

"Right now we don't want to go above 50 to 55 countries, hoping to do an excellent job in them rather than to go everywhere," said Shriver.

The director said he believes that the Peace Corps, especially since it gets directly to the people in the back country, with the volunteers living with the people and talking their language, is representing the U.S. abroad more effectively than ever before.

THEY ARE a new breed, a new kind of American," he asserted. "They go overseas without diplomatic privileges or immunities, without a big salary, less than a private in the U.S. Army earns, eat the food of the country, live in the kind of houses the people live in, become a part of their culture.

"We have more grandparents in the Peace Corps today than we have teenagers. We need experienced teachers and you can't get experience by the time you are 25. We need teachers of math, science, biology and so on. We need experienced craftsmen, carpenters, plumbers, electricians."

He said that one country needed people qualified to repair and maintain road-building diesel equipment, and agricultural machinery, others need those who can run linotype machines, lathes, and wood-working equipment, and still other people who are lab technicians and nurses.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE OBITUARIES of Estes Kefauver laid great stress on his unwearying presidential campaigning, his rawboned appeal to many citizens over the country, the rare kind of liberalism he demonstrated—almost a throwback to 19th Century populism. They also spoke of his civil rights record, usually stating that he never participated in southern filibusters.

The latter is not wholly and strictly true and the story of what actually happened along his Senate path may be instructive on the problems faced by southern senators with nothing but compassion for the Negro in their hearts.

Kefauver had a clear-cut civil rights record in the House. He three times sponsored bills—and got them passed—to abolish the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections. (The bills went nowhere in the Senate but finally a proposed constitutional amendment was approved in both houses and it awaits ratification by only two more state legislatures to become effective.)

In 1948 Kefauver was elected to the Senate, where a rather advanced position on civil rights is a different kettle of fish for a Southerner. A reporter went to call on him with the natural question: "What are you going to do when the first filibuster is shaping up and the call goes out for a Solid South meeting in the office of the captain-general, Sen. Russell of Georgia?"

The senator looked troubled and turned the question back on the reporter. "Do you think in good conscience, in the light of my public record, I can attend the meetings, say frankly that I will speak once or twice on the merits of any civil rights bill I think I should or can oppose, but that I cannot join in purely obstructionist tactics?"

* * *

TO THIS QUESTION there was no good answer, because the only honest answer was No.

As events turned out, Kefauver in 1949 and 1950 was regularly invited to whatever meetings Russell decided to call—and he didn't attend. He made speeches on the merits, according to his beliefs, on whatever measure came up on the floor. But he was clearly not a member of the Russell forces.

Then one night he suddenly chose to attend a Russell-called filibuster strategy session, and the reason was inescapable. Sen. Claude Pepper of Florida had been beaten in a Democratic primary—beaten badly and beaten by the loss of votes in the "woolhat" upstate areas where he had always previously had his strength. It was the civil rights issue, used against him hard. Kefauver was forced to realize he might be equally vulnerable.

Another southern senator, who had nothing but good will for Kefauver personally, laughed a little in discussing the incident, but he was serious when he remarked, "A southern senator gets nowhere if he goes against his sectional traditions."

* * *

IT WAS TOO LATE for Kefauver ever to be accepted by fellow Southerners as "one of them." When the civil rights bill came up he made his speeches—always on the merits, never as an obstructionist—but his colleagues would not forgive him.

They fought him for the vice presidential nomination in 1956, lining up votes for the then little known Sen. Kennedy of Massachusetts in a straight-out power play. They would have succeeded, too, had not Tennessee's own delegates suddenly remembered that they might not be popular at home if they blocked a Tennessee senator from the national ticket. They switched at the crucial moment.

But he was never "one of them." He wouldn't sign the Southern Manifesto thereafter, either. Indeed, he could not have signed it without repudiating every decency for which he had stood in public.

The presidential dream was gone. The tall, gaunt mountaineer served out his years in useful tasks—the drug investigation, a proposed investigation of railroad finances and mergers, his hearings on administrative price-fixing by corporations. Fellow southerners on the Judiciary Committee joined with Republicans to block him whenever they could, but the thalidomide scandal gave him a victory with a new law on regulation of experimental drugs—and a permanent place in history.

THE PEACE CORPS needs experienced craftsmen, carpenters, machinists, plumbers, electricians, Sargent Shriver, right, director, declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. Interviewer was Harry W. Flannery.

How to Buy:

Fluoridation of Water Insures Stronger Teeth for Youngsters

By Sidney Margolius

MONEY IS THE BIGGEST single factor that determines the amount of dental care a family gets, and thus its dental health. One government study found that only 23 percent of low-income families seek any dental care, and only 33 percent with incomes between $3,500 and $5,000. Even among families with income up to $7,000, fewer than half get adequate dental care.

The result of the money barrier is a simple one: no teeth. If this is an affluent society we live in, it is a strangely toothless one. Over 12 million Americans do not have a single tooth they can call their own.

With overwhelming evidence showing that fluoridation of water is both a safe and economical way to strengthen children's teeth, unions are increasingly interested in securing this benefit for their members. Earlier the AFL-CIO had urged state and local labor groups to work for fluoridation of community water supplies "because prevention and protection of health is better than the best cure."

Only two of the nation's 12 largest cities are holdouts against fluoridation. After 12 years of discussion, Detroit city authorities recently decided to fluoridate. This leaves New York and Los Angeles as the cities of over 1 million population still without fluoridation. Other cities of varying size which also recently adopted fluoridation are Kansas City and Toronto.

Now the New York City Central Labor Council is campaigning actively to secure this public-health measure there. Michael Sampson, chairman of the council's Community Services Committee, pointed out that during the past school year 37 percent of New York City's school children received no dental care at all, and an additional 13 percent got only partial care.

The number of dentally-neglected children is rising, Sampson warned. He said that the unions want fluoridation for their members and families "because dental decay is the most widespread affliction from which we suffer, and dental care costs families more than does any other medical condition."

EVIDENCE FROM ALL the towns which have fluoridated water confirms its effectiveness. Philadelphia, for example, reports that tooth decay in school children has been reduced up to 75 percent after seven years of fluoridation. Greatest reduction was found in six-year-olds—the group that had been drinking fluoridated water from birth.

All the documented evidence by impartial investigators indicates that fluoridated water is as safe as it is effective. Medical experts who have checked on individuals who lived for many years in regions where the water is naturally high in fluorides or where fluoride has been added, have found no evidence of damage to health.

Strangely, despite all this evidence, many people are still sincerely afraid of fluoridated water. In 1960, for example, out of 33 referendums in smaller cities and towns, fluoridation was defeated in 29.

The American Dental Association reported that it had found most of the criticisms against fluoridation were without foundation. These charges allege most often that fluoridation is "Communist-inspired; that it introduces a health-damaging poison into drinking water; that it is being promoted for commercial profit, and that it violates constitutional rights of the individual."

One of the arguments often used by opponents is that there are other alternatives for families which want this health measure without fluoridating the water supply of those who don't. This is partly true, and determined families in those areas which still refuse to fluoridate may want to consider the alternatives. But, health authorities point out, the alternatives are not as inexpensive or convenient, do not have the proven effectiveness and do not satisfy the needs of the greatest part of the population.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

KINGSPORT PRESS STRIKERS got pledge of continued support from Pres. Elmer Brown of the Typographers, AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Paul Christopher and Sec.-Treas. Charles Houk of the Tennessee State Labor Council at rally of 1,600 strikers in Kingsport, Tenn. Members of five unions have been on strike since Mar. 11 for an acceptable contract at plant of the nation's biggest hard-cover book printer. Shown left to right: seated, Christopher, Brown, ITU Rep. Robert McMichen, Sec.-Treas. A. J. Rohan, Printing Pressmen; standing, Intl. Rep. Walter M. Allen, Pressmen; Intl. Rep. Harry Shaw, Bookbinders; Houk, and Intl. Rep. John F. McDermott, Stereotypers.

Schnitzler Writes:

New World Is Open To Working Women

The following is excerpted from an article in the August issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist entitled "A New World for Working Women" by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, a member of the President's Commission on the Status of Women.

IN TIMES OF SLACK WORK and continuing high levels of unemployment, such as exist today, it is sometimes difficult to appreciate the fact that the complex, wealthy and specialized American economy would break down entirely without the additional labor force supplied by women, including married women.

In March of 1962, a total of 2.9 million men were unemployed; an additional 1.5 million of the unemployed were women.

The number of employed women, on the other hand, totaled 22.5 million. If they all suddenly stopped working and the 2.9 million men all found jobs, there would be a net labor shortage of over 19.5 million jobs.

Among the casualties would be 70 percent of the teachers in the elementary and secondary schools and close to 100 percent of the nurses in the hospitals, nursing homes, doctors' offices and industrial plants. Offices would grind to a choking halt as the desks of nearly 2.5 million secretaries, stenographers and typists were vacated.

Hundreds of thousands of families would find themselves unable to leave the house for an evening out, since some 320,000 baby-sitters would suddenly become unavailable. Over half the sale force of the retail stores would disappear. Women would have to forget about getting their hair washed, set or waved by professional hands: 90 percent of the hairdressers and manicurists would be sitting it out at home.

It wouldn't help to have an employment ban apply only to married women: they make up 56 percent of the female workforce and the 12.7 million jobs they would leave would still produce an immediate deficit of 9.1 million jobs, after taking care of the 2.9 million unemployed men and the 700,000 unemployed women who are single, separated, widowed or divorced.

* * *

FURTHERMORE THE EARNINGS of married women have become an essential part of the family budget for millions of families, making the difference between whether the family can barely make ends meet or whether it can live at a level approximating a decent standard of living.

There were in March 1962 some 40 million "husband and wife families"—87 percent of all families. Take as a rough standard that an average family of four living in a city needs about $6,200 a year to live on. In nonfarm families of married couples with incomes between $5,000 and $7,000 in 1961, nearly 40 percent of the wives were working. At family incomes of $7,000 or more in 1961, about 50 percent of the wives were working. By contrast, where the family's total income was under $2,000, only about one-fourth of the wives were working. At $2,000 to $5,000, the proportion was about one-third.

Rising averages of family income, especially in the past 10 to 12 years, are to a considerable degree associated with the increase in the number of married women at work.

There is simply no way to turn the clock back, even if it were desirable. The work of women has become essential to the operation of the economy, to the maintenance of consumer purchasing power and to the economic stability of millions of families. This is not the most desirable solution in all circumstances. In many instances, it means that a woman must go to work whether she wants to or not, under pressure of family economic needs and regardless of equally pressing demands in the home.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Here's Some Advice for Wives On Management of Husbands

By Jane Goodsell

DO YOU HAVE something you must tell your husband? Well, don't just blurt it out. If Washington can manage the news to make it seem better than it really is, so can you!

The right way: "Darling, I just can't believe that you and Fred Matthews are the same age! Why, you seem 10 years younger than he is! I suppose it's because he's so settled and conservative in his ways, while you have a youthful, adventurous attitude toward life. You're eager to keep up with the world, and try out new things. . . ."

The wrong way: "I've signed us up for a course of bossa nova lessons."

* * *

The right way: "Darling, remember that fishing rod you were talking about, the one you said you'd buy if you ever got rich? Well, I think you ought to go right out and buy it for yourself. After all, you only live once and if something is so important to you that you lie awake nights dreaming about it—well, you owe it to yourself to get it even if you can't afford it."

The wrong way: "I saw a darling teakwood chest in an antique store, and I'll die, I'll simply die, if I can't have it!"

* * *

The right way: "Honey, you're the only person I can ask to do this for me because it's a job that requires nerves of steel. But of course you wouldn't be the champion pool player that you are if you didn't have iron control."

The wrong way: "Say, will you hold this skein of yarn for me while I wind it into a ball?"

* * *

THE RIGHT WAY: "I was chuckling to myself the other day about the pranks you used to play when you were a boy. Remember what you told me about you and Howie Carpenter pouring green paint all over the school drinking fountain? And remember how you used to stop traffic by standing on opposite sides of the street and pulling on an imaginary rope and making people think it was a real barricade? I'll bet your father used to worry plenty about you, but I guess it just goes to show that mischievous boys turn out the best, after all, because look at you today, a solid pillar of the community. . . ."

The wrong way: "Mr. Jones just phoned to say that Junior wrote 'Mr. Jones Is A Big Nut' all over the fresh cement in his new driveway."

* * *

The right way: "Sweetheart, I've been thinking how nice it would be for you to have a little den in the basement where you could get off by yourself, away from the household racket. You work under pressure all day, and you really deserve some peace and quiet in your own home. Now, that corner in the basement where the washer and dryer are now would make a perfect den, and if we could only figure out someplace else to put the laundry equipment. . . ."

The wrong way: "If we'd knock out that wall between the kitchen and the back porch, we've have space to put a washer and dryer on the first floor. I'm sick and tired of running up and down the basement stairs. . . ."

Labor Dept. Conferences Set:

Building Unions, Employers Set up Job Equality Plan

Construction unions and management have set forth on a plan for regular informal conferences with Labor Dept. officials in carrying out a program aimed at assuring equal job opportunities for all in the building trades.

The plan was outlined in a statement issued by a new committee of the Construction Industry Joint Conference, made up of representatives of building trades unions and national contractor associations, under the chairmanship of Prof. John T. Dunlop of the Harvard University economics department.

Dunlop also heads the new equal employment opportunity committee of the conference. Its co-chairmen are Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. and Robert L. Higgins, assistant vice president of the National Electrical Contractors Association.

The committee's statement cited a policy approved last June 21 by the presidents of all AFL-CIO building trades unions designed to avoid discrimination in union membership, job referrals and selection of apprentices and noted that the employers had approved a parallel policy.

It called on local affiliates of both the labor and mangement organizations "promptly" to take the following steps with regard to their apprenticeship programs, whether or not they are registered with the federal government:

- Review joint programs to make certain that individual qualifications are the sole standard in selection of apprentices.
- Draw up new lists of apprenticeship applicants based solely on individual qualifications wherever existing lists use any other standard.
- Notify school systems regularly of vacancies which occur in apprenticeship lists and seek the cooperation of local schools in referring qualified applicants.
- Establish appeals boards made up of union and management representatives "and a public person. jointly selected by the parties," to review the complaint of any "aggrieved" applicant and determine whether selection standards have been properly applied in particular cases.

The committee noted that some branches of the industry may prefer to use existing national machinery, rather than local appeals boards, to review any complaints which may arise in administering the apprentice selection process.

It expressed the conviction that "continuing informal consultation with the Secretary of Labor and other government officers will be useful in implementing the above program and in resolving issues in particular localities."

A spokesman for the group said that agreement had been reached with government representatives on a program of monthly meetings to review any problems growing out of the plan.

Cooperation Stressed

"This committee believes," its statement declared, "that cooperation with the responsible national officers of labor and management will achieve substantial results if utilized in advance of resort to sanctions contained in the [government's] apprenticeship regulations and standards for contractor compliance.

"The industry recognizes the government's interest and its duty to correct economic injustice and pledges its good faith to work toward that goal."

AFM 'Strings' Trainees Get Big Orchestra Jobs

Lansing, Mich.—More than a score of graduates of the Musicians' annual Congress of Strings have gone on to join major symphony orchestras across the continent, attesting to the success of the AFM project in meeting its objectives.

The Strings Congress was originated five years ago under the leadership of Herman Kenin, now AFM president, with the idea of discovering and developing fresh instrumental talent to fill vacancies in symphony and chamber groups and to encourage the pursuit of serious music as a vocation.

AFM Sec. Stanley Ballard directs the project, which each year brings young musicians to Michigan State University here for a summer of training under such top conductors as Erich Leinsdorf, Josef Krips and Eugene Ormandy. The students, sponsored by AFM locals in all parts of the United States and Canada, have been described by music authorities as "among the most promising of America's young string instrumentalists."

This year's group of 104 students, all under 22 years, recently drew a standing ovation from a packed concert audience and high praise from Ormandy, who as guest conductor had just led the youthful all-string orchestra in an intricate program which included such divergent numbers as Bach's baroque-period Brandenburg Concerto and Samuel Barber's modern Adagio for Strings.

The program was one of a series being taped for winter showing over the National Education Television network, and Ormandy before working with the group had reserved the right to cancel the broadcast if the performance did not meet his rigid standards. He was so impressed after his first rehearsal with the students, who had been playing as a unit for only five weeks, that he motioned the orchestra to rise and promptly withdrew his reservation.

Shown on Television

Sander Vanocur's "Saturday Report" over NBC-TV recently presented a day in the life of a Strings Congress student, which featured a string quartet consisting of Tania Rudensky of St. Catharines, Ont.; Charlynn Harris of Honolulu; Paul Tobias of San Francisco and Leonard C. Gibbs, of Geneva, O.

Students in last year's congress were largely of high school or college age, too young in most cases for professional work, but several of them have won scholarships for further music study, as have a number of graduates from prior years.

Among former congress students who have distinguished themselves in musical careers are string bass players Ring Warner and Bob Zimmerman, both with the Dallas Symphony; Joseph Hearne with the Boston Symphony; Nicholai Romanelli with the Denver Symphony; Ronald Simon with the Seattle Symphony.

Violinist Harry Klein has signed a contract with the Indianapolis Symphony, and George Binkley III, is concert master with the Nashville, Tenn., Symphony. Nancy Crockett teaches violin at the Sunnyvale, Calif., High School and plays with the Sacramento Symphony.

Gary Berlind plays bass and his wife, Diana Halpern, violin with the Kansas City Symphony. They were Strings Congress classmates in 1959.

Gary Carr, a string bass player, was featured as a soloist with the New York Philharmonic and has made several records, one with the Philharmonic. He was an artist in residence at the Brevard Music Center this summer.

Lowest-Paid Gain Under Montreal Pact

Montreal, Que.—A new contract geared to meet the needs of lowest-paid members has been signed by the Ladies' Garment Workers and the Montreal Dress & Sportswear Manufacturers' Guild.

The agreement provides wage increases up to 25 percent for unskilled workers entering the industry, raising the starting rate from 65 cents to 75 cents an hour on Jan. 1, 1964 and 85 cents on July 1, 1964. The highest-paid workers will get boosts of 7.5 percent.

"It's a contract for the underpaid people who have been hit hardest by increasing technological changes in the industry," said ILGWU Vice Pres. Bernard Shane.

The contract covers about 10,000 employes of some 250 shops. It also provides for general wage increases of $5 a week for cutters; $3 for all time workers, including apprentices, and for piece workers, basic wage raises of 4.5 percent for pressers, 10 percent for finishers and 8 per cent for operators.

New minimum scales for the various crafts boost the hourly rate by amounts up to 35 cents.

"IN COMMON BROTHERHOOD," new AFL-CIO film showing American labor's international role, includes scenes taken in many areas of the world. Top photo, in Caracas, Venezuela, shows Producer Joel O'Brien, standing at left, going over shooting schedule with Luis Ordaz, a graduate of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. Bottom photo shows filming of a scene at the Afro-Asian Institute at Tel Aviv, Israel, a joint project of Histadrut and the AFL-CIO for training Asian and African union leaders.

THE CAMERAS ARE READY to record a Labor Day message by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on the significance and scope of federation activities in the international labor field. The setting is the conference room in AFL-CIO headquarters.

HEARTY WELCOME is extended by Pres. Karl F. Feller of the Brewery Workers to Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Claude Jodoin, right, a speaker at the union's convention in Cincinnati.

ITU Convention Backs Civil Rights Legislation

Long Beach, Calif.—The 105th Typographical Union convention endorsed Pres. Kennedy's civil rights legislation and passed a constitutional amendment for a 75-cent increase in the ITU per capita tax.

The delegates also heard from two officers of printing and related trades unions on the proposed merger of the crafts, which has been under discussion for several years.

Anthony J. De Andrade, president of the Printing Pressmen, in a telegram to ITU Pres. Elmer Brown reiterated his organization's stand on unity:

"I believe we have started the machinery moving which will solve our many problems," De Andrade said, "in the conferences that are now being held between representatives of your organization, the United Papermakers & Paperworkers, and us, looking to total merger of our unions.

"The conferences have been progressing as well as could be expected . . . . There is no question in my mind but that we can eventually work out in finality the basis and formula for this merger."

Unity Urged

Harry Sayre, executive vice-president of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, told the convention that "the necessity for more close cooperation between unions in this basic industry, I think, is a necessity that everyone will come to realize." He continued:

"One of the reasons I was so strongly in favor of merger was because I have had long and extended experience with jurisdictional disputes and raiding, both on the part of my organization and on the part of other organizations against my own, and the terrible waste of time and money. It became obvious to me years ago that the only solution was to get together in one family."

In other actions, the convention passed resolutions calling for:

- Elimination of the federal income tax on pensions.
- Continuation of merger talks.
- Action by the AFL-CIO to undertake a program of uniting all unaffiliated unions and railroad brotherhoods "in order to form a solid front and carry out the intent of the 1955 merger by a concerted drive to organize the unorganized workers of the United States and Canada."

For the second time in its 111-year history, the union by convention action bestowed honorary membership upon an outsider. Recipient of the honor was Judge Clarence R. Martin of Indianapolis, a former justice of the Indiana Supreme Court, who has served as counsel for the union for more than 30 years.

4.2% Average Rise Won In Major Settlements

Wage increases averaging 4.2 percent for some 900,000 workers were provided in major collective bargaining settlements covering 1,000 or more workers in the first half of 1963, the Labor Dept. has reported in a preliminary estimate by its Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The settlements produced pay hikes for about 72 percent of the 1.25 million workers affected, BLS said. Median increase came to 3 percent when workers whose wage rates didn't change were included in the computation.

The bureau said that almost all of the workers covered by contracts where settlements produced no direct pay increase were employes of the 11 basic steel companies, where new agreements dealt exclusively with liberalized fringe benefits.

For those workers receiving pay increases, the bureau reported, the average was 3.2 percent in manufacturing industries and 4.8 percent in non-manufacturing. It said about 40 percent of the factory workers who received pay hikes were employed where the increase averaged 5 percent or more. Many of these were in the men's apparel industries, getting their first negotiated increase since 1960, or in petroleum refining, where increases were the first since 1961.

Other industries in which settlements affected a substantial number of workers, BLS said, included rubber, printing, chemicals, shoe manufacture, Atlantic and Gulf Coast docks, airlines and retail trade.

The survey included wage changes negotiated in the first six months of 1963 effective within 12 months of the time of settlement. It omitted increases decided upon in earlier years, those effective in future years and cost-of-living escalator adjustments.

Also excluded from the study were settlements in construction, the service trades, finance and government, and instances in which contract reopening privileges were not exercised.

At Brewery Workers Convention:

Labor-Employer Planning Urged to Solve Job Crisis

Cincinnati—Opening sessions of the 37th biennial convention of the Brewery Workers meeting here in the union's hometown, heard calls for cooperation between labor and management and between the American and Canadian labor movements.

Pres. Karl F. Feller told some 250 delegates that a way must be found through labor-management planning to solve the chronic unemployment problem and "constant strife and costly strikes," while Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, chided those who attack international unions.

Feller, in his keynote address, gave delegates five major topics to guide deliberations: unemployment, politics, organizing, automation, and internal problems. He also reiterated a strong stand on civil rights, a stand he took at the 75th anniversary convention of the union two years ago in Baltimore.

"We are all keenly aware," Feller said, "that the chronic unemployment which plagues the country is a paradox of poverty and prosperity. Many people enjoy luxury living standards, yet others are poverty-stricken because they are out of work—many of them may never find another job.

"Finding a way to ease this condition is a three-way challenge to government, labor, and industry. Each must share in the responsibility."

Political Action Stressed

Calling the current political situation "stormy," Feller said workers who fail to vote must bear some of the blame for bad politicians. He said that "the ballot box cannot be separated from the bread box" and urged union members to participate in the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education so that "gains won at the bargaining table will not be swept away or diluted by political action."

Automation has many names, many processes, he said, but they all add up to the fact that "jobs are being eliminated at a rapid rate."

It is the policy of American labor not to oppose progress, he noted, but neither is it going to allow "so-called progress to be achieved at the expense of the wage earner." Again he called for cooperation between labor, management and government to meet the problems posed by technological change and commended Pres. Kennedy for appointing a group to study the effects of automation and to recommend remedies.

A companion problem, Feller said, is the trend toward the swallowing up of small companies by giant corporations, particularly in the brewing industry.

"Keep this in mind," he told delegates, "the next time you hear someone propose a law to curb the monopoly powers of labor unionism. If there is any monopoly involved, it is the corporate monopoly of money, while labor is left with a monopoly of problems."

The problems, the Brewery Workers president said, include the increasing costs of goods and services and the costs of strikes, of servicing local organizations, of legal services.

"We can't survive a slight case of bankruptcy any more than an individual can survive a slight case of leprosy," he said. "We've got the problems and we'll have to do something about them or get out of business. It's that simple."

Strong Unions Needed

Jodoin, stating that 70 percent of the unions in Canada are affiliates of international unions, said that Canadian workers, confronted by big international corporations, need international unions to bargain for them.

He warned that there are groups which would like to see the close relationship between American and Canadian unions deteriorate, adding:

"We are very keenly aware of the need for continuing a united and strong labor movement. I know that in your industry—as in practically every other industry—great changes are taking place. These changes involve the welfare of the workers and the protection of a strong trade union organization is essential."

Wage Boosts Won for 7,200 In Toronto

Toronto, Ont. — Two building trades unions here have won new contracts giving 7,200 members wage increases and ending one walkout and averting a second.

A two-year agreement with a 33-cents an hour package ended a three-week strike by 4,200 Carpenters and exceeded the pattern of 20 to 25 cents set in previous construction industry negotiations.

The Toronto Construction Association agreed to boost wages 15 cents an hour immediately, 5 cents next May 1 and 8 cents on Dec. 1, 1964, with the remaining 5 cents allocated to a health and welfare fund beginning next May.

They also agreed to employ one worker over 50 years of age for every seven workers under that age. About 1,000 men had returned to work under interim contracts with 68 contractors not members of the association. The temporary agreements called for a 15-cents-an-hour pay raise with acceptance by the employers of the final settlement terms.

A two-year contract that ended the threat of a citywide strike, and provided 30 cents an hour in wages and benefits, was concluded by the employers' association and the 3,000-member Plumbers & Steam Fitters.

The settlement yielded pay hikes of 8 cents an hour effective July 15; 10 cents on May 1, 1964, and another 10 cents Nov. 1, 1964, when the rate will become $3.79 an hour. The remaining 2 cents was added to the employer contribution to the welfare and pension fund and raised it to 13 cents an hour.

Negro Doctors Renew Health Care Backing

Support of the Kennedy Administration's plan to finance old-age hospital insurance through the social security system was reaffirmed by a group of prominent Negro physicians representing the National Medical Association at a meeting with the President.

In a statement presented to Kennedy by Dr. W. Montague Cobb, chairman of the NMA's Council on Medical Education & Hospitals and editor of the organization's Journal, the delegation of 27 doctors reiterated the NMA's endorsement of the social security approach and cited a resolution of support adopted by its House of Delegates a year ago.

[Later, the NMA at its 1963 convention in Los Angeles voted overwhelmingly to reaffirm the organization's support of medical care for the elderly financed under the social security system.]

The group, headed by NMA Pres. John A. Kenney, Jr., of Washington, went on to urge amendment of the Hill-Burton Hospital Survey & Construction Act to bar federal funds for hospitals practicing racial discrimination in any way.

Such an amendment, the statement declared, is "fundamental to implementing any proposed plan for medical care for the elderly and to making the facilities of our hospital system equally available to all our citizens."

The group described the "separate but equal" clause in the Hill-Burton Act as "particularly toothless" and declared its effect has been "to permit entrenchment of old segregative and exclusion practices in new, modern plants built with the help of everybody's tax money."

Discrimination Persists

"Hospitals are still free to segregate patients as they please," the statement said. "Negro physicians are still arbitrarily barred on account of race alone from the staffs of Hill-Burton aided hospitals."

The NMA delegation lauded the efforts of the President and his Administration to assure equal justice for all Americans and praised the outspoken stands against hospital discrimination taken by the AFL-CIO, American Public Health Association and the Federal Hospital Council.

It saw other signs of progress in anti-discrimination resolutions it said had been passed recently by the Catholic Hospital Association and the American Hospital Association, and in the agreement of American Medical Association officials for the first time to meet with NMA representatives in "what it is hoped will prove fruitful negotiations with respect to the problems of the Negro physician."

[At Unity House, Pa., the AFL-CIO voted a second $5,000 contribution to Negro doctors in Chicago waging a court fight against discrimination by hospitals in the city.]

The NMA was formed in 1895 because Negro physicians were barred on account of their race from membership in AMA affiliates in 17 southern states and the District of Columbia, a condition which prevailed until 1948, the NMA group recalled. Since then, it noted, "something has been done to open the doors" of medical societies in the District and all of the states except Louisiana.

Despite these gains, however, the delegation said the NMA "has no thought of terminating its existence" because of its "vital mission in expediting the abolition of the discrimination which remains in health areas" and its unique position as an independent national medical organization with membership open to any qualified person.

Biemiller Urges Action:

Job Equality Held Key to Civil Rights

Equal employment opportunity is "the controlling problem of all civil rights questions" and a federal guarantee of such equality should be added to the Kennedy Administration's omnibus civil rights bill, an AFL-CIO spokesman has declared.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a network radio interview over the Mutual Broadcasting System, said that without fair employment practices legislation, other features of the President's package civil rights program, such as the public accommodations sections, would have "only a limited meaning."

He noted, for example, that a Negro or any other person seeking admission, say to a movie theater, first "has to have the money."

Biemiller urged that the equal job opportunities bill reported by the House Education & Labor Committee be added as an additional title to the omnibus civil rights measure. He pointed out that Pres. Kennedy had endorsed such legislation in his civil rights message although it was not included in the Administration's draft bill.

An FEP section would "strengthen" rather than diminish the overall program's chances of passage this year, the federation's legislative director declared.

He suggested that many fair-minded employers across the country would like to put an end to job discrimination and would welcome a federal law that would help them overcome local pressures and biases. He recalled, too, that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had made a parallel appeal to Congress for FEP legislation that would give the support of federal law to labor's own efforts to wipe out "pockets of discrimination" within its ranks.

Cites President's Committee

In response to questions from Joseph Sterne of the Baltimore Sun and David Secrest of McGraw-Hill Publications, Biemiller said the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity "is having increasing value" in implementing Kennedy's executive order barring job discrimination by government contractors.

Nevertheless, he said, as a total answer to the problem, the executive order has these two main "flaws":

- "Not too much had been accomplished" until Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson gave the committee "very firm leadership."
- Because it is limited to government contracts, the executive order covers only about half the non-farm workers in the country and leaves out, for example, the service trades which provide many of the jobs to which Negroes aspire.

A former member of the House, Biemiller acknowledged that any major piece of legislation undergoes changes as it makes its way through Congress. He emphasized, however, that despite its stress on the need for federal fair employment guarantees, the AFL-CIO was in no mood for compromise on the public accommodations section or other parts of the omnibus bill.

"We want the strongest possible bill we can get," he declared.

He described the President's civil rights program as "moderate . . . not nearly as far-reaching as some of us would like to see it go," and said that with the addition of an FEP section it "offers the absolute minimum that ought to be passed."

Labor, he went on, considers the program "so long overdue" that its passage is vital "even if it does slow up or endanger the passage of other needed legislation."

'Thorny Road' Predicted

He warned, however, that before that passage can be obtained the civil rights bill faces a thorny route through Congress—not only in the almost certain prospect of a southern filibuster in the Senate, but also in various delaying stratagems on the House side.

Nevertheless, he predicted House passage of the bill and said the measure now was in "better shape than many people thought it would be," largely as a result of a change in temper growing out of increasing Negro insistence on equal justice.

"The demonstrations that the Negroes have had for the most part have been quite lawful; they have been within the best American tradition," Biemiller declared.

"I think the Negro is simply exerting a good old American right of petition for redress of grievances. We're delighted that he is. We think there is almost a social revolution happening in America, and I think the Congress had better take real cognizance of this fact."

29-Cent Package Won At Bethlehem Ship

New York—The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers have won a 29-cent wage and benefit package in a new three-year contract covering 15,000 workers at six Bethlehem Steel Co. shipyards.

A similar agreement was reached last month with Todd Shipyards in Brooklyn and Hoboken.

UMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan hailed the agreement as "a constructive solution" to bargaining problems and said it will "strengthen good relations" which developed between the company and union since a bitter 152-day strike in 1960 over work rules.

The union is still pressing unfair labor charges based on the 1959 strike, a spokesman said. Earlier this month a U.S. Court of Appeals reversed a National Labor Relations Board decision against the union and returned the case to the NLRB.

Key features of the agreement, subject to ratification at membership meetings, include:

- A 16-cent wage increase, which will be applied to incentive as well as hourly rates. Six cents will be retroactive to Aug. 1, with additional 5-cent increases in each of the next two years.
- The addition of Columbus Day and Veterans Day as paid holidays, making a total of nine.
- A $10-a-week increase in weekly sick pay, to a new range of $63 to $78 for up to 26 weeks for any illness.
- An increase in hospitalization benefits from the previous 120 days to 365 days, plus an additional $500 in life insurance.
- Strengthened seniority, layoff and recall protection and improved premium pay for hazardous jobs.

The agreement was reached with the help of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

GENERAL CHAIRMEN of the Locomotive Firemen, with no management contract proposal to vote on, discuss the report by their negotiators of the latest bargaining impasse in the work rules dispute. The 156 chairmen had been summoned to Washington at the urgent request of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz in the expectation that a management offer would be forthcoming.

Loope Heads NILE Youth Job Program

Nicholas B. Loope, since 1950 director of the Joint Carpentry Apprenticeship Committee of Washington, D. C., has been appointed director of a new Youth Employment Program of the National Institute of Labor Education.

The program is financed jointly by the AFL-CIO and the Labor Dept., the AFL-CIO Executive Council having appropriated $10,000 to help it get under way.

It grew out of meetings of the President's Committee on Youth Employment, on which organized labor was represented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., and Mrs. Mildred Jeffrey of the Auto Workers.

Its goal is to establish training programs initiated or sponsored by unions to train unemployed or underemployed youth which will supplement federal efforts to give apprenticeship and on-the-job training opportunities to young people. It is designed for those who do not finish high school or who are barred from other training opportunities because of race.

In announcing Loope's appointment, NILE Pres. Ralph N. Campbell said he will serve on a leave of absence basis for a year. Neil B. McArthur, assistant commissioner of labor in Michigan, was named assistant director of the new program.

NILE is a non-profit organization seeking to pioneer labor education programs and to promote cooperation in education between unions and universities. Lawrence Rogin, AFL-CIO director of education, is a vice president.

TV Film Re-runs Yield $961,521

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild distributed a record $961,521 to members in July as residual payments for re-runs of television entertainment films, SAG Executive Sec. John L. Dales reported.

The amount represented a 42 percent increase over the same month of 1962 and brought TV residual payments for the first nine months of SAG's fiscal year to more than $5.6 million, 28 percent above the corresponding period a year earlier.

The totals are exclusive of additional millions of dollars in payments to actors for re-use of filmed TV commercials and for the showing of theatrical feature films on television.

New Deadlock Blocks Rail Work Rules Peace

(Continued from Page 1)

ing significantly narrowed.

By the time the chairmen arrived, the bargaining atmosphere had clouded. Gilbert told the AFL-CIO News that "whenever we seemed near agreement, management representatives would create a new area of disagreement."

Blames Management

His "personal conviction," he declared, is that management "has not given up hope that there will be an imposed settlement" by Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

With the new impasse, the spotlight swung back to Capitol Hill, where House and Senate Commerce committees had deferred consideration of alternative bills in the hope that a quick negotiated settlement would make congressional action unnecessary.

The railroads have set an Aug. 29 deadline for imposing drastic work rules changes, and Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to avert a strike at that time by giving the ICC a two-year grant of jurisdiction over railroad work rules.

An alternative proposal by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany would bar either unilateral rules changes or strikes while both parties resumed bargaining under the eyes of a watchdog committee of Congress. Bills to implement the Meany proposal, or modifications of it, have been introduced by members of both the House and Senate committees.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, Wirtz had asked union and management negotiators to stand by for further meetings and Chairman Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., of the National Mediation Board told newsmen:

"We're not going to give up. The mediators are going to put their heads together."

New SAG Pact Bans Bias in Jobs, Rights

Hollywood, Calif.—A new agreement between the Screen Actors Guild and motion picture and television film producers sets forth a strong program of non-discrimination in employment and union rights.

The two-year contract, effective Aug. 1, is subject to ratification by SAG membership and directors of the two employer groups. Its terms were outlined in a joint announcement by Pres. George Chandler and Executive Sec. John L. Dales for SAG, Executive Vice Pres. Charles S. Boren for the Motion Picture Producers and Pres. Richard Jencks for the Television Film Producers.

The agreement covers actors, singers, announcers and stunt men in theatrical feature motion pictures. It is reopenable by either side any time after next Dec. 31 for negotiations with respect to pay television. The producers agree to notify the Guild before employing any actor for films intended primarily for pay TV showing. If no agreement on terms and conditions of such employment is reached within 60 days, SAG may instruct its members to withhold their services from the producer.

In declaring a reaffirmation of non-discrimination policies, the producers agreed "to make every effort to cast performers belonging to all groups in all types of roles, having due regard for the requirements of and suitability for the role, so that, for example, the American scene may be portrayed realistically."

On its part, SAG "reaffirms its policy of non-discrimination with respect to admission to membership, and rights of membership."

Complaints under the clause will be referred to the existing Producer-SAG Cooperative Committee, which the agreement stipulates shall serve as a committee on fair employment practices.

Among other settlement terms were:

- Agreement by the producers to display a cast of characters on at least one card at the end of each feature film, naming the actor and the role portrayed.
- Agreement to permit a larger allocation to the pension plan from the employer contribution which presently is divided evenly between the pension system and the health and welfare plan.
- Modification of clauses dealing with stuntmen, loan-outs and arbitration.

Wheatley 35 Years On Potters Board

East Liverpool, O.—Pres. E. L. Wheatley of the Potters has started his 35th year as a member of the union's international executive board.

He took over as first vice president in Trenton, N. J., in 1933 and was re-elected until chosen president in 1955 upon the retirement of his predecessor, Frank Hull.

3-Year Program:

Federal College Aid Approved by House

(Continued from Page 1)

Supreme Court to rule on the constitutional issue was rejected by voice vote.

The bill, drafted by a subcommittee headed by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), was supported by seven Republican members of the House Education & Labor Committee and opposed by six. It had the support of GOP Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.), however, and on the final House vote Republicans were counted 107-56 for the bill. The Democratic vote was 180-57.

The narrow margin of Senate approval of the National Service Corps bill—often described as a domestic version of the Peace Corps—raised doubts as to whether it would be approved in the normally more-conservative House.

The cost of the bill was pared to $5 million the first year and $10 million the second year, but Republicans and southern Democrats attacked the proposal as the start of a new federal "bureaucracy" and expressed fears over the arrival of "do-gooders" in local communities.

Must Be Invited

